EDITORS CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER: The Hon. H. P. Allen, in your issue of April 28th, attempts to justify his attack on the Prohibition party. In the reply which you kindly published, I endeavored to answer, briefly, the charges of "ignorance" and "credulity" which he brought against the third party men. But he thinks my reply to the charge of "ignorance" does not amount to much because four of the five persons named as intelligent prohibitionists are ministers, who, as a class, don't know any more about "politics" than an astronomer does about making horseshoes. Well, being a minister myself, modesty forbids my discussing that point; but I venture to suggest that it is possible for an astronomer to be a first-class blacksmith, and for a minister to be a first-rate politician. (Whether it is desirable that he should be one, is another question.)

But when it comes to political action on a great moral, social and economical question, I believe the ministers are as well qualified to act intelligent'y as any other class, not excepting the lawyers. And I also believe that it is their duty, not as professional politicians, but as intelligent citizens of a free coun try, to take an active part in political affairs, especially when questions are under consideration which have such a tremendous bearing on the morals of the country as the question of prohibition has.

But if he thinks we have no intelligent persons except a few "cranky" ministers in our party, we will point to the Hon. Chas. S. Wolfe, of Pennsylvania, as a representative of many who have recently joined the third party, who formerly represented the best and most intelligent elements of the old parties, and who, by their action, have fully justified the course which the Prohibitionists have taken in the past, even though they did not get many votes.

Whether these men have "bees in their bonnets," as the Judge says Neal Dow has, is of course an open question. It would not be at all surprising if they had the "presidential bee" there, and being wide-awake politicians and fully up to the spirit of the times, they have intelligence and foresight enough to see that the Prohibition party is going to win, and that the surest way to "get there" is to identify themselves with that party as soon as possible.

As to the points of similarity between the Republican party and the Prohibition party which I mentioned, the Judge thinks I am mistaken, and declares that there is no more similarity between them than between a mountain and a mole-hill. It is true, as he says, that "abolition" was not made a plank in the platform of the Republican party. The battle-field was Kansas, and the fight for the time being was not for "abolition" but for "non-extension." But this was because the slave power was in the ascendency; it was the aggressive party. That the spirit of the Republican party was for abolition is clearly seen from the fact that as soon as they had the power they did abolish slavery, as well as from the fact that in the pulpits and prayer meetings the question of "abolition" was constantly preached about and prayed for, while the question of extension or non-extension was seldom if ever made an object of prayer. And the point which I made was, that to-day we are praying and preaching not for any half-way measure, like "non-extension," but for the "abolition" of the liquor traffic, just as the Republicans prayed for the abolition of slavery.

The fact that the Republican party fought for "non-extension" in Kansas, does not imply that it was not for "abolition" as soon as it could get it, any more than the fact that the Prohibition party fought for "local option" in Georgia, and Constitutional State prohibition in Rhode Island, proves that it has abandoned national prohibition as its ultimate object.

The Judge admits that there is one point at least of resemblance. For he says the Republican party was made up of "free soil" Democrats and anti-slavery Whigs. In other words, it united into one party the two elements of the old parties which were opposed to slavery. We call his attention to the fact that the Prohibition party is doing the same thing. It is being made up of the anti-liquor elements of the Republican and Democratic parties.

He admits, also, that the one idea of "political freedom," as he calls it, was the single issue on which the Republicans came into power. This he thinks was a "grand" idea, and so it was; but notwithstanding his opinion to the contrary, we think the idea of "prohibition" just as grand. It is not a question of eating and drinking and wearing clothes, as he seems to think it is, but one of political and social self-preservation.

Prohibition is necessary for the preservation of "political freedom." The latter will soon be impossible where the liquor traffic is allowed to exist, even under high license; witness Chicago, where the high-license saloon is the headquarters of the Anarchists, from which men go forth with liquor in one hand and dynamite in the other. Political freedom can never exist among a nation of drunkards.

The Judge's rhetoric is better than his logic, when he compares the liquor traffic to a river, which so long as it is confined within its banks, is a blessing to the land through which it flows, and only becomes a curse when allowed to overflow its banks. The liquor traffic is a curse from beginning to end. It is a stream of "miasma, pestilence and death," and wherever it touches the body politic, it produces plague spots worse than the leprosy or the Asiatic cholera.

If we are to compare the liquor traffic to a river at all, the only suitable one is that of Benin, in Africa, which is so full of malaria that the sailors sing:

> "Beware, beware of the Bight of Benin!
> Where one comes out, there were forty went in."

And as to high license, that stands condemned to-day in Chicago, where it has been tried and found to be a failure. If space would permit, we could bring any quantity of evidence to prove this statement. In fact, the liquor traffic is the only thing which is not under restraint in that city at the present time. And the reason is because high license has put so much political power into the hands of the saloons that they can practically do as they please. The city is bound to protect what it licenses; and the large license fee acts as a bribe on the public conscience, so that favors and privileges are granted to high-license saloons which permits them to do things that would not be tolerated if no revenue was derived from them. Again, I repeat, the moral effect of high license is worse than free whiskey. It educates the people to tolerate the traffic.

Prohibition, on the other hand, educates them to suppress it. And wherever prohibition exists the evils of the liquor traffic are the least; where license exists the evils are the greatest. Compare any prohibition town with a high-license town of the same size, and it will be found that in the former there is less drunkenness, less poverty, less crime, and consequently less taxation and better government than in the latter. If this is true under the present defective laws, it would be still better under more stringent and perfect laws.

If prohibition does not entirely prohibit, it is largely due to defects in the law. All State and local-option laws are defective because they cannot stop the importation of liquor into prohibition territory; consequently it can be manufactured outside and brought in without restriction; then it is sold "on the sly." What we want, and what we are going to have, is national prohibition, which will prohibit the manufacture, importation, transportation, storage and sale of all intoxicating liquor throughout the United States and Territories except for medicinal and scientific purposes. And when we have a party in power, with officers, from President down to Constable, who are in favor of enforcing the law, we think the liquor traffic can be as easily suppressed as counterfeiting is now prohibited; while the government can supply the necessary wants of the people for liquor, just as it now supplies them with money. If this is "blind ultraism," then we are blind ultraists.

GEORGE LE FEVRE.

LINLITHGO, N. Y.

American Bible Society.

THE stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, on Thursday, July 1st, 1886, Wm. H. Crosby, Esq., Vice-President, in the chair.

Grants of books to the value of $7,600 were made for colportage work and for distribution at home and abroad, upon the recommendation of the Committee on Distribution.

Among the letters from foreign lands presented for the consideration and action of the Board and its Committees, were communications from China respecting the Easy Wenli version, with a specimen of the tentative edition of the Gospel of Matthew, reproduced from the Mandarin, by Dr. Blodget and Bishop Burdon, and printed for examination and comparison; from Mr. Milne, with further accounts of the distribution of the Scriptures in the United States of Colombia; from Dr. Bliss, with copies of correspondence with the Mission Press at Beyroot, indicating their ability and readiness to print and issue all the Arabic Scriptures which may be called for; from Rev. J. W. Baird, in behalf of the European Turkey Mission of the American Board; from Rev. H. Bingham, whose version of books of the Old Testament for Gilbert Islanders is about to be printed at Honolulu; from the Evangelical Committee of the Waldensian Church, with thanks for funds; and from the Editorial Secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, expressing a desire for active co-operation in the production of a new version of the Scriptures for Spanish-speaking people.

One society in Iowa was recognized as auxiliary. The number of colporteurs reported to be now at work is 112.

The receipts in June were $40,152 32; issues from the Bible House in June, 103 801 volumes. Total receipts since April 1st, $109,228.85; issues since April 1st, 296,803 volumes.

Resolutions of the Alumni Association of Hope College.

WHEREAS, Since the last annual meeting of the "Alumni Association" of Hope College, Prof. Wm. A. Shields has resigned the chair of English Literature in Hope College, which position he had so long and faithfully filled; and

Whereas His resignation was accepted by the Council of Hope College; therefore

Resolved, That this Association, at this its first opportunity, record its hearty appreciation of his devoted labors in connection with this Institution, of his untiring zeal for the best interests of the College, and his constant personal kindness to those who were placed under his charge.

Resolved, That as a member of this Association he has done much to extend and deepen Alumni feeling among the sons of "Hope," and that we shall ever hold him in grateful remembrance and esteem as a beloved instructor.

Resolved, That a copy of the above be recorded upon the minutes of this Association, a copy be presented to the Professor by the Secretary, and that these resolutions be published in De Hope and THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

HENRY BOERS, Sec'y.

HOLLAND, MICH., June 23d, 1886.

Financial.

TUESDAY, July 6th.

THE public debt was reduced over $9,000,000 last month. The account of the Treasurer is not as agreeable as it would be if silver were a standard of value with commercial nations. The available cash balance was reduced during the month $3,400 000 in legal tenders, $930,000 in national bank notes, and $800,000 in deposits in national banks, while it was increased $400 000 in gold and $5,200,000 in silver coin and bullion. The available balance shows a reduction of only $1,000,000 during June, but this is due to the large addition to the silver coin and bullion which was about equal to the loss of currency equivalent to gold. To make matters worse the hot-heads in Congress are proposing to issue bills of less than $5 to the full amount of the silver balance in the Treasury. The only result would be an inflation of the currency, causing heedless speculation, to be followed inevitably by a collapse. The people who suffer the most from such a current of affairs are those dependent on wages. The silver dollar is worth as bullion about 75 cents.

The bank statement showed an increase of $4 657,200 in loans, and a loss in specie and legal tenders of $2 937 000, accounted for by the export of $3,600 000 in gold during the week. Money is worth 2 per cent on loans on call, and about 5 per cent on ordinary well secured loans.

The Stock Market has been virtually abandoned since Friday. It has a strong undertone. There seems to be a general anticipation of increasing national prosperity and although investors buy sparingly, those holding securities are not disposed to make material concessions in order to sell. Securities having anything in them tend to better prices, and a number on the list are slowly but steadily advancing.

The Produce Exchange is also affected by the occurrence of three holidays, and quotations are not as trustworthy as usual. Those of Saturday were: Wheat, No. 2 red, 85 1 4; corn, No. 2 mixed, 45 1-2; oats, No. 2 white, 39 and 40. Quotations for cotton: July 9.41-42, Aug 9.47-48, Sept. 9.38-39, Oct. 9.25-26. The supply of old hay is large and No. 1 timothy varies from 75 to 85 cents. Long rye straw is worth from 80 to 85 cents.

News of the Week.

(Continued from page five.)

Mr. Gladstone wrote a letter to Mr. Bright and denies several statements about his course....The Pension office reports that 81,422 pension certificates were issued in the last fiscal year....A new Sound steamer, "Shelter Island," has been built and is now ready for service. She is 175 feet long, 31 feet beam, and 11 feet in depth of hold. She will run between New York and Sag Harbor, touching at Orient, Shelter Island and Greenport and will start on Tuesday...,

Terrific explosion in the mixing house of the Atlantic Dynamite Company's works half a mile from McCainsville, N. J., took place yesterday. Two bushels of bits of bone and pieces of flesh were all that could be found of the ten men who entered the building before the explosion occurred. No blame is attached to the company. The unfortunate families are left destitute ..The strike not ended on the Lake Shore in Chicago....The Park Avenue Primitive Methodist Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., has brought a suit against the Brooklyn Elevated Railroad to recover damages caused by running the trains past the church during service. In consequence of the noise, the congregation has dwindled down to one third of its former size, and the building would not sell at cost....The Yale crew beat in the university boat race.

MONDAY, 5 —Many elections held in Great Britain; Gladstonians confident of holding their own in Scotland. They are elated over the decisive character of their victories in Dundee....Eight torpedo boats were caught in a storm on the Atlantic Ocean and fifty persons were drowned ...Amendment to the River and Harbor bill appropriating $1 000,000 for the improvement of New York harbor agreed to ...The President's attack on Congress repelled by the Senate Committee on Pensions....Hop crop is seriously damaged in Central New York by vermin and blight known as "honey dew." ....Several cases of smallpox have been reported in the Eastern District of Brooklyn. Health authorities think there is no danger of the disease becoming an epidemic. ....The Central Labor Union denounce the conviction of the boycotters.. Portland, Me., began yesterday a three days' celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of its incorporation. To-day's programme includes a large parade, with tableaux of historical events, balloon ascensions and a mock Indian fight....Yesterday was considered the hottest day of the season. The mercury stood at 91 deg., the highest point of the year, at 3 30 P M

TUESDAY, 6 —To last night the British returns showed the election of 160 Conservatives, 31 Unionists, 63 Gladstonians and 29 Parnellites, making a Tory gain of 17, Unionist 1, Gladstonian 9....Thirty-five persons were injured by the collision of two express trains in Scotland....The captured fishermen have been fined $400 each by the Dominion authorities. ..About 10,000 people attended the Central Labor Union Home Rule demonstration in Union Square yesterday afternoon....Independence Day celebrated yesterday pretty generally; there was a large gathering and brilliant orations at Woodstock, Conn ; also at Harlem, N. Y., where the day closed with a large fire; loss $200,000....New York was defeated in two games of baseball at Detroit.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, Depression of Spirits and General Debility, in the various forms; also as a preventive against Fever and Ague, and other Intermittent Fevers, the "Ferro Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from Fever or other sickness has no equal.

Market Report.

Review of the New York Market for Butter, Cheese, etc. Reported by DAVID W. LEWIS & Co., Produce Commission Merchants, 49 Pearl St., New York.

Commission on Butter, Eggs, Poultry, etc., is five per cent; Flour, Grain, etc., 2½ per cent.

Marking-plates furnished when desired.

NEW YORK, July 3, 1886.

BUTTER.—Receipts for the week, 49,298 pks.; exports 3,800 pks.

There has been more doing here for both export and home trade, at perhaps a trifle easier price on all kinds except fancy fresh creameries and last week's finest dairy make. State creamery pails were in liberal receipt and sold mostly at 17½a18c. for finest, and half firkin tubs went at 17a 7½c. Selections of finest State dairy sold at 16c., and after leaving this quality sales were at 13a15c. We note sales of line State creamery in half firkin tubs for export at 17½c.; also western creamery for same account at 15a16½c., and large lines of finest Western for speculative account at 16½a17c. Low grades of Western are in good demand at 8a9c. Market closes with large stock of butter in cold storage and prices barely steady. We quote:

Fancy creamery	@17½
do dairy (selections)	15½@16
Good to fine	13 @15
Poor to common	7 @12½

CHEESE.—Receipts for the week, 87,071 boxes; exports 66,000 boxes.

Early in the week 7¾18c. was paid for fancy factories and all taken, but on Wednesday buyers hesitated, receipts were liberal and prices went back to 7½a7⅝c. At these prices there was much trading and at the close fine stock is well cleared. In night skims 5a5½a6c. were the prices for good to fancy grades, while poor grades and full skimmed were hardly saleable at any price. We quote:

Factory, white, full cream, finest	7½@ 7⅝
" colored, "	7½@ 7⅝
" good to fine "	6½@ 7¼
" skims	1 @ 6

EGGS.—Receipts for the week were 16,222 bbls.

Demand has been good all the week and near-by marks of fresh eggs have sold on arrival at 15c , and are wanted at the close. We quote:

Near-by marks, fresh eggs	— @15
Western and Canada	13½@14

Publisher's Department.

SINCE LADIES HAVE BEEN ACCUSTOMED to use Glenn's Sulphur Soap in their toilet their personal attractions have been multiplied, and it is seldom they are seen disfigured with blotches and pimples, or rough or coarse skins. Sold by Druggists, Grocers and Fancy Goods Dealers.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap heals and beautifies, 25c.
GermanCornRemover kills Corns, Bunions, 25c
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye—Black & Brown, 50c.
Pike's Toothache Drops cure in 1 Minute, 25c.

Wilcox & Gibbs Company, 658 Broadway, manufacturers of the "Automatic" Sewing Machine, take the lead in the sewing-machine trade in the early-closing movement, and will close their salesroom, Broadway and Bond street, at one o'clock Saturdays during July and August.

That feeling of extreme debility is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla. "I was tired all over, but Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me new life and strength," says a Pawtucket, R. I., lady. Hood's Sarsaparilla is sold by all druggists. $1 a bottle, or six bottles for $5.

Sufferers from chills and fever, who have used quinine as a remedy, will appreciate Ayer's Ague Cure. This preparation, if taken according to directions, is warranted a sure cure. Residents in malarial districts should not be without it.

If a cough disturbs your sleep, take Piso's Cure for Consumption and rest well.

Notice to Subscribers.

The little yellow label on your wrapper informs you to what time your subscription is paid. Kindly consult same, and if in arrears remit the amount due.

Our readers will confer a favor upon the publishers of this paper and, perhaps, find it to their own advantage if, when answering an advertisement found in these columns, mention is made that it was seen in THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

DEATHS.

Obituary notices five cents per line (nine word to the line.) For subscribers we will insert fifteen lines free; all lines in excess of that number will be charged same as non-subscribers.

BREARLEY.—Suddenly, on May 6th, at Canton, Ill., Maria Van Derveer, wife of Samuel Brearley, in the 78th year of her age.

Mrs. Brearley lived in Rocky Hill, Somerset Co., N. J., until 1863, and afterwards made her home in Illinois She was a woman of great energy, of noble impulses and steadfast purpose. As a wife and mother, as a friend and neighbor, as a church member and citizen, she showed the same generous and earnest spirit. Her religious faith was simple,—the faith taught her by her mother,—and it infused itself into her whole life. She was a leader in church work. When the war began she was quick to work for the relief of the sick and wounded, and bade two sons God-speed when they joined the army. None who was sick or in sorrow or in need of help appealed to her in vain. She was always ready to lend a hand as well as to give money. In her home she was a true wife and most devoted mother, full of courage and hopefulness, holding fast to high ideals. Her last two years were made sad by the approaches of paralysis, the disease which finally ended her life. To the last, however, she was in full possession of her faculties, and she died with firm faith in a better world, binding her dear ones meet her there.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

ONDERDONK.—At Jamaica, L. I., on Tuesday, June 22, Henry Onderdonk, Jr.

He was born at Manhasset, L. I., June 11, 1804, graduated at Columbia College 1827, was Principal of Union Hall Academy, Jamaica, L. I., from 183 to 1865. He was Treasurer of the Long Island Bible Society for twenty-five years.

Interred at Flower Hill, L. I.

Notices and Acknowledgments

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—Evangelical but not denominational. Prints in 147 languages in aid of foreign missions; grants religious reading to the needy, sends colporters to millions in our highways and hedges, and to the immigrants in Castle Garden and elsewhere. This work depends wholly on charitable gifts. Donations and legacies are earnestly solicited. A summary of the sixtieth year mailed free. O. R. Kingsbury, Treasurer, 150 Nassau street, New York.

FULTON STREET DAILY NOON PRAYER-MEETING,
113 Fulton Street, and 58 Ann Street,
Just east of Broadway, near William Street.
COME IN, REST, AND PRAY.
Stop 5, 10 15 or 20 minutes, or the hour, as your time permits.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
This powder never varies A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall-st., N. Y.

JAMES PYLE'S
PEARLINE
The Great Invention,
For EASY WASHING,
IN HARD OR SOFT, HOT OR COLD WATER.
Without Harm to FABRIC or HANDS and particularly adapted to Warm Climates.
No family, rich or poor, should be without it.
Sold by all Grocers, but beware of vile imitations. PEARLINE is manufactured only by
JAMES PYLE, NEW YORK.

The First Sign
Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.
Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.
It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,
Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

TO LET.—Cottage at Nantucket. Ten rooms, fully furnished. Directly on the beach. Wide piazzas on three sides. Bathing houses on premises. Near a large new hotel. For particulars address apply to HENRY N. COBB, 34 Vesey street.

NATURE'S CURE FOR CONSTIPATION, Sick-Headache, AND DYSPEPSIA.
TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT
This well-known substitute for the old fashioned drastic cathartics was manufactured in 1884 for the use of the Physicians of the Metropolis It rapidly supplanted the violent purgatives then in vogue, and is now prescribed by Physicians and recommended by druggists everywhere. In small doses it is an efficient antidote for Nausea, Sick Headache and Sea Sickness. In larger doses it tones the stomach and gently operates upon the bowels, neutralizing the ill effects of indiscretions in eating or drinking. Its neat portable form, its inexpensiveness and its prompt action render TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT as indispensable an addition to the Household Medicine Chest, as it is to the Traveller's Outfit. Sold by druggists everywhere.

BELLS.
McShane Bell Foundry
Finest Grade of Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS for CHURCHES, &c.
Send for Price and Catalogue. Address
H. McSHANE & CO.,
Mention this paper. Baltimore, Md.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Fire Alarms, Farms, etc. FULLY WARRANTED. Catalogue sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

MENEELY & COMPANY.
West Troy, N. Y. Bells,
For Churches, Schools, etc., also Chimes and Peals. For more than half a century noted for superiority over all others

CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO
SUCCESSORS IN BELLS TO THE
BLYMYER MANUFACTURING CO
CATALOGUE WITH 5000 TESTIMONIALS
CINCINNATI O. BELLS, CHURCH, SCHOOL, FIRE-ALARM

Established 1857.
The GREAT CHURCH LIGHT
FRINK'S Patent Reflectors for Gas or Oil, give the most powerful, softest cheapest & Best light known for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Banks, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A Liberal discount to churches and the trade. Don't be deceived by cheap imitations.
I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St., N. Y.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.
FOR OIL.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for
PLATFORM ECHOES
or LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART,
By John B. Gough.
His last and crowning life work, brim full of thrilling interest, humor and pathos. Bright, pure, and good, full of "laughter and tears," it sells at sight to all. To it is added the Life and Death of Mr. Gough, by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT. 1000 Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $100 to $200 a month made. Distance no hindrance as we give Extra Terms and Pay Freights. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

GEO. MATHER'S SONS,
PRINTING INK
Manufacturers. Superior Black and Colored Ink Lithographic and Plate Ink. Varnishes, etc. 66 John street New York.
The Intelligencer is printed with our ink.

POPULAR LECTURES.
SUBJECTS
1.—The Romance of the Revolution.
2.—An Evening with Longfellow
3.—The Tudors
4.—Monologue—National Poems and Events
Address MRS. E. T. BARRETT,
SING SING, N. Y

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers, 805 Broadway, New York

AGENTS coin money with our Amateur Photo outfit, and collecting family pictures to enlarge. Special 30 day offer. Empire Copying Co., 351 Canal St., New York.

CURE FOR THE DEAF
PECK'S PATENT IMPROVED CUSHIONED EAR DRUMS Perfectly Restore the Hearing, and perform the work of the natural drum. Invisible, comfortable and always in position. All conversation and even whispers heard distinctly. Send for illustrated book with testimonials, FREE. Address or call on F. HISCOX, 853 Broadway, New York. Mention this paper.

PISO'S CURE FOR
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION
25 CTS. 25 CTS.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 Days. No Pay until Cured. DR. J. L. STEPHENS, M. D., Lebanon, Ohio.

The Church.

What Grace Can Do.

A FEW days since a village among the hills witnessed a scene of commingled pathos and grandeur, for its patriarch "gathered up his feet into his bed, and yielded up the ghost, and was gathered unto his fathers."

For seventy-one years this man had lived and pondered and wrought beside the stream, which this day was restrained from turning the many wheels set in motion by the inventive genius of his brain. Here, a poor boy, he had labored at the forge, or spent long nights in planning new mechanical devices; here, under the shadow of these hills, he lived; the people of this town revered him, and in their eyes his hoary head was grander than Kaiser or crown.

Three weeks ago he was in his own place in the church of his love, where it was his meat and his drink to sit, an attentive listener to the pulpit ministrations of the eldest son of his beloved brother, Joseph, whose feet entered the city which hath foundations a generation ago. His tall, rather spare and drooping figure, with strong, clear-cut features, set in a halo of white hair, slightly curling about his temples and neck, with a full beard of silvery whiteness setting out a complexion of peculiar delicacy and beauty, while his mental force was unabated, and his ear alert to catch each word, were sure to make a lasting impression upon all who saw him, not unlike that obtained in reading of the patriarchs of old.

A little child of three years, going to church for the first time, saw this venerable saint enter the sanctuary. Her prattle and unrest were hushed, and, "Mamma, is that Jesus," burst from the rosy lips.

When he came here from the rocky farm of his birth in Brimfield, Mass., he found no church, and its "plain" the favorite rendezvous for Sabbath horse races. His elder brother, Erastus, soon after the organization of a church here, moved the following: "Resolved, That we are too poor to do without the stated preaching of the Word;" and from that day to this there has not wanted a man to stand here and proclaim the Gospel in the ears of all who would listen. For fifty-five years has Thaddeus Fairbanks let his light shine in this community as a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, and watched the growth of two churches of his own order, while seven of other denominations have gradually clustered about these primal roots.

Monday morning, April 12th, the old New England custom was fittingly resumed, and when the reverberations of the ninetieth stroke of the tolling bell died away among the hills, all the people knew that the hand and brain of their cunning worker were still, and with the prophet of old they could but look up and cry, "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof." Fitful April seemed lavish of her gifts, granting summer breezes to kiss the dormant buds till like misty veils they enfolded the hills, as if nature herself proffered her rarest and best as the rent earth was to take to its keeping the precious dust of the venerated father.

So domestic had been his life, so reserved and modest withal, that the service could but be held in his home, from whose shelter those he fondly cherished in life had been borne to rest in the slope which looks toward the sun-rising. All the day no hum of whirling wheels or clang of ringing anvils had been head in the huge shops hard by, and this afternoon all places of business were closed, and a Sabbath hush brooded over the village. The shop men, whose pride he had been, came to look their last on his grand face. He lay in his library, with the faces of those dear on earth, and to whom he was now united, hanging on its walls, surrounded by his family and kindred.

From under the old oaken beams, sent from England to build the first abode of the Fairbanks family in America, came a delicate tribute to the memory of the chief, and thus his casket bore the sheaf of ripened grain which united him in thought to that elder day when his stout Yorkshire ancestors came from the West Riding to plant their home in these western wilds. All was as nearly "as he would have liked it" as loving fingers could make it.

The far-away strains of rich melody voicing the 23d Psalm broke the hush, and when its last notes died away his nephew and pastor read from his own Bible passages which in their fitness and majesty seemed to tell the story of his life, and to leave nothing unsaid.

Dr. Hulbert followed in an address of singular felicity of thought and expression. A quotation he read from "Reminiscences" from Mr. Fairbank's own pen, written after he was far along in the eighties, carries with it much of tender helpfulness: "The first thing that I remember is when my mother put me to bed and heard me say my prayers, 'Now I lay me down to sleep,' etc. She would bend over me, and in pathetic tones tell me of the love of Jesus. The manner and the story impressed my mind and drew out my affections for that lovely Saviour, which has remained, so that if I ever loved the Saviour it was at that early period. How great is my indebtedness to my mother, who instilled into my infant mind the love of Christ and all that is good."

Prayer and praise closed the simple service. Seldom has a more touching scene been witnessed here, or one grander in its simplicity, than the leave-taking of these employés of their head. One who had been associated with him in the early days of struggle bent over his face, touched in loving farewell the hand whose skill had modified trade systems the round world over, and with tear-dimmed eye and slow step turned from the room.

Borne gently from his home by the hands of his son and nephews, he was carried along the streets beautified by the taste of the trio of brothers of whom he was the last to linger under the shade of the trees they had planted, past the churches and academy they had founded and sustained by wise and thoughtful munificence, whose tolling bells and mourning emblems now proclaimed the thought of all—"Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?" For many years his hand had wrought to make this, our "God's acre," beautiful. When, standing at its gates, four hundred stalwart, earnest men in the employ of his firm rendered by their bowed and bared heads the highest honor man can pay his fellow man; when they gathered about his grave, and the last offices were paid by men whose heads had whitened in his service—one felt that here labor and capital worked in unison, and as smoothly as do the cogs of well adjusted wheels.

The words we heard, and the picture we saw, on that hillside will ever remain a cherished possession. His pastor said: "As Abraham of old was laid by Sarah, his wife, in the field purchased for four hundred shekels of silver of Ephron, the Hittite, so here to-day we lay the head of our house hard by the grave of Joseph, his father, and Phœbe, his pious mother—by the side of Lucy, his wife, in the field he purchased for a possession of a burying place, with all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, and wherein is a great rock."

The earthy walls of the narrow house were hidden by stately lilies drooping over its head, and by the green boughs of the spicy evergreens, which rebounded in graceful curves after the precious dust had been lowered to rest in peace till that day when it shall hear the sound of His coming feet, "at whose voice all that are in their graves shall come forth."

When the hymn and prayer were ended, we left all that was mortal of him, whose name and fame, though widespread on this earth, is as nothing compared to the new name he bears before the throne of the Lamb; for having overcome he, too, has "entered in through the gates into the city."—A. C., in The Congregationalist of May 6th, 1886.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Home Readings.

LESSON 3, THIRD QUARTER.

M. Martha and Mary.....Luke 10: 38-42.
T. Death of Lazarus.....John 11: 1-16.
W. The Widow of Zarephath's Son.....1 Kings 17: 17-24.
T. The Shunammite's Son.....2 Kings 4: 18-38.
F. Dorcas Raised.....Acts 9: 32-43.
S. The Brevity of Life.....Ps. 91: 1-17.
S. The Certainty of Death.....Job 14: 1-22.

—From the Westminster Question Book.

International Sunday-School Lesson.

BY REV. JOHN C. VAN DEVENTER.

July 18th.—"The Death of Lazarus."—John 11: 1-16.

Golden Text.—"Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep."—JOHN 11: 11.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—"Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus."—JOHN. 11: 5.

INTRODUCTION.

AFTER the brief visit to Jerusalem at the feast of Dedication, when Jesus found that the opposition against Him was as bitter as ever, He withdrew to the country beyond Jordan in order to secure opportunity for undisturbed intercourse with His disciples, seeking to prepare them for coming trials and responsibilities. It is probable that they stopped on the way at the home in Bethany, and gave to the friends there some intimation of their intended journey and destination. This chapter is one of the most precious passages of the New Testament, as it reveals in remarkable ways the tender humanity and the mighty divinity of Jesus. In studying this lesson we will depart from the usual course of textual exposition and consider the mysteries here unfolded.

THE LESSON.

I. THE MYSTERY OF THE LOVE OF JESUS.

V. 3.—"He whom thou lovest is sick." When the anxious sisters sent their messenger in search of Jesus they had nothing to say of their faith, or love, or service. They asked nothing, but simply touched the chord of the Saviour's love, and expected to awaken a response. It is noteworthy that the writers of the Bible dwell on the love of Christ for them more than on their love for Christ. John is not the disciple who loved Jesus, but the disciple whom Jesus loved. When we ask for the reason of this love of Jesus for Lazarus we cannot find any except that which is common to all needy sinners. We have no record of any service rendered by Lazarus to Jesus, either before or after the resurrection; we have no intimation of his having a peculiarly loving or lovable character, yet we find him the object of the intimate, tender and helpful love of the Saviour. Jesus loved Lazarus, not for what Lazarus might do for Him, but for what He might do for Lazarus. So each sinner is the object of the Saviour's love in order that he may be made the recipient of the Saviour's grace. If Jesus was willing to honor this household at Bethany with His presence and blessing He is willing to enter every home that will receive Him, and to bless every soul that will believe in Him.

The mystery of the love of Jesus is further seen in the manner of its manifestations.

Vs. 5, 6.—"Jesus loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus. When He heard therefore that he was sick, He abode two days still in the place where he was." Jesus loved—therefore He delayed. This appears one of the strangest sentences in the Bible. Should not love have caused Him to leave everything else, and hasten to the bedside of the sick? Yet we find Him apparently ignoring the implied request, and pursuing other matters just as if this cloud were not lowering over the home of His friends. We know from the sequel that this delay meant the bestowment of greater blessings. If Jesus had hurried back to Bethany and arrested the course of disease before death had had an opportunity to claim its victim, we should have lost the wonderful announcement that has cheered so many mourning households, "I am the resurrection and the life." The love of Jesus sends us the best of blessings at the best of times.

II. THE MYSTERY OF SICKNESS.

V. 4.—"This sickness is not unto death." But Lazarus did die. Did Jesus here use words out of their ordinary meaning, or have we misapprehended their meaning? A comparison of the statement with the facts will show us the true meaning. Ordinarily, sickness is unto death, i. e., it is the course which terminates in death. When we are sick, or our loved ones are suffering from disease, the great question is, is this sickness unto death,—will it issue in separation and dissolution? Jesus evidently intended by this statement to teach His people to look beyond the present conditions of their bodies, and to recognize a Divine purpose in all providences. It is as if He had said, "Do not regard this sickness simply as a matter of bodily ailment, or as a step in the process of dissolution; look higher and see in it a manifestation of God's government and care." Sickness does not exist for the sake of the death that follows, "but for the glory of God that the Son of God might be glorified thereby" This disease was to offer Jesus the grand opportunity of His life. Bethany was to be the scene of the fitting climax of His wonderful career. This sickness might issue in death, but beyond that first evident result lay hidden the glory of God. So are we taught to regard all our trials, not as so much pain or loss, not as the going out of the candle of life, but as so many manifestations of our heavenly father's love. If we look beyond the disease and death, and ask for the knowledge of God's will, we shall find this same Jesus appearing in our darkened homes and lifting the shadows which overhang our souls, even as He did at Bethany.

III. THE MYSTERY OF DEATH.

V. 11.—"Our friend Lazarus sleepeth." When Jesus entered the house of Jairus and found the mourners lamenting the death of his daughter, He said, "She is not dead but sleepeth." So here, speaking of Lazarus after he had ceased to live, He said, "He sleepeth." Jesus did not intend to imply that the death in either case was only apparent, but that our ideas concerning death needed to be rectified. Death is not the end. It is only one stage in our journey. It does not of itself blot out hope, or love, or aspiration, or life. As a sleep it offers rest for the weary, comfort for the sorrowing, health for the sick. The disciples spoke more wisely than they knew when they answered, "If he sleep, he shall do well." Sleep is only a temporary condition,—a transition state. After our night's rest we take up life's duties with fresh vigor. The morning light calls us to a new day of blessing and of service. Death for the believer is robbed of terror. It gives him rest, not in Abraham's bosom, but in the presence of his Lord. It offers him a renewal of energies. "I go that I may awake him out of sleep." As the faithful mother watches over her sleeping child, so Jesus watches over His resting ones, guarding them during the night, and ready to awake them on the morrow. We go to sleep here, and human friends close our eyes on earth; but in the new morning Jesus Himself will open our eyes, which shall never sleep again.

IV. THE MYSTERY OF THE HUMAN HEART.

In this lesson we see a variety of feelings manifesting themselves and showing us the strange mysteriousness of our own souls.

V 3.—"Therefore his sisters sent unto him." Here we see the longing for sympathy and help. When sickness comes the watching ones are lonesome and sad in their helplessness. Happy they who in such emergencies lay the matter before their Lord, and calmly say, "He whom thou lovest is sick."

V. 8.—"Master, the Jews of late sought to stone thee, and goest thou thither again?' The danger involved in their return to Judea overbore every other consideration in the minds of the disciples. They remembered the assault, but forgot its harmlessness. They recalled the danger, but forgot that Jesus never shrank from serving those in trouble because of personal peril.

V. 12.—"If he sleep, he shall do well." After all that Jesus had taught them by word and miracle it seems strange to us that they should have so misunderstood the Master. They were truly "slow of heart" to understand and believe all that He spake.

V. 16.—"Let us also go that we may die with him." What ringing words of devotion are these. Surely he who uttered them will be the last at the Cross, and the first to hail the risen Lord. But who is it that so nobly throws his own life into the same scale with his Master's? Alas, it is Thomas! From the moment when they all forsook him and fled, until after the Lord had been risen for a week, we fail to see him at the Saviour's side. Surely the heart is deceitful above all things.

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

1. Sickness and death are the common lot of man.

2. Jesus has robbed both of their power to hurt or disturb His friends.

3 In trouble be prompt to seek the help of Jesus.

4. Sorrows do not disprove the love of Jesus.

5. Delay in answering our prayers may bring us greater blessings than those asked for.

6. Do not seek safety at the cost of duty.

7. Death is but a sleep from which Christ Himself will awake us.

8. If we are faithful disciples we shall be willing to take risks for Him.

Play.

PLAY is a good thing in its place. We love to see children play and enjoy themselves—and grown up people, too—by way of change and recreation from more serious duties.

The way people play also shows character. If anyone is fair, truthful, honest, and good-tempered in play, he is likely to be the same in other things, and so the reverse.

Good, earnest play has its temptations and dangers, as well as other things, and our young friends have need to be cautioned against yielding to them. To be cheating, mean, and full of ill temper when beaten, or ugly when things do not go as desired, is very improper. Disputes and quarrels may easily arise, and of these everyone should beware. Play, but always play fair; keep in good temper, avoid wrangling and disputes, and play will be a good and healthful thing.—Busy Bee.

Recognition of Favors.

GRATITUDE is a grace by far too rarely found. The story of the lepers in a book which reveals not only more of the divine nature, but more of human nature, than any other, represents the usual sad disproportion of gratitude in the world. The lepers were peculiar in the misfortune of leprosy, but not peculiar in the other misfortune of ingratitude. Every feeling grows by expression; hence we should strive to increase our appreciation of favors by every possible acknowledgment of them. Yet a great many favors are habitually accepted by us as a matter of course, and, if not entirely unacknowledged, are very carelessly and indifferently received.

A domestic said once, in speaking of a deceased mistress with respect and affection, "It was a pleasure to do anything for her, for whatever it was, great or small, she always had a bright smile and a hearty 'Thank you.'"

"Why do you suppose Madam B—— has so many friends?" asked a young girl about an aged lady who received a great many visits and tokens of remembrance. "Everybody seems to like her."

"I can give you one reason," answered her aunt; "she is always grateful for every kindness, and shows that she appreciates even the slightest favor—a flower, the loan of a book, whatever it may be—by a prompt and heartfelt recognition of any attention, any personal thoughtfulness on the part of others."

Vacation Song.

I HAVE closed my books and hidden my slate,
And thrown my satchel across the gate.
My school is out for a season of rest,
And now for the school room I love the best!

My school room lies on the meadow wide,
Where under the clover the sunbeams hide;
Where the long vines cling to the mossy bars,
And the daisies twinkle like fallen stars;

Where clusters of buttercups gild the scene,
Like showers of gold-dust thrown over the green,
And the wind's flying footsteps are traced, as they pass,
By the dance of the sorrel and dip of the grass.

My lessons are written in clouds and trees,
And no one whispers, except the breeze,
Who sometimes blows, from a secret place,
A stray, sweet blossom against my face.

My school-bell rings in the rippling stream
Which hides itself, like a school-boy's dream,
Under the shadow and out of sight,
But laughing still for its own delight.

My schoolmates there are the birds and bees
And the saucy squirrel, less wise than these,
For he only learns, in all the weeks,
How many chestnuts will fill his cheeks.

My teacher is patient, and never yet
A lesson of hers did I once forget,
For wonderful love do her lips impart,
And all her lessons are learned by heart.

Oh, come! oh, come! or we shall be late,
And autumn will fasten the golden gate.
Of all the school rooms, in East or West,
The school of Nature I love the best.

—Katharine Lee Bates, in The Moravian.

The Charity Problem Solved.

I HAD a dear friend—of course she was a lady—and she used to give regularly ten cents every day to a poor, blind beggar that stood on the corner of Second avenue. Every day that she passed the ten cents went in. I admired her benevolence, her sympathy and her generosity, but I had a little suspicion that she was wrong, so I concluded I would find out the history of the poor, blind man. So I engaged a very excellent fellow I knew well, to follow him up and see if he could find out something of his history. My young friend followed him up. At six o'clock in the evening a woman came and took the blind man in tow from Second avenue and Eleventh street, and led him to Forty-ninth street and Tenth avenue, and there two stout young men, who kept a little gambling den, received the blind man most graciously, and he counted out the money he had received for that day's blindness, and it was fourteen dollars; and those two young men kindly kept the blind man, gave him food and lodging, and the blind, man paid them for the kindness fourteen dollars, which the kind ladies like my friend managed to give them.

They are ingenious, these fellows; there is a sort of humor about them. One of them went to my friend Dr. Parkhurst, about four weeks ago—he was quite a gentlemanly looking man, but rather seedy—and said, "Dr. Parkhurst, Dr. Crosby recommended me to come to you. I am very much in need of a pair of spectacles; my eyes are poor, and all I want now to enable me to work is a pair of spectacles." Dr. Parkhurst, rather suspecting the man, said, "Why did not you ask Dr Crosby for the spectacles?" "Well," said he, "he has been so kind to me, I did not dare to ask him for any more favors, for the truth is, Dr. Parkhurst, I have been dining with him for the last two weeks, every day."

Dr. Parkhurst sent me a note telling me of the fact; of course I told him that it was a lie out of whole cloth. But what was my surprise on seeing the man himself at my own house come boldly to me, and said he, "You have told Dr. Parkhurst that I lied." "Yes," said I, "I did." Then he said, in a sort of stage style, before me to the boy, "Don't you know me?" "Yes, sir." I then said to the boy, "Why, where have you seen him?" "Why, sir, he has come to our area for the last two weeks, and I have given him cold victuals." That was the dining with me. I had not the pleasure of the man's acquaintance.

Two years ago I happened to tell the story of a burglar who entered my house. I got him out of prison, where he was sent for fifteen years, in five years, and now in a distant land he is a very promising citizen, entirely reformed, and with an excellent wife and home, and I hear from him constantly. I happened to tell that story, and for a month afterwards I had men just out of prison come to my house by the score. They all read the newspapers.

But the question comes: What shall we do to discriminate? And Charity Organization comes forward to solve the problem; tells conscience that we don't become hardened at all, we simply become discriminating when we follow a wise system, and the only wise system which will really help the poor and not make them worse, which comes in collision with no creed or party, but embraces all creeds and all parties in its wise benevolent work. Under its guidance, we will have our charity cultivated, not stifled. Under its guidance, we will be able to see the fruit of our charity. Under its guidance, our charity will be the true charity, that is so magnified by the great Apostle, in his prose poem in its praise.—Dr. Howard Crosby, in Lend a Hand.

To be content is not to be satisfied. No one ought to be satisfied with the imperfect. It is God's will that we should bear, and contentedly, because in hope for the redemption of the body.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate,
Valuable Medicine.

Dr. W. H. PARMELEE, Toledo, O., says: "I have prescribed the 'acid' in a large variety of diseases, and have been amply satisfied that it is a valuable addition to our list of medicinal agents."

That Tired Feeling

The warm weather has a debilitating effect, especially upon those who are within doors most of the time. The peculiar, yet common, complaint known as "that tired feeling," is the result. This feeling can be entirely overcome by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which gives new life and strength to all the functions of the body.

"I could not sleep; had no appetite. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon began to sleep soundly; could get up without that tired and languid feeling; and my appetite improved." R. A. SANFORD, Kent, Ohio.

Strengthen the System

Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarities: 1st, the combination of remedial agents; 2d, the proportion; 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, effecting cures hitherto unknown. Send for book containing additional evidence.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over." J. P. THOMPSON, Register of Deeds, Lowell, Mass.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla beats all others, and is worth its weight in gold." I. BARRINGTON, 130 Bank Street, New York City.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

7% NET Security 3 to 6 times loan. INTEREST semi-annual and paid at your home. 29th year of residence, and 10th of business. No investor ever had to pay taxes, costs of foreclosure, wait for interest, or take land. BEST of References all around you. Write if you have money to loan.

D. S. B. JOHNSTON & SON,
Negotiators of Mortgage Loans,
MENTION THIS PAPER St. Paul, Minn

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.
Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and endorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your Grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it. A. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 333 E. Second St., Phil., Pa.

7 PER CENT. INTEREST
FIRST MORTGAGE
FARM LOANS.

Personal acquaintance with lands and values. Over 2,000 loans made. NO CUSTOMER has ever LOST A DOLLAR of principal or interest on any loans made here. Interest collected and sent to you, free of cost, each year. These loans are very safe, and pay nearly U.S. BONDS, I am three times as much as known and recommended by leading business men and clergymen, East and West—men for whom I have been making these investments for TEN YEARS PAST.

REFERENCES.

REV. WM. L. GAGE, D.D., Hartford, Ct.
M. E. GATES, PH.D., LL.D., President Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.
DR. WM. J. MILNE, President Geneseo Normal School, Geneseo, N. Y
HON. E. M. TOPLIFF, Manchester, N. H.
REV. JOHN W. RAY, Lake City, Minn.
DR. JNO. E. BUCKLYN, Mystic Bridge, Ct.
Importers' and Traders' National Bank, New York.
First National Bank, St. Paul, Minn
The Congregationalist, Boston, N. Y. Observer and hundreds of others in all parts of the United States.

All are pleased with my Investments. Circular, references, letters giving experience and testimony of old customers, and a New Map of Dakota sent free on application. Mention this paper. Address

E. P. GATES,
Pres. Merchant's Bank,
Grand Forks, Dakota

THE SAFEST FOOD IN SUMMER
For Young or Delicate Children.
A Sure Preventive of
CHOLERA INFANTUM.

It has been the positive means of saving many lives where no other food would be retained. Its basis is SUGAR OF MILK, the most important element of mothers' milk.

It contains no unchanged starch and no Cane Sugar, and therefore does not cause sour stomach, irritation, or irregular bowels.

It is the Most Nourishing, the Most Palatable, the Most Economical, of all Prepared Foods.

Sold by druggists—25 cts., 50 cts., $1.00. Send for pamphlet giving important medical opinions on the nutrition of Infants and Invalids.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

6% 7% 8%

The American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, incorporated, with a paid-up capital of $500,000, with branches at Huron and Mitchell, Dakota, offer First Mortgage Farm Loans in Iowa, Minn., Dakota, and Neb., both Principal and Interest Guaranteed. Also 6 per cent. Debenture Bonds (obligations of the Company), running 10 years, secured by Mortgage loans deposited with the Mercantile Trust Co., N. Y. It also issues Demand Certificates of Deposit at 5 per cent. Interest. Write for pamphlet and references.

Home Office, Emmetsburg, Iowa.
E. S. Ormsby, Pres., 150 Nassau St., N. Y.

INVEST Through the Sound and Reliable
WESTERN FARM MORTGAGE CO.
F. M. PERKINS, President. LAWRENCE, KAN. L. H. PERKINS, Secretary.
CAPITAL AND SURPLUS, $250,000.
Carefully selected 1st Mortgage Farm Loans payable in N. Y. Unrivalled facilities. Absolute satisfaction. 10 years' experience. No losses. Refer to 3d Nat'l Bank, N.Y. City; Nat'l Bank, Lawrence, Kan.; and Hundreds of Investors. Send for pamphlet, forms and full information. Branch Offices in N.Y. City, Albany & Phila. N.Y. Office, 137 B'way, C.C. Hine & Son, Agts.

MEMORIAL TABLETS.
MEMORIAL WINDOWS.
CHURCH FURNITURE.
INTERIOR DECORATIONS.
J. & R. LAMB, 59 CARMINE ST., NEW YORK.

Pastors or Trustees about to BUILD OR REMODEL Churches, should read our New Handbook on Church Building, Ventilating, Stained Glass and STEREOCHROME OR SECCO PAINTING. This new and beautiful method of decorating the interior of Churches, is superior to any style of decoration in use. The colors are very rich, imperishable, and warranted proof against leaks or damp from the roof or sides of the building. Plans for New or for Remodeling, or Decoration of Churches, furnished on reasonable terms. Handbook sent free as above, in Middle States. Address, J. S. D'ORSAY & CO., Church Architects and Decorators. Office, 67 BIBLE HOUSE, New York. Established 1849.

Refers to Rev. J. Gaston, D.D., Passaic, N. J., Rev. E. T. Corwin, D.D., Millstone, N. J., about Secco Painting.

R. H. MACY & CO.,

14TH STREET, SIXTH AVE., AND 13TH STREET NEW YORK.

GRAND CENTRAL FANCY AND DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT.

We Call Attention to Our Large and Varied Stock of Goods Adapted to the Summer Season.

Our Customers Residing in the

COUNTRY,

Or Those Visiting the

MOUNTAINS

OR

SEA-SHORE,

Can Rely on Having Their

ORDERS BY MAIL

Carefully Executed and Promptly Shipped.

OUR PRICES

Are Always the Lowest.

R. H. MACY & CO.

SUMMER DRESS GOODS.

James M'Creery & Co.

Offer, previous to their Summer Inventory, Extraordinary Bargains in Dress Goods.

A Large Variety of Fancy Suitings at 50c., 75c., $1, and $1.25 per yard; reduced from $1, $1.25, $2, and $2.25 per yard, respectively.

Also offer 1,000 Yards Printed China Pongee Silks —Dark Colors—at 75c. per yard; reduced from $1.25.

Broadway & 11th St., N. Y.

BARNES'
NATIONAL INK.

Degraaf and Taylor
LEADING FURNITURE MAKERS AND UPHOLSTERERS

47 and 49 W. 14th st., and 48 W. 15th st.
BETWEEN 5TH AND 6TH AVES.,
NEW YORK.

DURKEE'S
GAUNTLET
WARRANTED PERFECTLY PURE TRADE MARK
GAUNTLET
E. R. DURKEE & CO.
BRAND
SALAD DRESSING

UNEQUALLED FOR EXCELLENCE.

Without a rival as a dressing for all Salads, and as a sauce for Cold Meats, etc. It is prepared with extreme care; all its ingredients are of the purest and best; and will keep good for years.

BEWARE OF ALL IMITATIONS.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS, a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.
Address, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York

MANHATTAN
SAVINGS INSTITUTION.

NEW YORK, June 2d, 1886.

SEVENTIETH SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND

The Trustees of this institution have declared interest on all sums remaining on deposit during the three or six months ending June 30, inst., at the rate of THREE AND ONE-HALF PER CENT. per annum on $5 0 and under, and THREE PER CENT. per annum on the excess of $5 00, not exceeding $3,000. Payably on and after the third Monday in July next. EDWARD SCHELL, President.
C. F. ALVORD, Secretary.

ATLANTIC
Mutual Insurance Co.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 51 WALL STREET
ORGANIZED 1842.

Insures against Marine and Inland Navigation Risks.
And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest in accordance with its Charter.

J. D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice President
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice Pres't
A. A. RAVEN 3d Vice Pres't.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

CONTINENTAL
Insurance Co.

Continental Buildings
100 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Cor. COURT and MONTAGUE STS., BROOKLYN
106 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, E.D.

Insures against loss by Fire at reasonable rates.

Reserve for re-insurance	$2,265,427 8
of which for Inland Marine, $55,969 52
Reserve ample for all other claims	553,171 2
Capital paid in cash	1,000,000 0
Net surplus	1,358,879 85
Total Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886.	$5,177,478 99

This Company conducts its business under the restrictions of the New York Safety Fund Law. The two Safety Funds together equal $1,200,000.

H. H. LAMPORT, President.
CYRUS PECK, Secretary.

HOME
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK.

OFFICE, No. 119 BROADWAY.

Sixty-fifth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the Condition of the Company on the first day of January, 1886.

CASH CAPITAL	$3,000,000 0
Reserve Premium Fund	3,011,637 00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	376,483 98
Net Surplus	1,247,995 10
Cash Assets	$7,618,116 08

SUMMARY OF ASSETS

Cash in Banks	$245,795 98
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	897,550 00
United States Stocks (market value)	2,879,390 00
Bank and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	1,522,550 00
State and City Bonds (market value)	222,000 00
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	122,850 0
Interest due on 1st January, 1886	97,056 02
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	358,290
Real Estate	1,272,643 77
Total	$7,618,116 08

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
D. A. HEALD, Vice-President.
J. H. WASHBURN, V. P. & Sec'y
T. B. GREENE, W. L. BIGELOW, E. G. SNOW, JR., } Ass't Sec's.

N. W. HARRIS & CO.,
115-117 Monroe St., CHICAGO.

BONDS Of Counties, Cities, &c. of high grade a specialty. Send for descriptive lists.

A pamphlet containing information concerning the history of Farm Mortgages for the past twenty-five years will be sent free on application to the

Equitable Mortgage Co., 208 B'way, N.Y.

TRAIN UP A CHILD
To wear the perfect-fitting
GOOD SENSE
CORDED
CORSET WAIST
and when she becomes
A BEAUTIFUL WOMAN
enjoying good health, she will then be sure to wear them.

FITS ALL AGES—Infants to Adults.
Every one recommends them.
FOR SALE BY LEADING RETAILERS
Be sure your corset is stamped "GOOD SENSE." Take no other
Send for descriptive circular.

FERRIS BROS.
Manufacturers,
81 White Street, NEW YORK.

LE PAGE'S
LIQUID GLUE

UNEQUALLED FOR CEMENTING WOOD, GLASS, CHINA, PAPER, LEATHER, &c. Awarded GOLD MEDAL, LONDON, 1883. Used by Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Co., Pullman Palace Car Co., &c. Mfd only by the RUSSIA CEMENT CO. GLOUCESTER, MASS. SOLD EVERYWHERE. Sample Tin Can by Mail, 25c.

EDUCATIONAL.

UNIVERSITY
OF THE
CITY OF NEW YORK.

JOHN HALL, D.D., LL.D., Chancellor.
HENRY M. MACCRACKEN, D.D., Vice-Chancellor

I. DEPARTMENT OF ARTS AND SCIENCE.
1. Regular College Courses. Tuition Free.
2. School of Civil Engineering. Tuition $100.
3. Graduate Courses. [See special circular.]
II. DEPARTMENT OF MEDICINE.
III. DEPARTMENT OF LAW.

 Entrance Examinations for Freshman Class, and for School of Engineering, Sept. 21, 22.
 For Catalogues or special information address the Vice-Chancellor, University Building, Washington Square, New York City.

BEST TEACHERS
AMERICAN and FOREIGN,
promptly provided for Families, Schools, Colleges
Skilled Teachers supplied with Positions.
Circulars of Good Schools free to Parents.
School Property rented and sold.
School and Kindergarten Material, etc.
J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO.,
AMERICAN SCHOOL INSTITUTE, 7 East 14th St., N. Y

Elmira College. FOR WOMEN.
Under Care of Synod of New York.

Course of study equal to that of the best Colleges; also Elective and Special Courses. Best advantages in Music and Art. Building with best modern improvements; heated by steam, and furnished with elevator. Astronomical Observatory —Museum and Art Gallery. Terms moderate. Address REV. A. W. COWLES, D.D., Pres't, Elmira, N. Y.

SIGLAR'S PREPARATORY SCHOOL,
NEWBURG-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.,

Gives the best preparation for the best colleges. Two Yale valedictorians in three years. Entrance examinations held at the school by member of Yale Faculty. Daily gymnastics under teacher compulsory. For circulars, etc., address
HENRY W. SIGLAR, M.A., (Yale) Prin.

Riverview Academy,
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Prepares for College and the Government Academies, for Business and Social relations. Thorough Military Instruction. Springfield Cadet Rifles.
BISBEE & AMEN, Principals.

YOUNG LADIES SEMINARY.
43d YEAR Begins Sept. 22.
Address
F. CHANDLER, D. D., Prest. Freehold, N. J.

Deckertown Sussex Co., N.J.
A SELECT ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes. School year begins September 8. For Circular, address,
W. H. SEELEY, A.M., Prin.

RYE SEMINARY, Rye, NEW YORK,
For particulars address Mrs. S. J. LIFE.

Useful for Everybody.

MANY MISTAKES MENDED
IN READING, WRITING and SPEAKING.

12mo. 320 pages. $1 by mail.

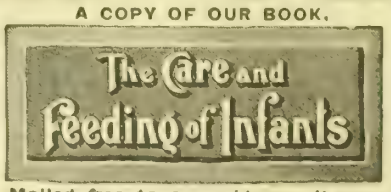
N. TIBBALS & SONS, New York.

A MILLION
BOOKS

RARE, CURIOUS, CURRENT. IN STOCK.
ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.
Libraries Supplied Cheaper than at any Book Store in the World.
LIBRARIES AND BOOKS BOUGHT.
MAMMOTH CATALOGUE FREE.

LEGGAT BROTHERS,
81 CHAMBERS STREET,
3d door West of City Hall Park. NEW YORK.

A COPY OF OUR BOOK.



Mailed free to any address; it contains advice and useful information for nursing mothers and invalids, and an analysis and description of

MELLIN'S FOOD.

DOLIBER, GOODALE & CO., Boston, Mass.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

Presbyterian Board of Publication's
LATE BOOKS.

GRIFFEN ALLEY FOLK.
Showing that even those sorely degraded by intemperance may be raised from the gutter to new lives.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

FROM ACCADIA TO MACHPELAH.
In which the life of Abraham is made interesting by being made real.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.15

MABEL'S SUMMER.
A tale of Child life in Northern India.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, 85 cents.

RALPH WESTON'S SECRET.
Showing how the appetite for strong drink may descend from father to daughter, and again from mother to son.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

THE WEDDED LIFE.
By REV. J. R. MILLER, D.D
A little volume intended for presentation to the newly-wedded, and containing a marriage certificate.
16mo. Price, 60 cents.

Address orders to
JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't,
1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St., New York, N. Y.

Remember! The Glad Refrain

The New Sunday School Song Book, by LOWRY & DOANE, is crowded with stirring Hymns set to fresh and delightful music by the authors and others, acknowledged to be among the most popular composers in the land.

Remember! The Glad Refrain

Should be examined before you purchase. It is a book that will stand the test, the Hymns are first class and the music is faultless.

Remember! The Glad Refrain

Is sold at $25 per 100 copies, which is much cheaper than books of new music of its class have ever been offered before.

Sent for examination on receipt of price.

SPECIMEN PAGES FREE.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 East Ninth St., N. Y.
Chicago House, 81 Randolph St.

YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL

Finds pleasure in its Music. Bright Songs make the Children happy. If you are in need of a new set of Singing Books, examine the following:

Songs of Promise. For Sunday Schools, Prayer and Conference Meetings. By J. H. Tenney and E. A. Hoffman. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3 60.
SONGS OF PROMISE fill this beautiful book, and they have a great variety, having been contributed by many able writers. The book has 160 pages and 149 hymns, each with its own tune. Music and words mostly new.

Singing on the Way. By Mrs. Belle M. Jewett and Dr. Holbrook. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3 60.
A capital book, containing 160 pages of excellent songs, hymns, and "occasional" pieces, such as will be welcomed in the Sunday school. Each piece may be played upon the organ.

Song Worship. For Sunday Schools. By L. O. Emerson and W. F. Sherwin. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.
A book that is intended to lift the service of song in the Sabbath school above the ordinary level, without putting it beyond the reach of the vast majority.

Fresh Flowers. For Infant Classes in Sunday Schools. By Emma Pitt. Price 2 cents; per dozen, $2.40.
A dainty little book, as full as it can hold of sweet melodies with pretty verses set to them, such as every child will understand and enjoy.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y.

CHOIR LEADERS

Are aware of the fact that the greatest musical need of the choir is good, new Scripture and Hymn Anthems for opening, closing, and occasional use. This need the "Music of Vision" proposes to supply

EVERY MONTH.

It will have in each number enough

Choice Anthems and Choir Pieces

to last a choir until the next issue. In addition to this, there will be a number of fine Organ Voluntaries, while in the reading department will be found the usual assortment of Sketches, Stories, Essays, and articles of special interest to choir and chorus members.

Subscription, $1.50 a year.
In Clubs of 5 or more, $1.00 each.
A sample copy will be mailed to any address for 10 cents. Address

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.,
CINCINNATI, O.

The Christian Intelligencer.

Een-dracht maakt macht.

VOL. LVII.—No. 28.
WHOLE No. 2920.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 14, 1886.

$2.65 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.
No. 48 CHURCH STREET.

EDITORS: Rev. JOHN M. FERRIS, D.D. Rev. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR: MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

THE PARDONING POWER, with which our chief executives are invested, is usually exercised with great care, and in the interest of justice. It is an official function that no one covets. What a solemn responsibility it is to have the life of a fellowman suspended upon one's decision. It is not easy to put aside all consideration of personal friendship and sympathy, and to respond negatively to appeals from heart broken women and suffering children for the pardon of their imprisoned husbands and fathers. Yet necessity compels it, in order that the cause of justice might not be defeated.

SUICIDES.—The crime of self-murder is on the increase. Every day we have spread out before us an appalling record of suicides, by drowning, shooting, poisoning, or other means, with all their sickening details. With many life does not seem to be held as a sacred trust; as soon as they grow weary of it, they take it, as if it were not God-given, as if they possessed the right to dispose of it as they will. Perhaps they think it is the shortest way out of troubles over which they had long brooded, believing that death ends all; that beyond this life there is nothing; that "dust to dust" means all of man. When the fool saith in his heart there is no God, it is easy for his hand to strike fatally against himself and others. There would be fewer suicides and murders, and not half so much other crime, if there were less atheism; if men believed more in God, in a sovereign and supreme Ruler, and in the plain facts concerning His being, and His power to hold them to a strict account for their deeds.

THE BRITISH ELECTIONS.—On another page will be found a letter from the Hon. John Jay to the Chairman of the Committee on the Irish Parliamentary Fund, in relation to the active interference of American citizens in the elections in Great Britain. Mr. Jay is one of the few men among us who deserves to be regarded as a statesman. He represents the traditional, established policy of this country in relation to other countries. Those who cling to that policy, in the belief that it is wise and just, will read the letter with interest. Those who have floated with the tide in allowing Irishmen to disregard and overturn our national policy may be profited by a serious consideration of the words of one of our most eminent and valuable citizens. Is this country to be dominated by Irishmen?

THE CONVICTION and punishment of six of Mrs. Landgraf's boycotters impart a comfortable sense of security in time to come against this species of conspiracy and crime. The effect of the summary proceedings against these offenders, and their conviction, cannot be otherwise than wholesome, and restrain henceforth any further attempts at boycotting. The sooner the lesson is thoroughly learned, so plainly stated by Judge Barrett in his charge to the jury, the better for all concerned. He said:

"While workingmen may lawfully co-operate to increase their wages, they may not prevent people who are willing to work for less wages from doing it if they please. If the opposite doctrine should prevail we would stand face to face with a species of slave labor. We have not had to fight for free labor, but we have always demanded it in this country. We hope that we shall not have to add to a fight for free speech, a free press, and free men a fight for free labor. We hope that the rallying cry "Free Labor!" will never be necessary here. Laborers should see that labor is free, not bond. The moment that they insist that other workmen shall not work, and if they do work they will be punished, that moment labor becomes a tyrant, and labor itself becomes that which it professes to complain is an attribute of wealth."

FIDELITY.—It is pleasant in these days of defalcation and embezzlement to recall an instance of the contrary kind. It is now about thirty years since a Mr. Roosevelt died leaving the bulk, if not the whole, of his property—about eight or nine hundred thousand dollars—for the founding of a hospital. Some years of legal delays occurred, for which the executors were not responsible, but nothing was lost by the delay. On the contrary, so wisely were the funds cared for and applied, that now the Roosevelt Hospital occupies ground which with its buildings is worth more than the amount of the original bequest, and has at the same time an endowment of over a million of dollars. We doubt whether the annals of thrift or benevolence can show a shrewder or a more generous management of a sacred trust.

HAPPY CHILDREN.—It is refreshing to read from day to day about car loads of poor, little children of this city, being sent out to enjoy for a fortnight the fresh air, green fields and grateful shade of the country. What a luxury it is to these waifs of the crowded tenements and streets to escape it all for a season, and to literally go out and "roll in clover!" Our hearts swell with thankful emotion as we are told of their childish glee, en route, and of their warm, matronly reception at the hands of our good, country mothers.

The Fresh Air Fund should swell every summer to a proportion adequate to send forth thousands. To many of these children it means more than health and happiness—it means life. It is not easy to name a charity that brings such quick results, both to the child in pleasure and profit, and to the charitable in soul-satisfying remuneration.

At first, country people were somewhat shy of these little folks of the city, and it was no easy task to secure places for them, but now all that is past. They have so ingratiated themselves into the favor of the people; so won their hearts by their good behavior, loving ways, innocent pranks, and their sweet spirit of appreciation and thankfulness, that they are now sought after to such an extent that the need seems to be enough means to send them out in sufficient numbers to meet the desire of the country people to receive and entertain them. The New York Tribune, to which journal especial credit is due for the interest it has taken in this worthy object, reports among other interesting incidents by the way, the following:

"Oh, see the game of ball," shouted one youngster, and as the train rushed by the scene of action, he inquired, "Say, mister, can we play ball when we get into the country?" The expression on each boy's face showed the interest he felt in that most important question, and when they were told that they could play to their hearts' content, the expressive "Ohs!" to which each gave utterance, and the deep breaths of satisfaction told that they appreciated, at least, one of the many pleasures that they were soon to enjoy.

One little girl was sitting at the open window, looking at the flowers, when the window caught her finger. She tried to be brave, but the tears would come. Little Johnnie had been watching while the afflicted member was being bathed in water, but when he saw the tears his own youthful heart swelled with sympathy. Going aside from the rest he took out of his pocket a handkerchief, in the corner of which were wrapped ten pennies. Selecting the brightest of these, he quietly slipped it into the little sufferer's hand, and without comment walked backed to his own seat. This is only one of many illustrations that could be given to show the warm little hearts that beat in so many poor homes in the great city.

Let the spirit of sympathy for the unfortunate, manifested by this little boy, who gave a tenth of all he had, animate the hearts of the prosperous and blessed, and there will be no lack of funds, as there is no lack of country homes, for the extension of this good work, until all the deserving poor children of the city shall share in its benefits.

Sunday-School Speeches.

IT is a trite saying and true, that few persons have the faculty for speaking to an audience of children in a way that interests them and holds their attention. How to do it is, indeed, a secret that not many possess. By speakers who thought they knew how, but who were alone in the opinion, we have witnessed some lame attempts and ludicrous failures at Sabbath-school anniversaries and conventions.

People rarely appear more ridiculous than when, in pure self conceit, they undertake to do that for which they have no aptitude, and consequently fail in it, though they themselves imagine they succeed and perhaps wonder why their hearers withhold applause. In vain expect applause when the feeling of enthusiasm is awakened only in the speaker's bosom. How can an audience applaud when the prevailing emotion is pity for the speaker's folly? If a man's nature is prose from top to bottom, if he has common sense, he will be slow to indulge in poesy. If a man is poor at story-telling, it were better for him and his audience to leave stories untold. If wit is not in a man, it were folly for him to dabble in it.

Now, the notion pretty generally obtains that to interest children you must tell stories and spice your speech with wit and poetry and—what not? Otherwise it will be prosy, and the trouble is that for this spicing operation many speakers have no natural fitness, and yet make believe they have. The truth is, wit is an inborn germ and a spontaneous growth, and sheds its fruit because it must. You can neither buy nor borrow wit; you cannot, by trying, be witty. He only has wit and is witty with whom it is a born possession. So don't try to be a wit; if you are not one already all the trying in the world will not make you one.

It is said of some people, not many, that they are good story tellers. But because many think they can tell a story well, and that in talking to children stories must be told, we have heard good stories so completely spoiled on some lips that they fell flat upon the ears of the audience. If you cannot tell a story well, do not tell it at all. Find out in what way you can best talk and work, and that way pursue. Be natural; be yourself; be what you are, not what you are not. Don't try to be somebody else, who has a big name, and whom, perhaps, you admire, and so disguise yourself that you can hardly be recognized by your closest friend.

Stories and wit are not essential to a good speech. We have heard some stirring ones, in which there were neither, which interested the children and all, because they poured forth from a heart on fire with the love of Christ, and that ardently desired the salvation of souls. The single object was not to entertain and please, but to benefit and save.

Another fault that weakens a speech and deprives it of force is manifest exaggeration, or relating anecdotes that contain palpable untruths. Everybody knows that there are stories and stories, and everybody believes that there is no profit in telling stories, or, to speak plainer, falsehoods.

A young man once delivered an address at a Sunday-school picnic in which he related a story about a precocious youth. He was afterward asked if he believed the story which he told in his speech about that boy, and after he had analyzed it more closely than he had taken the pains to do before, he frankly confessed that he did not, that it was impossible, and expressed regrets that he had used it.

When a man, of considerable repute as a Sunday-school speaker, tells about a Fifth avenue young lady, engaged in mission-school work, gathering up a pile of tracts and child's papers, and placing her knee upon them as they lay upon the floor to strap them together, and then throwing them over her shoulder as she sallies forth into the street to distribute them among the abodes of destitution, everybody concludes, who has any sense of propriety and any knowledge of what belongs to refined womanhood and decent deportment, that he is indulging in exaggeration, bordering on falsehood; and on the principle that nothing is stronger than its weakest point, his speech is considered weak indeed.

It cannot be disputed that many excellent addresses that would have produced a fine impression, have been absolutely spoiled by this wretched habit that not a few speakers have of interjecting at regular intervals some intolerable nonsense, just for the sake of enlivening their remarks and causing mirth in the audience. Better plain speech and the unvarnished truth than this soft of thing.

AN EXPRESSION of opinion in regard to pensions seems desirable. For that reason and not for any political effect record is made here to-day of the fact that the conviction is becoming general that the matter of bestowing pensions has been carried much too far by Congress; that there are many persons on the lists who ought not to be drawing pensions, as they were not injured in body or estate by service in the war rendered by themselves or by a husband or father; that the extension of pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican war and the kinsmen of soldiers of the war of 1812, and bills for the payment of arrears of pensions so called should not be adopted except after deliberate consideration and an expression of public opinion. The draft upon the Treasury for the payment of pensions has become very serious, and if the course of Congress for a few years past be adhered to it will not be a long time before one-third of the national revenue will be consumed in these payments. It is not unusual, when this matter becomes the topic of conversation, to hear gentlemen, whose circle of acquaintances is large, mention one man and another as being in the best of health and engaged in a profitable business while receiving a handsome gratuity each month for services in the late civil war. It is also generally believed that money is drawn in the name of dead men and that not a few undeserving persons are on the lists. Besides almost every one who has among his acquaintances a dozen pensioners, reluctantly acquiesces in the payment of a monthly stipend to them because a considerable proportion are habitually intemperate. A careful scrutiny of the lists and a revision of the statutes relating to pensions is regarded as desirable by an increasing number of our best and most patriotic citizens. On the part of such citizens there has been a most hearty purpose to make an adequate provision for those who have been disabled by service in the army and for those bereaved of a father or son on whom they leaned for support by the casualties of battle or by the unavoidable exposure attending military operations; and not a syllable of objection to the pension bills has come hitherto from the lips of these loyal citizens. But there is a growing feeling among them that their generosity has been and is abused, that the legislation and practice now in force may well be reviewed and stripped of abuses, and that no extension of pensions should be made except from evident necessity and after the most deliberate consideration. The government costs the country at present a million of dollars a day. The tax on every man, woman and child in the country for the payment of the obligations of the government is seven dollars a year, and to the large majority of citizens this is a very serious burden. It perhaps is not amiss to add that these lines have been written by a Republican who has voted for every nominee of his party for the Presidency and is likely to continue to do so. This expression of opinion comes, therefore, from a thoroughly Republican source and not from a Democratic one, and is recorded because there seems to be a need at present of an open declaration of convictions upon this matter.

GO TO THEM.—In regard to the oft-repeated and much-discussed question, "How to Reach the Masses," a friend writes: Is there not something suggestive in the answer made by one of them, when invited to attend the extra church meetings held last winter, "Oh, we cannot come to you, you must come to us; they are very wicked people over the way, and you might do them good." "You must come to us." The little church at Seabright commenced with simple meetings held in a fisherman's cottage. Our Lord's conversation with one woman by the wayside well brought many to believe on Him. Is there any better way to reach the masses than by going to them?

"Old Colony" Papers.

DEATHS OF THE HALF-YEAR.

II.

THE ranks of departed military men are led by Major-General W. S. Hancock, one of our two or three greatest corps commanders, and who passed through a presidential canvass without a smirch upon his name. Gen. David Hunter is best known by his prominence in the first battle of the Rebellion, and by his premature proclamation of emancipation while in command of the Department of the South. Other deaths of men identified with the civil war are those of Commander Hayward of the Navy, who took part in the battle of Port Royal and in the blockade of Charleston; Gen. Durbin Ward, better known as an unsuccessful aspirant for political honors in Ohio; Col. Drake De Kay, an efficient staff officer and gallant regimental commander throughout the entire war; Gen. W. R. Rowley, the military secretary of Gen. Grant; and Ensign Thomas Gay, who ascended Cape Fear River twenty miles within the Confederate lines and blew up the iron-clad Albemarle, but was captured and confined in Libby Prison till the end of the war.

On the other side have died Capt. J. T. Waddell of the famous rebel cruiser Shenandoah, who kept on destroying our commerce for nine months before he knew that the Rebellion was ended, and then surrendered to the Queen of England; Gen. W. G. Desaussure, prominent in the South before, during, and since the war, especially as a jurist and a public spirited citizen; and Gen. Joseph Collins of Louisiana, who commanded the last body of Confederate troops to resign, two months after Lee and six weeks after Johnston.

Abroad have died Hobart Pasha, son of the Earl of Buckinghamshire, and to whom is due the present high state of efficiency of the Turkish navy; Lord Stradbroke, a distinguished soldier under Wellington in the Peninsular war, and the oldest member of the House of Lords; Capt. Shipton who entered the Royal navy eighty-four years ago, and served under Nelson, Napier, Cornwallis, Sir Sidney Smith and others, dying at ninety-six years of age; and Gen. and Baron Ameil, who distinguished himself in several campaigns in Algiers, and in the Italian and Franco-German wars.

Art has lost Paul Baudry, in whose death (says an authoritative critic) "the French school of painting has lost its unquestioned chief, and the world has lost the greatest artistic genius of modern times and one of the greatest of all times and of all countries." His greatest work was the decorations of the Paris Opéra, worthy to be placed beside those of the Sistine Chapel and the Vatican. Henry H. Richardson, the architect, stood at the head of his profession in this country, his best known work being Phillips Brooks's Trinity Church in Boston. Isabey, the French marine painter, Joseph Aigner, the celebrated painter of aristocratic portraits in Vienna, Arthur Quartley, the well-known American painter of marine views, and J. Wrey Mould, the architect and decorator of this city, have also died. Music has lost Ponchielli, author of "I Promessi Sposi" and other operas, and Theodore Ritter, the composer. We may also mention Prince Torlonia, who made many of the most important excavations and discoveries of art treasures in Italy, and whose collection of antiquities ranks second only to that in the Vatican; and James Fergusson, the author of some of the most valuable and exquisitely illustrated works on architecture, especially that of India.

The deaths of those who were conspicuous for their good deeds for Christ and His poor include, first of all, John B. Gough. He was the child of poverty, his mother being buried in a pauper's grave. His dissipated habits left him a wreck in body and mind at the age of twenty-five. He was saved on the brink of suicide by the touch of a kindly hand on his shoulder and hearty words spoken in Christ's name, and became the most popular speaker and the most powerful force for temperance which this country has produced. He estimated that he had travelled on his tours nearly 500,000 miles. He was a most lovable man, and an humble and earnest Christian, and his career will long ring out like a stirring trumpet of reform to the coming generations. His last words, spoken in a husky voice as he leaned forward over the pulpit just as the apoplexy smote him, was: "Young men, keep a clean record!"

Another noble Christian philanthropist was Thaddeus Fairbanks, famous for his invention of the platform scales, and hardly less for his paternal care of his employes, and the model community which he built up around him at St. Johnsbury. He was one of the men who had no difficulty in "solving the problem" of labor and capital. Stephen Cutter, by his wise and winning labors in behalf of the criminal classes in this city, especially the young and the less hardened, has done a work which it can hardly be expected that another can be found to take up so efficiently. Henry P. Kidder of Boston, was always foremost in aiding, as a banker and as a giver, in schemes and subscriptions for needy and suffering humanity.

Mr. John Antonides, of Flatbush, L. I., embalmed his name in the memory of our Church by his bequests of over $50,000 to the benevolent objects of the denomination. Gamaliel G. Smith will long be remembered for his faithful and earnest service as Treasurer of our Board of Foreign Missions. Mr Francis Brown of the First Church of Tarrytown has also left a fragrant memory for his life of purity and beneficence.

A number of notable Christian women have passed away; the wife of Senator Hawley, whose services among the sick and wounded and prisoners entitled her to be considered quite the Florence Nightingale of our Civil War; Rose McCabe, whose name is blessed in New Orleans for her self-sacrificing and successful labors in behalf of erring women and homeless children; Mrs. Griffith John, for thirty-one years since her conversion a missionary in China, and a peculiarly lovely and devoted woman; the Dowager Duchess of Norfolk, who built five churches since her husband's death; and the widow of President Nott of Union College, who till the close of her life continued to be a mother to the students, making it her duty to know each one personally and to have them at her house to take tea and spend the evening. Other noteworthy women were: the mother of Dante Gabriel Rossetti; Mrs. George Bancroft, a rather old-fashioned but, to the last, a famous leader of Washington society; and Mrs. Pendleton, wife of our Minister to Berlin, daughter of the author of "The Star Spangled Banner," and niece of Chief Justice Taney.

Leading men of business, who have died, are C. F. Woerishoffer, the leader of the Wall street stock speculators, and D. P. Morgan, one of the most prominent and successful operators. They died at the ages of forty-three and fifty-five, and left fortunes of ten and twenty millions respectively. Richard M. Hoe won his wealth by a far nobler title, having improved the cylinder press invented by his father by his own invention of the double cylinder, the rotary or lightning press, printing ten papers at a time, or 20,000 an hour; and finally the present perfect press, which cuts the paper after both sides are printed, folds it and turns out the completed newspaper. Col. Richardson of New Orleans, was the largest cotton planter in the world, his plantations covering 30,000 acres, and his crops ranging from seven to fifteen millions of dollars. His tomb cost $50,000, and his statue on his grave $32,000 more. Mr. J. B. Lippincott founded his publishing house in Philadelphia just fifty years ago, beginning with Bibles and prayer books, and having published up to this time about 3,000 books.

The experience of Charles Forrester, the oldest employe of the Post-Office department in this country, was a remarkable one. He entered the service in 1825 as a carrier and used to carry the entire newspaper mail of New York under his arm, and the foreign mail in a wheelbarrow. Carriers received two cents for each letter and one cent for each paper delivered. Out of town letters cost six cents under thirty miles and ran up to twenty-five cents at 400 miles, prepayment being optional and no stamps used. Isaac Cook, ex-postmaster of Chicago, went to that place in 1834, when it was a swampy village of two or three thousand inhabitants. He sold the site for the first railroad depot in the town, and built the first stone house. Rev. John Rankin died in Ohio at the age of ninety-three. He was the oldest Abolitionist in the United States, having organized a society in 1818. He was mobbed as such more than twenty times, and assisted the escape of Eliza and her child, the originals of those characters in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Other old people who had seen history were James Mahoney, of Erie, Pa., aged one hundred, who had served under Perry in the naval fight on Lake Erie, also in the Mexican and the Civil Wars; Mrs. Abigail Bates, of Scituate, Mass., who was one of two women who frightened the British forces away from that harbor in 1812, by concealing themselves in the bushes and playing vigorously upon the fife and drum; the widow of Hudson, the great "Railway King," who in 1846 "had royalties for his courtiers and blue-blooded peers for his subjects," but six or seven years later had "none so poor to do him reverence." Dickens saw him at Boulogne in 1863, "a shabby man, standing on the brink of the pier, and waving his hat in a desolate manner;" a Jewish Pole, aged 117, who was hale and strong-minded to the last, and even contemplated marrying for the ninth time a few months before his death; and, last but not least, Stonewall Jackson's old war-horse.

New Hampshire seems to be a good State to live in, the records showing that old age ranks third among the causes of death. The death-roll last year of a typical country town—Chester, Rockingham County—was sixteen out of a population of eleven or twelve hundred, of whom only one was as young as 21 years, ten of them being over 65, and five over 80 years old.

I shall have to reserve my "Curiosities of Necrology" to still another paper. F. N. ZABRISKIE.

PRINCETON, N. J., July 1st, 1886.

Suggestive.

THE SONG OF THE SCIENTIST,

All hail to the monkey, the ape, or the clam,
To which I'm indebted for all that I am;
Evolution has brought me from one or another,
And what does it signify which is my mother?

If monkey be mother, then monkey I am,
Though call'd by my fellows a rational man;
Surviving, the fittest, although it may be,
Yet monkey is monkey in straight pedigree.

If ape be the mother, how now can we see,
That other than apish the whole race should be?
Whatever improvement, it is all the same,
For men are but apish, in spite of the name.

And if clam be the mother, we're puzzled to know,
How soft shell from hard shell could possibly grow;
But science has spoken, and who should not see,
That impossible things may possibly be!

The maxims of science make man out, at least,
To be, more than all, a respectable beast;
But his end is the same with that of the whole,
Never more to exist in body or soul.

Then hail to the monkey, the ape, or the clam,
To which I'm indebted for all that I am;
Evolution has brought me from one of the three,
But what does it matter to you or to me.

—W. R. G., in Sower and Mission Monthly.

EVOLUTION.—The doctrine of evolution, however satisfactory it may be in explaining the development of the material universe, falters when it comes to deal with the development of man; and almost the universal sense of mankind is, that he has elements, such as are implied by his spiritual nature, which are not animal and bear no relation to the animal world. The animal lives for the present, has no moral sense and is under the complete dominion of his animal nature. We know, too, that there are large tribes of men who, with more intelligence, remain very nearly related to the animal condition.

On the other hand, man, in his better conditions, has a conscience, a sense of justice, a longing after immortality, a desire for a higher and purer life, a belief in an "unseen universe" and conceptions of an unseen God. Then, the wonderful growth of the mind!—in what sense is that animal? The most intelligent horse or elephant soon finds the limit of his powers. But the human mind, illuminated by its second nature, seems to have no limit to its capacity or growth. It goes out searching through the vast fields of space, weighs and measures the great globes that swing around in their orbits, and believes in another state of existence and another and higher order of beings.

Evolution does not take into its environment the operations of the Divine Spirit; but, without it, how can we account for man? On the other hand, if we turn to the Bible his possibilities are all accounted for.

From the first moment of his appearance on the earth he bears a certain relation to another and a higher order of beings; and all along the line of his development when some strong mind shoots up and takes the lead in the work of civilization it is said that "he walked with God," or that "God was with him," and his illumination is attributed to this mysterious connection with other beings. But, even if these representations are not to be accepted, we do not get rid of the necessity for some force, not found in the animal nature of man, to account for his wonderful development and his tendency to commune with "the unseen universe." What our Lord calls spirit is as necessary to account for man as gravitation is necessary to account for the falling of an apple. If we recognize a divine government, how is a mere animal to get access to it? "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," and it would seem to be self-evident that mere "flesh and blood" cannot inherit such a kingdom or be the subjects of such a government. The existence of the human spirit is as needful to put us in connection with the spiritual world as the driving wheel of a loom is to put it in connection with the great Corliss engine.

In the case of the inorganic matter, such as soils and gases, no atom of the dead mass can be translated into the kingdom of life without being touched from above. The plant must send down its roots into the lifeless soil and select and lift up into its own nature such particles as have been fitted for its nutriment; and if the flesh is to be translated into a higher condition, it must have some similar medium to connect it with that condition. It must be touched by some higher power. Then the dull animal is brooded by a new force; its faculties feel a new stimulus. Thought developes into reflection; the mind is thrilled with joy at the discovery of new truth; it goes out after knowledge; it rises into the realm of civilization; it becomes capable of unselfishness and generosity; it may even see the "beauty of holiness;" and, putting itself under the law of purity, may enter the kingdom of God.

We may therefore see why it was that in the early ages, men, notwithstanding their wickedness, arose to high conditions of civilization. In some way they found the conditions necessary to develop their second natures. If we accept the Bible account the way is plain. The world was peopled through Adam, who held direct communication with God. After the flood, the race was renewed through Noah, who is said to have "walked with God." Man's second nature was thus developed from the first, and he went forth with his spirit quickened "to replenish the earth and subdue it," to domesticate cattle, to increase in knowledge, to build cities, and to organize governments.

We may also see that if we would grow up into a full manhood we must "mortify the deeds of the flesh" and fill our spirit natures from the fountain of God's love. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Purity is the way of God. Hence, every bad habit amended, every vile suggestion suppressed, every base passion subdued, every conquest of whatever kind over the animal within us brings us nearer to the entrance of the Divine kingdom. But, no less important is the spirit nature to good fellowship and good neighborhood in the affairs of this life. We are told that the "flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh." And hence, if we would promote peace and good order, we must put the reins in the hands of the Spirit. It is the animal within us that breaks out in greed and hate and malice and revenge, and all forms of selfishness; but the fruits of the spirit are "love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, patience, temperance."—The Interior.

MISTAKEN EFFORT.—There are good people who sorrow for want of success in Christian endeavors, who fail to appreciate that their own persistency may have militated against the end they have desired. Faithfulness sometimes takes a wrong form. There are parents whose anxiety for their children's salvation have led them to such constancy of rebuke and warning that they have awakened antagonisms and hardened their children against spiritual impressions. There are Sunday-school teachers, who have so continually made manifest one idea and with so little wisdom that they have driven their scholars from Christ rather than attracted them to Him. We have known workers in revivals whose injudicious and unseasonable efforts to gain souls have done more harm than good. We have known a man to be so incessant in his personal appeals to the unconverted at all times and places that young people were only anxious to escape if they saw him approaching. This was not so much to be attributed to their disinclination to religious thought as to his want of wisdom in his onslaughts upon them. Even an effort to do good may be ill-timed or unwisely made. Paul tells us it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing, but it is possible to keep "pegging way" with such persistency as to insure defeat rather than success.

To accomplish good results we must allow time for thought and conviction. Seeds need opportunity for germination. Good as light and sunshine are for the growth of plants and trees they are not incessantly in exercise upon them. The darkness alternates with the day and amid the quiet of the night the process of growth goes on better than it could with perpetual exposure to the sun's rays. So we may find in Christian work that a grand revolution in the mind and heart can be accomplished if, after we have spoken words of warning and invitation, we are satisfied to "rest awhile" and turn from speech on earth to invoke a blessing from heaven.—Baptist Weekly.

A DIVIDED BIBLE.—Miss La Paz, colporteur of the Ladies' Bible Society of Philadelphia, in Cuba, contributes to the Bible Society Record the following interesting incident, showing how the Bible is prized where copies of it are scarce: In the suburbs of Havana I called at a very poor house, where I did not know anyone, but was invited to go in. I found an old man and woman. After talking to them for fifteen minutes, I asked if they would allow me to read the New Testament to them, and whether they had a Bible in the house. The man, who was eighty-nine years old, went to his room and brought half of a Bible commencing at the 51st Psalm. To my enquiry why they broke such a book as the Bible in such a manner, he answered:

"My mother died when I was twenty-five years old, and all her property was divided between my brother and me. We got along very well in the division until we came to this Bible, which my mother brought from New York a hundred years ago. As both of us wanted it, and neither of us would give up, there was nothing to do but to divide it, and we broke it into two equal parts, each taking a part, and both of us read it every day. My brother went to Africa and stayed there thirty years, and when he came back, we changed; he read my part and I read his, and both of us believed."

These old Cubans had never heard about Protestants and were not Roman Catholics, but appeared to be truly Christian people, having learned all they knew from the Bible, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

AN EXPERIMENT.—Some time ago the Rev. J. R. Paxton, D.D., of this city, sarcastically described Harvard as a college where baseball is made compulsory and religion an elective. The Board of Overseers have made good the latter clause of the description by making the attendance of students at chapel exercises voluntary. This course has been urged on the Overseers for several years without securing their concurrence, but the recommendation of the new Plummer Professor and of the associate pastors has proved decisive. This is an experiment whose result on the morals of the students will be watched with quite as much curiosity and anxiety as the effect of the elective system on their mental development.—The Examiner.

Our Church.

We are thankful for items of Church News compactly stated; or for marked copies or clippings from local exchanges, which we would not otherwise see. To insure publication in next number, they must reach us by noon on Monday. A condensation of items is unavoidable

"Critical Edition of the Constitution."

THE following is the report of the committee, appointed in 1885, amended and adopted at the late General Synod:

This Committee was appointed under a resolution presented by the Committee on Overtures, which is as follows: (See Minutes, 1885, p. 706.)

"Since there has been as yet no correctly prepared edition of the Constitution, and especially of its Liturgy, let a suitable Committee be appointed to prepare an accurate one as to translation, arrangement, etc., for future publication, as proposed by the Classis of New Brunswick." Revs. A. G. Vermilye, E. T. Corwin, D. D. Demarest, with the Elders, H. W. Bookstaver and John L. Zabriskie, were so appointed.

This "critical edition," also, was intended to cover the substance of other accompanying resolutions, (see p. 706,) so that instead of foot notes, "simple marginal references be appended to the page," in the Obligatory Doctrinal Forms, leaving everything in the way of interpretation and explanation to the Standards themselves, and to an honest ministry pledged thereto, where it has been these 200 years; and that "so far as present foot-notes are merely of the nature of better translation" they "be transferred to the text."

First: In fulfillment of the duty assigned to them the Committee would present what they believe to be an accurate historical arrangement of the Constitution; premising that some things have carelessly been printed as parts of our present Constitution, which have no place therein; for instance, Various Forms of Certificates, Rules for Reception of Ministers from other Ecclesiastical Bodies, Rules of Order for the Government of the General Synod, etc. The Constitution proper includes the recognized Doctrinal Standards, (in addition to the Ancient Creeds,) the Liturgy, and the "declared" Articles of Church Government; and these, with a suitable Title Page, and a Historical Introduction, for general information, should be arranged, historically, as follows:

I. THE STANDARDS.

1. The Confession of Faith, 1561.
2. The Heidelberg Catechism, 1563.
3. The Compendium, of Faukelius, 1608, adopted, 1619.
4. The Canons of Dort, 1619.

II. THE LITURGY.

Our Liturgy was begun in 1566; was finally completed and adopted by the Synod of Dort, 1619. The Liturgy (with the other parts of the Constitution), was acknowledged by the American Churches, and contains the following forms:

OBLIGATORY FORMS.

1. For the Baptism of Infants, 1566.
2. For the Baptism of Adults, composed 1604; finally adopted, 1619.
3. For the Administration of the Lord's Supper, 1566.
4. For Ordaining Ministers, 1586.
5. For Ordaining Elders and Deacons, 1586.
6. Form of Ex-communication, 1581.
7. Form of Re-admission, 1586.

OPTIONAL FORMS.

1. All Forms of Prayer.
2. The Consolation of the Sick.
3. The Marriage Forms.
   (1.) The Old Form.
   (2.) The New Form.

III. THE RULES OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT.

These began to be framed in 1568, adopted authoritatively in 1586, and have been amended and thrice completely revised, until in 1874 they assumed the present form.

These three Heads complete what we now call THE CONSTITUTION.

There is, however, another body of "Forms," of which we must now speak. The history of Synodical action from the beginning shows that the Obligatory Forms, as above given, have never been altered. They have been regarded and treated as historical, and obligatory, and no attempt to alter the wording of either the Standards or Liturgy, as they came from the Synod of Dort, has prospered. Successive Committees have observed the injunction of 1853, not to touch "Doctrinal sentiments." Their work has been in the direction of improved translation, of bracketing portions for public reading, without destroying the text, and the addition of "NEW OFFICES." With this in view the last Synod passed also the following resolution, (p. 706,) that "whatever a proper development may seem to demand in the way of Forms Additional, to the old, or other matter, let it be properly adopted, and placed separately by itself, as new matter, marking, and appropriate to, its own age."

In 1878 the Synod "approved" of certain New Offices, and "recommended the Classes to give consent that they be printed in connection with our Standards, not as authoritative and imperative formulas, but as specimens embodying the sense of the Church in reference to the most edifying mode of rendering these services." This recommendation of the Synod was endorsed by 22 out of 33 Classes, and the Synod accordingly made the "declaratory" resolution that these new offices be so printed. If the Synod should at the present session take the requisite action towards the constitutional adoption of these Forms, it will give the historical connection, and they will stand among the Optional Forms, after the Marriage Forms, as follows:

4. Form for the Public Reception of Baptized Members into Full Communion.
5. For the Installation of Ministers.
6. For the Laying of a Corner-stone.
7. For the Dedication of a Church.
8. For the Burial of the Dead.

The certificates, Rules of Order, etc., which have heretofore been printed in an Appendix, can be printed in the back of the volume, for convenience sake, with care in editing to distinguish them from the Constitution proper.

Secondly: As another part of their duty your Committee were to prepare certain "marginal references," and to transfer from the "foot-notes" to the text, in the Baptismal and Communion Forms, what was merely "better translation." The "marginal references" were to be in place of the proposed, but rejected "foot-note amendments," leaving everything in the way of interpretation and explanation to the Standards themselves, and to an honest ministry pledged thereto. And by the revised arrangement proposed above, as will be seen, and by the help of these references, (as in the Scriptures themselves,) whoever has doubt of the meaning can readily turn to the accepted Standards of the Church for a fuller, and the precise explanation and meaning.

The references proposed by your Committee will appear in connection with the first question in the Form of Infant Baptism and in the second and fourth questions in the Form of Adult Baptism. The recommendations in regard to transfer of foot-notes to the text are that the word "Complete" in the foot note connected with the second question of the Form for Infant Baptism be substituted in the text for the word "perfect," and that in the Form for the Administration of the Lord's Supper the word "judgment" be substituted for the word "damnation." Thus will all the foot-notes be abolished.

The Committee have also in accordance with their instructions examined the general translation. They propose a few changes in the questions in the Forms for the Administration of Baptism, which do not impair the doctrine, nor depart from the sense of the original.

I. QUESTIONS IN THE FORM FOR INFANT BAPTISM.

1. Although our children are conceived and born in sin and therefore are subject to all sorts of miseries, yea, to condemnation itself, do you acknowledge that they are sanctified in Christ, and therefore as members of His Church ought to be baptized?

2. Do you acknowledge the doctrine contained in the Old and New Testaments and in the articles of the Christian faith to be the true and complete doctrine of salvation?

3. Do you promise and intend to instruct these children (of whom you are either parent or witness) when they shall arrive at years of discretion, in the aforesaid doctrine, according to your ability, or to cause and help them to be so instructed?

II. QUESTIONS IN THE FORM FOR ADULT BAPTISM.

In examining these questions we have had the advantage of possessing the Dutch translation from the Latin of the Post Acta of the Synod of Dort. It is a matter of regret that the original Latin was inaccessible to us. But following the Dutch we propose some changes in the punctuation, and in the translation of a few words, and also the dropping out of a few words, which have somehow been foisted in. We propose—

1. Do you believe in the One true God distinct in three persons, Father, Son and Holy Spirit who hath made heaven and earth, and all that in them is, of nothing, and still maintains and governs them so that nothing comes to pass in heaven or on earth without His Divine will? Yes.

2. Do you believe that you were conceived and born in sin and therefore a child of wrath, by nature wholly unfit for good, inclined to all evil, and that you have frequently in thought, word and deed transgressed the Commandments of the Lord, and are you heartily sorry for these sins? Yes.

3. Do you believe that Christ who is true and Eternal God and true man, who took His human nature out of the flesh and blood of the Virgin Mary, is given you of God as a Saviour, and that by this faith you receive forgiveness of sins in His blood, and that by the power of the Holy Spirit you are become a member of Jesus Christ and His Church? Yes.

4. Do you assent to all the articles of the Christian religion as they are here taught in the Christian Church out of the Word of God, and do you purpose to continue steadfastly in the same doctrine to the end of your life, also do you reject all heresies and errors repugnant to this doctrine, and do you promise that you will persevere in the Communion of our Christian Church not only in the hearing of the Word, but also in the use of the Lord's Supper? Yes.

5. Have you purposed in your heart always to live a Christian life, to forsake the world and its evil lusts, as becomes the members of Christ and His Church, and to submit yourself to all Christian admonitions? Yes.

THE HEIDELBERG CATECHISM.

A new translation of this Catechism from the original German was made in 1878, and submitted to the churches for examination and emendation. In 1881 a committee was appointed to consider the question whether the original German should be regarded as the standard text and to co-operate with a committee from the General Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States (if such should be appointed) with the view of agreeing on a standard version for the uses of both churches. It does not appear that this committee has ever made a report.

In concluding this report your Committee may be permitted to express the opinion that the last Synod was wise in restricting itself to the above points. They are strictly in the line of past action and opinion as to what could be done. Moreover, it is easy to ask changes on the ground that some misunderstand and are offended. But to meet this old difficulty of the evangelical faith would require changes all along the doctrinal line, and still not secure the Common Consent, as has already been proved in all past attempts. If, however, in course of time new expressions are needed, let them stand by themselves as suggested by the last Synod, and as making a historical development, leaving the old unimpaired. If the present report meets the approval of Synod we would suggest that the arrangement of the Constitution, for a future edition, be left to the Editorial care of the committee which has already examined and outlined the subject.

We would add that a paper of Rev. N. D. Williamson, referred to in the minutes of last year, has not been placed in our hands, and therefore could not be reported on.

The following resolutions are recommended for adoption:

1. Resolved, That the version of the Heidelberg Catechism reported to the General Synod in 1878 be adopted as the authorized one, and that henceforth it be substituted for the old version in all future editions.

2. Resolved, That the new forms referred to in the Report, viz.: The form for the public reception of baptized members to full communion, for the installation of ministers, for the laying of a corner stone, for the dedication of a church, and for the burial of the dead, which have been already for several years, with the approval of the Classes, printed in connection with the standards, be now recommended to the Classes for approval as optional constitutional forms.

3. Resolved, That the version of the questions in the form for baptism given in the above report to General Synod in 1886, be adopted as the authorized one, and that henceforth it be substituted for the old version in all future editions in English.

Respectfully submitted,

A. G. VERMILYE,
D. D. DEMAREST,
E. T. CORWIN,
} Committee.

....CORNER STONE LAID OF SECOND CHURCH OF HARLEM, N. Y.—Although well nigh a year has passed since ground was broken for the erection of this church at the corner of Sixth avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-third street, for adequate reasons the corner stone was not laid until the twenty-fourth of last month, at which time the completion of this beautiful edifice was to all appearances a matter of only a few months' additional work. The Spring session of the Classis of New York, held in the chapel of the church, immediately preceded the ceremonies, which were simple and brief. The preliminary service held in the chapel consisted of praise, prayer, reading of the Scriptures by Rev. Carlos Martyn, and remarks by Rev. Drs. Chambers and Ormiston of the Collegiate Church. At the conclusion of these exercises the congregation repaired to the new building, when the corner-stone was formally laid. Among the ministers present were the Rev. George H. Smyth, pastor of the church, Rev. Drs. Thomas E. Vermilye, T. W. Chambers, Wm. Ormiston, E. B. Coe, D. McL. Quackenbush, Roderick Terry, and J. Elmendorf, pastor-elect of the Harlem Church. A box, containing among other things, newspapers and coins of the day, a copy of the Constitution of the Reformed Church, the history and Constitution of the Harlem Reformed Church, together with the names of its present pastors and consistory, was deposited in the niche reserved for it in the wall of the tower, when the stone was swung into place and the ceremonies concluded. On the face toward Sixth avenue the following inscription is chiseled into the stone: "Second Reformed Church, 1886," and on the 123d street face, "Christ the chief corner-stone of our faith."

The Second Reformed Church of Harlem is an offshoot of the Harlem Reformed Church, an ecclesiastical corporation that dates its foundation back to the year 1660. For the present, at least, the new church will remain under the fostering care of the old church, which has for years been a sort of denominational as well as a local landmark. With its two churches this corporation will find place among such as Trinity and the Collegiate Churches of this city.

When completed, this church will be one of the most pretentious of the church edifices of our denomination, and will rank second to few. It is designed by Mr. J. B. Thomas, the well known architect, after the early English order of Gothic architecture. With the parsonage on Sixth avenue and the chapel on One Hundred and Twenty-third street the entire area covered by the buildings will be 110 feet on the avenue and 125 feet on the street. The stone used in the entire construction is Ohio freestone, which for combination of beauty and utility has few equals. The estimated valuation of the buildings when completed, together with the land which has greatly enhanced in value since ground has been broken, is placed at $250,000 with only a light encumbrance.

In its general outline the church is cruciform. An ornamental lantern rises from the point where the roof converges for ventilation purposes, and breaks the monotony of the lines formed by the ridges of the acute-angled gables. Four entrances on Sixth avenue make access and egress an easy matter. These portals are low, narrow, lancet-headed openings, with dripstones terminating in elaborately carved masks. A spire with a cross at its apex will throw a shadow from this symbol of salvation from a height of 190 feet. Richly carved flying buttresses, running from the front wall of the church to a sort of cleve story, give the appearance of lending additional strength to this delicately gradated spire. The cathedral aspect of the exterior, which is not without some claim to the imposing, is somewhat subdued by the arrangement of the auditorium. It is on the amphitheatre plan and discards the opportunity for transepts in its details. A gallery extends along three sides of the wall, at the Sixth avenue side of which will be placed the organ, one of Roosevelt's best make. The pews and timber vaultings are to be finished in polished cherry. A pulpit of elaborately carved wood or marble will find place opposite the entrance to the church, and will be supported on either side by benches with richly-wrought standards at their ends for the elders' and deacons' use. The windows, which are spacious and rich in tracery, will be of opalescent and jewel-stained glass. That over the pulpit, which is circular in form, will be particularly rich in its setting. Tiles of the latest imported designs will cover the entire floor of the auditorium, which will be traversed by numerous aisles, making the pews easily accessible. The seating capacity of the church is 900, and that of the chapel 400. In the latter, in addition to the usual accommodation of lecture, Sabbath-school, Bible and infant class rooms, one for consistory is to be found as well as a ladies' parlor and kitchen. It is expected that by September 1st the church, chapel and parsonage will be completed, a congregation formed, and the work of the church inaugurated.

COM.

...PERSONAL. — President Gates, of Rutgers College, sailed Thursday, July 8th, in the "Hammonia," Hamburg line, for a vacation in the north of Germany and Switzerland. His youngest brother, Mr. Lewis E. Gates, instructor in Harvard, accompanied him....Mr. J. C. Lanphier on July 1st entered upon the thirtieth year of his mission work in the North Dutch Church of this city. The revival in the Fulton Street Prayer-Meeting began in September, 1857. With this prayer-meeting, which became so famous and fruitful of good, Mr. Lanphier has been identified from its beginning to the present time.

....A DESERVED MEMORIAL. — The members of the congregation at Caatsban, N. Y., are erecting a monument to the late Rev. Stephen Searle, and inclosing his burial plot in the cemetery there with an iron fence and marble posts. The cemetery has been largely extended, enclosed by a neat fence and the grounds beautified.

....COHOES, N. Y.—The communion service in the church here July 11th was a very solemn one; and the attendance large. Eight members were received—six on confession; three of these young men from the pastor's Bible class.

....MIDDLETOWN, N. J.—This church celebrated its fiftieth anniversary Sunday, July 4th, with appropriate services morning and evening. A profusion of flowers tastily arranged adorned the pulpit and platform. The singing was exceptionally fine. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Charles D. Buck, preached in the morning an historical sermon from Lev. 25: 11, "A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you." During the first three years of this church's existence the Rev. J. T. B. Beekman supplied the pulpit gratuitously. He was followed by Rev. John B. Crawford, the first settled pastor. His successors were Revs. Alexander C. Millspaugh, George Seibert, Luther H. Van Doren, and Charles D. Buck, D.D., the present incumbent of the pulpit. As to the membership, though no registry was kept for more than forty years, it is believed that the original membership was forty-four, which, under Mr. Beekman, had increased to between "fifty and sixty;" that Mr. Crawford received 13, four on confession and nine by certificate; Mr. Millspaugh, 107, seventy on confession and thirty-seven by certificate; Mr. Seibert, 20, fourteen on confession and six by certificate; Mr. Van Doren, 20, eleven on confession and nine by certificate; the present pastor, 41, twenty-nine on confession and twelve by certificate.

The church had raised altogether in the fifty years about $55,000.

In the evening Rev. George Seibert, the only surviving ex-pastor, preached an able and suitable discourse from Acts 2: 42. Large audiences attended both services, and both sermons are published in The Monmouth Inquirer of July 8th.

....OUR FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The Board received in June $3,039.03, which is about $1,400 more than in June, 1885. For the two months of the fiscal year now passed, it has received from the usual sources $6,294 79, a sum greater than the receipts of a year ago by $2,042. To these are to be added $4,976.30, specially contributed for the "Jonathan Sturges Seminary" for girls, at Nagasaki, Japan.

These figures indicate progress in the right direction. Still greater progress, however, is necessary if the wants of the next four months, as set forth last week, are to be met. The treasury will require $26,000 by the 1st of November in order to pay its way. This calls for an average contribution of $6,500 per month, or a little more than the two months have brought. It is the Lord's treasury, for the Lord's own work, and as of old He sits over against it. He knows its needs and what is put therein. His blessing cannot fail to rest on those who combine to keep it full. COR. SEC.

Gleanings from Our Exchanges.

....The First Church of Newark, N. J., is to be improved during the summer by decorating the ceiling and side walls, and repainting, and the ladies will lay new carpets in the aisles. Other improvements are also in contemplation to make this old church more attractive. Their new pastor, the Rev. Dr. Easton, will take a vacation until the re-opening in the fall.

....A new Sunday-school building is being erected at the rear end of the church at Bergen Point, N. J., to which access will be had from the two aisles of the church and by entrances through vestibules at the north and south sides of the new building The main room of the structure will be 35x40 feet, with ceiling 20 feet high. In addition to the main room, there will be a primary class-room, a Bible class-room, pastor's study, and a library. The new structure will be completed early in September and will cost $4,000. It will be a very convenient and valuable addition to the church.

....Preparations are already being made for the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the organization of the First Church of Hackensack, N. J. The exact date of the formation of the society is not known, but it was in 1686. The date for the celebration has been set for Sept. 23d.

....The Rev. E. J. Blekkink has accepted a call from the church at Lisha's Kill, N. Y., and will enter upon his duties at once.

....The Rev. J. Howard Van Doren was installed pastor of the Church of Esopus, N. Y., on Wednesday evening, June 30th. Rev. A A. Zabriskie presided and read the form for installation. Rev. Dr. Van Santvoord read the Scriptures and offered prayer. The sermon from Proverbs 9: 30, "He that winneth souls is wise," was preached by Rev. B. C. Lippincott.

....The Rev. J. Talmage Bergen, lately installed pastor of the Church of Shokan, N. Y., and who was married June 16th to Miss Ella Deen, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was warmly welcomed by his congregation on returning with his bride to the parsonage after the wedding tour.

....About thirty little folks of the Sunday-school of the Stuyvesant Church, N. Y., gave a delightful entertainment on Thursday evening of last week in the church parlor for the benefit of the Sunday-school library. It was pronounced a success in every way.

A Correction.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: My attention has been called to the report of my address before the Particular Synod of New York found in your issue of the 30th ult., in which there are some inaccuracies which would sadly mislead if not corrected.

I must have spoken less distinctly than usual, or the reporter was unfortunately located, otherwise so many mistakes could not have occurred. It is headed "The Rupee Christian," an expression that I never used and never would use. In the first sentence I am made to say that the dime represents more in purchasing power in India than the dollar in America "by perhaps four times." That is untrue. That would make money worth forty times as much in India as in America. I said that it was worth in native food and dress and labor more than ten times as much, which is true. I am made to say that women work all day "for one-sixth of a dime." I said two-fifths of a dime, or four cents, which is the fact. I am made to say "not a man in India becomes a Christian without suffering the loss of all things." That statement is not true. What I said was that "no men of property have become Christians in our mission without suffering the loss of all things," which is true. There are some minor misconceptions, but the above are the essential ones. Kindly make these corrections, and oblige Yours fraternally,

JACOB CHAMBERLAIN.

CANAAN, N. M., July 10th, 1886.

News of the Week.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 7.—Mr. Labouchere thinks the elections probably lost to the Gladstonians....A green Home Rule flag was torn down from the windows of a priest's house at Brigg, Lincolnshire, by a mob of Unionists....A riot took place at the Conservative Workmen's Club House in Dublin. A Catholic procession was attacked with bottles. Three of the Catholics died and twenty were reported as helpless in hospitals ...The Tories continue to gain their victories... The Powers have been informed by Russia that Batoum is no longer a free port. Some think that that announcement is the first step in the Czar's denunciation of the treaty of Berlin ...M. de Lesseps has reported to the Panama Canal Committee that a level canal cannot be completed at a cost of 600,000,000 francs in three years. ....The Academy of Music at Denver, Col., was destroyed by fire yesterday.... Ice houses owned by John Fetter near Rahway, N. J., were destroyed by fire and 3,000 tons of ice melted....A terrible gale visited Apalachicola, Fla., uprooted trees and unroofed houses, causing a loss of $40,000.... The house carpenters strike in Williamsburgh was ended yesterday....A policeman in Philadelphia was bitten in the hand by a drunken prisoner and is lying very low from the effects of the bite.

THURSDAY, 8.—The majority in the House of Commons against Home Rule when the House was dissolved was 30. Yesterday morning it was 72....Mr. and Mrs. Flower gave a brilliant entertainment at Stratford-on Avon in honor of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes....Another earthquake shock felt at Malaga yesterday....Archbishop Guibert, of Paris, is very low....It is stated that the English Government will take no isolated action in connection with the closing of the port of Batoum by Russia, but will only join the other Powers in sending a diplomatic protest. It is a general belief in Turkish military circles that war between Russia and Austria will not long be delayed. The Russian Government is pressing the Porte to pay the indemnity due Russia....It is stated that the last hope of the Gladstonians, the vote of the counties, has failed. The English counties are going Unionists....The mercury over 100 deg. in camp at Peekskill, N. Y....A severe hail, wind and rain storm struck Scranton, Penn. The storm lasted several hours.... Joseph Werner, of New York city, killed his son and then killed himself yesterday. No cause was given for the rash act....The drouth has done serious damage to crops in the Northwest... The great hall and the entire right wing of the University of Brussels was burned yesterday. Loss $200,000....The drouth has become so severe in parts of Texas that people are emigrating eastward and begging their food as they go. Three hundred families are destitute.

FRIDAY, 9.—Reports from London show a total Conservative and Unionist vote of 942,437 and a Gladstonian vote of 887,728....A riot broke out in Wales yesterday afternoon. Over one hundred persons were wounded by the police....The dead bodies of H. A. Crommelin, Secretary of the Dutch Legation at Vienna, and Margrave, Pallavacini, and their companions, who attempted to make the ascent of the Grossglockner Alps on June 25th, have been found at the foot of the Pasterze Glacier at Glockerkaar.... There is considerable uneasiness in official circles over the situation in the East. The Russians are claiming Khamiab which, as is well known, has been an Afghan possession for thirty five years ...Captain Samuel Packard, of Malden, Mass., died yesterday at the age of 100 years and five months ... It is reported that while in Toledo, O., recently ex-President R. B. Hayes expressed his willingness to be a candidate for Congress on the Republican ticket....Six boycotters were convicted and sentenced yesterday. These were the Bohemian boycotters who tried to injure the Widow Landgraf's bakery business in New York....Ex-Alderman Waite is locked up as a witness in the House of Detention....Cardinal Guibert, Archbishop of Paris, is dead.

(Continued on page thirteen.

Our Contributors.

A Sonnet.

Thoughts at a Picnic.

BY GEORGE W. BUNGAY.

HOW cool and restful is the woodland glade,
Peaceful and fragrant are the shady bowers.
The oak is reigning monarch, and he towers
In majesty; low at his feet are laid
His predecessors. Like soft light in shade
Their epitaphs are writ in pale sweet flowers,
Where sunbeams sift through leaves in golden showers;
And here young men and maidens promenade.
These branches to their joyful vision seem
Like ladder rounds, with messengers of light;
Such as the wandering patriarch in his dream
Saw bringing benedictions through the night.
Around, woven of moss a carpet lies,
And over all a tent of smiling skies.

Mrs. Loring's Discipline.

BY MARY E. BRUSH.

CHAPTER V.

"YOU poor, dear lamb!" That is what good Mother Bartlett said when Ruth came home and told of her trial. "It was for all the world like Daniel in the Lions' Den! And you didn't get eaten any more than he did, did you? I told Green that I expected you'd have a time with Miss Thornton, because I have heard tell how set she was in her way, but he says, 'Mrs. Loring'll steer through all clear!' And I reckoned you would, though I didn't calculate on your having quite such a time. Your husband's aunt! Well, I do declare! This world isn't so big a place after all, is it now? We get off in a strange place and the first thing we know we're jogging somebody's elbow that we're acquainted with! Well, what under the canopy did the woman say to you after she found out who you were?"

"I didn't stay long enough for her to say anything," replied Ruth, laughing now, after having received Mother Bartlett's comfort and sympathy. "I must own to leaving very abruptly. It would have been decidedly awkward for me to stay. And there was no need for it anyhow, for my work was all done. The house was trimmed very prettily indeed. However indignant Miss Thornton may be with me, I do not think she will make any complaints to Mr. Green in regard to my work."

"There are never any made," was Mrs. Bartlett's hearty rejoinder. "And you've got another job that'll take you out of town; that is, just as soon as you're rested. Senator Peacock's daughter's going to get married. She was going to wait till June, but Mr. Morris—that's the young man she's to marry—has got to go to Europe, and so she thought she'd have the affair now and go with him on the wedding tour. And they sent express word that you were to arrange the flowers."

"Well, I'll be ready to go after a night's rest. I must own to feeling pretty tired now."

"I don't doubt it, dearie. And don't you lie awake thinking about that aunt. Try and have Christian feeling toward her. She's old and, I expect if the truth were told, more to be pitied than envied!"

"That is true, Mrs. Bartlett! Woodlawn is a beautiful place! The house is filled with everything that wealth can buy, but after all, it lacks child voices and faces. There is a coldness, an elegant dreariness, if one may so term it, that is dreadfully depressing. No, I don't think I feel hard toward Miss Isabel Thornton; I try to remember that when my Guy was a little boy, she was as a mother to him."

The next forenoon Ruth took an early train out to Bellemont, where Senator Peacock lived. There is no need of going into the details of her work here. Suffice it to say that she performed her task satisfactorily. Late in the afternoon, just as she was stepping from room to room, giving the finishing touches, there was a quick, sharp ring at the door and a messenger boy inquired for her. He brought a telegram from Mr. Green. For an instant Ruth's heart stood still. Had any evil happened to her precious Beth or Ray? With trembling fingers she tore open the envelope and read:

"MRS. LORING: Come home at once. Miss Thornton very sick. Wants you. ALEXANDER GREEN."

When Ruth Loring went down the broad steps at Woodlawn at the close of her sojourn there, she never expected to place her foot on them again. Yet, little more than twenty-four hours had passed, she was ascending them. This time, too, Elise opened the door for her. Her sallow face was red and swollen with weeping, but it brightened a little at the sight of Ruth.

"Oh, madame! I am very glad to see you! My mistress have been so uneasy."

"Is she very sick? When was she taken?" Mrs. Loring inquired as she entered the room and removed her wraps.

"Eh bien! She is getting old, the dear lady! She have several of these attacks, but none so severe as this. Something about—what you call him?—the nervous system? The excitement of entertaining so many peoples, ah, she was much fatigued. It was one big crowd that we had, crême de la crême! So many pretty faces, gay dresses and bright jewels. And my mistress looked as charmingly as anyone in spite of her years. There was on her face not one particle of that despicable hair-dye. But as I said, we had a charming time and everybody looked happy. My mistress herself was unusually gay. But after they had all gone, and they stayed late, especially the dancers, I could see that she was wretchedly tired. But for the slight soupçon of rouge I had put on her cheeks she would have been deathly pale. She sank down on her easy-chair in the boudoir and she say, 'Elise, I am utterly exhausted. I feel faint. Bring me some water.' I hastened to get it, but when I returned, my poor mistress had fallen to the floor and lay white and unconscious. Oh, malheuresement! we all thought she was dead. That indeed was a most unhappy hour. But when the doctor came, he gave us hope, and presently she stir, open her eyes, and the first thing she say was to ask for you, though for a time we not understand what she mean, for she call you Madame Loring instead of Madame Lawton."

"My name is Loring," said Ruth, the quiet dignity of her manner checking any further inquiries the maid had ready. "And now, if your mistress is not asleep, I will go up to her."

It was with some trepidation that Ruth entered the large, elegantly furnished bed-chamber. What sort of reception would be hers?

It is strange what a sudden change sickness will sometimes make in the face of the aged. Miss Thornton's delicate features and fair cheeks had become weazen and faded, her blue eyes sunken amid purple shadows. They looked at Ruth with a feverish, fitful glow, as she eagerly asked:

"Where are the little ones,—Guy's children? Didn't you bring them?"

"N—no!" Ruth stammered in considerable bewilderment.

"But I sent word for you to bring them," said the old lady imperiously. "There has been stupidity somewhere. I distinctly mentioned the children. Do you not remember, Elise?"

"Hélas! It is true!" Elise exclaimed in low tones. "But we knew of no children, and we thought it was what—what you call her mind wandering."

Deaf as she was, the old woman caught the words.

"Mind wandering, indeed! Elise, you have no mind to wander. I said I wanted Guy's children, I don't want Guy's wife. She's imposed on me; she came here representing herself to be someone else! She can go away. But I want the children, I must have the children." Here the pale face grew flushed, there was an ominous glitter in the large eyes and the feeble voice became strained and shrill.

The physician, who all this time had been sitting by the bedside, rose and walked over to Ruth. He said in low tones, "If not wholly impracticable, I would advise the bringing of the children whom she has mentioned. She is in a state of high nervous excitement, bordering on a fever, and the gratification of this whim may bring about a favorable result."

"I—I will see—I will do my best," said Ruth, in considerable distress as to the course she had best pursue. But how could she bring the little ones to Woodlawn and leave them there? As for remaining there herself and watching over them, that was impossible; she could not leave her work, and besides, she was not wanted there; Miss Thornton had plainly stated this latter fact.

Her children were her own, all that she had left, her only comfort. She could not think of lending them even.

Presently pity and charity stole into her heart, bearing their sweet influences. Aunt Isabel was old, unhappy and sick, she might even be near death's door; why, then, might not her last hours be made brighter, even though she, Ruth, had to make this sacrifice? Surely no great harm would result if Ray and Beth were to spend a few days at Woodlawn. Mother Bartlett would come with them and watch over them. She felt that sh could trust her precious little ones in the dear old woman's care. So, after a little reflection, she stepped nearer the bedside, saying kindly, "If you are so desirous of seeing the children I will have them brought here."

"Very well! But you needn't bring them; I don't want you here, Ruth Loring," and with this lancet-thrust the old lady turned her head impatiently on the pillow.

(To be continued.)

A Visit to Holland and Hope College.

BY W. J. R. TAYLOR, D.D.

OFFICIAL duties having called me to Holland, Michigan, and it being my first visit to that place, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER may be interested in some of the impressions made and carried away from that important centre of our Church work in the West. The city now numbers between three and four thousand people, and it manifests on every side a steady, healthy and vigorous growth in all the elements of an established community. Broad and well-shaded streets, unpaved as yet, but with miles of well laid, solid plank sidewalks, comfortable homes, pleasant dooryards and gardens, stores and shops of all kinds, two intersecting lines of railways that traverse the State, telegraph and telephone facilities, important manufactures, the largest tannery in the State, steamers on Lake Macatawa, (Black Lake), connecting with Lake Michigan, and the park with its pavilion and cottages between those little and great sheets of water, spacious and comfortable church edifices, and a new public school building that would grace any of the larger cities—these are some of the evidences of the thrift and enterprise of the place. A pleasant morning ride in the surrounding country with our courteous host, Professor Steffens, revealed the corresponding energy and success of the farming community, with their well-tilled lands, neat and comfortable dwellings and barns, and spacious and inviting churches, parsonages and schoolhouses.

It is difficult for a visitor to realize that only forty years ago this whole region was a wilderness, which has been subdued and made fruitful and prosperous by the plucky and industrious colonists. Still less would one suppose that but a few years since nearly half of the little city was destroyed by fire that swept over it from the flaming forests. The first settlers had a hard time of it, as did the pilgrims of Plymouth Rock, and other new colonies of the West. Hardships, toil, exposure and sickness brought them to utter discouragement, at that sad time when one hundred and fifty of their number were already in their graves, and the remnant entreated Dr. Van Raalte to take them away from that region of the shadow of death. Then the heroic spirit of their leader was stirred within him, and mounting a stump in the field he first pleaded with them as if inspired like Moses before the Hebrews, and then he burst forth in prayer to the God in whom they trusted for deliverance. From that moment the murmuring ceased, and they determined to fight their battle out to the end, and victory came ere long.

The progress of Holland has been slow and sure, without speculative ballooning, and with a steady eye to permanent results. The Hollanders were laying foundations for future prosperity and for their children and children's children, and they have laid them broad and deep and strong, notwithstanding all their hindrances and trials. Of course, they have made mistakes, and have shared in the usual ups and downs of new settlements, and in the inevitable troubles incident to human nature under stress of new conditions and troublous times. But experience has taught them some severe lessons, and wisdom has been gained by salutary discipline, which Dutchmen need about as much as other people.

There are six churches in Holland—three of them Reformed, one Seceder, one Methodist, and one Episcopalian. The Seceder church, of which Dr. Van Raalte was the founder and first pastor, is by far the largest in the place, and its spacious edifice is thronged with regular worshippers on Sabbath days. It left our communion on account of the Free Mason controversy, and has gathered into it most of the disaffected from the other congregations. Its pastor is evangelical, and its standards of doctrine are the same as before the separation. All of its services are in the Holland language. The Methodist and Episcopal churches are small and have little influence upon the community at large.

Hope Church, which, with its parsonage, is the best memorial of its venerated pastor, the late Rev. Dr. Abel T. Stewart, who left it at the Master's call without debt and finished, is a pleasing modern brick edifice of plain Gothic style, and seating about seven hundred people. It is well located, and under the ministry of the Rev. T. W. Jones, its present pastor, is doing a good work, chiefly among the American population of the city.

The First Reformed Church is composed of the faithful remnant who were dispossessed of their old church property by the secession, and whose loyalty and love have been shown in the erection of their new house of worship, the basement of which they are now using for Sunday school and for Sabbath and weekly services under the temporary ministry of the Rev. Dr. Steffens, Professor of Didactic and Polemic Theology in the Western Theological Seminary. Efforts are now making to get money to complete the main audience-room, and when this shall be done there is good prospect of its being speedily filled with people. Its Sunday-school, in which the English language is exclusively used, numbers nearly two hundred, including officers and teachers, and is graded into three departments, each having its room in the ample and cheerful ground floor of the church edifice. It was a great pleasure to see and speak to this well ordered and wide-awake school, and especially its adult classes of both sexes. Twelve hundred dollars were given by this congregation for the endowment of the theological professorship.

The Third Reformed Church, of which the Rev. D. Broek is pastor, has a larger edifice than those above referred to, and a numerous and well-organized and active congregation. Its services are also conducted in the Dutch language.

Hope College is eligibly located in ample grounds within the city, amid noble shade trees and with room for all of its future expansion. It is now more of a college than Rutgers was when I entered its Freshman class. It has more buildings, a larger faculty of its own, a library about as good, if not better, a more complete laboratory, more students, and a higher standard and wider curriculum of studies. The faculty and students are doing good solid work, with their limited resources, and the prospects for enlargement and success are promising.

The recent Commencement exercises of the Preparatory and of the Collegiate departments, and the annual meeting of the Alumni Association were attended by crowded and enthusiastic assemblies of ladies and gentlemen, and were every way creditable to the college and to the speakers, as well as to the amateurs who furnished the vocal and instrumental music of each occasion. The proceedings of the Alumni Association were conducted with remarkable spirit and developed the strong feeling of the sons and daughters of Hope for their Alma Mater, as well as the interest of the sympathetic audience that overflowed the chapel. The baccalaureate by the Rev. Richard H. Steele, D.D., of Ann Arbor, and the inauguration of President Scott, also drew large congregations and added greatly to the importance of this series of celebrations. Dr. Steele, who has not lost his love for the Church of his fathers and of his own long service, preached an admirable discourse on "Christian Manliness" to the graduating class and the large congregation that filled Hope Church on Sabbath evening.

The inauguration of President Scott took place in the Third Church on Monday evening, and was attended by another great gathering of the representatives and friends of the college. After the sermon the President of the Council, the Rev. Peter Lepeltak, delivered a brief and appropriate charge to the new President, and officially delivered to him the key of the College and its seal. Dr. Scott's inaugural, which was delivered without manuscript and with characteristic earnestness, was a vigorous plea for his Ideal of the American Christian College.

With two reflections I close this record of impressions.

First. As to the institutions at Holland. Hope College is now of age. It has passed the ordeal of its infancy, childhood and youth successfully. It enters upon its majority with good promise of vigorous manhood. But like others of its kind, it has just reached the point from which it must now take a new departure for more extended usefulness. The President's house, just rising from its foundations, the library, the endowments of professorial chairs, all invite and will reward the liberality of the friends of education and religion. The Council is composed of earnest and energetic men, and the administration of the new President opens with encouraging success. The Western Theological Seminary, which is located at Hope College and is now a separate institution, had eight students during the past year, one of whom was graduated at its close. A small addition is expected at the opening of the fall term. Under the instructions of Professor Steffens, and the lectors, Revs. P. Moerdyke and H. E. Dosker, the students have pursued the usual course of studies with profit to themselves and credit to their teachers. The action of the General Synod of 1885 in establishing this Seminary upon its own separate foundation has proved thus far to be wise and good. Nothing has happened to mar the harmony of the College and Seminary, and when the latter shall be better endowed its future will be assured. Both institutions now need liberal gifts for their more thorough equipment, and they will abundantly repay the beneficence bestowed upon them.

Secondly. I have been more profoundly impressed with the importance of these institutions and churches as a base for church extension and home missionary work in our Western Synod. They are corner-stones and foundations of the Church of the future, not merely in a denominational sense, but as integral parts of the Church catholic, which holds in trust the living Christianity of our times for that whole region of our country. The men who have them in charge are thoroughly in earnest, men who have strong convictions, clear foresight and decided courage, and who "attempt great things for God and expect great things from God." The remaining years of this nineteenth century will tell powerfully, if not decisively, upon the religious character and extent of the churches in the Northwest for the next generation. And, therefore, whatever is done by and for our fellow workers there, must be done quickly and well done. While we should do no less for the churches at the East, and for the foreign field, we ought to do more for the churches and institutions at the West, because they are so rapidly self-propagating and are making a highway for the swift-coming kingdom of our Lord. With church extension so large and fast as that of our leaders in Iowa and Dakota, and the probability of steady increase elsewhere among our six Classes in the Synod of Chicago, the College and Seminary at Holland, and the Northwestern Academy at Orange City, eight hundred miles further West, ought to be well endowed and fully prepared to do their best work for the rising generation in the Church and the world.

Gratefully appreciating the warm-hearted hospitality experienced during this visit from our host and his family, and other friends, and with eyes opened and interest quickened by what I have seen and heard in and of the place and its people and institutions and churches, I do most earnestly commend them to the generous and prayerful consideration of our Eastern churches.

NEWARK, N. J., July 2d, 1886.

He Did Not Read Mission Papers.

BY "SYDNEY CLARE."

NOT long since the writer had with a gentleman, substantially the following conversation. Notes were taken of it a few minutes after; and the views of the man are given for the suggestions they may offer.

"Well, I do not give to foreign missions; it costs too much;" said my friend. "I believe in home missions, and give to them what I can spare."

"How much do you suppose it costs to carry on foreign mission work in the Reformed Church for example?" was asked.

"I cannot say; but doubt not that it is a large sum. I do not believe that story about a man's giving a cent to mission work and a dollar to get it there; yet am sure that the cost is great. I do not know what salaries missionaries get, but know that the cost of the home office is great."

"When men tell that story about a dollar to get a cent to the foreign field they show their stupidity," I replied. "The rate of exchange between our country and India, China, and Japan is never large, often only one or two per cent, and occasionally is nothing; sometimes is in favor of America. In other words, at such times, a dollar sent to one of those countries is worth more than a dollar there. Missionaries never get more than twelve hundred dollars a year salary—that is in the Reformed Church—and I think it is the same with other denominations. All the expenses of the home office usually amount to less than nine per cent of the receipts. In other words, for every dollar you give to foreign missions over ninety-one cents are sent to the foreign field."

"Is that so?" asked my friend. "I never heard that it costs so little. Are you sure that you are right?" The matter was made evident to him and he continued, "I have but little to give, and send it where it will do the most good. It takes so much to accomplish a small amount of good in foreign lands."

"Are you sure?" was asked. "I was treasurer for a year of a mission in a pagan country; and on my return to America compared the work and success of that year with the work and success of a church, and one of the most prosperous ones in the whole Reformed Church, and found that fifty cents in the heathen country did as much good as one dollar did here. That may not be an average for all time and in all places; but I found on more careful examination that it was not far from the truth; money given to missions in heathen lands accomplishes about twice as much as here, when all things are considered."

"Well, I have but little to give; and feel that it should be given where I can see what becomes of it, so give it for use in home missions."

"Do you see how it is used there? Is not the whole matter of missions one of faith? We trust men with our money, and give it to God, asking Him to bless it; but we cannot tell where any of it goes; we must trust to the honesty of men; we must do that in every work."

"I mean that I know it is needed where I send it. Why, out West you may go twenty miles and not see a church, nor any other place for religious worship. Money is needed there to build churches and give the Gospel to those who do not have it."

"In heathen countries you may travel two hundred miles and in some lands two thousand, and not see a church nor any place for Christian worship. Money is needed there too for churches."

"Yes, but the people will not come to hear the Gospel."

"Will not? That is news to me. I never heard that of heathen lands half as much as I hear it of America. Indeed, as far as my observation went, the people would gather in crowds to hear the Gospel; of course very many came from curiosity, yet they heard the truth; and God has said that His Word shall not return unto Him void."

"But what good will the little I can give do in foreign lands? It is a small amount; if I were rich it might be worth while to give."

"Our Saviour's disciples said of the loaves and fishes, 'What are they among so many?' The Lord showed them what the little could do after He had blessed it. Send your little with the Lord's blessing upon it, and you will see how much it will do. You may not see here, but you will in the better world. You know what the Lord said of the man with one talent only, who kept it wrapped up in a napkin. I suppose he thought it was only one, and too small an amount to trade on. He saw his mistake, when too late to remedy it though."

"I did not know that the people were ready to hear the Gospel in heathen countries. But what is the use of their hearing? They cannot understand it."

"Why not?"

"They cannot understand the language of the missionaries, can they?"

"No; but the missionaries understand the language of the people."

"What, do they preach in the language of the natives? Did you learn the language of the people? Do the missionaries learn the native language in foreign countries?"

"Certainly; how else could they preach to them? Every missionary must learn and use the language of the people among whom he works."

"Well, that is news to me. I supposed that you went out to preach to the other foreigners there; and that other missionaries did the same. I thought that the natives who listened and understood were those who knew English; and had no idea that missionaries preached in the language of the country."

"Did you never read about it in mission papers?"

"I do not read mission papers. They are too dry reading."

"Do you never hear missionary sermons, or listen to returned missionaries?"

"No; when our minister preaches on missions I go to some other church; I do the same when missionaries come, though few visit our church. Everything is so dry that is said about missions."

"How did you find out, if you neither read nor hear about missionaries?"

"I used to listen and read, and found out then."

"Well, there has been a development in missions; evolution has had hold of it."

It is needless to give more of this conversation. The reader will be surprised to learn that this man is an active (comparatively) Christian; and was lately, if not now, a member of a Presbyterian church less than a thousand miles from New York city. More than that, he is an intelligent man, well read in general literature, closely connected with prominent men, and was educated in the Reformed Church, and probably was once a member there. More than that he was educated in the home of a pastor in the Reformed Dutch Church.

The Reading Room.

Our Book-Shelves.

....“THE DESTRUCTION OF GOTHAM.” By Joaquin Miller. A graphic and powerful story, written in the peculiarly vigorous style, impetuous and fervid, for which the author is famous. It has, of course, a strong local coloring, and its prominent characters are easily recognizable under the thin disguise of altered names or imaginative details. It is a story with a moral. Its aim, to point, distinctly and clearly, the contrast and the conflict between the very rich and the very poor in New York; to show how the selfishness, vices and corruption of the former feed upon and destroy the virtue and the life of the latter, foster their peculiar vices and tend ultimately, by wearing out the patience, nursing the passions and exciting the cupidity of the “lower classes,” to violence and destruction. There is truth in the picture, terrible as it is, and a most solemn warning to those who “seek the peace of the city,” and the welfare of their kind. Were there no other elements here overlooked in New York society, the terror of the reality would be unrelieved and the day of doom with which the story ends, not to be averted. But, God be thanked, there are such influences, powerful and full of hope. None the less, the warning cry here uttered is timely and should be heeded. (Funk & Wagnalls.)

....“GREAT LIVES: A Course of History in Biographies.” By J. I. Mombert, D.D. First Series. The character of this volume is shown by its title. The Lives treated are taken from Ancient, Mediæval and Modern History, and extend from Hercules to General Grant. They are in the main well done, append at the end references to the sources, and are aided by characteristic maps inserted in appropriate places. We doubt whether this is the best way to teach history, but Dr. Mombert has made a readable and interesting volume which will prove attractive and useful to many. (Leach, Shewell & Sanborn, Boston and New York.)

....“BOLINGBROKE: A Historical Study, and Voltaire in England.” By John Churton Collins. These essays make most interesting reading. The author has much of the rhetorical skill of Macaulay, and knows how to present his views in an engaging way, but nowhere seems to sacrifice historical truth for the sake of making a point. His analysis of Bolingbroke's personal and literary character is masterly. On Voltaire he writes with precision and calmness, nor can we recall anywhere a better view of the episode of the illustrious Frenchman's life in his spending two years and eight months on the western side of the English Channel. (Harper & Brothers.)

....“DUNCAN KENNEDY'S NEW HOME.” By Lydia L. Rouse. Although every part of this story is subordinated to the moral aim which the author has in view, the narrative is very readable and certainly furnishes an excellent medium for the inculcation of important truth. Duncan Kennedy is a type of the God-fearing and Sabbath-loving Scotchman of the old school, and the story of the founding and expansion of his new home in Canada illustrates in a very forcible way the benefits which accrue to those who hallow God's day and love to frequent His house. The narrative is well told, and will prove serviceable in setting forth the obligation as well as advantages of Sabbath keeping. (American Tract Society.)

....“HISTORICAL ESSAYS.” By James Anthony Froude. Being Selections from “Short Studies on Great Subjects.” The titles of the Essays presented in this daintily bound volume are, Erasmus and Luther, Spinola, The Dissolution of the Monasteries, England's Forgotten Worthies, Homer, Society in Italy in the Last Days of the Republic, and Lucian. So well known and popular is the distinguished historian, the author of these essays, that to characterize his style or to commend his writings would seem like a work of supererogation. Many will be glad to have these selections in this neat, cheap and convenient form. (John B. Alden.)

....“ASPIRATIONS,” by Helen Hays, is a pleasantly written story of the development of certain poor and orphaned young people whom Mr. Barclay, a Boston gentleman of wealth and culture, takes under his fostering care. The scenes shift frequently and are laid in Boston, New York, London, and Italy. Of course, he marries one of them, and two of them marry each other. The earlier part of the book strikes us as written with more care than the latter part, though the style and narrative are never dull. (Thomas Whittaker.)

....“NEW TABERNACLE SERMONS.” By T. De Witt Talmage, D.D. This volume possesses all the usual and well-known characteristics of the author, who seems to act on the principle ascribed to Voltaire, that all styles are good except the tedious. The sermons are certainly lively and readable, and they enforce evangelical truth with great vigor. Occasionally there is a slip, as when (p. 306) the discourse on the Mount is called “His Sermon Olivetic,” the fact being that although no one can say positively when that wonderful discourse was delivered, it was certainly not on the Mount of Olives. (E. B. Treat.)

....“THE PRELATE,” by Isaac Henderson, follows the fashion of laying the scenes of novels now-a-days in Italy. The characters are certain average Americans, who come into contact and complication with certain Roman ecclesiastics, nobility and artists. The style is good, and the plot holds the attention—in fact, is quite sensational. Of course, the story turns on matrimonial infelicities and misapprehensions. This is likely to be a popular novel, but it would be impossible to call it in any respect a work of genius. (Ticknor & Co.)

....“BARBARA VAGARIES.” By Mary L. Tidball. There is a sort of breezy style about this book which makes it fit for a summer hour. It is simply a tale of love-making and flirtation during a season at Old Point Comfort, and ends brightly, as we think such stories ought to close. (Harper & Bros.)

....“THE MAGIC OF A VOICE.” By Margaret R. Macfarlane. The scenes and characters depicted in this novel are intensely German, and the interest of the reader is called out in a special way by the novelty. The story itself is the old one of the underrated tutor winning the love of a girl who has fascinated him by her voice before the real acquaintance began. The author writes with an easy yet powerful style, and will command the praise, we doubt not, of a large circle of readers. (Cassell & Co.)

....“TWO ARROWS,” A Story of Red and White, by Wm. O. Stoddard, author of “The Talking Leaves,” is an attractive little book belonging to the popular “Harper's Young People Series.” Two Arrows, alias the son of an Indian chief, gained an early reputation for bravery and courage, and his adventures, together with those of his red and white friends, are such as every boy will like to follow. (Harper & Bros.)

....“THE CAMP AT SURF BLUFF,” by Edward A. Rand, is the fourth volume of the “Up the Ladder Club Series,” and follows the members of the Club through the experiences of a pleasant vacation. It contains a good many hints which may be helpful to boys who wish to be both manly and Christian, and is, altogether, a book which they will quite enjoy. (Phillips & Hunt.)

Our Library Table.

Periodicals, Serials and Notes.

....Fairly disciplined minds which find pleasure in instructive and well-written papers and those who read to add to their knowledge will find no periodical more thoroughly satisfactory than the Magazine of American History. We wonder month after month how it is that the editor secures such a succession of valuable papers. The July number opens with an exceedingly engaging history, by the editor, of Lafayette Place in this city. It includes an account of Colonnade Row, of the Fourth Street Collegiate Church, of the once famous Vauxhall Gardens, of the Astor Library, and of the homes of well-known New York families, and is illustrated with pictures of buildings, of the gardens, and with portraits. The Hon. James W. Gerard contributes a record of the events centering in the Dongan Charter to the City of New York, which was given two hundred years ago last April, and which the Irish government of this city as a matter of course did not commemorate, although Dongan was a Romanist. The paper is of special interest and is illustrated. Mr. J. M. Oxley, of Ottawa, Canada, furnishes a clear History of the Fisheries Question, just now receiving national attention. Mr. Chas. H. Peck, of Syracuse, N. Y., has kind words for The Speeches of Henry Clay. Except Dr. Storrs, of Brooklyn, we have never listened to a speaker of whom it could be said as justly as of Henry Clay that he “talked like a book.” Toryism in the Canadian Confederation, by John Carrick, of Chatham, Ontario, gives an inside view of Canadian politics. The war papers are Cedar Mountain, part first, by Alfred E. Lee, and Reminiscences of Libby Prison by Doctor Shrady. The reprints consist of extracts from the letters of Edward Gibbon, the historian, relative to American affairs, between 1778 and 1783.

....The Brooklyn Magazine for the month contains four sermons by Mr. Beecher, delivered in Plymouth Church on the Sabbaths preceding his departure for Europe, and four sermons on the labor question delivered by Dr. De Witt Talmage in the Tabernacle during May and June. The magazine will publish the sermons delivered by Mr. Beecher during his visit to Great Britain, and the sermons and addresses of Dr. Talmage during the summer before congregations, conventions and various meetings. Mrs. Beecher has engaged to write a series of letters from England. The current number has also verses, stories, short articles for housekeepers, and a variety of literary matter.

....The Art Journal for July has a fine original etching by Paul Rayon. Two well illustrated articles are the “Hudson River” and “Down the Wye,” the latter furnishing the more agreeable views. Mr. Hatton contributes “An Actor's Holiday,” which gives some pleasant details of Mr. Irving, and several familiar continental scenes. An article on Yachting gives a variety of yacht pictures, enough to satisfy the most nautically-inclined reader. The number concludes with notices of the Royal Academy Exhibition and of the Paris Salon. The criticisms are intelligent and candid.

....The Presbyterian Review for July presents its customary tale of valuable contents. Principal McVicar gives a complete and candid account of Romanism in Canada, and the missionary, Dr. Edward Riggs, discusses the Languages of Asia Minor with discrimination. In an article entitled The Deacon, Dr. G. S. Mott brings together all the materials requisite for a clear comprehension of the term and the office it denotes. He thinks it singular that the Liturgy of the Dutch Church “has prayers for the opening and closing of consistory and a prayer at the meeting of the deacons, but none for a meeting of the elders.” The reason is that the elders make the consistory for all spiritual purposes, and bear that name. Their minutes when taken to Classis or elsewhere are, and are called, the minutes of consistory. And the tenor of the “opening and closing prayers” referred to shows that they are intended for the spiritual consistory. Dr. Mott incidentally defends the institution of Trustees. The writer distinctly remembers that when a boy he heard his pastor read a notice of trustees threatening the legal collection of unpaid pew-rents, and say at the same time he was no party to the proceeding. Such a thing could not occur in a Dutch church fashioned after the ancestral pattern. The Rev. Mr. Duffield gives an interesting account of an obscure old Latin hymn writer, and Dr. Flint treats of the Classification of the Sciences in an acute and comprehensive way, citing all the prominent authorities, German, French, Italian, English and American down to our own day. The analysis is a masterpiece of insight and clearness. The reviews of recent literature are able as usual. We heartily agree with a sentence from one of Dr. Patton's notices. “It would have been better if Dr. Hamilton had written his book with a less vivid sense of the inadequacy of our existing English vocabulary.” The needless coinage of new words will kill, and ought to kill, any treatise, however good otherwise.

....The July number of the Reformed Quarterly contains seven articles, all of which are good. We have been most interested in two that are of an historical nature. One is entitled “The Song of the Swan,” the name given to a sermon found in the pocket of a young Swiss minister who came to America in 1748, and died by accident just as he was setting out to preach his introductory sermon. Though printed the same year it was lost for a long period and only recently was discovered in the Philadelphia Library. It is extremely interesting. The other is Dr. Theodore Appel's account of the beginnings of the Theological Seminary of our German brethren. It recites the need for it and the measures taken, especially the effort to get Dr. Milledoler to be the Professor of Theology. It is to be hoped that the whole history of the Seminary will yet be given with equal candor and fulness and ability.

....In the Pulpit Treasury for July an excellent portrait, with sketch, is given of Dr. George F. Pentecost, and cuts of his church and chapel in Brooklyn, N. Y. His sermon on “Original Sin” is an able treatment of the subject, and in doctrine all that the most orthodox could desire. The discourse by Dr. Marvin R. Vincent on the theme, “The Pleasure-Sunday a Labor Sunday,” discusses the Sabbath question on its lowest plane, that of rest from labor, is thorough and convincing, and worthy of everybody's careful perusal. Each department of this popular homiletic presents the usual amount of appropriate and instructive matter.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

G. P. Putnam's Sons: A Life in Song. By George Lansing Raymond. 12mo, pp. 333. $1.25.

UNBOUND BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Alton Locke, Tailor and Poet. By Charles Kingsley. (No. 82, Harper's Handy Series.) 16mo, pp. 371. 25 cents; also,

War and Peace. A Historical Novel. By Count Léon Tolstoi. Translated into French by a Russian Lady, and from the French by Clara Bell. Revised and Corrected in the United States. (No. 521, Harper's Franklin Square Library.) 4to, pp. 97. 25 cents.

Voyagers' Tales. From the Collections of Richard Hakluyt. (No. 84, Cassell's National Library.) 16mo, pp. 192. 10 cents.

War and Peace. A Historical Novel. By Count Léon Tostoi. Translated into French by a Russian Lady, and from the French by Clara Bell. Authorized Edition. Between the French at Moscow. Epilogue 1812, 1880. Two vols. 16mo, pp. 280, 251. 50 cents per vol.

PERIODICALS.

July.—The Sidereal Messenger, The English Illustrated Magazine, The Baptist Quarterly Review, The Targum, The Musical Herald, The Musical Visitor, The Pansy, The Expositor.

A Water-Lily.

O STAR on the breast of the river,
O marvel of bloom and grace,
Did you fall straight down from heaven
Out of the sweetest place?
You are white as the thoughts of an angel;
Your heart is steeped in the sun;
Did you grow in the golden city,
My pure and radiant one?

Nay, nay, I fell not out of heaven;
None gave me my saintly white;
It slowly grew from the darkness
Down in the dreary night.
From the ooze of the silent river
I won my glory and grace.
White souls fall not, O my poet;
They rise to the sweetest place.

—Mrs. M. F. Butts, in Journal of Education.

Miss Kendall's Mission.

IT was just the brightest, sunniest Sabbath morning. It would seem almost impossible for anyone to feel sad or depressed when all nature was so bright and cheery, but Miss Kendall, stopping for a moment on the church steps to look up and down the street, looked as disconsolate and forlorn as possible.

"Why, Miss Kendall, what is it?" asked Dr. Bennet, cheerily, coming up behind her.

"Joe Kenny," replied Miss Kendall briefly, and apparently unintelligibly; but Dr. Bennet understood. Wasn't he superintendent of the Park Street Mission Sunday-school, and was not Miss Kendall one of his teachers? Also, was not this self same Joe, an unusually bright boy, but rather wild, in her class, and had not the teacher and superintendent had him in their hearts for a long time?

"Come into the study for a minute, and tell me about it," said Dr. Bennet after glancing at his watch.

"There isn't much to tell," said Miss Kendall, as she seated herself; "only I have felt so anxious and burdened about him this week; it seems to me that he is in a critical state. I feel sure that God is striving with him, and I am so afraid that if he resists the Spirit now, that he will be harder than ever. I can't tell you how earnestly I have prayed for him all this week, and, last week he was in Doone's saloon, and went home drunk, I am afraid. I am so discouraged that I haven't the heart to pray any more;" and Miss Kendall completely broke down.

"My dear friend, don't give up. God does not promise us that He will always answer our prayers immediately, but He does give us His sure word that, in His own time and way, He will answer every cry that goes up to Him. What the Lord hath promised He will surely perform. It may be that He is leading Joe in ways that you do not suspect. Cling to the promise and keep on praying."

Miss Kendall made her way with tear-dimmed eyes to her seat in church, and bending her head, her heart went up as never before for her pupil. She hardly heeded the singing or the words of her pastor's prayer, and she could not have told the text nor any of the sermon.

After church she went directly home, and alone in her own room she spent the afternoon in prayer. It was, perhaps, half-past five when the bell rang, and going down to the parlor she found awaiting her the subject of her prayers, Joe Kenny.

"Please excuse me for coming today," he said, "but I had to. Something has kept telling me all the week that I ought to be a Christian, but I didn't want to be; there are so many things that I must give up if I am. I have tried my best to get away from it. I have pitched into everything, and done things that I never did before, but no matter where I was, or what I was doing, something seemed to keep saying the words of that hymn they sang in Sabbath school last Sunday:

Come to Jesus, come to Jesus,
Come to Jesus just now.

Last night I was determined that I would get rid of it if I could? and, Miss Kendall, I am ashamed to tell you, but I went into Doone's with the boys, and played cards and—drank, too. I don't remember much about going home. I did not wake up until late this morning, and I didn't care then what I did. I knew that the boys were going off on a sort of a time, and I made up my mind to go with them; but when I was most up to Dick's and heard the church bell toll, and you don't know anything about it, but it seemed to me that it said these words just as plain as come be: 'Come to Jesus, just now.' I've heard them all day long; I can't get away from them; and I am ready to give up now. If God will take me, I'll give myself to Him, and serve Him the best I know how the rest of my life."

"What if I had given up discouraged?" said Miss Kendall to Dr. Bennet, when she told him the good news. "I can't tell you how I felt when he told me that those words began to ring in his ears that last time when the bell was tolling for church; that was just the time that I began to pray for him again. I shall never forget this, and I will never give up praying for anyone again, God help me!"

"Amen!" said Mr. Bennet earnestly.

—Kate S. Gates, in Zion's Herald.

Where to Feel Sympathy.

A KIND-HEARTED man knew that a poor widow and her children were in great distress, because the widow's cow, which chiefly maintained them, had died. The man was not able to help them much; but he did what he could, and then he went around to the neighbors and told them the tale of trouble. He received many words of regret from those he visited; but he thought to himself, "These kind words won't buy a cow." So he went back to the richest of those he had visited before, and the rich man told him how keen were his feelings of regret for the poor widow.

"Yes, yes," said the plain man, "I don't doubt your feeling; but you don't feel in the right place."

"How so?" said the rich man; "I am sure I feel with my heart."

"I don't doubt that," said his visitor; "but I wish you to feel in your pocket."—Selected.

Pansies.

SO the pansies grew and multiplied while with the keenest pleasure we watched their progress, and thought beautiful thoughts, tinged with the rich colors of their blossoms. Early in the morning they lifted their sweet, modest faces to greet the rising sun, all day they followed his flaming course through the heavens, and when his rosy visage was dipping below the horizon bathed in sunset splendors, a little sea of pansy faces watched the gorgeous scene, and seemed to drink in the brilliant colors of the West. Those little faces spoke to us of God. No human skill could produce this beauty; only the Divine mind could design their graceful forms; only the Divine artist could pencil their exquisite colors, blending always in perfect harmony, shading into the most delicate tints of white and blue and golden yellow, or deepening into richer crimson or purple or inky black. Those little flowers were mirrors of the Divine mind; they reflected the Divine thought. What beautiful thoughts God thinks! How gloriously He crystallizes them in material forms that man may share in the joy of their beauty, and how thickly He has scattered through the universe those crystals of thought! The very shreds and splinters which dropped from the great Architect's hand in fashioning the worlds, are run in molds of ravishing beauty. Old ocean, as he thunders against the crags and boulders of the shore, flings clouds of pearls and flashing diamonds toward the sun; and as the warring elements of air and water grind the mountains into dust, out of the resultant rubbish rise shapes so fair that we wonder if heaven holds anything more lovely.—Vick's Magazine for May.

IT is worth noting what the effect of the late British conquests in Burmah is on the religious question. The Rev. Dr. D. D. W. Smith says: "Buddhism is literally tottering on account of the removal of all government support. The Burmahs feel and acknowledge it, and have memorialized the viceroy on the subject, asking the English Government to appoint the Buddhist pope, which, of course, it cannot do."

THE summer number of Ridley's Fashion Magazine consists of twenty-seven large pages of useful and amusing articles designed especially for ladies, followed by more than thirty pages of illustrations, descriptions and price lists of summer suits, hats, shawls, shoes, jerseys, mitts, parasols and umbrellas, braids, and various household articles, demanded by the season. It will amply repay ladies of all ages and conditions for such consideration as they may give it. It is published by Messrs. E. Ridley & Sons, Grand and Allen streets, New York city, and costs 15 cents.

Yale Entrance Examination at Newburgh, N.Y.

NEWBURGH, N. Y., JULY 3d, 1886.—The Siglar Preparatory School of this city has just closed its twenty-third and most successful year with appropriate exercises. To-day six graduates of the School have finished a three days' contest over the Yale Entrance Examination papers under the supervision of Mr. Herbert H. White, who represents the Faculty of Yale College. This is the second time that the College has sent an examiner to this School.

Market Report.

Review of the New York Market for Butter, Cheese, etc. Reported by DAVID W. LEWIS & Co., Produce Commission Merchants, 49 Pearl St., New York.
Commission on Butter, Eggs, Poultry, etc., is five per cent; Flour, Grain, etc., 2½ per cent.
Marking-plates furnished when desired.

NEW YORK, July 10, 1886.

BUTTER.—Receipts for the week, 43,737 pks.; exports 6,071 pks.

This market is steady but lacks life and activity. Butter arrives freely, and there is an accumulation of stock of all grades except N. Y. State dairy make. Sellers, however, are firmer in their views, and market closes with slight advance on all finest grades. Finest last week's make creamery butter in pails sold at 17½a18c., and in tubs at 17a17½c. Finest dairy make in very light supply and wanted at 16a16½c. In Western there were sales for speculative account of finest creameries at 17a17½c., and fine ones at 16a16½. Also lines of good to fine creameries for export at 15a16c½., but the bulk of exports was common to good Western factory butter at 8a 19c. We quote:

Fancy creamery	17½@ 18
do dairy (selections)	16 @16½
Good to fine	14 @15½
Poor to common	9 @12

CHEESE.—Receipts for the week, 54,112 boxes exports 61,712 boxes.

The market early in the week was tame and prices barely steady. Later there was considerable running to get fine cheese, and prices advanced Thursday to 7⅞c., some specials going at 8c. Night milk skims of best quality were in limited supply and sold readily at 5½a6., while lots irregular in quality sold at 4a4½c. Closely skimmed stock was dull and prices irregular and low. Market closes with stocks well cleared and prices firm. We quote:

Factory, white, full cream, finest	7¾@ 7⅞
" colored, " "	7¾@ 7⅞
" good to fine "	7 @ 7⅞
" skims	1 @ 6

EGGS.—Receipts for the week were 14,095 bbls.

The market was dull following our last and prices dropped off fully 1c. per doz. On Wednesday and Thursday, however, there was better enquiry and lighter supplies, and last week's prices about recovered. Market closes with fresh-laid stock wanted at our quotations. We quote:

Near-by marks, fresh eggs	@15
Western and Canada	13½@14

Presbyterian Board of Publication's

LATE BOOKS.

GRIFFEN ALLEY FOLK.
Showing that even those sorely degraded by intemperance may be raised from the gutter to new lives.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

FROM ACCADIA TO MACHPELAH.
In which the life of Abraham is made interesting by being made real.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.15

MABEL'S SUMMER.
A tale of Child life in Northern India.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, 85 cents.

RALPH WESTON'S SECRET.
Showing how the appetite fo strong drink may descend from father to daughter, and again from mother to son.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

THE WEDDED LIFE.
By REV. J. R. MILLER, D.D
A little volume intended for presentation to the newly-wedded, and containing a marriage certificate.
16mo. Price, 60 cents.

Address orders to
JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't,
1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA
Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St, New York, N. Y

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for
PLATFORM ECHOES
OR LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART,
By John B. Gough.
His last and crowning life work, brim full of thrilling interest, humor and pathos. Bright, pure, and good, full of "laughter and tears," it sells at sight to all. To it is added the Life and Death of Mr. Gough, by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT. 1000 Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $100 to $200 a month made. Distance no hindrance as we give Extra Terms and Pay Freights. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers, 805 Broadway, New York

BELLS.

McShane Bell Foundry
Finest Grade of Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS for CHURCHES, &c.
Send for Price and Catalogue. Address
H. McSHANE & CO.,
Mention this paper. Baltimore, Md

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Fire Alarms, Farms, etc. FULLY WARRANTED. Catalogue sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

MENEELY & COMPANY,
West Troy, N. Y. Bells,
For Churches, Schools, etc., also Chimes and Peals. For more than half a century noted for superiority over all others

THE
Christian Intelligencer
IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT
48 Church St., cor. Fulton, N. Y.,
BY THE
CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOC.
Editors:
REV. J. M. FERRIS, D.D.,
REV. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
Associate Editor:
MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

TERMS,
$2.65 per annum.
Ministers and Theological Students, $2.
SINGLE COPIES, 3 CENTS.

Read these Instructions carefully.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS pertaining to the literary columns of the paper must be addressed to the Editors; and those inclosing manuscripts to be returned must be accompanied with envelopes stamped and addressed. No attention will be paid to anonymous communications.

THOSE relating to the business department, to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION, Box 2117, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIBERS, NOTICE. The date following your name on the direction label informs you to what month and year your subscription is paid. If this date is not changed within two weeks after payment is made, drop us a postal card and we will investigate and reply. Please examine the date, and if in arrears, remit the amount due.

REMITTANCES ARE AT THE RISK OF THE SENDER, unless made by Draft, Check, or P. O. Money Order. These, if lost, can be readily replaced.

Checks, etc., to order of CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION.

IN CHANGING AN ADDRESS, it is necessary to send the OLD as well as NEW address. The change cannot be made unless this is done. And in order to prevent the loss of papers, it will be well to notify the office at least ten days before the contemplated change, as the mail lists are prepared that much in advance of each issue.

ALWAYS GIVE THE NAME OF THE P. O. where the paper is received.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

The Home.

AUNT MARJORIE'S CORNER

Tilting with Windmills.

EVERYBODY remembers how Don Quixote, mounted on his poor steed Rosinante, and attended faithfully by his puzzled Squire Sancho Panza, set valorously forth in search of adventures. To his heated imagination the peaceful friars, pacing in leisurely fashion as befitted the well-fed convent order, were dark enchanters bent on malevolent errands; the lady travelling across country in her carriage with an escort of armed retainers, was a captive princess hurried from her father's house to a foreign land; and the great windmills lifting their mighty arms and whirling their huge sails, were giants whom his prowess should defeat.

Everybody knows how luckless was the result of the poor gentleman's tilt with the windmills. Little cared they for doughty challenge or menacing lance, and the first shock of the onset shivered the latter to atoms and prostrated the champion in the dust.

But the pertinent question, suggested by the spirit of sober thought lurking behind the delicate and tricksy humor of the story, concerns us in our every-day life, and is simply this: do we or do we not indulge in the sport which is a tilting with windmills? Are we quite certain that we never imperil our own ease and happiness by attaching importance to trifles, or by attributing wrong motives to those with whom we come in contact. How often in the household are we hurt by chance speeches, grieved by fancied slights, which were made in all innocence and never intended to wound us? The persons who are most disposed to be quarrelsome at home or in the church, the truculent people in the community who go about orever begging somebody to notice the chip on their ouldер and knock it off are, like Don Quixote, disposed to fight windmills and think them giants.

Clearing-Up Days.

SAPIENZA, with a charming air of superiority, advises us never to have clearing up days, very truly observing that she who keeps her drawers, closets and wardrobes in order by the simple process of always putting things in their proper places when done with them, will have no need of periodical rearrangement. Alas, for the hasty, the busy, the unsystematic, the cumbered with care, who have neither Sapienza's patience nor her discretion. They must perforce have their clearing-up days.

These days, like days of moving, house-cleaning and other upheavals, reveal much wealth of which we had been unaware.

Here is a package of photographs, taken twenty years ago, and glancing at them you are face to face with a past which is replete with associations sweet to memory, albeit touched with the sadness which clings to that which lies behind us on the path of life. These faces are smooth and unlined. Their owners to-day have gray hair and wear an added dignity; here they smile at you with bright eyes and the roundness of youth. The dress has changed, and the accessories of the toilet provoke a merry grimace and a laugh from the youthful critic at your side, whose present taste condemns with ready decision everything old-fashioned.

You are not occupied, however, with the dress or the vanished youth so much as with the dead and gone summer which the mute pictures eloquently recall. What good times you had when that rollicking party, of whom J. and N. and E. were members, spent those sunny weeks together in the mountains, made those delightful excursions, turned those beautiful pages in the book of life. In those days you seldom remembered that you had a body, since it was blissfully free from pains and aches, and was healthfully wearied at nightfall, only to the realizations of such sleep as is the portion of the child and the conscience-free. All the home dear ones were about you then, father, mother, sisters, friends, of whom so many have now gone before to the rest beyond the river.

The old pictures must be kissed and tied up again and put away, for if you give yourself to reminiscence, clearing-up day will carry you to the new Jerusalem or stretch itself far toward the millenium! And Ellen is at the door with an intimation that the butcher is waiting for orders, and the plumber has presented his bill.

What are you to do with old letters? You hate to destroy them; it breaks your heart to put out of existence and reduce to a heap of dust the bits of paper which seem to you vital with the inmost heart-blood of friendship. Yet, should you be suddenly removed from earth, do you care to have other eyes read some of the letters which have been unspeakably precious to you, while from the mere consideration of space the accumulation of letters is something formidable. Is it not as well to winnow the heap and yourself dispose in the safest way, the way of fire, of all which would possess no interest for strangers, and which is sacredly your own, and yours only?

Clearing-up days bring to light touching memorials of the children's growth. Did your Albertina, radiant in her latest Paris costume, and the admiring despair of a score of beaux, indeed once wear that little yellow slip, with its edging of lace and its delicate, fairy-like stitchery? Can you recall the happy, happy hours you spent when you made those baby robes, and dreamed the holiest waking dreams of your life? This tiny shoe, did Frank's foot, which comes ringing up the stair, ever squeeze itself into that diminutive compass?

Well, well, well!

The dinner-bell rings, and clearing up must be interrupted for a season. AUNT MARJORIE.

Thy Love to Me.

"I have loved thee with an everlasting love."

THY love to me, O Christ,
Thy love to me,
Not mine to Thee, I plead,
Not mine to Thee!
This is my comfort strong,
This is my only song,
Thy love to me.

Thy record I believe,
Thy word to me.
Thy love I now receive,
Full, changeless, free;
Love from the sinless Son,
Love to the sinful one,
Thy love to me.

Immortal love of Thine,
Thy sacrifice,
Infinite need of mine
Only supplies.
Streams of divinest power
Flow to me, hour by hour,
Thy love to me.

Let me more clearly trace
Thy love to me,
See in the Father's face
His love to Thee,
Know as He loves the Son,
So dost Thou love Thine own,
Thy love to me. —Mrs. Merrill E. Gates.

The Kitchen and the Children.

I DECLARE bad food to be at the bottom of any amount of peevishness, hot temper, family dispute, weak will-power, vitiated tastes, bad morals, and general viciousness. How often, ah, how often has a badly cooked breakfast caused ill-temper, and hard, unloving words, and clouded over the blue sky of a day which God meant should be full of sunshine and the singing of birds! Many a child has smarted under punishment which never would have been administered if there had not been hot cakes with syrup for breakfast. The mother called it naughtiness. It was indigestion! We have a friend who declares she can always tell when her children have been indulged in these disturbers of the digestive peace for their morning repast; and it is for these little ones under our care, and for whom we stand as sponsors in regard to the subject under consideration, that I make this appeal. They are to carry the world on their shoulders, by-and-by. Let us do what we can to make these shoulders strong to bear the burden, the head clear to puzzle out the problems life will bring for their solving.

How much of this work depends upon the servant in the kitchen, and how much upon the mother herself, each must determine and make answer to her own conscience, only remembering that there must be an ugly warp somewhere in the nature which does not admit that there is no more dignified theme, or worthier work, than the building of these young bodies into strong, pure temples, fit for grand guests of thought and purpose, and I contend that no theme, however fascinating, no love of science, poesy, or art, should stand between the mother and the training of her child physically, not less than mentally. I would rather paint roses in my child's face, if it be in my skill, than to decorate a fish-platter to be strewn with the vertebræ of a salmon, or upon a soup plate to be bathed in bouillon or gravy! And why should skill in cookery, or good kitchen management, be regarded disdainfully or as not worth one's best pains? I tell you earnestly, the day must come when this will not be so; when to prepare a good dinner, yes, and serve it, if need be, with deft hand, graceful movement, and womanly taste, shall be no more of a condescension than to write a poem or paint a picture. There are many who say with an air of indifference that they have no "talent" for these things. Why not cultivate a talent in this direction, as well as executive ability, capacity for management, skill in keeping them? Is there any one of the fine arts the cultivation of which would bring such costly remuneration? Order, peace, and good digestion in the family, are golden coins bearing good interest every day!—Good Housekeeping.

Our Teacher and Theirs.

BEAR with the little children, parents dear;
Suppose the Master reasoned thus of you;
"Oh, I have spoken once, yea, also twice,
Now let me try what punishment will do."

Bear, yes, to tell the twice-told tale again,
How this or that from good or evil grew;
Their little ears crave the familiar forms,
Stale illustrations though they be to you.

And once, yea, twice, our Father, o'er and o'er
Goes o'er the self-same precept day by day;
The tireless patience! What though "in the Book
'Tis written!" Is it thus you hear Him say?

No, rather, "Try again, My child, My child!
The will is all I want, I'll find the way;"
Then in a fresh sense "turn the new leaf" o'er
For little ones about your knees to-day.

A True Incident.

TWO years ago, a shoemaker of Augsburg, in Germany, made up his mind to come to America, where his two sons had settled. The shoemaker's wife had died, and he was left alone in the world, the only live things in the house with him being his pet dog and a cage of finches. He gave his dog in charge of one of his neighbors, and as for the finches, he sold those, because the shoemaker was poor, and needed the money to help him over the sea. He was very sorry to part with one of the bullfinches, a bright bird that had been taught by the shoemaker's dead wife to whistle a soft, low song from beginning to end, without so much as a false note. But he sold the bird with the others, bade good-by to all his friends at Augsburg, and set sail from the old world to the shining shores of the new. When he reached America he went to live with one of his sons in Brooklyn. To his surprise, he found that both his boys were well-to-do, and though he had intended to open a shoe shop, they told him that he must not do that, but must pass the rest of his life in ease and peace. So, for the better part of two years, the old shoemaker of Augsburg has lived in Brooklyn, and in spite of the fact that he has not "stuck to his last," he has been contented. Nevertheless, he often thought about Augsburg, and about his pet bullfinch, wondering whether the finch had found an owner in the person of some prince, "for that bird was fit to whistle before a king," said he, proudly. One day just previous to the past Christmas, the old German saw a gray squirrel in a cage in the window of a bird store in New York, and stopped to watch its antics. As he stood there, he heard the whistle of a bullfinch, and so he stepped quickly in. In a large cage near the door were a dozen finches, and when the shoemaker approached the cage, one of the finches sidled along his perch toward him and whistled softly. The old man of Augsburg was already bent of body, but he excitedly bent still lower, so that the finch could whistle in his ear, and that the pleased bird did, with much gleeful sweetness. The shoemaker was more than delighted, he was overjoyed; for indeed the finch was his old-time pet, the fine whistler that his own wife had taught in the little shop of Augsburg. So the shoemaker bought the finch and took it home with him. He learned from the dealer that the bird had been bought of a firm of bird dealers in Bremen last summer, and had been brought to America with two dozen trained whistlers of its kind.—Presbyterian Observer.

"By Way of Heaven."

"FROM Japan to America by way of heaven." These words just caught my eye in that precious little magazine, Children's Work for Children. Then follows a pretty story of a lady missionary in Japan, who, greatly needing help, and being unable to procure it from the regular Board, just spread the matter all out before the dear Lord, and directly He sends the needed help through individual channels in America, all "by way of heaven," you see.

Those head-lines were a message to me, I am sure, for only the dear Lord knows how I have been longing to travel this summer and see something of the beautiful world He has given us to enjoy, and it seemed as if the Master wished me to know that by and by when I get to that heavenly home, my Father will send me on errands of love, and then I may go to all these places "by way of heaven." It is such a precious thought that I write it for the comfort of some one who, like me, often gets restless in her "little corner."

My sister, let us be glad in heart that when that time comes, we shall be free from the environments of earth and sense, and clad as "king's daughters" we may go forth, not only all over this little world, but throughout the whole universe of our Father.—Advocate and Guardian.

CHILDREN'S PORTFOLIO.

My Tenants.

BY MRS. HELEN JACKSON.

THE very place for the nest of a bird!
If I knew their language, I'd put up a sign;
"To let for the summer; linnets preferred,— Cool lodgings in this verandah of mine."

No sooner I'd said it, than presto! there,
As if he had heard every word I said,
A linnet came flying through the air,—
No need of the sign! He'd eyes in his head!

He could see for himself what lovely shade,
A wall and a roof thatched over with green,
My shining wisteria vine had made,
With roses and clematis in between!

"It's the very place for your nest, my bird."
"Ha, ha!" chirped the linnet; "I think so too."
It really did seem that he must have heard,
He looked so roguish as away he flew.

A regular linnet, the kind I said;
'Tisn't often you get your wish like that;
His feathers all brown except on his head,
Where he wore a red skull-cap, smooth and flat.

The very next day, he came with his wife,
A sweet little thing, so modest and still;
No nonsense to her! but only warm strife
To bring the most straws in her little bill.

Not a builder in town worked half so hard
As this little couple worked at their nest.
As soon as 'twas done he mounted guard,
And sang a loud song with triumphant zest.

The wife cuddled down, out of sight, to work
At her own special business—laying eggs;
Good little wife, not a bit of a shirk,
She hardly got off to stretch out her legs.

And good little husband, he did not roam,
Except when he went to forage for food;
He kept within sight or sound of his home,
And sang to her, cheering her all he could.

At daylight I heard him, and late at night;
I do declare, 'twas a lesson to me,
To see how industrious, loving and bright,
This little bird-couple appeared to be.

I'd friends in the town who had houses to let,
And often complained of the trouble they had
With tenants; I laughed and said, "If you'd get Such tenants as linnets, you might be glad."

And when they looked puzzled, and spoke of rent,
I puzzled them more, by laughing again,
And saying, my tenants paid as they went,—
A far better way, I thought, in the main.

In a currency, also, better than gold,
All linnets could pay, I roundly declared.
Upon which my friends grew scornful and bold,
And pityingly whispered, and smiled, and stared.

They thought me half-crazy, you see! Never mind!
There's a proverb that those may laugh who win!
In all their cash rents they never will find
Such income of pleasure as I took in,

From my tenants that never a farthing paid,
Nor promised to pay me; but ate their fill
From my garden, and vines, and calmly stayed,
My tenants of love, my tenants at will!

They reared up their brood, and they went their way;
Tears sprang to my eyes when I found them gone;
The place seemed lonely for many a day,
And I never stop wond'ring where they have flown.

Next spring I shall watch for sight of a bird:
If I knew their language, I'd put up a sign,
"To let for the summer; old tenants preferred,— Cool lodgings in this verandah of mine."

—Youth's Companion.

"Thy Will Be Done."

THIS is a prayer that confesses God to be good and great, holy, just, merciful, kind, true, and without any fault or imperfection. It is His right to rule. And when we ask that His will may be done, we ask that righteousness shall take the place of all unrighteousness, and of whatever is in opposition to the Divine character. For we cannot help seeing that there is among mankind very much that is wicked and lawless, hurtful and wrong. When we pray to God our Father in heaven, that His will may be done on earth even as it is done in heaven, we tell our Supreme Sovereign that we ourselves wish to submit to His laws, to His doings and to His mode of governing all the nations. Yes, we own that as God has loved and does love us, so too we ought to love Him as His children, and put all our trust in Him, and feel sure that He is our Protector and Friend—able and willing to save us for this world and the next. It is just the right and proper thing for the young to love and fear and serve their Father in heaven. Tney cannot begin at too early an age to pray as they ought to pray, as Jesus taught them. Our Father, hallowed be Thy name. "Thy will be done in earth." In us, in our hearts, in our minds, in our wills. Make us obedient to Thy Word, to Thy Spirit, and fill us with the light of Thy grace. It is a prayer that each child, each person, man and woman, learned or unlearned, can say, and He who hears sincere prayers will answer so as to send through the prayer the great blessing of eternal salvation.

Our Lord placed a child in the midst of His disciples, and then told those strong, grown-up men who had to preach the Gospel,—the Gospel that was sure to raise up many trials and persecutions against them, "of such is the kingdom of heaven." And so it is that through the childlike nature in us the kingdom of heaven gains its victories and establishes its power. Fighting men, great warriors, mighty conquerors and vast armies are brought low, subdued and scattered, but the meek gain dominion. The humble are exalted. The proud, the arrogant, the self-conceited are overthrown. Look a moment at the Sacred History. Joseph bearing rule in Egypt; Moses a law-giver for the world; Samuel a great judge in Israel, and David, a boy, strong enough with his sling to defeat a giant. These are set up as examples of the way in which the young are prepared by God's favor to become men of might. We need not, however, look back into the far-off centuries. For among the truly great men of our own time may be found statesmen, physicians, lawyers, preachers and teachers who gave their hearts and themselves to Christ when they were young. God took them into His favor and made them leaders of men and of nations. We are not ashamed now to honor them who honored Christ. We expect the Saviour's kingdom to come with increasing glory and power, about in proportion as the hearts of the young are turned unto Him. The rich man's wealth is lost. The strong man becomes weak, and the worldly man is forgotten, but they who serve the Lord in righteousness will live in the light of His countenance forever and ever. E. S. P.

CLAVERACK, N. Y.

The Gentle South Wind.

"NOW, Walter Harrison Ames, you get right out of that chair this minute, for that's my seat, and I want to sit there;" and little Miss Rose, who looked more like a snapdragon just then, tried to shake her sturdy brother, who had a very cool way of pretending not to hear when he did not mean to heed, and who sat as calmly looking out of the window as if only a fly were attempting to move him.

Papa was reading in the other window, but he seemed to know exactly what was going on, and so he called the little snapdragon, though he did not use that name, to come to him, as he had a story to tell her.

A story was always a delight, and so the little changeable flower, almost a rose again, went instantly and seated herself on a little bench at his feet.

"This morning, Rose, as I was going down town," he began, "I met a disagreeable north wind and it snapped and snarled in a very spiteful way. It began by trying to injure the trees and break off the branches, but the branches were too strong for it and wouldn't give way. Then it rushed at me and blew my coat as hard as it could and said in a gruff tone as plain as a wind could talk, 'Take off your coat quick, I won't wait.' But I laughed at the idea of obeying such a command as that, and so just buttoned my coat up as tight as I could, and the north wind tugged and tugged in vain.

"In the afternoon as I came home the south wind met me, and such sweet manners as it had! It came up and kissed me first, and then said so gently as it played with my hair and patted my cheek, 'Open your coat, please, open your coat.' I opened it right away, every single button, for I was glad to get all the south wind that I could, and it is doing me good yet. Which is my little girl, the stormy north wind or the sunny south?"

"The sunny south, papa," answered little Rose cheerily as she went up to brother Walter and kissed and patted him and said, "Please let me have that chair, Walter dear."

Brother Walter didn't say one word, but he whisked out of the chair in a second, caught the little south wind up, clapped her in the chair, gave her two kisses and scampered off to play.—Child's Paper.

What a Little Girl Found Out.

A POOR little street girl was taken sick one Christmas, and carried to a hospital. While there she heard the story of Jesus coming into the world to save us. It was all new to her, but very precious. She could appreciate such a wonderful Saviour, and the knowledge made her very happy as she lay upon her little cot. One day the nurse came round at the usual hour, and "Little Broomstick" (that was her street name) held her by the hand, and whispered:

"I'm havin' real good times here—ever such good times! S'pose I shall have to go 'way from here just as soon as I gets well; but I'll take the good time along—some of it, anyhow. Did you know 'bout Jesus bein' born?"

"Yes," replied the nurse, "I know. Sh-sh-sh! Don't talk any more."

"You did? I thought you looked as if you didn't, and I was goin' to tell you."

"Why, how did I look?" asked the nurse, forgetting her own orders in her curiosity.

"Oh, just like most o' folks—kind o' glum. I shouldn't think you'd ever look glum if you know'd 'bout Jesus bein' born."

Dear reader, do you know "'bout Jesus bein' born?"

"I Can't Draw Glory."

MRS. WILLARD, in "Life in Alaska," tells of a little Hydah girl who had a passionate love for the beautiful scenery surrounding her home. She would sit in perfect rapture looking at the mountains, sky and water. At one point of particular beauty she exclaimed, with her hands on her breast and her face all aglow, "O, my heart gave a great shake!" One of her teachers told her to sketch the scene at sunset. She sat with an expression of countenance worthy a great artist. Gazing over the shining deep with softened eyes, she simply said, "I can't draw glory."

Is not the little Indian maiden something of a poet as well as an artist?

Little Heads Together.

AN ENIGMATICAL LESSON IN ROMAN HISTORY.

My whole is a quite famous saying of Septimus Severus, and contains 39 letters.

3, 13, 31, 25, 11, 36, a conqueror of Rome who was known as "the scourge of God."

32, 15, 13, 38, 26, the Roman emperor who took Jerusalem in 70 A.D.

12, 10, 32, 30, 16, 38, 18, a king of the Latins whose daughter married Æneas.

27, 31, 14, 27, the successor of Galba.

2, 19, 9, 20, 15, 6, 22, 24, a noted Carthaginian leader and the son of Hamilcar Barca.

27, 35, 30, 21, a Roman poet who lived in the time of Augustus Cæsar.

23, 5, 27, a pope whose wisdom saved Rome from Attila.

28, 29, 36, 4, 1, 10, 16, a martyr and saint of the Latin Church.

4, 1, 13, 8, 37, 33, 15, 38, 18, the successor of Otho.

17, 3, 33, 6, 36, an emperor who commenced to reign when seventy-two years old.

18, 36, 6, 15, 20, 34, 26, the race to whom Tarpeia opened the gate of Rome.

4, 39, 1, 15, a city besieged by Camillus.

10, 7, 21, 38, 25, a people of Celtic Gaul who joined in an alliance against Cæsar. E. M. CLARK.

DIAMOND.

1. In anonymous. 2. What boys and girls enjoy. 3. Melted. 4. A part of Europe. 5. Something that every one needs. 6. A small, cubical body. 7. In California.

V.

PI.

Ereht si a leaprseu ni eth htapssel sdwoo;
Hrtee si a eurtpsa no teh neloyl rsheo;
Rthee si cstyoie hrewe eonn nitdruse
Yb het pdee eas dan scimu ni tis aror.

Answers to Puzzles of June 23d.

Double Acrostic.—

M ich A
O re B
ShamgaR
E lish A
S hilo H
T ol A
H ira M
E gyp T
L ea H
A postl E
W —— C
G ilbo A
I do L
V ai L
E agl E
R e D

Engima.—Geography.

Diamond.—

S
A T E
S T O V E
E V A
E

Correct answers from Lewis D. and Jennie Labagh, "Prague," Rappie Bowne.

The "Little Heads" will please send puzzles and answers to COUSIN LOIS, at this office.

On American Interference with British Elections.

THE JAY FARM,
KATONAH, N. Y., July 2d, 1886.

Mr. C. C. Shayne, Chairman of the Committee of Fifty on Trade and Professions of the Irish Parliamentary Fund:

SIR: I beg to acknowledge your letter and appeal, which recall the familiar words, "Aid to Ireland," that some forty years ago headed the letters and papers of the general relief committee of New York, which I had the honor to serve as secretary. That movement, in correspondence with the central committee of Friends at Dublin, was, as Mr. Charles King said, for the relief of a nation, where, in the presence of a great affliction, "all human passions were stilled, and conservative and liberal, Catholic and Protestant, orange and green, were all united." That appeal was responded to by twenty-four States. Their gifts of food were transmitted by 115 vessels, and its distribution, as we were assured, saved "thousand of lives."

The present appeal is not to feed a nation, but to aid a party. It is not made by an undivided Ireland, with the orange and the green united, but, you frankly say: "In the contest which Ireland's parliamentary party has to meet, it needs money," and the World (June 25th) enforces the appeal with the remark that "Gladstone's success is contingent upon the aid that he receives from America."

When a parliamentary blue book, at the beginning of our contest with slavery, showed that Lord Lyons had been secretly approached at New York by American partisans, it awakened displeasure and surprise.

We resented every attempt at foreign intermeddling with our affairs, and if like reason doth make like law, what right have Americans to intervene in the pending election for members of parliament?

Apart from the inconsistency and the inconvenience of our establishing such a precedent comes the thought how far are Americans fitted to instruct the British people touching the wisdom of Mr. Gladstone's scheme, even were its outlines more completely filled with the details that as yet are wanting.

Your association announces that the issue is one of "freedom or oppression;" but the most accomplished statesman of Europe told us the same thing of our civil contest; and in their formula the slave power figured as freedom, and the Constitution of the United States, as administered by the tender-hearted and conscientious Lincoln, was represented as oppression.

Lord John declared that the North was fighting for empire and the South for independence; Mr. Gladstone announced that Mr. Jefferson Davis had created a navy and a nation; and the late sovereign pontiff, in his famous Latin letter "given at Rome at St. Peter's, the 30th of December, in the year of our Lord 1863, of our pontificate 18," announced that he has received with suitable welcome the persons sent by "the illustrious President of the Southern Confederacy," gave the pontifical approval to the desire of Davis and his people for "peace and tranquility," and prayed God that "the other people of America and their rulers"—what a picture of national dissolution is conveyed by the expression—"might adopt resolutely the part of peace."

Such acts and utterances gave aid and comfort to the slave power, intensified the resentment of loyal citizens, and whatever unconsciousness there may have been on the part of Lord John, Mr. Gladstone or the Pope, of the effect of their open sympathy with the effort to establish a slave confederacy, their approval of the rebel leaders, and their recognition of the people of the South as a separate nation, tended to prolong the war, and to increase the difficulties and the cost both of life and treasure at which the integrity and the freedom of our Republic were sustained.

For us the lesson remains with its instructive memories; and in view of the apologies of Lord John and Mr. Gladstone for their erroneous judgment and unhappy utterances, England can hardly fail to remember what Christian civilization would have lost had Davis and the slave power been allowed to triumph; and how pitiable would have been our condition as a nation to-day had we allowed our convictions, based upon actual experience and exact knowledge, to be overcome by the crude theories of European statesmen; and our independent and intelligent judgment to be clouded by the unfriendly and treacherous counsels that came to us from London, from Paris and from Rome. Had we bowed to Mr. Gladstone's advice, however honestly and earnestly it may have been given, Mr. Gladstone could never have written his "Kin beyond Sea," nor described the American Constitution as "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man." Nor, in looking at the England and the America of the future, and subjecting the question of comparative beauty to that of comparative strength, would he have had occasion to alter Horace to exclaim, "O matre forti filia fortior."

Mr. Gladstone's bill is offered for our indorsement as a grand step, although somewhat anomalous, toward American principles. But Mr. Bright, whose knowledge of our National and State systems, of our history and our characteristics, is excelled by no European statesman, and whose faith in the Republic was unshaken in the darkest hour of slavery and rebellion, finds himself unable to support the bill, although a life-long friend of Ireland, and however much he may approve the blending of local self-government with the national supremacy. Can thoughtful, conscientious, disinterested Americans safely endorse the scheme, when Mr. Bright, with his exact knowledge, clear views and mature judgment, although the junior of Mr. Gladstone, says that no sensible man can wish for two such legislative assemblies in the United Kingdom as are proposed, who does not wish that the kingdom shall become two or more separate nations?

May not that view of the bill commend the scheme to some on both sides of the water who pretend to no regard for the British Empire, and who seem to assume that Mr. Parnell has created a nation, that it will presently be recognized by the Pope, and perhaps sooner or later be incorporated with the United States?

It is not for Americans to criticize the mode of procedure adopted by Mr. Gladstone, whether from choice or from necessity, for securing the adoption of his change in the British Constitution, to remedy the evils from which we are told Ireland has suffered since her transfer to Henry II. by the English Pope Adrian IV.—a grant which Archbishop Purcell said would make it difficult for Irish-Americans to admit that Pope Adrian was infallible, although the grant was confirmed by his successor, Alexander III. But remembering that Mr. Gladstone has treated of a comparison between American and British institutions as "lying within the tranquil domain of political philosophy," it may not be amiss to allude to one difference in English and American methods as illustrated by American statesmen in the infancy of the Republic, when they found that the Articles of Confederation adopted in 1777 were insufficient to maintain the national dignity and the general welfare.

A Constitutional Convention which included leading statesmen from the several States met in 1787, and was presided over by Washington, assisted by Franklin Hamilton, Livingston, Morris, King, Madison, Pinckney and their associates. After four months of calm deliberation the Constitution, to which Mr. Gladstone has borne such generous testimony, was reported to Congress and by Congress was referred to the people of the thirteen States. The questions in dispute were discussed in the Federalist and other papers. They were exhaustively reconsidered in the separate conventions. The Constitution went into effect when it had been ratified by two-thirds of the States, and after four years, in 1790, it was ratified by them all.

Mr. Gladstone has remarked that "neither nation prefers (and it would be an ill day if either did prefer) the institutions of the other;" and Englishmen will not object to Americans preferring their own method of submitting each Constitutional change to the people in a form that will allow a judgment on its merits rather than in connection with the heat and confusion of a parliamentary election, where the electors may be led to vote by feverish appeals and personal preferences rather than by deference to their own independent judgment on the grave questions submitted for their decision.

But, differ as we may on this point, is there any good reason why we should not agree as to the inexpediency of either the English or the American people intermeddling with the elections of the other? Will it strengthen Mr. Gladstone and his great party to encourage American support and American contributions? Will it strengthen any American party for its representatives to go beyond the national domain of politics and assume to dictate to another people, and to shape the home policy of the British Empire?

All true Americans will welcome with satisfaction any plan for the more firm establishment of peace and prosperity in Ireland, based upon the freedom of education and worship, of speech and of the press, which they know to be essential to the beneficence, permanence and respectability of popular government.

Mr. Gladstone, in his very able pamphlet on the Vatican decrees, has demonstrated the danger which those decrees threaten to civil government, and he seems to have foreshadowed some of the perils which his new scheme is to encounter, especially when he demonstrated the fact that those decrees require whoever accepts them "to forfeit his moral and mental freedom, and to place his loyalty and civil duty at the mercy of another."

Mr. Gladstone's views on this point seem to be concurred in in America not only by the members of other denominations, but by intelligent and loyal Roman Catholics, who stand by American schools and principles, and who hold in regard to the Jesuits with the judgment declared in the brief for their suppression by that illustrious pontiff, Clement XIV. The class of loyal American Roman Catholics who have sturdily resisted ecclesiastical attempts to interrupt our public schools, and to connect, under whatever pretence, Church and State, rightly command the highest confidence and respect of Americans, and the New York Herald, edited by a gentleman of the Roman Catholic faith, whose generosity to the Irish people has been more than princely, spoke the sentiments of many devoted Romanists in regard to the ecclesiastical power of Rome when it is said that "it would be a farce to pretend that free government can continue where it is permitted to touch its hand to politics."

While I cannot respond to your appeal as you request, I can express what loyal Americans all feel—our best wishes for the peace and contentment of Ireland. May the legislation of Parliament on the Irish question be in all respects worthy of a Christian nation in laying the foundations of a happy home for the Irish people on the basis of a free education, the right and the liberties which are essential to the due performance of the duties of citizens and to the maintenance of civil and religious freedom. I am, sir, very respectfully yours, JOHN JAY.

The General Outlook.

....According to the Baptist Year Book there are 1,500 students preparing for the ministry in the various schools of the denomination.

....The Boston Congregationalist reports 2,047 additions at the May communions, and the Chicago Advance reports 10,129 additions to the churches since January 1.

....The Sunday-school statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church foot up for 1885 as follows: Schools, 22,400; officers and teachers, 246,054; scholars, 1,815,032. This is an increase of 314 schools, 8,582 officers and teachers, and 57,596 scholars.

....The gavel used by Dr. D. C. Marquis, the moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, at Minneapolis, is made of pipe-stone, and was a gift from the Dakota Indians.

....In Louisville, Ky., situated in the heart of what has been the gambling centre of that city, is the Steve Hancock Mission. Its founder and leading spirit was formerly a notorious gambler; but he became converted; and since that time he has been doing successful mission work among the lower classes.

....The next Pan-Presbyterian Council is to be held in London, beginning June 26th, 1888. The American section recommends that fewer papers be read, and more time be given for discussion, in the next council than heretofore.

Financial.

TUESDAY, July 13th.

THE imports of merchandise at this port last week were valued at $8,026,425, and the exports at $6,883 163. Since January 1st imports at this port amount to $224,415,052, against $195,730,142 in the corresponding part of last year; and exports to $158,325,411, against $172,293,436; an increase of 28 millions in imports and a decrease of 13 millions in exports. The situation is more unfavorable than a year ago by 41 millions. The export of specie last week was $162,332, and since January 1st has been $42,665,998 Foreign exchange was dull and weak and closed on Saturday at $4 86 3-4 for 60 day bills and $4.88 1-4 for demand for sterling.

According to last week's bank report, the city banks had reduced loans $739,500, had gained in specie $1,209,200, in legal tenders $1,363,500, in deposits $1,730,800, and had added to the surplus of reserve $2,140,000, raising it to $13,161,450. Call loans on approved collaterals ranged from 1 to 3 1-2 per cent, closing at 2 per cent.

Stocks were considerably affected by the reports of damage to the growing spring wheat in the northwest,—a part of the list advanced, but a large part was depressed. But the report of railroad earnings for the last quarter of the year shows an improvement on those of last year. On Saturday, as the belief became general that the damage to the crops had been exaggerated, there was a slight improvement in prices. Bonds were only slightly affected.

There was much excitement for a day or two in the grain market on the news of serious injury in the Northwest by drought and heat to all the growing crops, and prices for a time rose rapidly. The Government report reckons the injury to spring wheat at 15 per cent, and this report does not include the ten days in which the damage is said to have been the greatest. Subsequently, prices declined, and closed on Saturday at 87 1-4 to 88 for wheat, 46 for corn, and 34 5-8 for oats. There has been an active demand for cotton due to reports of heavy rains in the South, a backwardness in the crop that may expose it to injury by frost, and an increased European demand. The closing quotations on Saturday were: July 9.54–57; August 9.57–58; Sept. 9.50–52; Oct. 9.37–38; Nov. 9.36–37; Dec. 9.37–38. The supply of hay and straw is not as large as it was. The new hay offered has been of inferior quality and brought 55 to 60 cents. For old hay the quotations are: No. 1 timothy 85 to 90 cents; clover mixed 55 to 65. Long rye straw is worth 85 cents, and oat and wheat straw 50 to 55.

General trade is good for the season, which is always somewhat dull.

News of the Week.

(Continued from page five.)

Defaulter Wilson has been traced by a detective to Bellows Falls, Vt....A terrible tornado visited the island of Jamaica, making sad havoc and causing a loss of $500,000. Large fields of banana trees were destroyed.

SATURDAY, 10.—The Tories are constantly gaining by large majorities. ..It is officially stated that the closing of the port of Batoum does not constitute a violation of the Berlin treaty. Batoum was made a free port under the influence of circumstances which have been entirely changed....Increase of cholera in Italy ...Trains are run on the Lake Shore Railroad in Chicago with an armed guard. The pork packers are in sympathy with the switchmen.. Blast furnace men in Pittsburgh want more wages....Miguel Chacon, the murderer of Mrs. Williams, of New York city, was hanged yesterday. He was perfectly cool to the last....More cases of small-pox have been reported in North Fifth street, Brooklyn ...Arrangements completed in regard to running cars on Broadway....The cotton crop in South Carolina has been considerably injured by heavy rains....Marie Schurt, a German girl, was swindled by a clairvoyant in Chicago, who promised to find her a husband. The clairvoyant succeeded in obtaining all her money, and then left for parts unknown....Several car-loads of children have been sent into the country since the middle of the week by means of the Fresh-Air Fund.

MONDAY, 12.—Mr. Labouchere is confident that Mr. Gladstone will resign....It is stated that Lord Salisbury has made overtures to Lord Hartington for the formation of a coalition ministry, whose programme shall include a local government bill for England, Scotland and Ireland....There is great rejoicing because Lord Hartington has been re elected to Parliament....Turkey has authorized free passage of the Dardanelles by Russian torpedo-boats on their way to Odessa....C. D. Graham, a cooper of Buffalo, N. Y., passed through the Whirlpool Rapids at Niagara Falls yesterday afternoon in a barrel. It was shaped like an egg, 26 inches in diameter at the top, 17 inches at the bottom, and 33 inches in the middle, and seven feet long. The rapids are three-quarters of a mile long, and the trip was made in four minutes. His next attempt will be to go over Horseshoe Falls. Graham is thirty-two years old and weighs 140 pounds....A number of persons were hurt by a riot in a circus at Shenandoah, Penn....Thomas Beckwith was swindled out of $1,000 by bunco men in Parkersburg, W. Va ...A letter has been written to Colonel McLeer, ex Postmaster of Brooklyn, N. Y., proposing the transmission of the mails in light cars travelling in an iron tube over the roofs of houses and running from the roof of the New York Post-Office across the East River Bridge to the roof of the Brooklyn Post Office. The plan is under consideration by the Post-Office Department.

TUESDAY, 13.—J. E. Thorold Rogers, Professor at Oxford, gives his opinion on the present aspect of the Home Rule question; he thinks a deadlock in Parliament unavoidable till the question is settled....It is reported that Lord Hartington has pledged himself to support Lord Salisbury's local government bill and to reject all approaches of Mr. Gladstone....The Duke of Argyll asks Americans to understand the Unionist contention....The Turkish reserves are to be disbanded....The Duc d' Amuale appeals to the Council of State against his expulsion from the French army....Loss of life and great damage to property by the New Zealand earthquakes reported ...Sir Roderick Cameron's pleasure boat seized at Buctouche, N. B., and fined $400 by Canadian officials....The "City Point" has been released ...There was a conference of Republicans on temperance in Boston, Mass., yesterday. It was recommended that the question of constitutional prohibition be submitted to the people....George Schilling, the Anarchist, has disappeared from Chicago....Adrian Crucy, a Frenchman, and his sister, Lucie, committed suicide on Sunday night at their residence on Lexington avenue, this city. ....Nearly 1,200 Fresh-Air children sent into the country yesterday....Mr. Starin takes 500 newsboys and bootblacks on an excursion up the Hudson river.

Wilcox & Gibbs Company, 658 Broadway, manufacturers of the "Automatic" Sewing Machine, take the lead in the sewing-machine trade in the early-closing movement, and will close their salesroom, Broadway and Bond street, at one o'clock Saturdays during July and August.

Notice to Subscribers.

The little yellow label on your wrapper informs you to what time your subscription is paid. Kindly consult same, and if in arrears remit the amount due.

Our readers will confer a favor upon the publishers of this paper and, perhaps, find it to their own advantage if, when answering an advertisement found in these columns, mention is made that it was seen in THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

The purest, sweetest and best Cod Liver Oil in the world, manufactured from fresh, healthly livers, upon the sea-shore. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in the market. Made by CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., New York.

PIMPLES removed and the Skin made smooth by using Juniper Tar Soap, manufactured by Caswell Hazard & Co., New York

Sold by druggists.

Publisher's Department.

SINCE LADIES HAVE BEEN ACCUSTOMED to use Glenn's Sulphur Soap in their toilet their personal attractions have been multiplied, and it is seldom they are seen disfigured with blotches and pimples, or rough or coarse skins. Sold by Druggists, Grocers and Fancy Goods Dealers.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap heals and beautifies, 25c.
German Corn Remover kills Corns, Bunions, 25c
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye—Black & Brown, 50c.
Pike's Toothache Drops cure in 1 Minute, 25c.

Every day adds to the great amount of evidence as to the curative powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is unequalled for general debility, and as a blood purifier, expelling every trace of scrofula or other impurity. Now is the time to take it. Sold by all druggists.

Ayer's Pills possess the curative virtues of the best known medicinal plants. These Pills are scientifically prepared, are easy to take, are safe for young and old. They are invaluable for regulating the bowels, and for the relief and cure of stomach troubles.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is agreeable to use. It is not a liquid or a stuff. 50c.

The Hot Weather

Of mid-summer has a weakening effect, both upon body and mind. You feel absolutely incapable of doing any arduous work, and even light duties are performed languidly and unwillingly. This low state of the system causes even greater infirmity, and gives opportunity for serious disease to gain a foot-hold. In this condition the system is quick to respond to the reviving, quickening, and strengthening effects of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies the blood, regulates the digestive organs, and infuses fresh life and vigor into every portion of the body. People who have taken it write us, saying: "It puts new life right into me." "It makes me young again." Reader, if you suffer from summer weakness, try Hood's Sarsaparilla. 100 Doses $1.

MARRIAGES.

CAMERON—HOLMES.—At South Bend, Ind., July 3, by Rev. N. D. Williamson, assisted by Rev Ph. Wagner, Mr. Laurenz Cameron, of Waucedah, Mich., to Miss Hattie V. Holmes, of South Bend.

WESTERFIELD—ROBERTS.—At the residence of Mr. Henry Bell, town of Union, N. Y., July 5, by Rev. I. W. Gowen, Mrs. Belle Roberts to Zachary B. Westerfield, of Jersey City, N. J.

DEATHS.

Obituary notices five cents per line (nine word to the line.) For subscribers we will insert fifteen lines free; all lines in excess of that number will be charged same as non-subscribers.

BOGLE.—At Montclair, N. J., July 7, Margaret W. Tapp, wife of Wm. B. Bogle, in the 68th year of her age.

Notices and Acknowledgments

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—Evangelical but not denominational. Prints in 147 languages in aid of foreign missions; grants religious reading to the needy; sends colporters to millions in our highways and hedges, and to the immigrants in Castle Garden and elsewhere. This work depends wholly on charitable gifts. Donations and legacies are earnestly solicited. A summary of the sixtieth year mailed free. O. R. Kingsbury, Treasurer, 150 Nassau street, New York.

FULTON STREET DAILY NOON PRAYER-MEETING,
113 Fulton Street, and 58 Ann Street,
Just east of Broadway, near William Street.
COME IN, REST, AND PRAY.
Stop 5, 10 15 or 20 minutes, or the hour, as your time permits.

THE Hudson River Ministerial Association will meet in the Reformed Church of Kinderhook on Monday, July 26th, at 3 P.M. Exegesis—Monday, 3.30 P.M., by Rev. J. B. Drury, D.D., of "Anti-Christ." Sermon—Monday, 7.30 P.M., by Rev. J. G. Gebhard. Essay—Tuesday, 9.30 A.M., by Rev. G. Lefevre, on "Ministerial Plagarism." Members expecting to attend please send postal to Rev. E. A. Collier, D.D., Kinderhook, N. Y. J. B. DRURY, Sec.

THE MINUTES OF THE GENERAL SYNOD will be sent early next week to the several Classes as follows: Albany, 30 copies to Rev. J. Lansing Pearse, care of S. R. Gray, 38 State street, Albany, N. Y., Am. Ex.; Bergen 30, Rev. P. Van Buskirk, Closter, N. J., Erie Ex.; South Bergen 49, Rev. W. R. Duryee, D.D., Synod's Rooms; Cayuga 24, Rev. C. O. Thatcher, Am. Ex.; Geneva 18, Rev. John Whitbeck, Ithaca, N. Y., Am. Ex.; Grand River 11, Rev. Peter De Pree, Grand Rapids, Mich., Am. Ex.; Greene 19, Rev. B. Van Zandt, D.D., Catskill, N. Y., Am. Ex.; Holland 20, Rev. Geo. Niemeyer, Vriesland, Ottawa Co., Mich., Adams Ex.; Hudson 22, Mr. R. B. Shepard, Hudson, N. Y., Am. Ex.; Illinois 17, Rev. J. S. Joralmon, Norwood Park, Ill., Adams Ex.; Iowa 15, Rev. L. Dykstra, New Kirk, Iowa, Adams Ex.; Kingston 27, Rev. DeWitt B. Wyckoff, Hurley, N. Y., Am. Ex.; North Long Island 24, Rev. W. H. Ten Eyck, Synod's Rooms; South Long Island 40, Rev. Robert G. Strong, Local Ex.; Michigan 8, Rev. A. P. Peeke, Centreville, Mich., Adams Ex.; Montgomery 33, Rev. A. J. Hageman, Hagaman's Mills, N. Y., Am. Ex.; Monmouth 17, Rev. Theo. W. Wells, Marlboro, N. J., Adams Ex.; Newark 66, Rev. Henry Vehslage, D.D., Irvington, N. J., Adams Ex.; New Brunswick 50, Rev. E. T. Corwin, D.D., Millstone, N. J., Adams Ex.; New York 120, Rev. Oliver H. Walser, Synod's Rooms; Orange 23, Rev. Richard DeWitt, Wallkill, N. Y., Erie Ex.; Paramus 20, Rev. John C. Van Deventer, Ridgewood, N. J., and 8 to John De Baun, Nyack, N. Y., Erie Ex.; Passaic 32, Rev. S. T. Searle, Wyckoff, N. J., Erie Ex.; Philadelphia 29, Rev. W. B. Voorhees, Blawenburgh, N. J., Adams Ex.; Poughkeepsie 25, Rev. A. P. Van Gieson, D.D., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Am. Ex.; Raritan 27, Rev. J. F. Mesick, D.D., care of Mr. Geo. V. Tunison, Somerville, N. J., Adams Ex.; Rensselaer 27, Rev. E. A. Collier, D.D., Kinderhook, N. Y., Am. Ex.; Saratoga 21, Rev. J. W. Beardslee, West Troy, N. Y., Am. Ex.; Schenectady 30, Rev. C. P. Ditmars, Niskayuna, N. Y., Nat'n Ex.; Schoharie 6, Rev. D. K. Van Doren, Middleburg, N. Y., Nat'n Ex.; Ulster 28, Rev. Jacob N. Voorhis, Port Ewen, Ulster Co., N.Y., Am. Ex.; Westchester 20, Rev. C. K. Clearwater, Mount Vernon, N. Y., Am. Ex.; Wisconsin 22, Rev. Andrew Wormser, Cedar Grove, Wis. Am. Ex.
W. H. TEN EYCK, Stated Clerk, pro tem.

Board of Education.

RECEIPTS FOR JUNE, 1886.

From Fishkill Landing, $38.29; Hillsboro, Millstone, N.J., 6; New Paltz, N.Y., 17.64; Ebenezer, Holland, Mich., 10.50; Cherry Hill, N.J., 12.35; Huguenots, S.I., 5; Lafayette, Jersey City, N.J., 15; 1st Coxsackie, N.Y., 6.10; Mott Haven, N.Y., 13; Ellenville, N.Y., 17.75; Stanton, N.J., 14; South, N.Y. city, 25; S.S., Wyckoff, N.J., 5; 1st Kingston, N.Y., 45.49. Total, $231.12.

SPECIAL.—For Hope College—Churchville, Pa., 9.55; a friend, 5. Total, $14.55.

For Needy Students—Mr. and Mrs. P. Schoonmaker, 15; Newburgh, N.Y., 46.50. Total, $61.50.

For Northwestern Academy—S.S., Saugerties, N.Y., 10; Rev. D. and Mrs. Wortman, 10. Total, $20.

F. J. HOSFORD, Treasurer,
34 Vesey Street, N. Y.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall-st., N. Y.

NATURE'S CURE FOR CONSTIPATION, Violent Purgation is Obsolete. To Assist, not to Attack, Nature, is the true Function of Progressive Medicine.

TARRANT'S
Effervescent Seltzer
APERIENT

Cures Constipation, Cures Sick Headache, Cures Dyspepsia, by gently urging the sluggish secretive and excretory organs to perform their duties. This delightful remedy, pleasant to the taste, mild yet certain in action, economical in price, has stood the test of time, and for more than forty years has been prescribed by our best physicians. It should be found in every family medicine chest. Sold by druggists everywhere.

Sick-Headache, AND DYSPEPSIA.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,
Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

PERFECT SAFETY, prompt action, and wonderful curative properties, easily place Ayer's Pills at the head of the list of popular remedies for Sick and Nervous Headaches, Constipation, and all ailments originating in a disordered Liver.

I have been a great sufferer from Headache, and Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the only medicine that has ever given me relief. One dose of these Pills will quickly move my bowels, and free my head from pain.—William L. Page, Richmond Va.

Ayer's Pills,
Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

The Church.

After the Storm.

AFTER the storm, a calm;
After the bruise, a balm;
For the ill brings good, in the Lord's own time,
And the sigh becomes the psalm.

After the drought, the dew;
After the cloud the blue.
For the sky will smile in the sun's good time,
And the earth grow glad and new.

Bloom is the heir of blight,
Dawn is the child of night,
And the rolling change of the busy world
Bids the wrong yield back the right.

Under the fount of ill
Many a cup doth fill,
And the patient lip, tho' it drinketh oft,
Finds only the bitter still.

Truth seemeth oft to sleep,
Blessings so slow to reap,
Till the hours of waiting, are weary to bear,
And the courage is hard to keep!

Nevertheless, I know,
Out of the dark must grow
Sooner or later, whatever is fair,
Since the heavens have willed it so.

—Baptist Weekly.

Steadiness.

RELIGIOUS spurts are comparatively easy performances, but they do not describe Christian living in its essential principles. A spurt is a spasmodic effort which involves tremendous strain for a short time, but which cannot be maintained, and which necessitates reaction, perhaps relapse, perhaps collapse.

A spurt is not to be derided. It is progress for a little while, at least. It indicates life—it is generally the result of earnest desire to reach an ideal which is of the highest. It is the only form of piety which seems possible to certain dispositions. The brother who is continually telling in the prayer-meeting what he is going to do and be, who is periodically consecrating himself anew, only to slip back into the world as often, is always subject to the criticism of those who never spurt. His failures are taken note of with more sharp-sightedness than his success in attaining a high form of piety for a little while. Why blame the periodic brother for his non-ebullient periods rather than praise him for those bubbling seasons in which virtue is in him?

Religious spurts are not to be derided, as I said, but rather encouraged. There are Christians in all the churches who would delight everybody if they would but show a little sign of life, even if it bore unmistakable indications of too much oxygen, even if they raved and pirouetted a little. Anything would be better than the cold, critical stagnation which characterizes them. They never commit themselves by resolutions publicly proclaimed which they fail to keep; they never run into excesses of any kind; they never make any mistakes; they never open themselves to remarks.

But it is better to make a mistake now and then than to do nothing and be nothing.

This world is moved by men who make mistakes, and the more effective the man the more apt is he to make big mistakes. The Church has little use for those lizard-blooded, dead eyed persons whose highest pleasure is in the failure of those who try to drive the chariot of sun; the golden sentence of whose lives is: "I told you so!"

As against stagnation, any kind of fanaticism is to be preferred. If it is between Ingersollism and Salvationarmyism—neither of which is desirable—the latter is infinitely better. As against the correct and formal Churchman in the days of deadness, the howlingest of Methodists is desirable.

But there is a better way. One need be neither lifeless nor lunatic. He may go on from day to day like a tree, like a child; he may grow; he may be steady. But it is very difficult and tiresome. The easiest way for a healthy person to climb stairs is by attacking them two at a time on a smart run. It is not so tiresome as to take them one at a time and by quietly walking. But the stairs of life are long and breath is short. One cannot ascend the Washington Monument two steps at a time and on a dead run. There are nearly a thousand of them. When the journey is a long one, an even, steady tread, without any resort to stimulants, is essentially the better way. But it is tiresome, and there is nothing startling about it to attract the attention of others; there is no personal glory in it until the race is run. In a race that I saw not long ago the young student who walked away from his competitor at the first, and who walked beautifully, and was dressed gaily, did not win the race. All the girls admired him; he was handsome; he attracted attention; but the fellow who swung along like a cow and had on a pair of old pantaloons—not knee breeches at all—and who kept the gait he started with until the finish, the steady fellow won the race. Nobody but the few who admired his way of doing the thing wanted him to win it. Nobody but the same few was glad when he did win it. But he won it all the same. The other one made the prettiest show, but he was not the best walker.

It requires a good deal of nerve, a good deal of courage just to plod along in the Christian life and quietly do your duty; a little better to-morrow than yesterday, but only a little better; not noticeably better; not so much better that people begin to talk about it and put your name in the paper. It requires a pretty steady life pressure to keep doing what you know is right day after day. It is so much easier to neglect your duty for a while, and then overdo it for a while, and loudly proclaim your astonishment that others are underdoing it, or simply doing it. A. was a worldly Christian who came under the influence of an evangelist, and started on a religious spurt, loudly proclaiming it in a prayer-meeting. B. said quietly to A: "I am glad you have begun to live as you say you have. I have lived in that way for many years." It made A. mad. A. naturally thought no one ever lived so before, and had as much as said so. When such a life was plainly not considered wonderful but only that which every Christian ought to live, and many were living. A. gave it up and went back to worldliness and is there yet, and has never forgiven B.—thinks B. is a hypocrite—but B. is still living on about the same. A.'s way of serving God is easy and startling. B.'s way is difficult and commonplace, but it has the merit of being the right way and very much like that of Jesus.

One ought to be satisfied to be a good Christian, not a wonderful one. One ought to be satisfied, that is, at peace, if he finds that he can cheerfully take up his cross daily and follow Jesus.

(How many more persons are trying to follow Thomas à Kempis, or Jeremy Taylor, Francis Ridley Havergal, than Jesus. "Where can I find a good book for devotional purposes," wrote a correspondent to a newspaper the other day. Why not try the four Gospels, my friend? They contain the life of Jesus. To be sure He did not follow any peculiar system of "sanctification" or "holiness;" His life was not very startling except in its genuine goodness; but if you really wish to be a Christian I know of no better one to follow).

To take up your cross, not wait to have it handed you every morning: "My child, have you taken up your cross to-day? Well, well; why do you hesitate? Go and get it." To take it up and follow Him, to do this every day, ah! there's the rub.—Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost, in Words and Weapons.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Home Readings

LESSON 4, THIRD QUARTER.

M. The Resurrection of Lazarus.....John 11: 17-34.
T. The Council's Deliberations.....John 11: 35-57.
W. The Widow's Son Raised.....Luke 7: 11-18.
T. The Ruler's Daughter Raised.....Mark 5: 22-43.
F. Christ the First-Fruits.....1 Cor. 15: 12-26.
S. Triumph over Death.....1 Cor. 15: 41-58.
S. For Ever with the Lord.....1 Thess. 4: 13-18.

—From the Westminster Question Book.

International Sunday-School Lesson.

BY REV. JOHN C. VAN DEVENTER.

July 25th.—"The Resurrection of Lazarus."—John 11: 20-27, 39-44.

Golden Text.—"Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life."—JOHN 11: 25.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—"He that hath the Son hath life."—1 JOHN. 5: 12.

INTRODUCTION.

THE lesson assigned by the International Committee covers the entire section from verses 17-44 Owing to the great length of this selection the publishers of helps have agreed together to confine their expositions to the verses mentioned above, which cover the essential points of the narrative. The miracles of Jesus were so timed in the Providence of the Father as to have the best results. On former occasions Jesus had manifested His authority over the soul by bringing some who had recently died back to life. His enemies might allege that the death in these cases had been only apparent,—that the persons had been in a trance. The raising of Lazarus four days after his burial put such cavils entirely out of the question. By this act Jesus manifested His utmost supremacy over the world of the body, and that of spirits, and so declared His Divine nature, while prefiguring His own resurrection and that of all who should believe on His name. When Jesus reached the outskirts of Bethany He found that four days had elapsed since the burial of Lazarus, and that the sorrowing sisters were surrounded by friends from the neighborhood and from Jerusalem. Not wishing to have His interview with the sisters a public matter, He probably sent word to Martha of His approach.

THE LESSON.

I. THE PROMISED GRACE.—VS. 20-27.

V. 20.—"Martha, therefore, when she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him." She seems to have been the head of the house, either as the widow of Simon the leper, or his elder daughter. She hastens to meet the Friend for whose coming she had been so sorely longing during the past few days. "Mary sat still in the house." We have no ground for determining the reason for this fact, but the most natural explanation appears to be that Martha thought it best, on account of the presence of enemies, to go out to Jesus by herself first, so as not to attract the notice of those who might take advantage of His presence to do Him an injury.

V. 21.—"Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Some recognize a tone of reproach in these words, as if Martha would lay the responsibility of the death of her brother upon the absence of the Saviour. It seems to be rather the spontaneous utterance of a thought that had been uppermost in the minds of the sisters during their days of sadness.

V. 22.—"Even now I know that whatsoever thou shalt ask of God, God will give it thee." In these words Martha makes her appeal for help, but evidently without a thought that help might come in the restoration of her brother. She seeks what Jesus is willing to ask from His Father and to bestow upon her. She here manifests the same quality of faith as when she sent the simple message to the absent Lord.

V. 23.—"Thy brother shall rise again." It is impossible for us to say whether Jesus intended this as a specific promise of the miracle which He was about to work, or merely to take her thought away from the grave to the future triumph.

V. 24.—"I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." It is evident that Martha understood Him to refer to the remote event, and that she was not prepared to get much comfort from this hope deferred.

V. 25—"I am the resurrection and the life." Resurrection for the body; life for the soul. By this saying Jesus fastens her faith the more closely upon Himself. The final resurrection with all its attending circumstances is to be the manifestation of His glory and dominion. He who has such power and authority in reserve can certainly anticipate that hour if need be. "He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." This promise belongs to the first clause of the preceding declaration, "I am the resurrection." The dead in Christ shall have the life of the body restored to them.

V. 26.—"Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." With these the spiritual need is more prominent, and they are promised Life, which death itself cannot disturb, a life hid with Christ in God.

V. 27.—To the direct challenge of the Master, "Believest thou this?" Martha answers unhesitatingly in a way that covers all promises and meets all needs,—"I have believed that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, even he that cometh into the world." (Rev.) This confession covers all the forms of Old Testament prophecy, and concedes all that Jesus claimed for Himself. Having this faith well rooted in her heart, she does not falter at any promise of grace.

II. THE GRACIOUS FULFILLMENT.—VS. 39-44.

V. 39.—The omitted verses contain an account of the interview with Mary, which was very similar to that just noticed, and the approach of the company to the tomb.

"Jesus said, Take ye away the stone." This stone filled up the entrance to the tomb, and, while His Word to the stone would have removed it, yet He would not employ omnipotence to do that which human agency was equal to. At this juncture Martha thinking for the moment of the unpleasant consequences of opening a tomb that had been closed upon the dead for four days, interposed, "Lord, by this time he stinketh." This ejaculation plainly indicates that she had as yet entertained no expectation of an immediate resurrection.

V. 40.—"Said I not unto thee, that, if thou shouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God." This question in no way met the difficulty in Martha's mind, but compelled her to prove her faith by perfect acquiescence.

V. 41.—"Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me." Jesus appears to have used the past tense here by anticipation, so confident was He of a favorable answer to this intercession, or He may have uttered the prayer on the way, and have received in His own heart the assurance of His Father's pleasure.

V. 42.—"I know that thou hearest me always." He here expresses the dependence, which as the servant of Jehovah, He had upon His Father's will. As Mediator on earth He learned obedience as a Son. "Because of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me." The emphasis is upon "thou." The point was to establish by this miracle the connection between Himself and His Father, making it impossible to convict Him of blasphemy in making His claims without doing violence to notorious facts.

V. 43.—"And when he had thus spoken he cried with a loud voice." This also was for those who stood by. The spirit would have obeyed a whisper as readily as it did the loud voice, but He would draw the attention of the witnesses to His command.

V. 44.—"He that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes." The ordinary Jewish manner of winding the dead would have made it impossible for one to assume a sitting posture or to take a step, much less to issue forth from the tomb. The power of Jesus was exerted to bring Lazarus bodily out of the tomb and place him before the astonished people. "Loose him and let him go." The miraculous ceased as soon as the need for it had passed; all further attentions to Lazarus could be given by human friends, and to their care Jesus now transfers him.

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

1. We should be ready to welcome the Comforter.

2. We may open all our heart to Jesus,—His sympathy is perfect.

3. Let us commit ourselves entirely unto God; "He doeth all things well."

4. "Death is but going home."

5. All things are yours if ye are Christ's.

6. "In all these things we are more than conquerors."

7. "Believest THOU this?"

8. "All things are possible to him that believeth."

Sunlight All the Way.

"GOOD-BY, Jennie; the road is long,
And the moor is hard to cross;
But well you know there is danger
In the bogs and the marshy moss.
So keep in the footpath, Jennie,
Let nothing tempt you to stray,
Then you'll get safely over it,
For there's sunlight all the way."

The child went off with a blessing
And a kiss of mother-love;
The daisies were down at her feet,
And the lark was singing above.
On, on the narrow footpath—
Nothing could tempt her to stray;
So the moor was passed at nightfall,
And she'd sunlight all the way.

And I, who followed the maiden,
Kept thinking, as I went,
Over the perilous moor of life,
What unwary feet are bent.
If they only could keep in the footpath,
And not in the marshes stray,
Then they would reach the end of life
Ere the night could shroud the day.

—Harper's Weekly.

Tongues in Trees.

WE love to live, in summer afternoons, in the shade of forest trees; leaving the dusty city far behind us, we seek some leafy nook, and lulled by the tinkle of distant cow-bells, repose, half dreaming, on the velvet moss. Through the foliage, just rustled by the south wind's breath, we catch glimpses of the beautiful river as it flows onward to the ocean, here and there dotted by the white sail of some ship that goes out with the trusting faith of youth into unknown storms, or still more dangerous calms. Now and then, a great full-laden bee blunders against our face, and with a buzz of apology flies off with his pollen treasure; then a gaudy butterfly, banded with black and yellow, drops upon us like the petal of some tropic flower.

Afar off from the shrubbery comes the music of the thrush, as in peasant gown of brown he woos his gentle mate. Above us is the deep blue of the sky, flecked by billowy clouds, beyond which our fancy soars to the infinite; even the ants, who laboriously pursue their mysterious vocations and cross our mere human obstacle of a body as indifferently as they would a log, seem in perfect keeping with the hour. We like to contrast our present laziness with their unceasing energy, and really feel commiseration for these mites which take no rest.

Sweetly the pine trees sing to us of the ocean. From standing so long in view of the waves, they have caught the song of the Atlantic. Now they murmur softly, like ripples when they kiss the beach; now we scarcely note that the deeps are stirred; and then, with swelling grandeur rises the full sound of the roaring breakers and the dashing surf. We hear a vessel in distress, the creaking [cordage, the] shrieks of the despairing, the boom of the signal gun, and the loud thunder of the tempest; again all is still, and the billows chant their requiem over the lost. There is no more melancholy sound in nature than this soughing of the pines. The most unimaginative person must pause and wonder, when, without any apparent motion, he hears this echo of the sea.

Each tree has a language of its own, and the sylvan philologist learns to know them all. Sometimes he may be puzzled at an unusual expression, but he will soon understand. A perfect sympathy between man and tree abolishes all little word difficulties, and brings two souls into harmony. Many a lovely story have the beech trees told us of the classic times of dryads and nymphs. The chestnuts sing of the Andalusian maidens, of poor Boabdil and the ruins of Grenada; the oaks narrate the glories of the Roman legions, whose heroes its leaves have crowned; the birches recall the too frequent admonitions of childhood; the hickories suggest the memories of autumn days, when the "sound of dropping nuts is heard"; and the gentian opens its holy eye; lastly, the "wild witch hazel tree" deceives us with stories of buried treasures, which, so far, we have failed to unearth.

It is comforting when all else fails,—and even in the midst of the whirl of life we feel alone,—to hold communion thus with Nature, she that "never yet forsook the heart that loved her." Through her ministers, the trees, she tell us never to despair; while to her sisters of mercy, the flowers, she intrusts the task of leading us to the feet of the bounteous Giver.—Prof. W. Whitman Bailey, in Journal of Education.

The Chinese in Denver.

MISSION work among the Chinese in Denver began in 1847, but one man being found willing to receive instruction. At present, out of a population of five hundred, about one hundred and seventy-five are in schools and one hundred under decided religious influence. Nine converts united with the church of which Dr. G. P. Hays was formerly pastor. The outrages against the Chinese in that city have been so frequent and aggravated that Christian Americans have taken measures to insure a reform. Offenders have been legally prosecuted with such vigor that they have learned that it is not safe to molest the Chinese.

The following description of a funeral among the heathen Chinamen is given by an eye-witness: A long procession of vehicles followed the hearse to the grave, which was in a Christian cemetery. As the friends of the deceased passed through the streets, they scattered large quantities of Chinese paper of various colors in narrow strips about ten inches long. This is supposed to divert evil spirits. At the grave a man, who seemed to be a kind of priest, monotonously read from what appeared to correspond to a prayer-book. All the others ate voraciously of the roast pig, chickens, etc., which they had brought with them. A fire of huge masses of Chinese paper was lighted and on this were laid, article by article, the clothing and all other effects of the dead man. The crowding and bustle about the grave were so great that it was difficult to see just what was done. Frequent prostrations, constant eating, mumbling of prayers, and, above all, close attention to the fire, which must be kept bright, seemed the chief occupations. A half hour was spent in these ceremonies; then the remnants of food having been deposited in the grave for the spirits, it was filled with earth. The solemn ity was now all over, and the friends started back to town with laughter and the evident intention to have a hilarious time as an offset to this mournful occasion.

In contrast to this we have an account of a funeral among converted Chinamen in California. It was attended by forty of that despised race. Prayers in English and Chinese were offered while tears flowed from the eyes of the brown-faced relatives, some of whom had never before heard Christian prayers. The pall-bearers were all Chinese Christians, who wore on their arms white badges of mourning. At the grave these forty men stood and sang "Shall we gather at the river?"—The Journal and Messenger.

The Dying Minister.

BURDENED with years and labor, the old preacher lay upon his couch, waiting the summons of the messenger to call him across the river. Around him were gathered his children and brethren, ministering as far as they could, to his every want. He lay silent for a time, when one of the watchers said, "He is going soon." Tears were flowing freely from many eyes. He roused a little, murmuring something none could understand. "His mind wanders in the last hour," said one. He seems to revive a little. "Raise my head," he said. "Is it time for the sermon? The lights are burning and the song seems to have died away." All voices are hushed as he continued:

"Well, my text is from Jesus: 'In my Father's house are many mansions'—blessed words of promise. You poor, lowly ones who dwell in cabins, remember it is a mansion awaits you; and you poor, waiting ones, remember there are many of them. I promise my children to come home—but that mansion is my home. I'm too weary to preach long to-night, my brethren.

"What is that I hear? The music should not begin before the sermon is over—strange voices too—no, not strange, 'tis the wife of my early youth leading the choir—yes, and mother too. I can't preach; let me lie down and rest." He opened his eyes. In them was a far-away-look, but what he saw none of the watchers could tell. Raising his hand solemnly he said, "Let us pronounce the benediction. May grace, mercy and peace abide—" An unintelligible murmur, and the hush of silence came, to be broken by the sighing and sobbing of the watchers. The old preacher had preached his last sermon.—Christian Advocate.

The Horsford Almanac and Cook Book mailed free on application to the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

DYSPEPSIA

Causes its victims to be miserable, hopeless, confused, and depressed in mind, very irritable, languid, and drowsy. It is a disease which does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy to throw off the causes and tone up the digestive organs till they perform their duties willingly. Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven just the required remedy in hundreds of cases.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, from which I have suffered two years. I tried many other medicines, but none proved so satisfactory as Hood's Sarsaparilla." THOMAS COOK, Brush Electric Light Co., New York City.

Sick Headache

"For the past two years I have been afflicted with severe headaches and dyspepsia. I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and have found great relief. I cheerfully recommend it to all." MRS. E. F. ANNABLE, New Haven, Conn.

Mrs. Mary C. Smith, Cambridgeport, Mass., was a sufferer from dyspepsia and sick headache. She took Hood's Sarsaparilla and found it the best remedy she ever used.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

7% NET Security 3 to 6 times loan. INTEREST semi-annual and paid at your home. 29th year of residence, and 10th of business. No investor ever had to pay taxes, costs of foreclosure, wait for interest, or take land. BEST of References all around you. Write if you have money to loan.
D. S. B. JOHNSTON & SON,
Negotiators of Mortgage Loans,
MENTION THIS PAPER St. Paul, Minn.

POPULAR LECTURES.
SUBJECTS
1.—The Romance of the Revolution.
2.—An Evening with Longfellow
3.—The Tudors
4.—Monologue—National Poems and Events
Address MRS. E. T. BARRETT,
SING SING, N. Y

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.
Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and endorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it. A. C. WILTBERGER, Prop., 432 N. Second St., Phil., Pa.

THE SAFEST FOOD IN SUMMER
For Young or Delicate Children.
A Sure Preventive of
CHOLERA INFANTUM.
It has been the positive means of saving many lives where no other food would be retained. Its basis is SUGAR OF MILK, the most important element of mothers' milk.

It contains no unchanged starch and no Cane Sugar, and therefore does not cause sour stomach, irritation, or irregular bowels.

It is the Most Nourishing, the Most Palatable, the Most Economical, of all Prepared Foods.

Sold by druggists—25 cts., 50 cts., $1.00. Send for pamphlet giving important medical opinions on the nutrition of Infants and Invalids.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

7 PER CENT. INTEREST
FIRST MORTGAGE
FARM LOANS.
Personal acquaintance with lands and values. Over 2,000 loans made. NO CUSTOMER has ever LOST A DOLLAR of principal or interest on any loans made here. Interest collected and sent to you, free of cost, each year. These loans are very safe, and pay nearly U.S. BONDS. I am three times as much as known and recommended by leading business men and clergymen, East and West—men for whom I have been making these investments for TEN YEARS PAST.

REFERENCES.
REV. WM. L. GAGE, D.D., Hartford, Ct.
M. E. GATES, PH.D., LL.D., President Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.
DR. WM. J. MILNE, President Geneseo Normal School, Geneseo, N. Y
HON. E. M. TOPLIFF, Manchester, N. H.
REV. JOHN W. RAY, Lake City, Minn.
DR. JNO. K. BUCKLYN, Mystic Bridge, Ct.
Importers' and Traders' National Bank, New York.
First National Bank, St. Paul, Minn.
The Congregationalist, Boston, N. Y. Observer, and hundreds of others in all parts of the United States.

All are pleased with my Investments. Circular, references, letters giving experience and testimony of old customers, and a New Map of Dakota sent free on application. Mention this paper. Address
E. P. GATES,
Pres. Merchant's Bank,
Grand Forks, Dakota

6% 7% 8%
The American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, incorporated, with a paid-up capital of $500,000, with branches at Huron and Mitchell, Dakota, offer First Mortgage Farm Loans in Iowa, Minn., Dakota, and Neb., both Principal and Interest Guaranteed. Also 6 per cent. Debenture Bonds (obligations of the Company), running 10 years, secured by Mortgage loans deposited with the Mercantile Trust Co., N. Y. It also issues Demand Certificates of Deposit at 5 per cent. interest. Write for pamphlet and references.
Home Office, Emmetsburg, Iowa.
E. S. Ormsby, Pres., 150 Nassau St., N. Y.

INVEST Through the Sound and Reliable
WESTERN FARM MORTGAGE CO.
F. M. PERKINS, President. LAWRENCE, KAN. L. H. PERKINS, Secretary.
CAPITAL AND SURPLUS, $250,000.
Carefully selected 1st Mortgage Farm Loans payable in N. Y. Unrivalled facilities. Absolute satisfaction. 10 years' experience. No losses. Refer to 3d Nat'l Bank, N. Y. City; Nat'l Bank, Lawrence, Kan.; and Hundreds of Investors. Send for pamphlet, forms and full information. Branch Offices in N. Y. City, Albany & Phila. N. Y. Office, 187 B'way, C. C. Hine & Son, Agts.

MEMORIAL TABLETS.
MEMORIAL WINDOWS.
CHURCH FURNITURE.
INTERIOR DECORATIONS.
J. & R. LAMB, 59 CARMINE ST., NEW YORK.

Pastors or Trustees about to BUILD OR REMODEL Churches, should read our New Handbook on Church Building, Ventilating, Stained Glass and STEREOCHROME OR SECCO PAINTING. This new and beautiful method of decorating the interior of Churches, is superior to any style of decoration in use. The colors are very rich, imperishable, and warranted proof against leaks or damp from the roof or sides of the building. Plans for New or for Remodeling, or Decoration of Churches, furnished on reasonable terms. Handbook sent free as above, in Middle States. Address, J. S. D'ORSAY & CO., Church Architects and Decorators. Office, 67 BIBLE HOUSE, New York. Established 1849.
Refers to Rev. J. Gaston, D.D., Passaic, N. J., Rev. E. T. Corwin, D.D., Millstone, N. J., about Secco Painting.

R. H. MACY & CO.,

14TH STREET, SIXTH AVE., AND 13TH STREET NEW YORK.

GRAND CENTRAL FANCY AND DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT.

We Call Attention to Our Large and Varied Stock Goods Adapted to the Summer Season.

Our Customers Residing in the

COUNTRY,

Or Those Visiting the

MOUNTAINS

OR

SEA-SHORE,

Can Rely on Having The'r

ORDERS BY MAIL

Carefully Executed and Promptly Shipped.

OUR PRICES

Are Always the Lowest.

R. H. MACY & CO.

James M'Creery & Co.

AT THEIR SEMI-ANNUAL STOCK INVENTORY ON THE 9TH INST., SELECTED SEVERAL VERY LARGE ASSORTMENTS OF COLORED AND FANCY SILK VELVETS, ETC., WHICH THEY WILL DISPOSE OF DURING THIS MONTH AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Broadway & 11th St., N. Y.

Degraaf and Taylor

LEADING

FURNITURE MAKERS

AND UPHOLSTERERS

47 and 49 W. 14th st., and 48 W. 15th st.

BETWEEN 5TH AND 6TH AVES.,

NEW YORK.

EQUITABLE

Mortgage Company,

FARM Mortgages & Municipal BONDS In Kansas, Missouri & Nebraska

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST

GUARANTEED.

Capital, $600,000.00.

A pamphlet containing information concerning the history of Farm Mortgages for the past twenty-five years sent free on application.

OFFICES:

NEW YORK, 208 B'way, Evening Post Bl'dg.

BOSTON, 23 Court Street

PHILADELPHIA, 112 South Fourth Street.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.

LE PAGE'S LIQUID GLUE

Is used by thousands of first class Manufacturers and Mechanics on their best work. Received GOLD MEDAL, London, 83. Pronounced strongest glue known. Send card of dealer who does not keep it, with five 2c stamps for SAMPLE CAN FREE

Russia Cement Co., Gloucester, Mass.

ATLANTIC

Mutual Insurance Co.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 51 WALL STREET

ORGANIZED 1842.

Insures against Marine and Inland Navigation Risks.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest in accordance with its Charter.

J. D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice President
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice Pres't.
A. A. RAVEN 3d Vice Pres't.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

CONTINENTAL Insurance Co.

Continental Buildings
100 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Cor. COURT and MONTAGUE STS., BROOKLYN

106 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, E.D.

Insures against loss by Fire at reasonable rates.

Reserve for re-insurance	$2,265,427 8
of which for Inland Marine, $55,969 52
Reserve ample for all other claims	553,171 2.
Capital paid in cash	1,000,000 00
Net surplus	1,358,879 85
Total Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886.	$5,177,478 99

This Company conducts its business under the restrictions of the New York Safety Fund Law. The two Safety Funds together equal $1,200,000.

H. H. LAMPORT, President.

CYRUS PECK, Secretary.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK.

OFFICE, No. 119 BROADWAY.

Sixty-fifth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the Condition of the Company on the first day of January, 1886.

CASH CAPITAL	$3,000,000 00
Reserve Premium Fund	3,011,637 00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	378,483 98
Net Surplus	1,227,995 10
Cash Assets	$7,618,116 08

SUMMARY OF ASSETS

Cash in Banks	$245,795 90
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	897,550 00
United States Stocks (market value)	2,879,390 00
Bank and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	1,522,550 00
State and City Bonds (market value)	222,000 00
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	122,850 0
Interest due on 1st January, 1886	97,056 02
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	358,290
Real Estate	1,272,633 77
Total	$7,618,116 08

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
D. A. HEALD, Vice-President.
J. H. WASHBURN, V. P. & Sec'y

T. B. GREENE, W. L. BIGELOW, E. G. SNOW, JR., } Ass't Sec's.

See this "NOTES ON DECORATIVE ART," free for postage. Covering information on Tapestry, Lustra, Kensington, Oil and Mineral Painting. Regular lessons by mail. Painted and chromo designs to rent. Orders executed.

42 W. 23d St., H. A. JOHNSON, New York

A MILLION BOOKS

RARE, CURIOUS, CURRENT. IN STOCK.

ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.

Libraries Supplied Cheaper than at any Book Store in the World.

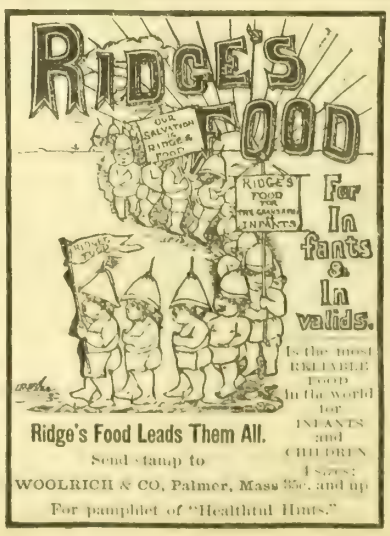
LIBRARIES AND BOOKS BOUGHT.

MAMMOTH CATALOGUE FREE.

LEGGAT BROTHERS,

81 CHAMBERS STREET,

3d door West of City Hall Park. NEW YORK.



RIDGE'S FOOD
OUR SALVATION IS IN RIDGE'S FOOD
RIDGE'S FOOD FOR THE GROWING INFANTS
For Infants & Invalids.
Is the most RELIABLE Food in the world for INFANTS and CHILDREN
Ridge's Food Leads Them All.
Send stamp to
WOOLRICH & CO, Palmer, Mass.
35c. and up
For pamphlet of "Healthful Hints."

WALKED TWENTY MILES

FOR A

Can of Ridge's Food.

January 1st, 1886.

We have a little girl about nine months old that has used a dozen cans of Ridge's Food, and does splendidly on it. I got out of the Food for a few days in the summer and the baby began to fall down. We tried "——'s Food" [one of the many extracts of malt advertised as the only reliable infant food], but decided not to use it any more, as the baby did not seem to care for it. One can of Ridge's, and we have never had better luck than the first feed of it. Our baby is a Mt. Hope Boy.

Respectfully, WILL L. PAYSON,
Notary Public, Grand Co., Wis.

BECAUSE

We know RIDGE'S Food to be the most reliable for all conditions of child life, we have the proof of the many testimonials. Such cases as these are not uncommon. Two persons were passing Ridge's Food exhibit at a recent fair, one remarked to the other, "Do you know anything about this? I bought a can some time ago, but it [illegible] up five children exclusively upon it." No other food can show such a record.

Its worth was known and appreciated.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE Grammar School,

New Brunswick, N. J.

PREPARES BOYS AND YOUNG MEN FOR COLLEGE OR BUSINESS.

Additional buildings were last year required, erected and filled.

This year additional teachers engaged to meet the increased number of students.

Rooms carpeted and cared for. Some arranged in suites—a study-room 14x14 with two single sleeping-rooms adjoining. A few single rooms to be had if desired.

Last year at the opening of the school every room was engaged, and many applicants were refused admission because of the lack of room. This year rooms will be reserved as applied for.

For catalogues and further information, address E. T. TOMLINSON, HEADMASTER.

BEST TEACHERS AMERICAN and FOREIGN, promptly provided for Families, Schools, Colleges Skilled Teachers supplied with Positions. Circulars of Good Schools free to Parents. School Property rented and sold. School and Kindergarten Material, etc.

J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO.,

AMERICAN SCHOOL INSTITUTE, 7 East 14th St., N. Y

Elmira College. FOR WOMEN.

Under Care of Synod of New York.

Course of study equal to that of the best Colleges; also Elective and Special Courses. Best advantages in Music and Art. Building with best modern improvements; heated by steam, and furnished with elevator. Astronomical Observatory - Museum and Art Gallery. Terms moderate. Address REV. A. W. COWLES, D.D., Pres't, Elmira, N. Y.

SIGLAR'S PREPARATORY SCHOOL,

NEWBURG-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.,

Gives the best preparation for the best colleges. Two Yale valedictorians in three years. Entrance examinations held at the school by member of Yale Faculty. Daily gymnastics under teacher compulsory. For circulars, etc., address

HENRY W. SIGLAR, M.A., (Yale) Prin.

VASSAR COLLEGE,

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

FOR WOMEN, with a complete College Course, School of Painting and Music, Astronomical Observatory, Laboratory of Chemistry and Physics, Cabinets of Natural History, a Museum of Art, a Library of 15,000 Volumes, ten Professors, twenty-three Teachers. Catalogues sent on application.

REV. JAMES M. TAYLOR, D.D., President.

ALEXANDER INSTITUTE

White Plains, N.Y.

23 miles from New York City by rail. Fits boys for college or business pursuits. 30 to 40 pupils 5 Teachers. Board and Tuition per annum $400. For circulars, apply to the Principal, O. R. WILLIS, Ph.D.

Riverview Academy,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Prepares for College and the Government Academies, for Business and Social relations. Thorough Military Instruction. Springfield Cadet Rifles.

BISBEE & AMEN, Principals.

YOUNG LADIES SEMINARY,

43d YEAR Begins Sept. 22.

Address F. CHANDLER, D. D., Prest. Freehold, N. J.

Deckertown, Sussex Co., N.J.

A SELECT ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes. School year begins September 8. For Circular, address,

W. H. SEELEY, A.M., Prin.

RYE SEMINARY, Rye, NEW YORK. For particulars address Mrs. S. J. LEE.

PEEKSKILL (N. Y.) MILITARY Academy.

N. W. HARRIS & CO.,

115-117 Monroe St., CHICAGO.

BONDS Of Counties, Cities, &c. of high grades a specialty. Send for descriptive lists.

The Glad Refrain.

FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

This New Song Book, by LOWRY and DOANE, is crowded with stirring Hymns set to fresh and delightful music by the authors, and others, the most popular composers in the land.

THE GLAD REFRAIN will stand the test; the Hymns are first class, the Music faultless. It is sold at $25 per 100 copies, which is much cheaper than books of new music of this class have ever been offered before.

Sent for examination on receipt of price.

SPECIMEN PAGES FREE.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 East Ninth St., N. Y.

Chicago House, 81 Randolph St.

YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL

Finds pleasure in its Music. Bright Songs make the Children happy. If you are in need of a new set of Singing Books, examine the following:

Songs of Promise. For Sunday Schools, Prayer and Conference Meetings. By J. H. Tenney and E. A. Hoffman. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.

SONGS OF PROMISE fill this beautiful book, and they have a great variety, having been contributed by many able writers. The book has 160 pages and 149 hymns, each with its own tune. Music and words mostly new.

Singing on the Way. By Mrs. Belle M. Jewett and Dr. Holbrook. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.

A capital book, containing 160 pages of excellent songs, hymns, and "occasional" pieces, such as will be welcomed in the Sunday school. Each piece may be played upon the organ.

Song Worship. For Sunday Schools. By L. O. Emerson and W. F. Sherwin. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.

A book that is intended to lift the service of song in the Sabbath school above the ordinary level, without putting it beyond the reach of the vast majority.

Fresh Flowers. For Infant Classes in Sunday Schools. By Emma Pitt. Price 25 cents; per dozen, $2.40.

A dainty little book, as full as it can hold of sweet melodies with pretty verses set to them, such as every child will understand and enjoy.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y.

THE CAROL

—A BOOK OF—

Religious Songs

—FOR THE—

Sunday School and the Home,

—BY—

CHARLES W. WENDTE,

With poetical contributions by

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Miss Louisa M. Alcott, Hezekiah Butterworth, and many others.

The Music, original and selected, by Geo. F. Root, J. R. Murray, J. B. Sharland, P. P. Bliss and J. B. Dykes, Stainer, Barnby, Handel, Mendelssohn and other eminent composers, old and new.

This work, long in preparation by an experienced Sunday School worker, contains over 200 separate musical selections, together with a number of musical and responsive services for the festival and ordinary occasions of the Sunday School and the Home Altar.

Price 35 cents each by mail, postpaid: $3.60 a dozen by express, charges not prepaid. Specimen Pages Free.

PUBLISHED BY

THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O.

The J. CHURCH CO., 19 E. 16th St., New York City.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

TO LET.—Cottage at Nantucket. Ten rooms, fully furnished. Directly on the beach. Wide piazzas on three sides. Bathing houses on premises. Near a large new hotel. For particulars address apply to HENRY N COBB, 31 Vesey street.

BARNES' NATIONAL INK.

GEO. MATHER'S SONS, PRINTING INK

Manufacturers. Superior Black and Colored Ink Lithographic and Plate Ink. Varnishes, etc. 60 John street, New York.

The Intelligencer is printed with our Ink.

CURE for the DEAF

FREE

CONSUMPTION

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer who will give Express and P. O. address. DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St. N.Y.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.

CATARRH

Also good for Cold in the Head, Headache, Hay Fever, &c. 50 cents.

OPIUM

Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 Days. No Pay taken until cured. J. L. STEPHENS, M. D., Lebanon, Ohio.

The Christian Intelligencer

Een-dracht maakt macht.

Vol. LVII.—No. 29. Whole No. 2921. | NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 21, 1886. | $2.65 a Year in Advance. No. 48 Church Street.

Editors: Rev. JOHN M. FERRIS, D.D. Rev. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
Associate Editor: MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, from all accounts, had a very enthusiastic conference at Saratoga. There is much about this Society that is excellent. What we like about it is, that it is a society in the Church, occupying a place, it might be said, between the Sabbath school and the regular Church services. Its design is to hold the young people to the church; to prevent their alienation from it, through the attractions offered by societies and associations not in or of the church, but entirely outside of it. This is a camp, as we understand it, within the Church, where the new recruits voluntarily engage in such training in the practical religious duties of Christianity as shall fit them for efficient service in the regular army of the Lord of Hosts. Continuing the figure, the order might be stated in this way—the Sunday-school, a recruiting station; the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, a camp discipline for the recruits obtained to fill up the ranks of the army of God.

WHY are the newspapers so mealy-mouthed about the origin of boycotting? Why do they not say plainly that it is simply an imitation or adaptation or application of Papistical excommunication, and that it partakes of the arrogance, insolence and impertinence, the injustice and merciless cruelty, the extreme barbarity of Papistical excommunication?

There is just now a pandering to the Irish vote which is becoming offensive to Protestant Americans of all parties. Everybody knows just what the rule of Irish Romanists in municipal affairs has been in this and neighboring cities. Everybody knows that it has been ignorant, reckless, partisan in the extreme, corrupt, thieving and thoroughly unprincipled. Yet, just now, especial attempts are made to hold or to capture the votes of Irish Romanists. Very smooth words are used to describe very questionable transactions, and persistent efforts are made to "pull the wool over the eyes" of the citizens at large.

It seems that the President has been led into writing a congratulatory letter to Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, and report says that the Marine Band was sent to serenade the cardinal. How it was that the President was induced to write we do not know, nor do we know what he wrote. Although examining four daily papers every day, except Sunday, we have not seen the document. We have read only what has been said about it. The letter, perhaps, was published in the Sunday papers, of which we do not see two in twelve months. Of the letter, one of our dailies says:

> It demonstrates the great change which has taken place in public sentiment since the days when every Presbyterian was bound to hate the Catholic Church and to denounce the Pope as Anti-christ. Mr. Cleveland is evidently no longer the man he was in his earlier and less philosophic days, and we congratulate him most cordially upon the increased sweetness and light belonging to the broader and more tolerant view of Christianity to which he has attained. In this country, thank God, we have no State religion, and the President not only has the right, but it may be his duty to manifest his sympathy for the whole Christian body, as well to its oldest and most magnificent communion as to the simple, severe, and Calvinistic sect in which he was born and to which he is still attached.

Such an opinion is based upon a view of facts differing as widely as possible from that taken by the great majority of the non-papistical population of the United States. No dignitary of any other Church, we believe, has been congratulated by the highest officer of the Government upon receiving ecclesiastical preferment. We do not remember that any Presbyterian minister has ever received congratulations, on such an event, from the President, during our entire national history. Perhaps, years ago, an Episcopalian may have been so congratulated on becoming a bishop. But if an event of the kind has ever occurred, it has been an act of the utmost rarity.

The letter affords no proof that the President has become "broader and more tolerant." It will be generally regarded, with the other courtesies extended by the Government to the Papal messengers, bearing the "cap," and the serenade by a Government band, as a bid for the votes of Irish Romanists. The affair in all its parts stands alone. No Protestant denomination, no head of any Protestant body, such as a bishop, Episcopal or Methodist, or a Moderator of a General Assembly, or President of a Congregational Council or Convention, or President of a Synod of any Reformed or Lutheran Church, has sought or received such official recognition from the head of the nation, or has received attentions in any degree approaching those rendered to the Papal delegates and the recipient of Papal honors. The simple fact is, as pretty much everybody will believe, that Mr. Blaine has many Irish friends, has recently made a speech on Irish affairs which has tended to win a still larger number of Irish friends to his support. To counteract this, to retain Irish votes for his party and perhaps for himself, the officers of the Government and the President receive and conduct the Papal delegates on their way and present congratulations with unusual, it may be properly said, with extraordinary attentions, to the recipient of Papal honors. To be sure, there was no ostentatious display of governmental regard. All that was done was done quietly and with becoming dignity; but it was done, and that was done, which, so far as we know, has never before been done for any representative of any other religious body.

The astute Roman hierarchy appreciates the situation and will secure the advantages which can be evolved from it. The situation is one of peril to our religious interests, to the purity of our political life, and to the liberties of the people. Every patriot not blinded by superstition will regard it with much anxiety. If the attempts to win the votes of Irish Romanists pass without remark or with such an expression of opinion as that quoted here to day, they will be followed by endeavors of a much more objectionable character. And, moreover, the price of the votes of Romanists will be raised. More valuable and more permanent privileges and honors will be demanded. The Roman priesthood has never before failed to strengthen its political influence when circumstances have been so propitious.

Besides, a cardinal is a prince of a temporal power. The Pope is just now shorn of his temporal sovereignty, but he still claims to be a sovereign, and the cardinals are the princes of his government. The cardinals, under the Roman constitution, are no less political than religious officers. Now, it is the law of the United States that no citizen shall receive a title of nobility or princely honors or anything of the sort from any foreign power; and to allow a citizen to receive a cardinal's cap or hat is a violation of the constitution of the United States. If the appointment were only religious it would be bad enough, since it comes from a foreign Pope and his Consistory; but as it is also political and comes from one constantly asserting his temporal authority, his supremacy over all governments, and as it makes the recipient a Prince of the Holy Roman Empire, it is squarely antagonistic to both the letter and spirit of American law.

It becomes American citizens who are not Romanists to demand that only legitimate means shall be used to obtain or to hold the votes of Irish Romanists. Let them have just such privileges and receive just such attentions as are extended to all other religious bodies and no more.

Ministerial Courtesy.

IN no profession, in no vocation, is true courtesy more important than in the ministerial. In this virtue, as in all others that adorn Christian manhood, a minister should strive to excel. Nor should he be content to narrow its exercise down toward those only of his particular parish; he should above all others be courteous everywhere and always.

Ministers are the most conspicuous class of men in the community. However much they may shrink from publicity, in public they must move, and before the public eye frequently appear. They stand every week before audiences composed of their fellow-citizens; they are thrust upon the platform in public assemblies; they mingle with the people in pastoral visitation and at social gatherings. They are regarded as the educators and leaders of the people in the doctrines and duties of the Christian religion; recognized as preachers of the Gospel of Christ, in which courtesy, equally with pity and charity and liberality, is inculcated. The eyes of the people are upon them in a peculiar manner as compared with men in other callings. They are expected to practice what they preach; to exemplify the doctrines they expound; to exhibit in their own lives the virtues they extol; in a word, "to be ensamples to the flock." Excelling in this, they have influence with the people, otherwise not. Not discriminating unwisely, but showing to all due courtesy, they gain their attention, win their esteem, reach their hearts, and mould their lives, as otherwise they could not do.

There is what is known as "professional courtesy," a courtesy peculiar to men engaged in the same calling or belonging to the same profession. Somehow, their similarity of employment, and of desire for successful achievement in pursuit of the self-same object, bring them into sympathetic relation to each other, differing somewhat from that which they sustain to men generally, and calling for especial courtesy. This is eminently true of the Gospel ministry, than which no occupation is higher and nobler, involving so much that requires for its truest success and widest usefulness, the spirit of sincere fraternity.

There are very many ways in which this spirit may be manifested; for instance, in the extension of a friendly hand of recognition to any truly accredited minister coming a stranger in the community to assume pastoral charge of a church; in suitable expressions of sympathy for a brother in trouble, defending him, if need be, against unjust aspersions of character, injurious to his reputation, and that may cripple his usefulness; discouraging invidious comparisons and unfair criticisms, refraining themselves from this evil, and refusing to listen or to assent when the people indulge in it. True courtesy calls for the suppression of petty jealousies that may arise from the fact of a brother's greater prosperity. Yielding to this small, unchristian, unbrotherly spirit has sometimes wrought untold evil. The successors of envious ministers—ministers who, in all probability, lost their churches through the discourteous treatment that they inflicted upon their parishioners—have suffered from it. The New York Evangelist published a letter some time ago that complains thus: "Of my own friends in the ministry, four have within a few months been actually driven from their pulpits by ex-pastors, and others will probably have to go."

Often in these days when sectarian walls, once so formidable, are crumbling to the ground, and when, in the same family, there may be found members of three or four different churches of as many denominations, occasions arise when the nicest discrimination is necessary in order to avoid a breach of ministerial courtesy. Nevertheless, with the exercise of due thoughtfulness and prudence, there need not be any trouble. Let each pastor call for and upon his own parishioners; and, in his pastoral visitations, minister unto the entire household if they choose to assemble. Surely, if one pastor can do good in a family, two pastors ought to be able to duplicate the good, and four to quadruple it.

The minor doctrinal differences that distinguish evangelical churches do not forbid fraternal intercourse and Christian courtesy. The right of private judgment is always to be recognized. The cordial fraternizing of Christian ministers of different denominations, all consecrated to one work, all preaching one Gospel, all intent on one object—the salvation of men—exerts an incalculable influence for good upon the public mind and heart.

MIDSUMMER weather sets in active operation the usual Sunday excursions to country retreats and seaside resorts. Railway trains have more cars than on week days, and excursion boats are more numerous to accommodate the great, mixed multitude who take the Lord's day for an outing. The Sabbath is for rest—physical rest, we will say; this is putting it on the lowest plane for which it is designed. Do these people rest who go on Sunday excursions? Far from it; and furthermore, they hinder thousands of others from taking rest and keeping the Sabbath properly, who, perhaps, would like to do so. Undoubtedly, to the conductors, engineers and brakemen on the trains; to the captain, firemen and deck-hands on the boats, Sunday is the most laborious day of the seven. And to be assured that the excursionists themselves were never more fatigued at the end of any week day of labor, you have only to see them return on Sunday evening, bedraggled and dirty, dripping with perspiration, too tired to talk, too weary to walk, the women dragging themselves along, pulling after them the children, fretful and cross. To such the Sabbath is not a day of rest, nor a day of preparation for a bright, fresh Monday morning, when the work of the week must be begun.

DR. FARRAR.—There are many persons in the world to whom the mention of Calvinism has the effect of flaunting a red flag in the face of a bull. They become so indignant that they foam at the mouth and utter all sorts of atrocities. One of these is Archdeacon Farrar. In a sermon lately delivered by him, he treated of the perverse use sometimes made of the Bible, and said: "The odious ruthlessness of Calvinism, which turned God into Moloch, and man into human fuel for endless flames, proclaimed itself as the only logical inference from Scripture texts." It seems to us that the Archdeacon should heed the advice given less than a century ago by an English bishop to his clergy, to the effect that before they undertook to refute or revile Calvinism they should learn what it was. The system has for its characteristic feature the Divine sovereignty, yet we do not think that there is a Calvinist in the world who would not accept the seventeenth article of the Church of England as a just and adequate statement of predestination. This article the Archdeacon has doubtless subscribed more than once. If so, then he is liable to his own reproach, and must admit that he has exchanged the God of the Bible for Moloch. Yet there are those who consider this reckless and blundering rhetorician a scholar and an authority!

His reference to endless flames is equally without meaning, for the views of Calvinists on the duration of future punishment are the same with those of the Greek, the Roman and nine-tenths of all the Protestant Churches on this subject. And if Calvinism be such a diabolical thing as Dr. Farrar represents it to be, how does it come to pass that it yields such excellent results? Not long since Mr. Lowell, surely not an incapable or a prejudiced judge, said at a public meeting in London that its doctrines "produced some of the strongest and the noblest characters the world has ever seen, the very fibre and substance of which enduring commonwealths are made. Nay, the political and intellectual freedom we enjoy springs as truly, perhaps, from the loins of Calvin as from any where else." Thus does an accomplished literary man, himself a Unitarian, rebuke the bitter and unscrupulous misrepresentations of a shallow ecclesiastic.

'Old Colony" Papers.

CURIOSITIES OF NECROLOGY.

January-July, 1886.

THE number of cranks, humbugs and enthusiasts, who have died during the last half year, is larger even than usual. The list is headed by the crazy king of Bavaria, who seems to have had all the weak and foolish traits and tastes of Solomon without any of his wisdom, and whose chief use was to remind monarchical nations what a nuisance a king may be and how hard it is to get rid of him. John Humphrey Noyes, the founder of the Oneida Community was a man of great ability, both intellectual and practical, but was a colossal crank. He cultivated "perfectionism" to its extremest antinomian limits, holding that a real Christian cannot do anything which is not directed by the Spirit, and therefore which is not right. Applying this to the relation of the sexes, and also interpreting what is said about the absence of marriage in heaven as indicating a state of unrestricted sexual relations there, he endeavored to carry out this idea in the Oneida Community. Under his executive ability the Community became financially prosperous; but a sense of shame and an observation of results among the younger members produced a schism, which, aided by an aroused public sentiment in that section of the country, led about ten years ago to the flight of Noyes to Canada and the abandonment of the "complex marriage" methods. The old man, however, maintained his principles till the last, projecting a "community" in Canada, and predicting that he would never die.

Edward Palmer was another minister, starting as a Unitarian, but abandoning the pulpit fifty years ago on account of his rabid abolitionism. He soon drifted into socialism, advocating the abolition of money, and even considering the question of joining the Oneida Community. He was from the beginning to the end a devoted member of the Fouriente communities of Red Bank and Perth Amboy, founded by Marcus Spring. So fearless was he in his utterances that he used to denounce Mr. Spring to his face as a criminal, because a capitalist. He died in a New York hospital at the age of eighty-four. The last of the Smith sisters of Glastonbury, Conn., died at the age of nearly ninety-four. These sisters were notorious for their refusal to pay taxes to a government which did not allow women to be represented by their personal votes, and for suffering their household effects to be sold out annually by the sheriff. Her husband seems to have been a religious man, and had Scripture and prayer at her grave, though the Smiths made it a point to ignore the clergyman equally with the tax gatherer.

David D. Home was in his day the arch-spiritualist, having unequalled clairvoyant powers and control over such phenomena as table-tipping and levitation. He showed himself a "canny Scot" by utilizing these arts to marry rich wives, and to get money out of rich women. He was at one time "the rage" among the crowned heads and nobility of Europe, especially Napoleon III. and his Empress. The French author Sardou was a believer in him, and he obtained a singular influence over Mrs. Browning, whose husband took him as a study for Sludge, the Medium. Brought up a Presbyterian, he became a Roman Catholic and, on being excommunicated by the Pope, a member of the Greek Church. He died a wreck, in body and mind.

Dr. Reynell Coates of Philadelphia was famous for his physical beauty, his intense medical conservatism, his positiveness of manner and fearlessness, and his Bohemian habits of life. He slapped Andrew Jackson's face in a dispute, while the latter was President. He used to sleep on a board with a block of wood for a pillow, in a little room at the Dispensary. When he got hungry he would catch a mess of fish, and fry it in his room, where he did all his cooking. Dr. Bockefontaine of Paris was constantly experimenting upon himself. During the last cholera epidemic he swallowed a pill composed of the vomitings of a cholera patient, in order to prove that the disease was not contagious. He is believed to have killed himself by some poisonous dose which he swallowed to test its effects.

"Halston," of the N. Y. Times, recently published an account of a Southerner named Cannon who inherited a great fortune, but who was such an advocate and worshipper of the "peculiar institution" that the beautiful young Quaker girl of Philadelphia, whom he sought as a wife, refused to marry him. Henceforth he became a fanatic on the subject of slavery, turning all his money into this kind of property, buying and selling and speculating, and always having on his hands an army of slaves, many of whom he would hire out. The war did not open his eyes to the precarious nature of such investments, and shrewder slave-owners "unloaded" on him to any extent. Still the close of the war left him with a considerable estate, which he might have used to advantage; but his whole bent of mind had become fantastic, and he squandered the remnant of his property on an attempt to create a park and residence as much unlike the new world ideas as possible. He died dependent on the earnings of his colored nurse. His sweetheart died in a Southern hospital, of a fever contracted in tending the sick soldiers of the Union.

James Howard Paine, known as "the millionaire tramp," was the grandson of Robert Treat Paine, who signed the Declaration of Independence. He inherited a fortune and greatly increased it by his expert stock speculations. But he was such an abject miser that he had all the appearance of a tramp, wearing a tattered camlet coat in summer and winter, worn-out shoes without stockings, and trousers which showed his flesh through their holes, and filthy in his person. He would stand hat in hand and beg for something to eat, buying an ounce of tea, steeping it in hot water given him at a saloon and eating bits of dry bread with it. And yet he was a man of uncommon intellect, a fluent and graceful talker and accomplished writer, being at one time the most influential musical critic of Boston, and long afterwards consulted and employed by leading papers. He died at 83 from the effect of being run over in the street, refusing either to stay in a hospital or to employ a physician.

Another old miser was Luther C. Bryant, who used to keep a stand on the corner opposite the old Middle Dutch Church in Fulton street. He kept his money, which he claimed amounted to $200,000, in his room. Some thieves had him arrested on a false charge and locked up over night, and took the opportunity to break into the room and carry away his hoard. His last years were full of real poverty and wretchedness, and he was picked up by the police wandering helpless through the streets in the last stages of softening of the brain.

This has been a bad half-year for hermits. Austin Sheldon, who attained to great distinction in this line of endeavor, had lived for forty years in a cave in Pike Co., Pa., nine feet square and so low that a full-sized person could not stand erect in it, sleeping on a chair of his own construction, and never washing himself nor removing his clothing, professedly on religious principles. His garments were a congeries of patches of all materials, held together by twine and straws. He lived on rabbits and birds which he snared, and on vegetables which he raised. He began this singular, wild man's life in 1833, when on the death of his young wife he disappeared from his home in Connecticut. Fifty years later his sister, a lady of wealth and refinement, discovered him, but could not induce him to abandon his mode of life, though for a short time he visited Connecticut on a tramping expedition and then returned to his wretched den in the woods, declaring that he could not obey God's will by remaining in the haunts of civilization.

The hermitage of Hezekiah Wakeman, of Ulster County, was in an old barn for fourteen years, a place so filthy as to be hardly fit for hogs. And yet in this repulsive place, when he was found dead one day, was discovered a hoard of diamonds and othew jewelry. Another hermit was found burnt to a crisp amid the ashes of his hut on the Potomac. He had formerly made his home in a hollow tree, which fell and injured him severely. A fourth hermit, who lived in a hut in the woods of Massachusetts for eight years, ended his existence by taking "Rough on Rats," saying he had "nothing to live for."

A more singular suicide was that of a wealthy farmer of Indiana, whose complaint was that he had too much money and was not well enough educated to take care of it. The suicide of the Earl of Shaftesbury, so soon after inheriting the title and estates of his distinguished father, was a strange event. One cannot help thinking how different his death might have been, if he had lived his father's life.

An attractive young woman, who had left her home of comfort for a life of degradation in Omaha, killed herself with morphine; and under her pillow was found, written in her own blood, the following: "I, Laura Phillips, hereby sell my soul to the devil, in consideration for which he agrees to give me wealth, beauty, and the power to overcome all my enemies." Dr. Fred. N. Palmer, an aged physician of Boston, and also the inventor of the first American postage stamp, took his pet grandchild of four years old on a night boat for New York and during the night jumped into the water with her in his arms, and both were drowned. In Paris last year 642 people put an end to their own lives, being 100 more than the previous year. The gay and godless city is a very sad place, after all, to those who look below the surface.

Strong drink was as usual the most prolific cause, both of suicide and murder—in fact, of death and of crime altogether. Perhaps the most singular case was that of the captain and mate of a disabled French vessel, from which a British steamer took off four of the crew, but who refused to come away, or to let a boy go who was crying to leave. The secret of this strange conduct lay in the fact that there was plenty of rum on board, and the two officers were, and had been throughout the voyage, in a drunken condition.

What a startling disclosure of the life which everywhere goes on, and goes out, beneath the smiling surface and the sordid grind of society, as well as of the cost at which our commonest comforts are paid for somewhere (and we are not too careful to inquire, by whom) is afforded in the authoritative statement, that in English coal mining last year 1,200 persons were killed and 90,000 injured!

I have numerous other "curiosities of necrology," but I will not prolong the tragic record, merely alluding to the lamented death of "the Sussex Giant," who though only thirty-six years old boasted of 546 pounds of flesh; and quoting the following certificate of death, rendered by a colored doctor of Baltimore:

"MARCH 3, 1886.—Mrs. Lorro Jones, she dide with Liver disease & New Moner she darparted from this life and Mat with chance to Make her leafe & got to glory. We ask freands & Brother & Sister for what they Can give to Halpe to Bary the body away.

DR. JOHNSON."

PRINCETON, N. J., July 1st, 1886.

Death of a Famous Inventor.

IT is but recently that there died in our vicinity at the age of almost a hundred years one of the most fertile inventors our country has produced. Perhaps no other American has patented so many inventions utilized in the common every-day employments of life as Lemuel Wellman Wright. Many of these patents, taken out early in the century, had run their course and expired by limitation nearly half a century before the inventor himself passed away. Who asks the history of the useful pin, or thinks such an insignificant thing needed to be invented? Yet little Lem Wright, as he sat watching his mother at her sewing, was struck with the bother she had to fasten her work with a bit of pointed wire, around which another piece was twisted, forming a head that was continually coming off, and the boy thought if head and body were combined in one, the difficulty would be obviated. The idea was so natural, and the process to carry it out so simple, that the fact of its being an vention was soon forgotten in a community largely profiting by it; for the manufacture of pins has made the fortunes of many men, while it has lightened the labors of innumerable millions of women.

Mr. Wright was born in Plainfield, New Hampshire. His paternal grandfather was a soldier in the old French war and in the Revolution. His father, Dr. Eben Wright, also served in the Revolution; afterwards returning to the practice of his profession, in which he held a distinguished position. Mr. Wright s mother was Martha, daughter of the Rev. James Wellman, founder of a colony in Cornish, New Hampshire, and who holds an eminent place in the annals of the State. The Wellmans were allied to the Pattersons and the Russells; two of the regicide judges—Goffe and Whalley—were connected with the latter, and it was in the house of one Dr. Russell that they found protection on fleeing to America. Following in the footsteps of his maternal grandfather, young Wright was destined for the ministry, but Latin and Greek had no attractions for the bright boy who hankered for the miniature workshop, where at nine years of age he had puzzled over and worked out the pin and other problems. Yielding to his wishes, his parents apprenticed him to a clockmaker, who in those days was also a jeweller, with whom he remained till he had learned the trade, and more than fifty clocks of his own make are in use in New England to-day.

Having received an order for a regulator for the Capitol at Albany, he was on his way to fulfill the commission when a proposition from Seth Hunt changed the whole course of his life. Mr. Hunt was desirous of introducing into England some American inventions for wool-spinning, and offered the energetic young artisan a lucrative position. The New England youth little dreamed that over forty years would elapse before he returned to his native land, and that during these years he would achieve a reputation in the mother country ranking him among her most noted engineers; for his bust now stands in the British Museum between those of Watt and Stephenson.

A full list of his inventions does not exist, but two large folios presented to him by the English Patent Office contain the drawings and record of thirty-two most important inventions. One for the management of heavy artillery behind walls and parapets without embrasures, was the first ever employed, and is now used in all countries. With it the gun can be elevated and depressed, but one man being exposed to the enemy's fire. He invented machinery for housing sugar hogsheads, which resulted in a great saving of labor, and avoidance of the risk to life and limb which the workmen incurred by the old methods. Cloth manufactories are indebted to him for numerous improvements in spinning and weaving, and for very practicable and economical bleaching processes. Wood screws, world-wide in use, are his invention; also the iron attachment for piano-strings, by which the variations in the weather do not affect the tone. After the fire in a theatre in Brooklyn caused such destruction of life, he invented an iron curtain which should serve as a safeguard between the audience and the stage. This invention was made when he was over eighty years of age. When rags began to be scarce, he found a substitute for them by a process by which straw and other fibrous substances were converted into paper.

When the law was passed in England forbidding the employment of boys as chimney-sweeps, it was at first evaded by sending out girls to replace the contraband boys; but a brush contracting and expanding like an umbrella, which Mr. Wright soon brought forward, rendered the employment of either boys or girls unnecessary.

The great invention of the locomotive was due to the genius of George Stephenson, but it was only one year after it was patented before Mr. Wright came forward with an improvement upon it. No doubt the engineer of to-day smiles at the clumsiness of both, but those were the first steps in an invention which in three-quarters of a century has revolutionized locomotion throughout the globe. Then comes Mr. Wright's patent for his own invention, the T rail, which railroad men have long considered as a fundamental feature, hardly stopping to think to whose active mind the invention was due.

Following out the uses and applications of iron, Mr. Wright took out a patent for an iron bridge so long ago, that when he proposed its adoption for the Brooklyn Bridge, they decided that the underlying principle was no new thing; no more it was, for Mr. Wright's inventions were all remarkable for their extreme simplicity, and therefore they were quickly pirated, absorbed and elaborated into more complicated ones.

When young Wright left America mechanical engineering was in its infancy; with few exceptions he stood far ahead of his contemporaries. England was a far country, in space and in thought. Now space is almost annihilated, and thoughts fly with lightning speed from shore to shore.

Almost to the last days of his life he was occupied with paper and pencil, ruler and instruments, working out the plans with which his busy brain was teeming; and when weakness caused his hand to falter, he moaned and bewailed that so many undeveloped ideas would be lost to the world!

Mr. Wright was a typical gentleman—aristocratic in appearance, but extremely affable and courteous to all who approached him, thus inspiring a feeling of personal regard as well as profound respect for a wonderful genius which was always devoted to the good of humanity. Though he never married, he had many relatives to whom, though they were of a later generation than his own, he so endeared himself by his sweetness and gentleness, that his last days were spent among them in great happiness till he passed away, having nearly completed a hundred years!—H. M B., in The Evangelist.

Gold Better than Dross.

BETTER a shoeless foot, in honest pathways found,
Than one by wealth protected, on vile, forbidden ground.
Better a gloveless hand, hardened by ceaseless toil,
Than one of spotless beauty that grasps dishonest spoil.
Better an ill-clad body, with comfort, strength and health,
Than one diseased and suffering, with countless mines of wealth.
Better a low position, with little or no renown,
Than to walk in courts of sinners and wear a regal crown.
Better a common toiler, an heir to wealth above,
Than to dwell on earth a monarch, without a Saviour's love.
"Far better," for death shall call us from toil and care below
To dwell with Christ, where sorrow we never more shall know.

—Melville Milne, in The Watchman.

The Sunday Evening Service.

MR. MOODY emphasizes the value of Sunday evening for religious work. He says: "It is worth more for this than any other three nights in the week. Sunday morning is used to instruct and build up Christians, but Sunday evening is the time to reach non-church-goers, and an entire change of service is needed in many churches. Talk off-hand; forget your manuscript. The people don t want anything formal. They will not be reached by discussions of the labor question and riots. A Scotch woman who couldn't keep awake, and whose minister advised her to take a little more snuff for that purpose, advised him to put a little more snuff into his sermons. The seats must be absolutely free at this Sunday night service, and the people must have a cordial welcome. Encourage the mothers to come and bring their babies. Don t feel cross because they get into your pew. If the babies are too noisy, have a room in your chapel where some of the good women can take care of them and let the mothers go into the meeting. Circulate flyers giving notice of it. This Sunday night service never should be given up, not for a missionary concert nor a temperance meeting, unless they could be made a Gospel service. Every church ought to have a pool of Bethesda every Sunday evening. If we aimed at conversions we should get them."

Rev. Addison P. Foster, now of Boston Highlands, gives a very interesting account of his nine years' experience in Jersey City. When he first went there, though the church edifice would seat 1,200, he had an audience of perhaps 300 in the morning, and 100 in the evening. At first he preached his best written sermons in the evening. Then he tried to popularize the service, and preached on current topics, advertising them in the newspapers. The audience increased, but not from the non-church-goers, and he called this, also, a failure. Next they arranged for a service of song and a people s Gospel service, and the people not in the habit of going to church began to come. The praise service, the first part of the evening, was very important. The singing was congregational, but led by a trained choir, and it was found necessary to have more or less classical music. Pews were free, and pains were taken to give people a cordial welcome. The sermon was a plain, earnest presentation of the Gospel, unwritten, and from twenty-five to thirty minutes long. This was followed by an after meeting, and the congregations began to grow immediately, until there was an average attendance of 700. Young couples came to church instead of walking on the streets, and many came from boarding houses; and finally in 1884, there was a great revival.

Our Church.

We are thankful for items of Church News compactly stated; or for marked copies or clippings from local exchanges, which we would not otherwise see. To insure publication in next number, they must reach us by noon on Monday. A condensation of items is unavoidable

High Liturgy and Holy Days.

IN a recent issue of the INTELLIGENCER some, yet not all, of the sins of omission and commission common in the interpretation of our Liturgy in church worship are pointed out by "Chetsy." Especial attention is called to the marring in the rendition of the Apostles' Creed by ellipsis, and the neglect of that observance of certain holy days devoutly kept by our Church until a few generations past.

The future of the Reformed Church from present indications promises to be in the line of an expanded liturgical worship. There comes the call from many for more worship and less preaching in our churches. "Give us short sermons," demand these with the emphasis and repetition of persistency, "more lifting up of the soul to its Maker in prayer, and a chance for the escape in praise of that holy joy which a nearness to God begets in the devout heart, as well as an opportunity for that public and united expression of belief in the Holy Trinity as set forth in our Liturgical Standards. Let our churches, too, be treated less as halls of declamation and more as temples sacred to the Triune God, and held in veneration as such." The pastor, it is true, may lose some of the preëminence which he now holds by these changes in church service, yet will he also be relieved of the necessity of seeking to "draw" by questionable methods, which bring his conscience in sharp conflict with his conviction of duty and the proprieties of his office.

Notwithstanding the strong attachment which the loyal children of our Church feel to its Liturgy, and the desire to maintain it as set forth in our Standards, as well as the impatience they likewise feel for the adoption of a fuller rendering of it, no organized effort has as yet been made to further these ends as in other liturgical churches. It is an open question whether the banding together into an association having for its object liturgical advance, revival of holy day observance, and the dissemination of literature advocating such, would not go far to neutralize the secularizing tendencies rife in Christ's Church, and which make the alternative of an adoption of even a sort of semi-Puseyism desirable as an offset. Perhaps no more appropriate manner of instituting a revival of the long dormant observance of Whitsuntide could be found than to make it the date of the inception of such an organization. LITURGIST.

HARLEM, N. Y.

A New Church at Rochester, N. Y.

THE Classis of Geneva at its late stated session, held in the Reformed church at Farmer Village, N. Y., in their action upon the report of the Committee on Church Extension, to whom was referred documents containing a petition and request from certain members of the Reformed Church of Rochester, making application to the Classis to be set apart from the parent church, and to be organized into an English speaking church, after due and deliberate consideration of the important matter embraced in the report unanimously adopted it, embracing the following resolutions recommended by the committee:

1. That the Classis hear with unfeigned pleasure of the evidence of growth and activity, as well as of the prevailing spirit of loyalty to our Reformed Church, of which the petition before us is both evidence and result.

2. That the petition from the Consistory of the Reformed Church of Rochester in behalf of 42 young people, members of that church, to be organized as a Reformed church using the English language be granted, if the way be clear.

3 That in order to give effect to this resolution the Rev. Wm. H. Nasholds, Rev. M. Van Doren, Rev. Peter De Bruyn and Rev. Matthew Kolyn with Elder John Van Doren be and hereby are appointed a committee to visit the Church of Rochester, at such time as shall suit the convenience of the people of Rochester, with power to organize the petitioners and all who may apply into a Reformed church, using the English language, if the way be clear; and that the same committee have power, in the name of the Classis, to recommend this church, if organized, to the Board of Domestic Missions for such an amount as, upon careful inquiry shall appear necessary to successfully inaugurate this movement.

4. That we record the expression of our cordial sympathy with the pastor and consistory of the Church of Rochester in this very important movement, and commend the spirit of disinterestedness and self-sacrifice which has actuated them in their uniting in this direction, and will unite our prayers with theirs to the Great Head of the Church for His crowning blessing upon this enterprise.

J. WHITBECK, Stated Clerk.

....LL.D.—Lafayette College did itself honor as well as the recipient of its degree by bestowing at its recent Commencement the title of Doctor of Laws upon Rev. Prof. John De Witt, D.D., of our Theological Seminary at New Brunswick. Dr. De Witt is distinguished both in Europe and America for having made the best translation of the grand old Hebrew Psalms yet put before the English-speaking world. At any rate, this is the verdict of many of the first Hebrew scholars. He was an earnest and faithful worker of recognized ability in the Old Testament Revision Company, and did credit by his critical judgment, taste, and thorough knowledge of the points canvassed to his denomination and our School of the Prophets. His honor was, therefore, well earned and worthily conferred.

....PERSONALS.—The many friends of the Rev. Dr. P. D. Van Cleef will be glad to learn that he is recovering his health. Five weeks ago he had only walked one short block; he has gradually increased the distance, and is now able to include two miles in his daily exercise without much fatigue. He is spending the summer with Mrs. Van Cleef at Bellevue Villa, Highland, Ulster Co., N. Y....The Rev. Abraham Thompson is at Readington, N. J., and reported no better....The Rev. G. H. Smyth, of Harlem, N. Y., sailed for Europe in steamer "Umbria" of the Cunard Line Saturday, July 31, and expects to return early in September....Prof. T. S. Doolittle and wife sailed last Saturday by the steamer "Noordland" of the Red Star Line for Antwerp; and after their summer tour will return by the Inman Line from Liverpool.

....ORDAINED AND INSTALLED.—An interesting ordination service was held in the Church of Mohawk, N. Y., on Wednesday, June 30th, when Mr. John H. Brandow, of the last class of the Theological Seminary at New Brunswick, was solemnly set apart to the Gospel ministry and installed pastor of the church by the Classis of Montgomery. The examination, which occurred during the afternoon, was well sustained, and the public exercises of the evening were conducted according to the arrangements previously noticed. The sermon, by the Rev. James Demarest, Jr., D.D., of Fort Plain, N. Y., was from the text, James 1:25, "The perfect law of liberty." A solemn and impressive charge was given to the pastor by the Rev. J. A. De Baun, D.D., of Fonda, N. Y., after which the people were reminded of their duties to the pastor and to the church by the Rev. Henry M. Cox, of Herkimer, N. Y.

A pleasant reception was tendered to Mr. Brandow immediately after the ordination service was concluded, at which several members of the Classis were present. The Church of Mohawk is greatly encouraged by the presence of a pastor once more among them, and our brother enters upon his work with every prospect of abundant usefulness and success. C.

....THE CLASSIS OF POUGHKEEPSIE at a special meeting held July 7th, 1886, installed the Rev. F. F. Wilson pastor of the Church of Cold Spring, N. Y. The sermon was preached by Rev. A. P. Van Gieson, D.D.; the charge to the pastor was delivered by Rev. Henry Ward, and that to the people by Rev. C. W. Fritts. S. C.

....THE CHURCH OF HARLEM, N. Y., at its last communion had an accession of thirty persons to its membership on confession and by letter.

....THE CHURCH OF UPPER RED HOOK has extended a call to Rev. G. D. Lydecker, of Napanoch, N. Y.

....WESTERN ITEMS.—Rev. J. H. Karsten has resigned as editor of De Hope, and Mr. G. van Schelven has been appointed managing editor, with Prof. C. Doesburg, Rev. D. Broek and Rev. John Van der Meulen as a Committee of Supervision....Prof. N. M. Steffens, D D., has received for a second Professorship from Mr. P. Staketee $100, and from Mr. Cornelius Dosker $25, both of Grand Rapids, Mich.

....BLOOMING GROVE, N. Y.—Children's Day was observed in this church. In the morning the pastor, Rev. J. I. Gulick, preached expressly to the young people, and in the afternoon the anniversary of the Sabbath school took place in the church, which was tastefully decorated with flowers. The recitations by the pupils, the singing by the choir and the school, and the addresses by Rev. Dr. Dixon, of Lansingburgh, N. Y., and Rev. Ira Van Allen were all of a high character. Prizes were awarded the scholars for perfect recitations in the Sunday-school lessons and the catechism.

The collections on that day amounted to $10. The schools collected for missionary purposes during the year $31. The Treasurer's report showed all expenses paid and a balance on hand. A contribution was also made to aid Western Sabbath schools through Rev. N. D. Williamson. The school is prosperous; new classes are being formed, showing an increase in attendance and interest. P.

"The Huguenots on the Hackensack."

REV. DR. DEMAREST, of New Brunswick, prepared in 1885 for delivery before the Huguenot Society of America, and now has had printed in pamphlet form, a paper with this title. It will, no doubt, interest all who care to get at every new fact respecting our early Huguenots. But its interest to natives of Bergen Co., N. J., and Rockland Co., N. Y., will, we are sure, be especially and unspeakably great. Its opening pages are necessarily devoted to the origin and movements of the des Marest (now Demarest) family, for David des Marest, Sen., born in France about 1620, was its founder and leading spirit, and his family was its strength. The object of the paper, however, is not to attract public attention to a family, but to make known the early religious and secular history of a region just north of the village of Hackensack, and to account for the Huguenot names which appear in the early records of the Bergen, Hackensack, Tappan and Schraalenburgh churches.

The pamphlet, at the trifling charge of fifteen cents, to pay the cost of its printing, is for sale at the Synod's Rooms in Vesey street, and we suppose many who see this notice will be eager to read it for themselves. It may be well, however, to say more particularly, that with great pains Dr. Demarest, working upon early-received and long-accumulating knowledge of a region of which he is a native, has built up proof unanswerable that a small Huguenot company took possession in 1677 of several thousand acres of land lying along the east side of the Hackensack, extending northward several miles from New Bridge on that river, and eastward all the way to the Hudson; also, that though these Huguenots attended the Dutch Church of Bergen till 1682, yet between 1682 and 1696 they had, a little northeast of New Bridge, a church building of their own, together with a church organization and a parochial school. The site is still marked by a small cemetery, called by the people the French Burial ground, though few have ever asked the reason why.

Dr. Demarest shows that these people emigrated from France in 1663, and had lived successively on Staten Island and on Manhattan Island before finally selecting this New Jersey tract as a permanent home. They had come to America already familiar with the Holland language as well as their own, and in absolute sympathy with the faith and polity of the Holland Church. These facts, added to the fewness of their numbers, made it impossible for them long to maintain an independent French Church. In 1696, three years after the death of David des Marest, Sen., whose tenacity had been the great strength of their church organization, their whole membership, consisting of eleven persons, went over at once to the Dutch Church of Hackensack. The Hackensack Church record of that year gives the names of the eleven, with the statement that they came over from the French Church.

From this time Huguenot names began to appear on the Hackensack Church records, as before 1682 (but not between 1682 and 1696) they had appeared on those of Bergen. The early Tappan records also have very many of them from 1696 onward. And finally the records of the two Schraalenburgh churches, beginning respectively in 1724 and 1756, are full of them. These French names on these records have puzzled many of their students, who did not know of the Huguenot settlement on the Hackensack. The pamphlet of Dr. Demarest places the residents, and especially the native families of Bergen and Rockland counties, under special obligation to its careful and industrious author. Its style is as readable as its revelation to most people is new. We draw attention to it, confident that it will interest others as it has interested us. DAVID COLE.

YONKERS, July 16th, 1886.

Albany's Bi-Centennial.

TWO centuries have elapsed since Governor Dongan granted a city charter to Albany, N. Y., and the event is being celebrated this week on a magnificent scale. Monster processions keeping step to martial music; moving panoramas or tableaux of novelties in manufacture and trade, with varied marvels of modern civilization and progress; an historical night pageant; an oration by the Governor, with other literary exercises; grand concerts; fireworks; a loan exhibition of art treasures and objects of historic interest, with many other things, are contributing to the attractions of this notable celebration.

The ceremonies were very properly inaugurated last Sabbath by religious services in the churches. We produce the N. Y. Tribune's account of them:

There is a popular impression that when the Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock they immediately built a church and schoolhouse. The Dutchmen say that the Pilgrims borrowed this idea, as they did many others that now go to make up their historical stock in trade, from their experience in the Netherlands. It is a fact at any rate that the Dutchmen who founded Albany also began by building a church and schoolhouse, and to-day their sturdy descendants followed this example by opening their bicentennial celebration with prayer and song, ascribing their increased numbers and prosperity to that beneficent Providence to whom the little colony looked in its first struggling hour. The Mayor and the Aldermen and the people all went to church if they never went before. Five distinct, separate and long services were attended by the city fathers. In the morning they had to divide their time between the military mass at St. Mary's and the services in the Second Reformed Church. The spacious auditorium of the church, with its neat finishings in light wood was filled to the last seat at 11 o'clock. The aisles were jammed with a solid mass of people standing up. The pulpit was embowered with flowering plants and evergreens. From the organ loft, with its choir of twenty voices, a number of American flags were gracefully draped over the heads of the clergymen. In the great gallery opposite a chorus of 200 voices was packed away. The members of the Holland Society of Albany, wearing their orange-colored badges, sat along one side of the church. A large body of clergymen occupied the central pews. Before the pulpit was an ancient reading desk, many scores of years old, brought from Holland. In the pulpit chairs sat Domine Wesley Reid Davis, pastor of the church, with his assistants, Domine J. Wilbur Chapman and Domine J. Paige Davis. With them was Domine David D. Demarest, of New Brunswick, N. J., who was to preach the historical sermon. When the organ ceased to sound, the white locks and kindly face of Elder Stephen McCrae LaGrange, the voorleser, appeared above the ancient reading desk. In a clear but quavering voice he read the Ten Commandments, and then after the pause, more eloquent than words, came the pure tones of the response from the chanting choir above. Hymn and litany, psalter and prayer, Scripture lesson and exordium, followed in the order prescribed by the ancient church service.

Domine Demarest preached for nearly an hour and a quarter, dwelling on the influence of the religious side of the forefathers' character in shaping the State and nation. He sketched the beginning of the church in 1626, when services were held under the guns of the fort and afterward in a magnificent building containing nine pews. He explained the failure of the church membership to keep up with the increasing population largely by the conservatism that led to the use of the Dutch language in sacred service until as late as 1782

In the evening the First Reformed Church was as crowded as its sister church had been in the morning. Flags and banners hung from the balcony and twined about the stone pillars that supported the gothic arches of the old building. To the right of the pulpit was a large floral representation of the little square edifice that first served the Dutchmen for a house of worship. The old pulpit itself, saved from the wreck of the old building when it was pulled down many years ago, was on the platform, and from its historic desk the pastor of the church, the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, expounded the same living truths that had occupied the logic and eloquence of the Revolutionary divines.

In a dozen other churches throughout the city similar services were held, and people flocked to hear the story of how their prosperous little municipality was founded and built up by earnest, God-fearing men who worked in the field with rifle in hand and worshipped in churches that were more than half forts, pierced with loopholes and guarded by cannon.

The General Outlook.

THE UNITED SYNOD OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH IN THE SOUTH.—A union has been effected of the Southern Lutheran Synods in one general body. In 1820 the Tennessee Synod was formed, and during this long period it has stood aloof from any union with the neighboring Synods The Lutheran says: In 1861, the congregations of this Synod in Tennessee formed the Holston Synod, which afterwards united with the General Council. In earlier times many conflicts arose between the congregations of the Tennessee Synod and those of the other Synods in North Carolina and Virginia; but in later years an ever increasing harmony of views has allayed strife and suggested thoughts of union. That there has been a general and indisputable growth of positive Lutheran faith in all the Southern Synods has been for many years increasingly manifest—and a desire for the union of all the Synods in one general body has been widely felt. In 1884 a proposition was made to hold a Diet at which representatives of all the Synods should consider the question of union. The General Synod, South, at its meetings in Charleston in April of that year, warmly favored the proposed union. In its action on this subject it said: "Real and sad departures from the true faith of the Church introduced divisions between brethren. With the return of a true Lutheran consciousness to our English Churches and Synods in general, there has been a steadily growing and healthy union sentiment. In this growth we rejoice to record the fact, that this General Synod has participated. With the removal of the causes which led to separation, we now seek and desire union."

The representatives of the several Synods met in a Diet at Salisbury, N. C., in November, 1884, and adopted both a Doctrinal Basis, and a Constitution for a permanent body in which all the Synods would unite. The Holston Synod asked and received the cordial approval of the General Council for its co-operation in this movement. The Doctrinal Basis adopted was: The Holy Scriptures as the only standard of doctrine and church discipline; and the three Œcumenical Creeds and the Unaltered Augsburg Confession as a true and faithful exhibition of the doctrines of the Holy Scriptures in regard to matters of faith and practice; also the other Symbolical Books of the Evangelical Lutheran Church (named in full), as true and Scriptural developments of the doctrines taught in the Augsburg Confession, and in the perfect harmony of one and the same pure Scriptural faith. The proposed Constitution embodied those principles of church polity which were deemed true and essential. This basis and constitution were submitted to the several Synods, with the recommendation that a general body based on them be formed, and were heartily approved by them, except that the Synod of Georgia, whilst heartily accepting the doctrinal basis, desired the continuance of the old General Synod on the new basis, rather than its passage into a new body, but promised adherence to such action as the General Synod, South, should approve. The delegates elected by the Synods were empowered to act in forming the union and in it when formed.

At the late meeting of the General Synod, South and of the Diet, at Roanoke, Va., the union was happily consummated. When the vote was taken upon the whole basis of doctrine and polity and upon the merging of the General Synod, South, in the newly formed union, it was absolutely unanimous.

The synods composing the United Synod appear in the roll according to date of organization, which is as follows: North Carolina Synod, organized 1803; Tennessee Synod, 1820; South Carolina Synod, 1824; Virginia Synod, 1829; Southwest Virginia Synod, 1842; Mississippi Synod, 1855; Georgia Synod, 1860; Holston Synod, 1861. The numerical strength of the general body is eight synods, representing six States, with 182 ministers, 354 congregations, and in round numbers 30,000 communicants.

The union of the Lutheran Church in the South was consummated on Friday, June 25th, which was the three hundred and fifty-sixth anniversary of the presentation of the Augsburg Confession to the Emperor Charles V. and the assembled representatives of his empire. This was a most pleasing coincidence, since this Confession of the Church has come down to us unaltered from the day on which it was promulgated, and was a prominent factor in bringing about the union.

....One of the few places in civilization where there is no Methodism is in the Hawaiian Islands. There was once an organization there, but it failed for lack of support.

....The English Society of Friends have twenty four missionaries at work in India and Madagascar. In this latter country they have one hundred and thirty-three native teachers, and one hundred and four congregations, with over fourteen thousand children in their schools.

....A circular sent out by D. L. Moody states that the fourth conference for Bible study and upon methods of work in Home and Foreign Evangelization, and for the promotion of individual consecration to Christ, will be held in Northfield, Mass., for ten days from Wednesday, August 4th, to Friday, August 13th. Most of those who have been present as speakers, teachers, and singers, in past years, may be again expected. The meetings of the conference will be held in the hall of Northfield Young Ladies' Seminary. Lodging and board for a limited number of guests will be provided in the Seminary building at the rate of $2 a day. Applications for rooms should be addressed to H. N. F. Marshall, Treasurer, Northfield, Mass., and should be made as early as possible, that suitable provision may be made for those who expect to be present. A general invitation is extended to all ministers and Christian workers who are in sympathy with the object of the conference.

....The Arabic Bible, for which the United Presbyterian Board of Publication made the grant of $2,000, is completed and is selling in Alexandria, Egypt, at a good rate.

....An act to incorporate the First Synod in the Dominion of Canada, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, and for other purposes connected therewith, has received the royal assent through the governor-general.

....The Congregational Church Union in session at Ottawa, Canada, favorably considered the recommendation that the Congregational church in Canada should seek union with that of the United States, and the Executive Committee has been instructed to prepare a report on the matter.

....About $62,000 were spent by the Presbyterian church in Canada in the West for home missions and augmentation combined last year. About $25,000 of this sum was given to Manitoba and the Northwest. They have voted $30,000 for this year.

....In April and May the missionaries of the American Sunday-School Union in the northwestern district, under the direction of T. G. Ensign, established 151 new Sunday-schools in destitute districts, and gathered into them 557 teachers and 4,058 scholars, besides aiding 142 old schools, which have a membership of 567 teachers and 4,718 scholars. They also held 404 religious meetings, 74 churches grew out of their schools last year, and 1,382 conversions were reported.

...Rev. W. H. Roberts, D.D., the stated clerk of our General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church has accepted the chair in Lane Seminary, to which he was recently elected.

....Judge R. M. Widney, of Los Angeles, Cal., has made a recent gift of $100,000, his share of the proceeds of the San Fernando ranch, which sold for $400,000, to the University of Southern California (Methodist) for a reserve fund. The total endowment of the University in money, land and buildings is now $750,000, but in a few years the value of the lands will probably be two millions.

...Buddhism in Japan has been virtually disestablished since 1874. While there were 393,087 Buddhist temples in 1714, there are now but 57,824. Few new temples are built and many are going to ruin. One of the most distinguished temples in the country is now in such need of repairs that a call has been made to raise a fund of $17,000 in shares of 300 yen each for this purpose.

....Rev. Erskine N. White, D.D., for several years pastor of the West 23d Street Presbyterian Church of this city, has accepted the secretaryship of the Board of Church Erection, made vacant by the death of Dr. Wilson. It is considered that Dr. White's acceptance of this position is a guarantee to the church that the work of the Board will be judiciously and efficiently conducted.

... This city has over thirty schools for the Chinese. Mr. Huie Kin, formerly under the care of Dr. Eells at Lane Seminary, is now permanently engaged as a missionary among his countrymen here. The prospect is that a church exclusively for Chinamen will be formed soon.

News of the Week.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14.—It is stated that Mr. Labouchere, attributing the defeat of Gladstone mainly to the abstention of Radicals and Liberals, maintains that the country has not pronounced against Home Rule but only against the mode of presenting Home Rule, and has given a statement of the situation ...A decree for the expulsion of the Duke d' Aumale from France has been signed by President Grevy....An agreement has been reached by which Lord Salisbury accepts Lord Hartington's Home Rule policy, which involves the maintenance of the full powers of the Imperial Parliament. It is still thought in Gladstonian circles that Gladstone will resign....One hundred houses in Poland were destroyed by fire. Three hundred families rendered homeless....Serious riots have taken place in Ireland and England between Catholics and Protestants ...A heavy hailstorm visited Jamestown, N.Y.,also Cleveland,O., doing a great deal of damage to crops and fruit ...An immense cloud of grasshoppers settled down on a wheat field in Dakota and in a short time cleared off from fifty acres every vestige of the crop....Jacob Sharp thinks that street car fares should be lowered and railroads relieved of taxation....Gen. Arthur is improving in health.

THURSDAY, 15.—A great deal of property has been destroyed by the rioters in Belfast. People were injured, houses wrecked, and the place resembles the result of a tornado. ....Count de Gonzague committed suicide yesterday on St. Helen's Island by blowing his brains out....Mr. Gladstone attacked the Duke of Westminster for giving the use of his carriages on election day to carry voters to the polls, and the Duke gave a sharp reply in return....Mexico has decided to purchase property in Washington upon which to erect a building for the use of the Minister and his attaches. The site is in First street near the home of Chief Justice Waite....President Cleveland warns all office-holders not to engage in politics....A heavy thunder storm accompanied by wind and hail passed over Western Pennsylvania, doing a great deal of damage. At Colts, near Cleveland,O.,hail storms were gathered by the bushel and used for freezing ice cream. The children's sanitarium in Chicago was destroyed. In Detroit, Michigan, the hail did a great deal of damage to crops. A number of persons were killed by lightning. ...The Provident Savings Bank of St. Louis collapsed at noon yesterday, and the cashier, A. B. Thompson, found to be an embezzler to the amount of $60,000 or more. It is thought he went to Canada....The bodies of Adrian and Lucie Crucy cannot be placed in Calvary Cemetery. Friends have decided to place them in Greenwood Cemetery until the estate is settled.

FRIDAY, 16.—Lord Salisbury has offered to give the Liberal Unionists four seats in the Cabinet and an equal ratio of the lesser offices. Lord Hartington will be permitted to be leader in the House of Commons and select the office he chooses, excepting that of Premier....All things quiet in Belfast. ....Great excitement was caused in the Senate by the expulsion of the Duke d' Aumale. General Boulanger challenged Baron Lareinty to a duel in consequence of the affair in the Senate....Count de Gonzague committed suicide because he had forged a name to the amount of $800.... The Dundy County Bank at Benkleman, Neb., failed yesterday; the president fled to Canada and took with him $100,000 in funds and securities....Several New York and Boston banks are heavy losers....Warrants for grand larceny, embezzlement and forgery have been sworn out against A. B. Thompson, the fugitive cashier of the Provident Savings Bank in St. Louis.... David H. Kellogg, a well-known lawyer in New York, attempted suicide by jumping off a Boston boat at Portland, Me. He was rescued and taken to a hospital. He gave no reason for his action....John W. Phelps, Superintendent of the Fishkill Landing and Matteawan Water Works at Fishkill Landing, N. Y., was arrested on the charge of bigamy....A jury at last obtained to try the Anarchists with the Haymarket massacre at Chicago.

(Continued on page thirteen.)

Our Contributors.

The Tempest.

BY JOHN FRANCIS.

OH, wild the tempest, and my soul,
A drifting bark with rudder lost,
Flies with the wind; my anchor, Hope,
By rushing waves is ever tossed.
Is there no rescue in this hour,
When cords of love are rudely snapped,
When e'en the spars of promise break,
And tattered sheets are rudely flapped?
"Fear not, I am with you ever,
Wind and wave my power obey;
I, the Lord of heaven, have spoken,
I will guide you all your way."

How bend these masts of Trust; O dread!
If they shall give, where then shall be
My hope? O, sailor at the helm!
Shall I again the firm land see?
Fierce lightnings flash, and deeply roll
The thunders in the murky sky,
And thrills with horror all my soul.
Is there no hope for such as I?
"Fear not, I am with you ever,
Wind and wave my power obey;
I, the Lord of heaven, have spoken,
I will guide you all your way."

O day of dread! O fearful hour!
Will never it be calm again?
O God! the mem'ry makes me cower,
That ever I had trust in men.
Where is my Master? He will save!
For by His word at Galilee,
He stilled the wild, engulfing wave,
And He will still this storm for me.
"Fear not, I am with you ever,
Wind and wave my power obey;
I, the Lord of heaven, have spoken,
I will guide you all your way."

O Master, wake! thy servant calls,
Hear, Lord, and grant my earnest prayer!
Forgive my sins; a stillness falls
Upon me, for His child He cares.
Though wild the storm, His power is great,
Though tempests cause our souls to quail,
The Lord is with us in the storm,
And will not once the helpless fail.
"Fear not, I am with you ever,
Wind and wave my power obey;
I, the Lord of heaven, have spoken,
I will guide you all your way."

Mrs. Loring's Discipline.

BY MARY E. BRUSH.

CHAPTER VI.

"THEY'RE very like my nephew Guy," remarked Miss Thornton in tones of satisfaction, when, late that evening, little Ray and Beth, with sleepy, wondering eyes stood at her bedside.

Somehow, the look of those sweet, childish faces, the touch of the soft, dimpled hands, had a soothing effect on the fever-distraught woman, and when, after caressing them, she again laid her weary head on the pillow, it was to fall into a long, refreshing slumber. When she awoke she found herself much better, but, exercising the prerogatives of a convalescent, she insisted on retaining the children, for some days at least, and Ruth, ever patient and self-denying, made no objections.

Certainly no princes of royal blood were more petted than were Ray and Beth during the two weeks that followed. Toys of every description were ordered, dainties especially delightful to childish palates prepared, and even their garments were transformed. Ray doffed his course flannel suit and slipped into rich dark velvet, silken hose and point-lace collar. Beth emerged from her plain worsted frock into soft, white merino, fluffy swansdown and dainty satin ribbons. Aunt Isabel grew in health and happiness with the new pets.

Ruth, meanwhile, dragged out the long, weary hours in work at the greenhouse. Somehow, even the blossoms by which she was surrounded did not seem half so bright, now that the children were away. How her mother heart longed for the little ones, and often jealously asked itself the question, would this old woman, by means of lavish kindness and all that the magic wand of wealth can grant, win her children from her? Had she not made a mistake in sending Beth and Ray to Woodlawn? Was it not from a morbid sense of duty that she had acted? Was there, after all, any need of making the sacrifice? But she had done it with the best of intentions. She had earnestly endeavored to practice pity and charity. But it often happens that when we strive to act conscientiously, it is then that we are most severely tried!

One day Ruth received a telegram that blanched her face and made her heart bound in wild, agonized throbs:

"Beth has scarlet fever. Come at once!"

A little over two hours later she stood before the door at Woodlawn. Miss Isabel met her with a face as white and haggard as her own.

"How is she, how is my baby?" demanded Ruth, not waiting for commonplace remarks.

"Very sick, but not dangerously yet," Miss Isabel replied, awed by the stern, white face. "The fever hasn't risen to its full height, the doctor says.'

"How did she take it?"

"God only knows! She has been exposed to no contagion that we are aware of. She's gone nowhere except on short drives with me. She has played with no other children save Ray, who is perfectly well, and who, if care be used, will not take the disease, the doctor thinks. Oh, I am dreadfully sorry that she's ill; believe me, I am!"

The days that followed seemed like some horrible dream! Hour after hour passed on in close combat with death! Could human skill drive away the dread shadow hovering so near? Ever hoping, ever praying, Ruth fought for her little one's life, and her efforts were aided by Aunt Isabel, who, for once, laid aside all thoughts of her own ailments and became an earnest, efficient nurse. It was thought safer for Mother Bartlett to return to Mr. Green's and take Ray with her. His mother, who had immediately gone up to the sick chamber, did not even dare to take the privilege of kissing him good-by. Days passed on, bringing now and then a gleam of hope, but more often the heaviness of despair.

All the delicate rose tints, all the soft curves and dimples of health faded from Baby Beth's face; it grew wan and pain-racked, and the plump fingers grew strangely thin and waxen.

One never-to-be-forgotten night, when the March wind moaned around the chimney and the sleet, like the icy summons of death itself, tapped on the window-pane, they sat awaiting the critical hour. Ruth was close beside her darling, her heart full of that dull ache we call submission. Miss Thornton, too, was there, her face worn by watching and anxiety. The doctor, whose genial face was unusually grave, sat, watch in hand, counting the tiny pulse beats.

Suddenly he rose, bent anxiously over the motionless little figure. A thought like a poniard-thrust pierced Ruth's heart. Was it all over? Had her wee darling drifted back to heaven?

There was a reassuring smile in the doctor's eyes as he turned and met her wild, anxious gaze.

"The crisis is over, she is sleeping sweetly. I think—believe, that she will get better."

"Thank God!" whispered the over-joyed mother.

"Thank God!" echoed Aunt Isabel, and then, womanlike, she and Ruth fell on each other's necks and wept. There is nothing stronger than mutual sorrow and suspense to bring together two estranged souls. From that dreary midnight hour Isabel Thornton and Ruth Loring were firm friends.

Harsh March winds wore away, bringing April's milder influences. Lent was drawing to a close and Easter was at hand. Ruth was still at Woodlawn, watching over her baby girl. Little Beth, though white and fragile as a lily, was fast regaining health and strength. As for Ray, he was as ever, rosy, stout and sturdy and quite untouched by the dreaded fever. Like the peace that follows the tempest's wild career, rest and happiness came to Ruth and Aunt Isabel.

Good Mr. Green was the only unhappy person about this time. He experienced great difficulty in finding anyone to take Mrs. Loring's place at the greenhouse. She would have gone back to him, but Aunt Isabel, gentle now, and submissive in everything else, was firmly opposed to such an arrangement. Ruth must remain at Woodlawn, equal with herself as lady and mistress.

"I have acted like a fool long enough!" said the old lady in her impulsive way, "and stood in the way of my own light and comfort! You were my nephew Guy's wife. He was as a son to me, and you—you shall be my daughter!"

But as we have said, Mr. Green was in distress. To help him out of his predicament, Ruth agreed to attend to the Easter decorations of the church at Allandale. It had the largest and most fastidious congregation. So all one Saturday afternoon, far into the gray, spring twilight, she labored there. It was her last effort in such work and she determined to make it her best. Early on the following morning she hastened there to study the effect and see if there was any last touches necessary. But even to her critical eye there seemed nothing lacking.

It was a beautiful and impressive sight. Ruby, purple, emerald and amber light sifted in through the long, stained-glass windows, its warm touches falling on white font, carved chancel and dark wainscoting. The air was heavy with the incense of fragrant flowers. Creamy callas, blood-red roses, purple heliotrope, pink-spiked hyacinths, flame-dashed tulips, golden daffodils all rose in soft billows around her, while from their midst towered a stately cross of chaste white lilies.

Moved by a feeling of sincere devotion, Ruth sank on her knees before the sacred emblem, her thoughts flying upward to Him, her crucified Lord and Master. What did she not owe to Him? Her life, her very all! How tenderly He had watched over her during the past year of darkness and trouble. A strange, heavenly peace stole throughout her being—a peace to be succeeded by an earthly joy greater than any she had ever experienced.

Her solitary musings were broken by soft footfalls at the door. She rose from her knees and turned to see the intruders. Who were they? Aunt Isabel and —who else? Who was that tall, manly figure behind her; the familiar features and love-lit eyes? Did her eyes deceive her? Surely it was some optical illusion, or else the sacred influence of the blessed Resurrection morn had brought back the dead! For the features and figure were those of her husband, Guy Loring! Dear God! What did it all mean! With her sweet face as white as the lilies in the cross towering above her, Ruth waited, expecting the vision to vanish, but the next instant her trembling, swaying form was clasped in the strong embrace of loving, living arms! Her eyes grew misty, her dull ears caught the sound of Aunt Isabel saying excitedly:

"Ruth, darling! don't be frightened! It is Guy, our Guy, come back to us! He wasn't drowned; he was rescued by a ship bound for ——; he was sick a long time with brain fever—come back—" Ruth heard no more.

When consciousness returned, she found herself still in front of the flower-decked altar, and, oh God be thanked! Guy's arms were still around her, his voice whispering tender, endearing words.

And Aunt Isabel was saying, "There! I told you it wouldn't do to let her know it so suddenly. It was a great shock for the poor child. Thank goodness! she's coming to now!"

Yes, what a happy "coming-to" it was. Coming to joy and happiness that she had long ago thought she had forever relinquished! But it was not coming to her old self. Ruth Loring would never be the same childish, careless creature that she was when her husband went away. The discipline of the past months had driven away the dross from her nature and what was left was pure gold. She had drawn near to God and He had drawn near to her. Her nature was tempered with sweet seriousness and her soul filled with Divine strength.

It was a sacred meeting in a sacred place and a stranger has no right to intermeddle, so you and I, dear reader, will leave them here amid the sunshine of that hallowed morning and the beauty of the flowers around the altar—the spotless cross and the purple and golden blossoms above it, which Ruth's own fingers had fashioned into the glowing words: "CHRIST HATH RISEN!"

THE END.

The Society of Christian Endeavor.

DEAR INTELLIGENCER: The fifth annual conference of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor has just closed. It began on Tuesday, July 6th, and ended last night. It was largely attended. There were about five hundred delegates present, representing the leading evangelical denominations in States stretching from Maine to Nebraska. On the evening of the first day, Dr. Deems preached a strong sermon on 2 Kings 6:17, "And Elisha prayed and the Lord opened the eyes of the young man and he saw." The central thought was spiritual discernment. Wednesday and Thursday were spent in hearing reports and discussing methods.

The addresses of President Van Palten and General Secretary Ward attracted the closest attention. These showed the rapid growth as well as the pressing needs of the work. Last year there were 250 local societies; now there are 850, with a membership all told of over 50,000. What a Spartan band of enthusiastic young Christians! These are from the choicest youth in the churches.

The Rev. Dr. Rankin, of Orange Valley, N. J., contributed a new hymn and dedicated it to the Society at large. It has been very appropriately set to the original tune of St. Gertrude. This was sung several times during the conference with an enthusiasm that was inspiring.

Among the more important matters which came under consideration were State Conferences. These were recommended for the reasons set forth in a paper by one of the trustees. Superintendents were appointed to take oversight of the work in the different States.

The financial problem was solved for the present through the efforts of Rev. J. L. Hill, of Lynn, Mass., who "Kimballized" the audience on Wednesday afternoon to the extent of $2,000. This was start enough to insure the provision of all the funds necessary. Hereafter a tax of ten cents will be levied on each member of the Society. This amount is so insignificant that doubtless nobody will repudiate it. Yet the aggregate will supply all the demands on this line.

Rev. W. J. Van Palten, of Burlington, Vt., was unanimously elected President for the ensuing year. To him is due great credit for the marked success achieved. A more efficient, generous Christian gentleman would be hard to find. Associated with him in the general management of the work are Mr. G. M. Ward, General Secretary, Box 1235, Boston, Mass.; Mr. Wm. Shaw, Treasurer, Boston, Mass.; Rev. F. E. Clark, Boston, Mass., Rev. C. A. Dickinson, Lowell, Mass., Rev. J. L. Hill, Lynn, Mass., Rev. N. Boynton, Haverhill, Mass., Rev. H. B. Gross, Poughkeepsie, N Y., Rev. R. W. Brokaw, Belleville, N. J., Mr. W. H. Pennell, Portland, Me., Mr. Choate Burnham, Boston, Mass., Trustees.

Space will not permit a full description of this splendid conference. Said the Saratogian in its last daily report: "Thus closed one of the grandest conferences ever held at this famous national resort."

The last session, Thursday evening, will not soon be forgotten. After stirring and touching addresses by Rev. J. E. Rankin, D.D., Rev. Dr. Twitchell and Rev. Dr. Alden, a farewell prayer meeting was held. Your correspondent never witnessed anything like it for spiritual fervor. Tears of joy and gratitude coursed down many cheeks when at the end all joined hands, sang the doxology, and united in prayer with the Rev. Father Endeavor Clark, as he has been fitly named. Truly, "heaven came down our souls to greet."

This plan for training and developing young Christians evidently meets a demand in the churches. The religious market was ready and waiting for it. And not only is it accomplishing its direct aim, but incidentally, also, it is doing much to break down the ecclesiastical middle walls of partition which divide the Church, and thus it is hastening the day when Protestantism shall present a solid front. We have one Society among the Episcopalians. Do you believe it? R. W. B.

SARATOGA, N. Y., July 9th, 1886.

The Hindoo Boy.

BY REV. P. STRYKER, D.D.

SOME few years ago I read a story, and I wrote down some of the main facts. I cannot tell what paper or magazine furnished it. But the story is a good one, and no doubt true, and so I reproduce it, hoping it may lead some soul to Christ.

A lady was sitting on her veranda in India reading. She heard the tramp of some one running very fast, and presently a boy bounded in her presence, all out of breath.

"Does Jesus Christ live here?" was his cry.

The lad was about twelve years old. His hair was coarse and matted with filth. His clothes were dirty. Flying up the steps and crouching at the lady's feet, he again inquired, "Does Jesus Christ live here?"

"What do you want of Jesus Christ?" she asked.

"I want to see Him. I want to confess to Him," was the reply.

"Why, what have you been doing that you want to confess?"

With great earnestness the boy said: "Does He live here? I want to know that. Doing? Why, I tell lies. I steal. I do everything bad. I am afraid of going to hell, and I want to see Jesus. I heard one of the teachers say He can save from hell. Does He live here? O, tell me where I can find Jesus Christ."

"But Jesus Christ will not save people who do wickedly," said the lady.

"I want to stop doing wickedly, but I cannot stop," said the boy. "I don't know how to stop. The evil thoughts are in me, and the bad deeds come of evil thoughts. What can I do?"

He was told he could do nothing but go to Christ, but that he could not see Christ as he evidently expected to see Him. He was no longer on the earth in bodily form.

As he heard this he gave a quick sharp cry of despair. But he brightened up when the good missionary lady told him she was the follower of Jesus, and that she had come to India on purpose to tell people how to be saved.

"Tell me, O tell me about Him," was his eager cry. "Only ask your Master, the Lord Jesus, to save me, and I will be your servant, your slave for life. Do not be angry. Do not send me away. I want to be saved, saved from hell."

We may be sure the simple story of the cross was soon told this poor Hindoo lad, and he was easily led to trust with all his heart in Him who came hither to save lost sinners.

This story suggests a few thoughts, which I will briefly state.

1. There is only one way in which men can be saved. Jesus is the Saviour. The words of the Apostle Peter spoken to the rulers of the Jews many centuries ago are still true, and we should ring them out with all our force to all who will listen to them. "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Christian people need to feel this truth, as well as those who are not Christians.

2. All are lost who are not saved. That seems to be an axiom. Yet how many Christian people fail to realize it. If every unredeemed sinner felt this truth he would be as anxious as was the young Hindoo. If every professing Christian was impressed with this fact he would bestir himself to lead his unsaved friends at once to Jesus. So much has been said of late in favor of infidelity and universalism that many are inclined to believe there is no hell, that God is so tender and loving that He will never punish the wicked in the world to come. This false idea should be combated. Let us not be afraid to believe or to speak the truth. Christ says, "Fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

3. There are anxious people now. They may be found among the heathen in India, China, Africa. Our missionaries often tell us about them. Even before they hear about the precious Saviour they are concerned about their eternal destiny. And when they see a little light streaming from the Gospel lamp, they are very desirous to see more.

Who can tell how many anxious ones there are in this Christian land? Poor ignorant boys and girls, hard working men and women, who do not often go to church or Sabbath-school—these people may at times swear and lie and steal, yet at other times they are thoughtful, and would gladly change their course of life if they knew how. While a few may tell their anxiety, others will not. They will perish before they will ask how they are to be saved. We ought to kindly help them all.

4. If people do not feel anxious about their souls, and cry for help, so much the more important for us to find them and convince them of their danger. You would not leave an inebriate sleeping on a railroad track, or put forth no effort to save an unconscious man from drowning. Their very helplessness and unconsciousness would arouse your sympathy.

Then let us not wait until the Hindoo boy, or anyone else comes bounding up and asks where Jesus Christ lives. If we know Jesus and love Him as our Saviour, let us make Him known at once to others.

Rooted and Fruitful.

BY REV. C. P. DITMARS.

WHAT sound advice the apostle gives us in his closing up of that memorable chapter, the fifteenth of First Corinthians. And how needful is his exhortation. He has been commenting at great length and with great power upon one crowning doctrine of the Gospel. He seeks to make clear the truth of the resurrection. Link after link of thought from his logical and fervid mind he adds to the golden chain, until he ends in that victorious shout, which has thrilled the Church of Christ ever since, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Then turning quickly back to the present, and taking a clear, keen view of the needs of this life in the world, he shows us that the sublime doctrine of which he has just written is a powerful motive to stability and diligence in the Christian calling. "Therefore," is the link between the doctrine and the practice. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Cast out all doubt and fear. Rest yourselves on every part of God's command and promise. Be settled in your own mind. Then, be not led away by others. Having received this precious doctrine as the ground of your hope, do not suffer yourself to be shaken from it by anything whatsoever. The apostle simply tells us that we must first get ourselves surely, deeply rooted in the great principles of the faith, and then must grow up and become fruitful by gathering to ourselves rich nourishment out of the soil in which we are planted. As the great trees of the forest run their roots deep and far out into the soil, taking a firm, sure hold, until they become steadfast against the winds that bear upon them, so must we become rooted and grounded in the hope of Christ, getting such firm hold upon Him that we shall never fear what tempests may break over us. Or, as the fruit tree, having become firmly rooted in your garden, begins to abound year by year in blossoms and fruit after its kind, so must we, having planted ourselves in the faith of Christ, begin and continue to "abound in the work of the Lord."

When the winds of false doctrine and unbelief are sweeping over the Church, the matter of our being rooted and grounded in the faith is most essential. When the idle, easy, careless follower of Christ may do so much harm, the matter of our being fruitful in the Lord's work is also vital. We are called to a life of doing as well as of believing. We are saved by our faith and hope in Christ. But our faith must "work," "purify," "overcome," or there is something lacking about it. Our hope must anchor us to the truth, or there is weakness in it. A firmer rooting of faith will give our hearts more of "that peace of God which passeth understanding." A greater "abounding in the Lord's work" will bring more real joy than we have ever yet experienced. There shall be hope, peace, joy, now while in the conflict, and by-and-by the richer, fuller reward, "forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

NISKAYUNA, N. Y.

Union in Missions.

THE General Assembly at its late meeting adopted the following:

"The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, in session in Minneapolis, Minn., recognizing its obligations to consult, not only for the special interests of the Church which it represents, but also for the larger interests of the cause and kingdom of Jesus Christ in the world, as well as for the advancement of the principles of faith and order which we hold in common with other Presbyterian communions in this land; and noticing, further, the increasing desire which is constantly manifested for closer Christian fellowship and intercommunion among those who bear the general name of Presbyterians, and who are now represented in the Alliance of the Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian system, does hereby declare its entire sympathy with this growing and most encouraging tendency toward closer fellowshow as Christians and Presbyterians, believing it to be a token for good to all the branches of our Church in this country, and having in it, if wisely guided, the promise of freer and more hearty intercommunion between churches now separated, and of a cordial co-operation in the work of Christian missions at home and abroad.

"Further, in order to give practical effect to its own earnest wish, thus freely declared, this General Assembly would respectfully represent to all the churches in this country now united in the Alliance of the Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian system that it is prepared to confer with them in any proper way in reference to co-operation in the work of extending the faith and order which we hold, and especially in regard to unity of effort and organization in the mission fields abroad; and the Assembly hereby directs its Stated Clerk to transmit a copy of this minute to the chief courts of these Churches for their consideration."

....An exchange says: "We sometimes see the expression 'Mohulla work,' in articles on missions in India. Mohulla means a ward in a city; and, in this work, the missionaries go into an open square in the city and preach the Gospel to all who will hear. The women missionaries go at an hour when most of the men will be away at their work, and often have a large audience."

....After five years of deadlock between Prussia and England over their respective rights to appointment of the Protestant Bishop of Jerusalem, Prussia has decided to dissolve the compact of 1841, under which the two countries agreed to alternate in the appointment, and to found an Independent Prussian bishopric at the Holy City.

The Reading Room.

Our Book-Shelves.

....“RECOLLECTIONS OF COLLEGE LIFE AT MARSHALL COLLEGE, FROM 1839 TO 1845.” By Rev. Theodore Appel, D.D., Lancaster, Pa. This interesting volume is more than a mere book of youthful reminiscences of student life. It contains valuable materials for the history of the literary and theological institutions of the Reformed Church in the United States at Mercersburg, Pa., and abounds in vivid biographical sketches of the eminent men who were attached to the College and Seminary, together with many other incidents connected with the early struggles for their foundation. Among the principal personages portrayed are the late Rev. Drs. Rauch, J. W. Nevin, Berg, the Helfensteins; with Dr. Schaff and others who have been prominent in the educational and ecclesiastical movements of the German branch of the Reformed Church. The author's narrative sheds much light upon the theological position and controversies of the past forty years in that communion, tracing them to their origin, and illustrating their character. At the same time the book is very free of partisan bias and simply aims to give the facts with the writer's impressions. The larger part of this portion of the volume is devoted to a comprehensive statement of the philosophical and theological system of Doctor Frederick Augustus Rauch, the first President of Marshall College; a man of genius, learning and power, an eloquent preacher and a leader of Christian thought in the Church of his adoption. The sketches of Drs. Berg, Nevin and Schaff are also well drawn and apparently are “true to life,” so far as they go.

The limitations of the book, from 1839 to 1845, necessarily make it only a fragment, but those six years were in the formative period of the College and Seminary, and have put their own stamp upon their subsequent development. We commend the work especially to those of our own ministers and laity who wish to know more of that branch of the Reformed Church, in view of the proposals for a closer union with our side of the house. The Introduction, by the Rev. Dr. Thomas G. Appel, President of Franklin and Marshall College, is also worthy of mention, not merely for its praise of the book, but as showing his own impression of its bearing as “the opening of a larger chapter” in the history which many will, no doubt, wish to see written out in the same genial spirit and with the same able discrimination that characterize the pages of this unpretentious yet able and interesting volume.

The price of the book is $1.25; with postage, 10 cents additional, for which it will be sent by mail by the author, whose address is given above.

....The “Story of the Nations Series” has been enriched by two specially interesting additions:

“THE STORY OF NORWAY” is appropriately written by a son of the Norseland, Hjalmar H. Boyesen. He traces back the Northmen to the ancient Bactrian cradle of the Aryan nations; gives an account of their early religion and customs; tells the exploits of their vikings, and the whole romantic story, gathered from Sagas and authentic records, of the kings of Norway. There is nothing more romantic in Ossian, or more heroic in Homer, than the annals of these Harolds and Olafs and Haakons and Eriks. The reader cannot fail to be charmed with the way in which the tale is told by Prof. Boyesen. The later history, of the union with Denmark and the independence of Norway, is given much more briefly.

“THE STORY OF GERMANY” is written by S. Baring Gould aided by Arthur Gilman, the former well known as the author of “Germany Past and Present,” and as a high authority in the folk lore and legendary history of Europe. The same method is adopted as in the other “stories of the nations,” of emphasizing the earlier annals and the more romantic and heroic events and characters, so as to win the young and less studious to historical reading. Standing where we now do, at the high tide of Germanic development and predominance in world-power, there is an absorbing interest and even a sense of the sublime in tracing these to their source in the dark forests into which the Teutonic tribes found their way from the East, and where under their hero, Hermann, they met and stayed the Roman power, and whence they poured in incessant swarms upon the decaying empire. The history tells the story of Charlemagne and Frederick Barbarossa, of the struggles between Pope and Emperor, of the Robber-Barons, of the minnesingers, of the guilds, of the rise of the Hapsburgs and the Hohenzollerns, of the invention of printing, of the Protestant Reformation, of Charles V. and Frederick the Great and Bismarck, of the Thirty Years' War and the wars with Napoleon the Great and the Little. It is a marvellous story, and it is delightfully told.

Both these volumes, like their predecessors, are copiously illustrated and admirably indexed. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

....“BIETIGHEIM.” This is one of those forecasts of history which are interesting from their ingenuity as well as prophetic power. The story is remarkably well done. The book consists of three lectures, delivered in Denver in 1932 by a member of Congress. He sketches the manner in which the United States was drawn into war with Germany in 1891, when Russia, Austria and Germany united against remaining Europe. The decisive battle at Bietigheim on the Neckar is well described. Then follows the reorganization of Europe, with the exception of Great Britain, into a Socialistic Republic of Guilds which breaks down through the selfishness of its members. Finally Europe becomes a republic after the model of the United States.

We mark great thought and care in all parts of the work. The reasonings on questions which are affecting us to-day, and the statement of the results which follow certain deeds, are admirable in their simplicity and somewhat startling in the way they seem to follow logical truth. But logic does not rule in national life, any more than in individual career, and we rest most safely when we do the best we can and leave the supreme disposal of events to One whose wisdom is greater than ours. (Funk & Wagnalls.)

....Dr. Samuel Johnson's “LIVES OF THE ENGLISH POETS, WALLER, MILTON, AND COWLEY, fill the eighteenth number of “Cassell's National Library,” which is followed in the next number by Edmund Burke's “THOUGHTS ON THE PRESENT DISCONTENTS AND SPEECHES.” No man could want more excellent reading. Yet we think Prof. Morley is choosing too much of the heavier sorts of literature and may make a mistake. The series must commend itself to popular favor by its variety, or it will fail of its object. Libraries are full of good books which are seldom opened except for reference, and it would be a pity for these handy volumes to share the fate of their progenitors. (Cassell & Co.)

....“THE WEDDED LIFE.” By the Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D. Pastors who wish to give to bridegroom and bride most excellent counsel could not do better than make a present of this little volume. It has only three chapters—“Marriage,” “The Husband's Part,” “The Wife's Part,”—but the best kind of advice is closely packed in them. A very tasteful marriage certificate precedes the title page. (The Presbyterian Board of Publication.)

....“EPOCHS OF CHURCH HISTORY.” Edited by the Rev. Mandell Creighton, M.A. Two volumes of this compact series are now published. The first is the “History of the Reformation in England,” by the Rev. Canon George Perry, and the second, “The English Church in Other Lands,” by the Rev. H. W. Tucker. The first volume sketches the causes of the Reformation, and traces its course from the fall of Wolsey in 1529 to the middle of the reign of Elizabeth in 1571. The work is done in a scholarly and complete way, although the chief interest is turned to the National Church and little regard paid to Dissenters. The second volume is an excellent summary of the missionary operations of the Church of England, and its extension through the many colonies of Great Britain. The modern growth of its missions will attract many readers, though the whole work is on the very narrow basis of Episcopacy, and a reader would fail from its perusal to understand the real progress made by that great Protestant Church in England and America, of which the Episcopal section is only a minor part. (Anson D. F. Randolph & Co.)

....“OLD SCHOOL DAYS.” By Amanda B. Harris. Miss Harris describes in a very vivid way the manners and customs of a “district school” as it was known some fifty years ago. She gives the plays of the children, the drill of the schoolmasters, and the final “exhibition” which preceded the vacation. The style is simple, but just suited to the theme. We have been exceedingly entertained by these reminiscences and heartily commend them to those who want an hour or two of good reading. The illustrations are as sprightly and effective as the descriptions. (The Inter-State Publishing Co., Chicago.)

....“DICK LANGDON'S CAREER IN SATAN'S SCHOOLS AND CHRIST'S SCHOOLS.” By Mrs. S. A. F. Herbert. There are so many excellent lessons taught in the course of this story that we cannot but regret that they are not presented in a more effective way. The best parts of the book are too didactic to win the interest of youthful readers, and those parts which are most likely to prove attractive are, we fear, susceptible of an application quite the opposite of that which the author undoubtedly intended. (Am. Tract Society.)

Our Library Table.

Periodicals, Serials and Notes.

....Lippincott's Magazine for July devotes fifty-three of its 112 pages to its excellent serial stories, “Taken by Siege” and “A Bachelor's Blunder,” and thirty more to a thoroughly realistic dramatic piece, “Two Passions and a Cardinal Virtue,” by J. S. of Dale. Frank G. Carpenter contributes a highly gossipy article on “The Loves of the Presidents,” which has value in an estimate of these men, and in a certain tender human light which it casts upon public life. The faucet of egotism, entitled “Our Experience Meetings,” is turned this time for the benefit of “Henry Gréville” and Joaquin Miller. “Our Monthly Gossip” gives an interesting insight into our German-American Socialists, and some sensible remarks on Art in America. It is certainly a very readable number.

....The Homiletic Review for July greets its many readers with a full quota of thoughtful and timely contributions under its various sections—Review, Sermonic, Miscellaneous and Editorial. This magazine is favored with a large corps of our best writers and preachers, and maintains the high standard of taste and judgment, and the spirit of enterprise at first displayed, and which has always made it so acceptable.

...The Johns Hopkins University Circular for July gives the full programme for the ensuing year, which is wonderfully full. A new and spacious Physical Laboratory will be completed in the early autumn, and add much to the facilities of students in Physics. It is pleasant to see how year by year this youthful institution increases and enlarges its courses, being a university in fact as well as in name. It is a great help to the cause of thorough liberal education all over the country.

....Wide Awake for July contains a fine representation of French's Statue of the Minute Man at Concord, Mass., and a spirited ballad by Margaret Sidney gives emphasis to the picture. “The First Blow for American Liberty” is an exciting story about the Bunker Hill powder. Mrs. Frémont's account of “A Morning Visit to the Queen of Denmark,” “How Milly was Faithful,” “A Strange Prison,” and other articles go to make up an excellent number.

....Our Little Ones and The Nursery is full of just such short stories and musical verses as the little folks delight in, and the engravings are beautiful, funny and captivating.

....The Lutheran Quarterly for July is excellent. Its first article by Dr. Stuckenberg, of Berlin, on the Relation of Science to Religion is very forcible, dealing heavy blows at some of the superstitions prevalent as to the certainty of physics, e. g., “The laws of science simply express what is common to all the facts included, but they add no new element to the facts. If they do, how can they be tested by the facts? If a law contains more than the facts, how can it be drawn from them? Where does it get the plus?” In truth, there is as much “mythology” in scientists as there is in theologians. The Rev. J. K. Demarest, of Gettysburg, has an interesting paper of Ministerial Acquaintance with Human Nature, and Dr. Schodde gives a careful account of the Jewish-Christian Movement in Southern Russia. In the article on Literary Intelligence the editor notices the seventh edition of Luthardt's Kompendium der Dogmatik, and asks, “When shall we have the first edition of a good English translation?” a question which our Lutheran brethren should lay to heart.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati: Judge Richard Reid. A Biography. By Elizabeth Jameson Reid. 8vo, pp. 600. $3.

Charles Scribner's Sons: Kidnapped. Being Memoirs of the Adventures of David Balfour in the Year 1751. Written by Himself and now Set Forth by Robert Louis Stevenson. 12mo, pp. 324. $1.

Cassell & Co.: As Common Mortals. A Novel. 12mo, pp. 404. $1.25

Ticknor & Co.: Childe Harold's Pilgrimage. A Romaunt. By Lord Byron. Edited with Notes by William J. Rolfe, A.M. With Illustrations. Square 16mo, pp. 288. 75 cents.

Funk & Wagnalls: Life of Schuyler Colfax. By O. J. Hollister. 8vo, pp. 535.

UNBOUND BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Huguenots on the Hackensack. A Paper Read Before the Huguenot Society of America in the French Church du Saint-Esprit, New York, April 13th, 1885; before the New Jersey Historical Society, at Trenton, January 26th 1886; before the New Brunswick Historical Club, February 18th, 1886, and in the North Reformed Church of Schraalenberg, N. J., February 19th, 1886. By Rev. David D. Demarest, D.D., Professor in the Theological Seminary, New Brunswick, N. J. Octavo, pp. 24. 15 cents.

Pomegranate Seed. A Novel. By the author of “The Two Miss Flemings,” “Rare Pale Margaret,” etc. (No. 534, Harper's Franklin Square Library.) 4to, pp. 67. 25 cents; also,

A Daughter of the Gods. By James Stanley. (No. 84, Harper's Handy Series.) 16mo, pp. 170. 25 cents; also,

The Open Air. By Richard Jefferies. (No. 85, Same.) 16mo, pp. 179. 25 cents.

Not in the Prospectus. By Parke Danforth. (No. 23, The Riverside Paper Series.) 16mo, pp. 302. 50 cents.

Nature and Art. By Mrs. Iuchbald. (Cassell's National Library.) 32mo, pp. 192. 10 cents.

PERIODICALS.

July.—American Journal of Insanity, The English Pulpit of To-Day, Evangelical Christendom, Shoppell's Modern Houses, Quarterly, The Book Seller.

August.—The Quiver, The Atlantic Monthly, The Magazine of Art Cassell's Family Magazine.

The Riddle of the Sphinx.

THE riddle of the Sphinx is at length on the point of being solved. The great man-headed, lion-bodied monument, which has for ages been more than half buried by the accumulating sands of the desert, is now being rapidly brought to light, and ere long one of the most extraordinary relics of Egyptian civilization will be once more visible in its entirety. The work has been going on ever since January last, when—at the suggestion of M. Maspero, the chief director of the department of antiquities in Egypt—the French public, in the course of a few hours, subscribed sufficient funds to enable the work of excavation to be carried to completion. The interest of such news for Egyptologists may be conceived, when it is remembered that the last time the Sphinx was dug out of the sands by King Thothmes IV., fifteen centuries before Christ, or about 3,400 years ago. Scholars, in fact, are of opinion that the Sphinx is the oldest monument in the world. It appears, in any case, to have been erected or chiselled out of the rock more than forty-five centuries before the Christian era, and therefore, about 6 400 years ago. The size of the strange image is very remarkable. The body is more than 180 feet long. The ears of the human-shaped head are about six feet from top to bottom, the other features being in proportion. The learned explorers who are engaged in the work of excavation, hold it probable that when the statue is fully brought to light, a number of other important discoveries will be made. In any case, this extraordinary relic of the oldest human civilization cannot fail to form a more attractive sight than ever to all visitors to the land of the Nile.—London Standard.

THE Rev. Simon J. McPherson of Chicago, in a Fourth of July sermon, said: "I wish that courts of justice always excited our awe, and never our amusement or scorn. I wish that there were less favoritism there, less submission to the power of money, more strictly inexorable justice for great offenders as well as small. If public morality is degenerating, it is because we privately consent to let it degenerate. A commissioner of bankruptcy once told me of a well-known citizen of the United States who borrowed everything that he could lay his hands on a week before he went into bankruptcy. He has never paid a cent on a dollar. Yet to-day he is living in luxury, received into exclusive society—exclusive, indeed, when it will not shut out a thief."

Literary Notes and Announcements.

....A very valuable book for travellers in search of health will be published immediately by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons on "Carlsbad and Its Environs," by Mr. John Merrylees. It discusses the famous springs of Carlsbad as a health resort, but besides imparting a great deal of exact and most useful information concerning the medicinal value of the waters, it gives a very delightfully illustrated account of the town and the surrounding country.

....The publishers announce that Mr. Robert Grant is the author of "Face to Face," which was published anonymously a few weeks ago. Touching as it does the problem of capital and labor, the book came at an opportune moment, and its authorship has excited a good deal of curiosity, but until now no hint has been given as to the writer.

....Hon. David A. Wells closes his series of papers in The Popular Science Monthly, on "An Economic Study of Mexico," with an article in the August number considering the attitude which the United States should take toward that country.

....Frank R. Stockton's new novelette, "The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine," which is to begin in the August Century, describes the remarkable adventures of two worthy New England women and the chronicler of the tale, who were shipwrecked and cast ashore upon a small island in the Pacific Ocean, which proved to be by no means a desert.

....Rev. Charles F. Thwing, of Cambridge, with the assistance of his wife, has just completed an original and deeply interesting work, "The Family: an Historical and Social Study." It considers the Prehistoric Family; The Family among the Greeks, Romans and Jews; The Family—the First Christian Centuries and the Middle Ages; The Family and the Church, Catholic and Protestant; The Family as an Institution, Divine and Human; The Family as a Basis of Social Order; The Family and its Individual Members; The Family and Property; The Family as a Social Institution; The Family Destroyer—Divorce; The Family and the Divorce Laws of the United States and Europe. The work is the first historical and philosophical study upon the important subject of divorce, and other social problems. It will be published by Lee & Shepard.

....The Popular Science Monthly for August will open with a richly illustrated article of great economic value entitled "Woods and the Destructive Fungi." The author, Mr. P. H. Dudley, a civil engineer of rising reputation, has for several years been studying the structure of those woods most commonly employed in the arts, with reference to the agencies concerned in their deterioration. The results of his investigations put quite a different aspect from the generally accepted one on the process of decay, and promise to be of vast industrial importance in their practical application.

Presbyterian Board of Publication's LATE BOOKS.

GRIFFEN ALLEY FOLK.

Showing that even those sorely degraded by intemperance may be raised from the gutter to new lives.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

FROM ACCADIA TO MACHPELAH.

In which the life of Abraham is made interesting by being made real.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.15

MABEL'S SUMMER.

A tale of Child life in Northern India.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, 85 cents.

RALPH WESTON'S SECRET.

Showing how the appetite fo strong drink may descend from father to daughter, and again from mother to son.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

THE WEDDED LIFE.

By REV. J. R. MILLER, D.D

A little volume intended for presentation to the newly-wedded, and containing a marriage certificate.

16mo. Price, 60 cents.

Address orders to

JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't,
1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,

Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St., New York, N. Y.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL

Finds pleasure in its Music. Bright Songs make the Children happy. If you are in need of a new set of Singing Books, examine the following:

Songs of Promise. For Sunday Schools, Prayer and Conference Meetings. By J. H. Tenney and E. A. Hoffman. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.

SONGS OF PROMISE fill this beautiful book, and they have a great variety, having been contributed by many able writers The book has 160 pages and 149 hymns, each with its own tune. Music and words mostly new.

Singing on the Way. By Mrs. Belle M. Jewett and Dr. Holbrook. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3 60.

A capital book, containing 1 0 pages of excellent songs, hymns, and "occasional" pieces, such as will be welcomed in the Sunday school. Each piece may be played upon the organ.

Song Worship. For Sunday Schools. By L. O. Emerson and W. F. Sherwin. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.

A book that is intended to lift the service of song in the Sabbath school above the ordinary level, without putting it beyond the reach of the vast majority.

Fresh Flowers. For Infant Classes in Sunday Schools. By Emma Pitt. Price 25 cents; per dozen, $2.40.

A dainty little book, as full as it can hold of sweet melodies with pretty verses set to them, such as every child will understand and enjoy.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y.

Useful for Everybody.

MANY MISTAKES MENDED

IN READING, WRITING and SPEAKING.

12mo. 320 pages. $1 by mail.

N. TIBBALS & SONS, New York.

NATURE'S CURE FOR CONSTIPATION, Violent Purgation is Obsolete.

To Assist, not to Attack, Nature, is the true Function of Progressive Medicine.

TARRANT'S Effervescent Seltzer APERIENT

Sick-Headache, AND DYSPEPSIA.

Cures Constipation, Cures Sick Headache, Cures Dyspepsia, by gently urging the sluggish secretive and excretory organs to perform their duties. This delightful remedy, pleasant to the taste, mild yet certain in action, economical in price, has stood the test of time, and for more than forty years has been prescribed by our best physicians It should be found in every family medicine chest. Sold by druggists everywhere.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for

PLATFORM ECHOES

or LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART,

By John B. Gough.

His last and crowning life work, brim full of thrilling interest, humor and pathos. Bright, pure, and good, full of "laughter and tears," it sells at sight to all. To it is added the Life and Death of Mr. Gough, by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT. 1000 Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $100 to $200 a month made. Distance no hindrance as we give Extra Terms and Pay Freights. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers, 805 Broadway, New York

---

See this "NOTES ON DECORATIVE ART," free for postage. Covering information on Tapestry, Lustra, Kensington, Oil and Mineral Painting. Regular lessons by mail. Painted and chromo designs to rent. Orders executed.

42 W. 23d St., H. A. JOHNSON, New York

BARNES' NATIONAL INK.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free. FOR OIL.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

POPULAR LECTURES.

SUBJECTS

1.—The Romance of the Revolution.
2.—An Evening with Longfellow
3.—The Tudors
4.—Monologue—National Poems and Events

Address MRS. E. T. BARRETT,
SING SING, N. Y

GEO. MATHER'S SONS, PRINTING INK

Manufacturers. Superior Black and Colored Ink Lithographic and Plate Ink. Varnishes, etc. 60 John street, New York.

The Intelligencer is printed with our ink.

BARNES' INDIGO BLUE.

Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and endorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it. A. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 238 N. Second St., Phil., Pa.

THE CAROL

—A BOOK OF—

Religious Songs

—FOR THE—

Sunday School and the Home,

—BY—

CHARLES W. WENDTE,

With poetical contributions by

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Miss Louisa M. Alcott, Hezekiah Butterworth, and many others.

The Music, original and selected, by Geo. F. Root, J. R. Murray, J. B. Sharland, P. P. Bliss and J. B. Dykes, Stainer, Barnby, Handel, Mendelssohn and other eminent composers, old and new.

This work, long in preparation by an experienced Sunday School worker, contains over 200 separate musical selections, together with a number of musical and responsive services for the festival and ordinary occasions of the Sunday School and the Home Altar.

Price 35 cents each by mail, postpaid; $3.60 a dozen by express, charges not prepaid. Specimen Pages Free.

PUBLISHED BY

THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O.
The J. CHURCH CO., 19 E. 16th St., New York City.

N. W. HARRIS & CO.,

115-117 Monroe St., CHICAGO.

BONDS Of Counties, Cities, &c. of high grade a specialty. Send for descriptive lists.

BELLS.

McShane Bell Foundry
Finest Grade of Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS for CHURCHES, &c.
Send for Price and Catalogue. Address
H. McSHANE & CO.,
Mention this paper. Baltimore, Md

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Fire Alarms, Farms, etc. FULLY WARRANTED. Catalogue sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

MENEELY & COMPANY,
West Troy, N. Y. Bells,
For Churches, Schools, etc., also Chimes and Peals. For more than half a century noted for superiority over all others

CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO
SUCCESSORS IN BELLS TO THE
BLYMYER MANUFACTURING CO
CATALOGUE WITH 1500 TESTIMONIALS
CINCINNATI, O. BELLS, CHURCH, SCHOOL, FIRE-ALARM

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS, a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.

Address, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
25 CTS. 25 CTS.

CURE FOR THE DEAF

PECK'S PATENT IMPROVED CUSHIONED EAR DRUMS Perfectly Restore the Hearing, and perform the work of the natural drum. Invisible, comfortable and always in position. All conversation and even whispers heard distinctly. Send for illustrated book with testimonials, FREE. Address or call on F. HISCOX, 853 Broadway, New York. Mention this paper.

THE

Christian Intelligencer

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT

48 Church St., cor. Fulton, N. Y.,

BY THE

CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOC.

Editors:

REV. J. M. FERRIS, D.D.,
REV. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.

Associate Editor:

MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

TERMS,

$2.65 per annum.

Ministers and Theological Students, $2.

SINGLE COPIES, 3 CENTS.

☞ Read these Instructions carefully. ☜

ALL COMMUNICATIONS pertaining to the literary columns of the paper must be addressed to the Editors; and those inclosing manuscripts to be returned must be accompanied with envelopes stamped and addressed. No attention will be paid to anonymous communications.

THOSE relating to the business department, to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION, Box 2117, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIBERS, NOTICE.—The date following your name on the direction label informs you to what month and year your subscription is paid. If this date is not changed within two weeks after payment is made, drop us a postal card and we will investigate and reply. Please examine the date, and if in arrears, remit the amount due.

REMITTANCES ARE AT THE RISK OF THE SENDER, unless made by Draft, Check, or P. O. Money Order. These, if lost, can be readily replaced.

Checks, etc., to order of CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION.

IN CHANGING AN ADDRESS, it is necessary to send the OLD as well as NEW address. The change cannot be made unless this is done. And in order to prevent the loss of papers, it will be well to notify the office at least ten days before the contemplated change, as the mail lists are prepared that much in advance of each issue.

ALWAYS GIVE THE NAME OF THE P. O. where the paper is received.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

The Home.

AUNT MARJORIE'S CORNER.

IT is only when you bring your chairs and your knitting to the shady corner of the veranda, talking and listening, exchanging experiences and opinions, that this weekly symposium, dear friends, is the pleasant, helpful opportunity it was meant to be. In the summer we like to fancy ourselves gathered for social communion in the late afternoon or just after tea, with the voices of our children at their play coming to us, a little softened by the distance of a field or two from which wafts the fragrance of the new-mown hay. We hear this week from two always welcome contributors to "Aunt Marjorie's Corner."

Another Side of the Shield.

DEAR AUNT MARJORIE: It was delightful to have you tell us, June 30th, in your article on children and poetry, that you were not averse to childish nonsense now and then. You even "put in a plea for nonsense pure and unadulterated," and commended as wholesome the merry, rollicking rhymes without even the pill in the sugar plum.

But it seems that a pill has been found even in the most apparently simple doggerel. We have been told that all of Old Mother Goose's melodies have their moral, or at least their inner meaning, for grown folk, if we only knew how to find it. It would never occur to most of us to dig for hidden treasures in a child's garden. "Mother Goose for Old Folks" asserts, however, that these which we have always regarded as simple, or at least harmless words, have deep roots and spring from profound thought. Take, for example, these lines which you yourself quoted:

"Rock-a-by baby, thy cradle is green,
Father's a nobleman, mother's a queen,
Johnny's a piper, and pipes for the king,
Betty's a lady, and wears a gold ring."

"Oh golden gift of childhood,
That with its knightly touch
Transforms to more than royalty
The thing it loveth much!
Oh second sight bestowed alone
Upon the baby seer,
That the glory held in heaven's reserve
Discerneth even here!

Though he be the humblest craftsman,
No silk nor ermine plied
Could make the father seem a whit
More noble to the child.
And the mother—oh what queenlier crown
Could rest upon her brow
Than the fair and gentle dignity
It weareth to him now.

. . . . . .

"Oh golden gift of childhood,
If the talisman might last
How the dull present still would gleam
With the glory of the past.
But the things of earth about us
Fade and dwindle as we go,
And the long perspective of our life
Is truth and not a show."

(Mother Goose for Old Folks.)

Here is another root brought to the surface, the stalk of which seemed hollow enough as the children played with it in their little garden of rhymes:

"A twister in twisting would twist him a twist,
And twisting his twists seven twists he doth twist;
If one twist in twisting untwists from the twist,
The twister untwisting untwists the twist."

"A ravelled rainbow overhead
Let down to life its varying thread;
Love's blue; joy's gold; and fair between
Hope's shifting light of emerald green;
With either side in deep relief
A crimson pain—a violet grief.
Wouldst thou amid their gleaming hues
Clutch after those and these refuse.
Believe, as thy beseeching eyes
Follow their lines and sound the skies,
That there where fadeless glories shine
An unseen angel twists the twine.
And be thou sure what tint so e'er
The broken rays beneath may wear,
It needs them all, that, broad and white,
God's love may weave the perfect light!"

(Mother Goose for Old Folks.)

So, you see, the baubles with which the children play are gems after all, although there is not, superficially, much evidence of it.

I rarely, almost never, dear Aunt Marjorie, differ from you, yet when you lead us to infer from what you say that, generally, children like Mother Goose's nursery rhymes, I do not quite coincide with you in that view. I admit that nonsensical rhymes and stories that appeal to the imagination please children. I believe, as you do, that these little frothy nothings will do them no harm. But I think that children prefer things which assume at least the appearance of truth. They do not like to have their credulity imposed upon. As a child I detested Mother Goose. Will not some of your readers tell us how they felt about it?

The utterly nonsensical statements contained in the rhymes acted as a perpetual challenge to my childish sense of the fitness of things. If the half-formed ideas might be dignified by the term reasoning, the reasoning ran somewhat in this way: What? do you tell us that the cow jumped over the moon; that the little dog laughed; that the dish ran away with the spoon? etc. You cannot cheat us into believing that. It is not true. We know better than that! Four-and-twenty black birds baked in a pie, and when the pie was opened the birds began to sing? We don't believe it, for we have seen pies baked; they are put in the oven, and we know very well that birds could not live in a hot oven, and you ought to be ashamed to put such stories in print! For those were days in which we believed that the printed page was truth, or ought to be. I cannot but think that the strict diet of Heidelberg Catechism had something to do with that protest against what seemed a falsification of common life. And yet, on the other hand, how beautiful fancy-gilded stories, although equally untrue, were taken into our heart of hearts and never doubted because they were too spiritually delicate to be subjected to the same tests. Fairy stories never challenged credulity; they seemed quite possible, nay, probable. That animals should talk never seemed incredible. Those stories were charming in which cats and dogs and rabbits and all pet things chatted together. They seemed quite as probable as many other things we heard. But by the side of fairy stories and legends of birds and beasts, Mother Goose seemed coarse, and we were indignant that she should try to impose such nonsense upon us and try thus to belittle our comprehension.

What did we care that "Tom, the piper's son, stole a pig," and "was beat." He deserved it. And Mother Hubbard who appeared in such quaint pictures in our little story-books—she was an impostor, and all she did was false to every-day life; we resented her story and turned away; the recoil was the love of truth against imposition.

Jack Horner—well, we could sympathize with Jack. And Cinderella? Grandma has told us of a little Betty she knew, so very poor once, but who was so sweet and lovely that she married rich Mr. Von Castletop and lived in a beautiful white house with green blinds and a piazza all round it. Those being days of small experience and imperfect knowledge, and we did not doubt but that Betty herself might have gone through some transformation similar to that of Cinderella.

We should not forget that while children may have powers of comprehension and understanding, they have but little knowledge. Such things as come within their sphere they may pass judgment upon correctly, they recognize and can discriminate between the true and the false. As the law holds a man innocent until he is proved guilty, so the child believes to be true that which he hears until his knowledge and reason prove it to be false. While children love that which appeals to their imagination, at the same time it must not offend their common sense, and it seems to me that the secret of their acceptance or rejection of stories lies in that fact.

There is a great art in telling a story. The charm consists in knowing just how much to reveal and how much to withhold. Imagination rather than bold statement gives the glow that brightens and makes the unreal seem true.

A poor Irish girl with a fund of legendary lore used to tell us children stories which are remembered even yet, although the years of almost a lifetime have passed since then.

"There was once," said she, "a wicked woman who killed a little child and buried it under the great yew tree along the stone wall in the old churchyard. Whenever afterwards she walked under that tree she heard a little bird singing in the topmost branches, and he told all about it in his song. So it became known to everybody what the wicked woman had done."

"Did the bird really sing words, Nora?" we asked.

"Why she understood everything the bird said, and so it all came out!"

Nora had the art of telling a story.

We sat thinking it over in the summer twilight. It did not seem natural that the bird should make the revelation,—else how did it get to be known?

Said Nora one winter evening as pussy sat polishing her glossy coat before the blazing kitchen fire, "Old Granny Grope was walking out one evening in the dark woods. As she walked quickly on she met a great big black cat. The cat came straight up to her and says: 'Tell Blunderung that Hartermelow is dead.' So when the old woman got home she says to her daughter, 'I met a black cat in the woods to-night, and says she to me: "Tell Blunderung that Hartermelow is dead." 'Is she,' says their old gray cat that lay asleep in the corner, and she jumped right out of the open window and went off, and was never seen afterwards."

We looked at our cat and stooped over her to repeat the words in her hearing. Because she showed no sign of recognition, it was doubtless because she had no personal acquaintance with the cats in question. We none the less felt that we might, perhaps, touch some chord in pussy's heart to which she would reply in words.

And yet, is that any more reasonable than what Mother Goose tells? But when vague, undefined, and left to the imagination, then the truth is not challenged and the story gives pleasure.

GERTRUDE L. VANDERBILT.

Walking with God in the Nineteenth Century.

WE can believe that in the first century of our era there were actual sons of God, spiritual men in earthly scenes, heirs of glory and joint heirs with Christ, walking in the streets of Rome, Damascus, Ephesus and Jerusalem. So we can see how in every age God has called men to walk with Him, from Enoch down; but when it comes to the nineteenth century, with its great ecclesiastical organizations, its life by cooperation, its mistaking of "instrumentals for fundamentals," its "churchly world and worldly Church," its outward forms and inward death, its worship of the world-powers, its seeming sufficiency to itself,—it is not so easy to believe in an individual walk with God, a personal guidance from God, nor does the life of faith amid things of sense seem an easy thing; or, in other words, it is not easy to believe that I am as truly called of God as was the primitive believer of the catacombs. But it is a blessed fact that it is true. The life of faith is an unearthly life, whether lived in antediluvian ages or during the lifetime of Christ Himself upon the earth, or in the last decades of the nineteenth century. Believers in the unseen, believers in God, lovers of His Son, are as truly beams of light running up to God, or rather coming down from God into the darkness of this world, and are as truly sons of God in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation now, in these later years, as ever they were in the ages past.

If the powers of evil seem to us intensified as the centuries crowd on, then should we endeavor with all our individual energy to make positive good stand out in keener contrast with the evil. The more distinctly marked the inherent difference between good and evil becomes, by so much the more are Christians to be increasingly approaching that high type of embodied and concrete spirituality so preëminently shown us in the Epistles of the Apostle John. The more the powers of evil close down, the higher and more advanced should be the character of the spirituality of those who confess that they live to the unseen. This, then, is the high calling of those whose lives are cast in the closing years of the nineteenth century—to let their devotion and their spirituality be ever at white heat, to have what Jeremy Taylor calls "a persevering, a great, a passionate religion."

When a personal God seems to be reduced to an abstraction of science, and infinite intellectuality is offered to us instead of the old and precious word "I am thy God," is the very time to hold more firmly to a life of faith, to live more intently as seeing only "Him who is invisible." Living to God, walking with God in the streets of these, our modern cities, with all their modern appliances, under electric lights as truly and really as did Enoch in the Oriental fields under the light of stars, or as did the disciples when they walked on the hillsides of Olivet with the Master Himself, is the peculiar work given us of these times to do.

Conditions and circumstances change, but the life is one. The contest between living to the seen or to the Unseen is ever the same. It is not the question for us whether it is easier to live to God under the persecutions of a Nero, or amid the ease and worldliness of the nineteenth century. But it was the question then, and is the question now, of a human heart believing in the power of God to supply to it continual spiritual life through His Son.

MARY C. GATES.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

WHOEVER has a word to say about anything relating to the inner life, or quickening to the spiritual perception, whoever can cull a flower from her reading, or pick a bouquet from the roadside, whoever can send a bit of advice on some every-day practical concern, no matter how homely, since it is of the home as well as of the heart that we desire to converse here, will please write to AUNT MARJORIE, care of THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER, P. O. Box 2117, New York city.

Write on one side of the paper only, and use ink. This, friends, is your "Corner."

CHILDREN'S PORTFOLIO.

Because of the Blessed.

"BLESSED are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God," reverently repeated Jennie Martin one quiet Sabbath evening as she sat with her mother in their cosy little parlor, and added softly, "Mamma, I do want to be a peacemaker because of the blessed; it is very sweet to be called one of the children of God."

"Perhaps you may be a peacemaker, daughter; why not try to be one?" said the mother, laying her hand upon the curly, brown head.

"I do mean to, mamma; I will try to make peace between Sadie Coles and Grace Barnet, who used to be such loving friends and now will not speak to one another, and I am so very sorry about it," said Jennie in the same soft tone as that in which she had before spoken.

The mother encouraged the child in her good resolution, and on the following morning she went to school with it strong within her heart; she would make peace if possible, and have the joy of seeing the two girls reconciled and also the joy of claiming the blessed, as she termed the promise in the text.

She talked to Sadie and Grace separately, but neither would acknowledge that she had done the wrong—each blamed the other—so Jennie concluded that all she could do was to wait and watch for an opportunity to aid in making peace, trusting that it would come ere long.

It so happened that Sadie and Grace each had a talent for drawing, and both were working hard to obtain the prize which had been offered by their master to the pupil who should be found to excel in this beautiful art.

One day near the close of the week of which we have been speaking, Jennie observed Grace leaning over her drawing-book with a troubled look upon her face.

"What is the matter?" she asked in a tone of sympathy.

"Matter enough," answered the other. "I will be marked in drawing if this is not finished to-day, and I have lost my number-one pencil. Have you one, Jennie?"

"No, I haven't, but I know that Sadie Coles has two, and she will lend you one."

Grace would have quickly refused such offer had there been less at stake, but if she were marked in drawing it would probably end all her chances of winning the prize, and so she reluctantly consented to let Jennie ask for the needed pencil.

Jennie flew away on her errand of love, and soon acquainted Sadie with the state of the case. She ended by asking, "Now, will you lend Grace a pencil?"

"No, I will not. Lend her a pencil to help her to beat me in drawing, eh? I guess I'll lend her two! No, indeed, Jennie Martin! You may tell her instead that I am very glad she has lost her pencil."

"Oh, Sadie," commenced Jennie, but the other stopped her peremptorily. "Now there is no use of coaxing me, for she shall not have one of my pencils, so there!" and Sadie shut her lips firmly, as if by the action to enforce her words.

Jennie stood a moment in thought, and then from her pocket she drew a bright silver quarter and held it up to her companion's view. "Here," she said, "this is my very own, and I will give it to you if you will lend Grace the pencil."

"Will you truly? Well, there then. I wouldn't do it, though, for anybody but you."

Jennie, delighted at her success, flew away to Grace and gave her the pencil without a word as to how she obtained it.

Grace, opening her eyes in surprise and pleasure as she took it in hand, exclaimed: "Why, did she really lend it to me? It was kind of her, I am sure. I thought she wouldn't do it, but Sadie is a real kind girl if she did take offence at most nothing. I wish we were friends again," and the child looked wistful as she spoke.

"I wish you were," answered Jennie, and then ran away to avoid being questioned. Her silver piece that had made her feel so rich was gone, and she shed a few secret tears over the loss, yet comforted herself with the thought that it was because of the blessed. Perhaps peace would be brought about by it, and she would rather have that than whole pounds of candy.

Sadie, in the meantime, was feeling thoroughly uncomfortable over the part she had acted.

Her mind was so disturbed during the afternoon session that ere school closed she went to the teacher and begged to be allowed to speak to Jennie Martin. Consent was readily gained, and she engaged Jennie to wait to talk to her after school was dismissed.

The two met in the cloak-room, and then Sadie, with tearful eyes, returned the money and confessed to her wretchedness. "Do you think," she humbly asked, "that Grace would make up with me? The quarrel was my fault, I suppose. I asked her one Saturday to go walking with me and she refused because that new scholar, Susie Watson, was sick, and she thought she ought to go to see her. I thought Grace ought to consider me of greater consequence than a stranger, and said so, and then we quarreled and have been at enmity ever since. I knew it was mean to take your money, but was not really willing to do Grace a favor without some excuse for doing it;" and Sadie began to weep and sob as if her distress was indeed great.

"Grace longs to make up with you," returned Jennie, soothingly. "She sent your pencil back by me, and said it was very kind in you to lend it to her."

"Did she? did she really?" and Sadie ceased her sobbing and added joyfully: "Then you did not tell her a word about my meanness, did you, you darling girl?"

"No. I was hoping every minute that the pencil might make you love one another again."

"It is you that makes us love one another again," and Sadie flung her arms around her companion's neck and kissed her rapturously. Then together they went to Grace, who had gone home feeling more sad than ever over the estrangement.

A few words of explanation from Jennie, and the two who had been so widely separated were clasped in each other's arms, and peace was made.

After they had all rejoiced over the matter in childish fashion, Jennie said: "The silver piece I may spend as I please, and we will have with it a grand treat on Saturday afternoon in our shady front yard, and invite two or three more of the girls to share with us in it and our pleasure."

The others were pleased with the proposal, and Jennie, feeling sure that mamma would consent, went home overjoyed.

"I have got it, mamma, I have got it," she said as she entered where her mother was seated with her sewing.

"What, my dear? What have you got?" and the mother looked up expecting to see some treasure.

"I have got the blessed, mamma."

Mamma again asked for an explanation, and then the sweet little daughter told her story in her own simple way, and ended by asking, "Haven't I got it, mamma?"

"Yes, my dear child, I think you have indeed. You are a peacemaker, and the blessed with that is very sweet. May you always keep it before your mind: 'Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God.'" A. D. W.

Drink Water.

"OF course I will drink water," says George. "The horse and the ox drink it, and how strong they are! The trees drink it, and how tall they grow! My dog Tray drinks it, and how wise he is! I'll drink it, too, for I would like to be strong and grow tall and be wise."

"I'll drink water, too," said Clara. "The birds drink it, and how sweetly they sing! The flowers drink it, and how bright they look! My pets all drink it, and they are gay and loving and happy. So if I wish to sing smoothly, and look bright, and be gay and loving and happy, I will drink water. And I will try to get all my friends to drink it, too; for I see that in the houses where they drink beer and gin and rum they are not so good and happy as they are in the houses where they drink water."

And what says the man who has grown up to years and seen much of the world? He says those men do the best work who do not use alcoholic drinks. The coalman can carry more coal in a day when he drinks water than when he drinks beer. The men who work in the heat and blow glass and make up iron can do more work if they take no strong drink. Men who work in the fields can work more hours if they drink only water, or water with a little oatmeal or fruit-juice in it.

Men who work in banks or on railroads can be trusted more safely if they do not even drink wine or beer. Men who have money of their own take better care of it if they do not drink. Men who drink die off three times as fast as men who do not drink. Three fourths of the men in prison would not be there if they had drank only water. So the good man who has seen much of the world says water is the best drink.

And we will all drink water.—Youth's Temperance Banner.

Building the Nests.

"TWIT! twee!" sang the robin; "I think we'll build here;
I like the location." "And so do I, dear,"
His little spouse chirruped. So, high in the tree,
They set to work making their nest merrily.

"See! see!" piped the bobolink; "here's a nice nook,
Just down in a hollow, and over a brook."
"Oh my! how delightful!" his mate exclaimed. "Look!
What a sweet, pretty mirror we'll have in this brook!"

"Sweet! sweet!" trilled the bluebird; "the stump of this tree
A very nice site for a mansion would be."
"So sheltered and cosy! and then it's so new!"
Replied Mrs. Bluebird. "And look at the view!"

"Dear! dear!" cried a cat-bird; "these house-hunting days
A good, steady bird will be likely to craze.
I've searched all the bushes—" "There, darling, don't fret,"
His sober mate sang; "don't be seen in a pet."

"Twit! twit!" chirped the swallow; "the old home is there.
We'll move in this minute, its comfort to share.
Let other birds wander to build a new nest,
But, all the world over, the old home is best."

—George Cooper, in Harper's Young People.

A Dog that Could Count.

OLD Fetch, says a writer in St. Nicholas, was a shepherd dog and lived in the Highlands of the Hudson. His master kept nearly a dozen cows, and they ranged at will among the hills during the day. When the sun was low in the West, his master would say to his dog, "Bring the cows home," and it was because the dog did his task so well, that he was called Fetch.

One sultry day he departed as usual upon his evening task. From scattered, shady and grassy nooks, he at last gathered all the cattle into the mountain road leading to the distant barnyard.

A part of the road ran through a low, marshy spot bordered by a thicket of black alder, and into this one of the cows pushed her way and stood quietly. The others passed on, followed some distance in the rear by Fetch.

As the cows approached the barnyard gate he quickened his pace and hurried forward, as if to say, "I'm here, attending to business." But his complacency was disturbed as the cows filed through the gate. He whined a little and growled a little, attracting his master's attention. Then he went to the high fence surrounding the yard, and standing on his hind feet, peered between two of the rails. After looking at the herd carefully for a time, he started off down the road again on a full run. His master now noticed that one of the cows was missing, and he sat down on a rock to see what Fetch was going to do about it. Before very long he heard the furious tinkling of a bell, and soon Fetch appeared, bringing in the perverse cow at a rapid pace, hastening her on by frequently leaping up and catching her ear in his teeth.

Little Heads Together.

QUESTIONS ABOUT PALM TREES.

1. What place in the desert of Arabia had seventy palm trees?
2. What ancient city was called "the city of palm trees?"
3. What prophetess dwelt under a palm tree?
4. During what feast did the Israelites live in booths made partly of palm branches?
5. On what beautiful doors were palm trees carved?
6. What prophet, in speaking of the gods of the heathen, used the expression, "They are upright as the palm tree?"
7. Where is it said, "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree?"
8. What prophet lamented the withering of the palm tree?
9. What village mentioned in the New Testament had a name meaning "the house of dates?"
10. Who once went forth to meet Jesus bearing branches of palm trees?
11. Who beheld in a vision a great multitude with palms in their hands?

Answers to Puzzles of June 30th.

Riddle.—One of the five stones with which David killed Goliath.

Engima.—Speech is silver, but silence is golden.

Beheadings.—P-ray. L-end. A-corn. T-reason. O-pen. Plato.

Correct answers from Rappie Bowne, "Prague," Lewis D. and Jennie Labagh.

Let the People Decide It.

MR. EDITOR: The sentiment of the INTELLIGENCER on the temperance question, expressed editorially a few weeks ago, is indeed timely and must meet with the approval of many advocates of temperance who yet strongly oppose the so-called Prohibition party and their movements. An endeavor must be made to rescue one of the greatest of the Christian graces from political corruption; it is a laudable effort and it has been given an impetus by the INTELLIGENCER in thus proclaiming opposition to a mixture of prohibition and politics at the polls. The temperance question has been too long engulfed in political mire, though thanks are due the Voice and other temperance papers for the education of the people on the great question.

While there is life there is hope. The children of Israel were forty years in the wilderness being educated to take possession of the promised land. Our own country was about eighty years contending with slavery in the hands of politicians, and in all probability would have continued so to this day had not God spoken to Abraham Lincoln to go forward and with one stroke of his pen strike a blow that removed the curse forever from our land. And God says to us to-day, If you will have faith in Me I will remove from you this greater curse than slavery, for it enslaves not only the body but the soul—not only of one race but of every race. God says very plainly that we are our brothers' keepers, and He performs His works through human instrumentalities. In God's name this curse of intemperance can be removed, not by politicians but by the people. Let active, wide awake temperance advocates canvass the country from Maine to California to secure signatures to a petition urging President Cleveland to call for a special election in every polling district in the United States on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in May, 1887, that the people may vote whether they will or will not longer have intoxicating liquors sold as a beverage.

To this end an association of workers, with officers, etc., allied in no way with the third or Prohibition party, must be formed; the work will then go forward harmoniously. Let this theory be ventilated freely by the press and, we doubt not, many of the leading friends of temperance will fall in line and in less than two years a new order of things will have been instituted that will benefit our country more than any can know or predict at this day. As the President has repeatedly declared that he was elected to do the will of the people, he must grant the petition. What, then, would be the result? Would not all Christians, all members of temperance societies, all good, moral men and nearly all inebriates, in fact, vote favorably for the issue? It cannot be doubted. But perhaps the leading argument in favor of this project is the fact that not the slightest partisan feeling can be shown at the polls: Democrat and Republican alike can vote with a consciousness that neither is taking advantage of the other. Opposition will be shown only by the manufacturers of and dealers in the liquors, and this will be but as chaff and will avail nothing. I firmly believe that these results will follow if the press, clergy and temperance workers will but take the matter in their own hands. The people are waiting: will the priests take up the ark, for our Joshua says, Go forward.

FAITH.

GLEN, N. Y., April 30, 1886

Western Turkey

REV. DR. E. E BLISS sends to the Congregationalist a report of the 45th annual meeting of the Western Turkey Mission of the American Board, when the stations showed a steady growth and some instances of marked religious interest, and mentions an unusual movement in these words:

"In some of the stations, notably at Sivas and Ceserea, there are reformatory movements of a marked evangelical character, going on outside the ranks of the professed Protestants, having Sunday services of worship, attended by hundreds, prayer meetings, Bible classes and Bible distribution, upon all which the ecclesiastics look with little favor, but dare not attempt to hinder, and which are leading to a great increase of intelligence in religious matters, and to the manifestation of what cannot but be regarded as true piety. These movements are, without doubt, a result of missionary labor in the country. For the present they run in their own channels, but give, therefore, none the less joy."

Dr. Bliss then notices a new phase of the work of the mission, which has grown naturally out of what has been done, and raises the question how far and to how great a degree foreign missionary organizations may properly carry their educational system. He writes:

"A number of the sessions of the annual meeting were occupied with the question of the Higher Education. In the early years of the mission, while common primary schools to teach reading, writing and other elementary branches were established wherever missionary work was begun, and while at central points classes were formed for the training of teachers and other helpers, very little was attempted in the way of what is called the higher education. Now the times have changed. The rising intelligence of the communities about us all over the country calls for schools of a higher grade, for educational institutions for pupils of both sexes, giving to them advantages afforded in the high schools and academies of America. This call is in many cases, by choice for obvious reasons, addressed to missionaries. Listening to it, and convinced that such schools are not only desirable for the mental training of the young, but afford admirable opportunities to present to the minds of pupils, at a most impressible age and under most favorable circumstances, the doctrines and precepts of the Gospel, a number of high schools, increasing from year to year, have been of late established under the auspices of the mission. But the call waxes louder—comes from all parts. We are confronted with the question of going into the work of general education. Have we as missionaries a call to it? To what extent should missionary funds and missionary strength be given for education?'

These questions are before other missionary organizations, and will perhaps be referred to the churches represented by the Boards. High schools and academies will meet the demand for the present, but colleges will be called for soon. Shall, then, the foreign missionary Boards undertake to establish a complete system of Christian schools, from primary schools to colleges?

Of increasing exhibitions of enmity by the Turks, he says:

"The present attitude of the Turkish Government towards the missionary work, not only in this mission but in all parts of the empire, is ominous of very serious trouble in the future. A law has been passed forbidding the opening of any, even the most common school, in any part of the country without a special authorization from the central government. The law was at first declared to have no reference to existing schools, but simply to regulate the future, but in repeated and multiplying instances it is being applied to schools which have had years of quiet prosperity. Such are peremptorily closed, and official authorization from the capital demanded as the indispensable condition of reopening. There is no such treatment of Mohammedan schools, in fact very little enforcement of the law except upon the schools of evangelical Armenians, and especially upon those with which missionaries have to do. The ominous character of the movement is not that official authorization is required for schools, but that insuperable obstacles, evidently of design, are thrown in the way of securing any authorization. There is much to indicate a purpose on the part of our rulers to move on in the same line, and attempt to close not only the high schools, but the places of worship, from which it is thought are proceeding influences which imperil the foundations of the Mohammedan system."

The "Willie."

I WAS calling at the house of a merchant in New York not long since, and before I came away he was kind enough to invite my attention to his collection of paintings, some of which were doubtless very fine, and as he pointed to one and another he told me something of their history. This he had selected from a gallery in Paris; that had been painted expressly for him in Berlin, and so on. There was a tone of pride in his speech as he descanted upon the artistic merits and money value of each.

As we were coming out of the room his eye rested upon a modest little colored photograph that hung beside the door. At once his tone became subdued and pathetic, as he said: "I value that little picture more than all in the room." It was the picture of a boat, with sail spread, and within it were four or five persons. A pennant waving from the mast bore the name of "Willie."

"I must tell you about that boat," said he. "One summer morning a few years ago, the mail brought me a letter from Saratoga. It was from the Secretary of our Foreign Missions, and told me that the missionaries out on the coast of Africa desired a sailboat to carry them along the coast and up the rivers to visit the different stations. The letter told of the cost of such a boat, and the writer hoped a few friends would be willing to contribute to its purpose. I handed the letter to my wife, remarking that I supposed we must give something toward it. This was agreed to, but no amount was mentioned. The next morning," said he, "my wife told me she had been thinking in the night about that boat, and she had a plan which she hoped I would not discourage. 'If you are willing,' she added, 'I wish we might give that boat in memory of our dear departed Willie.' I assented, and promised to write at once and say we would give the whole. I had the boat built to order and fitted out as well as could be, and it went out to Africa as a missionary boat in memory of our little boy. The photograph was taken out there, and those men are the missionaries who use her in the cause of the Master. I never before felt any great interest in foreign missions, but since that time it has seemed to me that there is nothing in the world so noble, so heroic, so Christlike as the work of those men who have left home and all its comforts to carry the Gospel to the heathen. One of the missionaries came back to this country and was a guest for awhile in our home, and I felt that I had a special interest in him and his work."—Standard of the Cross.

A MINISTER had preached a simple sermon upon the text, "And they brought him to Jesus." As he was going home his little daughter, walking beside him, said, "I like that sermon so much!" "Well," inquired her father, "whom are you going to bring to Jesus?" A thoughtful expression came over her face as she replied, "I think, papa, that I will just bring myself to Him." Her father thought that would do admirably for a beginning.

THE following story is told in the Advance: Mr. George H. Stuart, acting as the representative of the Christian Commission during the war, asked a colonel the password. He wished to go out of the lines. "Chicago," said the colonel. But the sentry said it was not the word, and came near shooting him in the night. He went back to the colonel, who said, "What a fool I was! That was yesterday's word, I remember. To-day's is 'Massachusetts.'" Mr. Stuart, after giving the sentry the right word, added, "And now, my young friend, let me ask if you know the password to heaven!" "Thank God, I do, Mr. Stuart," he said. I learned it from you in a Sunday-school class years ago, and I trust have acted on it. 'The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin.'"

Financial.

TUESDAY, July 20th.

THE imports of merchandise at this port last week were valued at $7,451,182, and the exports at $5,543,025. The export of specie amounted to $85,681. Exchange was dull and sold at the end of the week at $4 86 1-2 for 60 day bills and $4.87 3-4 for sight drafts for sterling. It is said that the buying of securities on foreign account has been steady, and will be followed as usual by sales on a rise, when gold may be exported again. All the world speculates in Wall street.

The report of the Associated Banks of this city and vicinity, connected with the Clearing House here, showed for the week a reduction of $1,388,600 in loans, of $1,969 400 in specie, an increase in legal tenders of $2,815,100 and in deposits of $1,584,900. The surplus of reserve was increased by $449,475, and became $13,610,925. The supply of money was larger and the rate on call loans ranged from 1 to 3 per cent, the average being below 2 per cent. The rate on the best commercial paper was 3 1-2 to 4 per cent.

A rise in wool attracts attention. Wool is scarce and in active demand, and manufacturers of woollens anticipate better prices. The trade in iron and steel is also brisk at full prices. In the West the heaviest output of pig iron on record has been absorbed. Steel rails have been in demand and at remunerative prices.

The quotations for grain have been fairly steady as it has become known that the crop of spring wheat and oats in the Northwest has been certainly seriously reduced by heat and drought. It is even claimed that over a large area the yield of spring wheat will fall 50 per cent below the average. European markets are reported as steady. No rise is to be expected there, except upon compulsion and at the last moment. This country is to be made to carry the surplus until it becomes positively unsafe to reduce the stock in Europe to a lower point. Quotations for August delivery were here on Saturday: Wheat 86 1-2, corn 46 1 2, oats 34 cents. Sales for July are a fraction better. Prices of the near future are simply dependent on who can hold out the longest—this or the other side of the Atlantic. That the stock of wheat is steadily declining is beyond question. Cotton closed on Saturday at: July 9.43–44, Aug. 9.45–46, Sept. 9.40–41, Oct. 9.30–31, Nov. 9.29–30, Dec. 9.31–32, and is rather dull, but steady. Hay is more firmly held, for although in some sections the yield is heavy, in others it has been largely affected by drought. Choice timothy is held at 85 to 92 1 2 cents, clover mixed at 45 to 55. No. 1 rye straw is worth 80 to 85 cents, No. 2 55 to 65, oat 40 to 50, and wheat 30 to 45 cents.

The Stock Market is steady, still has a strong undertone, and the fluctuations are moderate, but there is doubt as to how much northwestern roads may be affected by short crops, and disagreement still continues among the coal roads.

News of the Week.

(Continued from page five.)

SATURDAY, 17.—It is stated that the preliminaries of an extradition treaty have been arranged between England and the United States providing for the surrender of dynamiters and other conspirators of that class. The report is generally discredited. ...The duel between General Boulanger and Baron Lareinty takes place to day at nine o'clock....Mr. Gladstone gives a banquet to some of his political friends....Starvation reported at St. Johns, N. F. There is no fish to be caught, only three days' work to be given in a fortnight at three shillings a day....The gas receiver in the West End Hotel, at Long Branch, exploded, and three men were injured. The flames were put out before the hotel caught fire....A sewer gas explosion took place at Pawtucket, and a number of wooden buildings were mined. A large hole was made in the earth where the gas had forced its way through....The River and Harbor bill passed. The Senate appropriates between $14,000,000 and $15,-00,000. The New York harbor gets $766,875 and the State of New York $390,230....Miss Annie Wyckoff, living at South Elizabeth, N. J., was caught between the wheels of an east bound train and killed. Jesse J. Catlin, in trying to save her life, received severe injuries, and his recovery is doubtful....A lamp exploded in the new Aqueduct at One Hundred and Seventy-eighth street. Five men were terribly burned and two will probably die. ....Caterpillars are making sad havoc among the trees in Brooklyn and New York.

MONDAY, 19.—There is a great deal of interest shown in political circles in London, especially among the Irish, in the new extradition treaty between England and the United States. ..Mr. Gladstone has stated that he has decided to resign and conduct an uncompromising opposition.. Prince Napoleon is about to start for New York to meet his son on the completion of his trip around the world....Paymaster George R. Watkins of the United States Navy has disgraced himself as an embezzler and deserter. He is charged with embezzling funds of the Navy, and misappropriating balances of dead men and subscriptions for their gravestones, and charged desertion to escape trial by court-martial. His trial is in progress on the United States sloop-of-war "Ossipee," at Yokohama ...A large store house at South and Roosevelt streets, N. Y. city, filled with barrels of flour, collapsed last night. Three men reported injured, but it is feared that some are buried in the ruins....The New York Architectural Terra Cotta Works at Long Island City was destroyed by fire Saturday night. Damages not over $100,000....One of the gangplanks of the steamer "Columbia" gave way yesterday while it was crowded with people leaving Rockaway for New York and Brooklyn, and thirty people were thrown in the water; no one was drowned and only three injured....The elm trees at Flushing, L. I., are being destroyed by a saw fly. The fly is believed to have immigrated from Germany in some unknown way....The great bi-centenary celebration at Albany was inaugurated yesterday by appropriate religious services in the churches. It is to extend through several days.

TUESDAY, 20.—The popular vote in the British elections results in a Unionist majority of 272,682....Henry Ward Beecher lectured in Exeter Hall last night on "The Reign of the Common People." The Hall was crowded....Revolutionists defeated in Mexico with heavy loss in killed and wounded....The full text is given in to-day's papers of the extradition treaty with England now pending in the U. S. Senate, with an explanatory letter from Minister Phelps....The steamer "Gate City," of the Boston & Savannah Steamship Line, sunk off the Island of Naushon, in Vineyard Sound, yesterday....Baron de Courcel has resigned as French Ambassador to Germany. ....Albany recalls with rejoicing two hundred years ago. The school children had their frolic in the forenoon of yesterday, and the trade societies parade....Governor Hill reserves his decision as to the pardon of the Theiss boycotters.

Notice to Subscribers.

The little yellow label on your wrapper informs you to what time your subscription is paid. Kindly consult same, and if in arrears remit the amount due.

Our readers will confer a favor upon the publishers of this paper and, perhaps, find it to their own advantage if, when answering an advertisement found in these columns, mention is made that it was seen in THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

INDIGESTION, DYSPEPSIA, nervous prostration, and all forms of general debility relieved by taking Mensman's Peptonized Beef Tonic, the only preparation of beef containing its entire nutritious properties. It is not a mere stimulant like the extracts of beef, but contains blood-making, force-generating, and life-sustaining properties; is invaluable in all enfeebled conditions, whether the result of exhaustion, nervous prostration, over work, or acute disease; particularly when resulting from pulmonary complaints. Caswell, Hazard & Co., Proprietors, New York. Sold by druggists.

Market Report.

Review of the New York Market for Butter, Cheese, etc. Reported by DAVID W. LEWIS & CO., Produce Commission Merchants, 49 Pearl St., New York.
Commission on Butter, Eggs, Poultry, etc., is five per cent; Flour, Grain, etc., 2½ per cent.
Marking-plates furnished when desired.

NEW YORK, July 17, 1886.

BUTTER.—Receipts for the week, 51,016 pks.; exports 3,186 pks.

With the exception of fresh high-flavored butter sales are slow and sluggish. Receipts continue heavy. Exporters took very sparing of good to fine Western creameries at 16a17c., and fully one-half of exports were low grades for German account costing 8a10c. per lb. Lines of fancy Western creameries brought 17½a18c. for local and speculative account, and that is the price for best State creamery make in pails, and even 18½c. is made for some specials. At the close fine creameries in line and fancy butter are not freely offered. After leaving top qualities the market is dull and prices irregular and lower. The fact is there are about 200 000 pks. of butter stored here in ice-houses, and it is a heavy weight of stock to be hanging over the market, and there can probably be no improvement in common to fair and medium grades until some portion of it is sold down. Fresh receipts of fine newly-made butter, both creamery and dairy, are wanted and prices are firm. We quote:

Fancy creamery	18@ 18½
do dairy (selections)	16 @16½
Good to fine	14 @15
Poor to common	9 @12½

CHEESE.—Receipts for the week, 86,367 boxes; exports 68,159 boxes.

Our market started in strong and receipts early in the week were quick taken at 8a8½a8¼c. for finest factories, and best night milk skims sold up to 6a 6½c. Wednesday and Thursday supplies increased and buyers tried hard to "knock" prices, and in some few instances did, but market closed with stocks well cleared and prices firm. We quote:

Factory, white, full cream, finest	8½@ 8¼
" colored, " "	8⅛@ 8¼
" good to fine "	7 @ 8
" skims	1 @ 6

EGGS.—Receipts for the week were 15,498 bbls.

Demand was good all the week and prices a trifle higher for all fresh-laid stock. We quote:

Near-by marks, fresh eggs	15 @15½
Western and Canada	14 @14½

Publisher's Department.

SINCE LADIES HAVE BEEN ACCUSTOMED to use Glenn's Sulphur Soap in their toilet their personal attractions have been multiplied, and it is seldom they are seen disfigured with blotches and pimples, or rough or coarse skins. Sold by Druggists, Grocers and Fancy Goods Dealers.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap heals and beautifies, 25c.
German Corn Remover kills Corns, Bunions, 25c
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye—Black & Brown, 50c.
Pike's Toothache Drops cure in 1 Minute, 25c.

Louisville, Ky., April 1st, 1882.

Bailey Reflector Co.—Gents: We take pleasure in testifying that your reflectors are a complete success in the diffusion of light over every part of the auditorium of our new church building. Small print can be read in any part of the room, and all who have seen it unite in declaring it is the most delightful light in the city. Respectfully,

ENOS CAMPBELL,
Pastor Third Christian Church.

When, by reason of a cold or from other cause, the stomach, liver, and kidneys become disordered, no time should be lost in stimulating them to action. Ayer's Pills act quickly, safely, and surely. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicines.

Catarrh is a very prevalent and exceedingly disagreeable disease; liable, if neglected, to develop into serious consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, effecting a radical and permanent cure of catarrh. 100 doses $1.

Bronchitis is cured by frequent small doses of Piso's Cure for Consumption.

MARRIAGES.

DEBAUN—DEBAUN.—At Pearl River, N. Y., on June 30, by Rev. E. Lodewick, John DeBaun, of Silverton, South Wales, Australia, to Rachel DeBaun, of Pearl River, N. Y.

DAVIS—BEATTY.—At the parsonage of the Reformed church at Stone Ridge, N. Y., July 1, by Rev. Wm. W. Schomp, Geo. W. Davis and Julia E. Beatty, the former of the town of Olive, and the latter of the town of Marbletown, N. Y.

DEATHS.

Obituary notices five cents per line (nine word to the line.) For subscribers we will insert fifteen lines free; all lines in excess of that number will be charged same as non-subscribers.

JUDSON.—At Stockport, Col. Co., N. Y., June 17, at the residence of her father-in-law, Frederick Judson, Esq., Emma, wife of Charles R. Judson, and daughter of Elizabeth and the late Alfred Ostrom.

It would be easy to fill up this memorial sketch with a tribute of loving and truthful praise for one whose death has made so sore a wound in kindred hearts.

Attractive in person, of superior and cultivated mind, refined and delicate in taste and sensibilities, graceful and gentle in manner, her character was rounded into beautiful symmetry by a tender, loving spirit which linked affection to admiration in those who knew her best.

When the brief sickness assumed an alarming type and the startled family circle heard the call to surrender this beloved one, it seemed more than heart and flesh could bear. There were so many reasons why she should live. It was so hard to lose so much "of life and love."

Only a little more than a year before, the father's death brought the broken circle into closer dependence on each other's love and sympathy.

Less than a year a bride, it seemed hard to be removed so soon from those who loved her so well and needed her so much. But the love which called her was stronger than that which would have kept her, and the voice of her summons was tender but firm. The prayer "I will that she be with me where I am," outweighed all our selfish petitions.

"Don't call me back from heaven," was her testimony that brighter scenes were opening to her vision, that to her "to die was gain." So on one of the beautiful June days she loved so well she was laid to rest.

But holy peace came to and abides with those who left her there, because they loved her and rejoiced that her spirit had gone to Him in whom all the family on earth and in heaven are one.

Notices and Acknowledgments

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—Evangelical but not denominational. Prints in 147 languages in aid of foreign missions; grants religious reading to the needy, sends colporters to millions in our highways and hedges, and to the immigrants in Castle Garden and elsewhere. This work depends wholly on charitable gifts. Donations and legacies are earnestly solicited. A summary of the sixtieth year mailed free. O. R. Kingsbury, Treasurer, 150 Nassau street, New York.

FULTON STREET DAILY NOON PRAYER-MEETING,
113 Fulton Street, and 58 Ann Street,
Just east of Broadway, near William Street.
COME IN, REST, AND PRAY.
Stop 5, 10 15 or 20 minutes, or the hour, as your time permits.

THE Hudson River Ministerial Association will meet in the Reformed Church of Kinderhook on Monday, July 26th, at 3 P.M. Exegesis—Monday, 3.30 P.M., by Rev. J. B. Drury, D.D., of "Anti-Christ." Sermon—Monday, 7.30 P.M., by Rev. J. G. Gebhard. Essay—Tuesday, 9.30 A.M., by Rev. G. Lefevre, on "Ministerial Plagarism." Members expecting to attend please send postal to Rev. E. A. Collier, D.D., Kinderhook, N. Y. J. B. DRURY, Sec.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall-st., N. Y.

JAMES PYLE'S

PEARLINE
The Great Invention,
For EASY WASHING,
IN HARD OR SOFT, HOT OR COLD WATER.
Without Harm to FABRIC or HANDS
and particularly adapted to Warm Climates.
No family, rich or poor, should be without it.
Sold by all Grocers, but beware of vile imitations. PEARLINE is manufactured only by
JAMES PYLE, NEW YORK.

SCROFULA

Humors,

Erysipelas,

Canker, and

Catarrh,

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 90½ Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,
Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

AGENTS coin money with our Amateur Photo outfit, and collecting family pictures to enlarge. Special 30 day offer. Empire Copying Co., 281 Canal St., New York.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 Days. No Pay until Cured. J. L. STEPHENS, M. D., Lebanon, Ohio.

The Church.

Her Faith and Mine.

'TIS eventide in a far-off land,
The "land of the rising sun;"
High over the valleys soft clouds are seen
Arising to meet the hilltops green,
Where they meet and blend into one.
Far in the distance a snow-capped mount
From the verdant plain arose,
While nearer with many a graceful bend,
And murmuring song that knows no end,
A silvery river flows.
So enchanting the scene, so quiet the hour,
It seemed that the Prince of peace
Had dwelt in the land, had walked on the wave,
And, in that love that is mighty to save,
Had bid all tumult cease.

But see! beyond those palm trees fair,
A heathen temple stands
With its heathen idol, ghostly and grim,
Whose hideous features had grown dim
By the touch of human hands.
Suns rise and set, years come and go,
And still that heathen throng
Come with their joys, their griefs, their cares,
To offer their unavailing prayers
At the feet of that dreadful wrong.

But saddest of all that sad-eyed group,
Are the mothers who come and go,
O'er many wild, unbeaten tracks,
With suffering infants on their backs,
And in all their heathen woe.
E'en as we gaze, behold a form
Slowly approach the place,
When, with entreaties loud and wild,
She takes the hand of the helpless child,
And touches the idol's face.
Vain, useless, all. Death claims his own;
And now in deep despair,
And with an agonizing cry,
Her empty arms she tosses high,
But she grasps only—empty air.

O mothers, who dwell in Christian lands,
Can you not recall the day
When you knelt by the side of a dainty cot
Where, 'neath robes your loving hands had wrought,
Your suffering darling lay?
You brushed the curls from the cold, damp brow
Of the helpless little one;
You gazed on the pallid little face,
But you only dared to pray for grace
To say, "Thy will be done."

Perchance the pitying Father heard,
And spared the chastening rod;
Oh, how your grateful thanks rang out!
It seemed that heaven echoed the shout,
And praised our living God.
Perhaps He claimed it. Then you knew
His own He did but claim;
But your faith was strong, and you could say,
"The Lord who gave has taken away,
Blest be His holy name."

O ye weary workers, arise, arise,
And work while it is day;
For the Christians' faith that shines so clear,
For the Christians' God who stands so near,
That He hears us when we pray.

—Mrs. C. Jacobs, in Journal and Messenger.

Absent Members.

IN 1876, the church at A. reported a membership of 263, sixty-three of whom were absent. Near the end of the next ecclesiastical year the church called a new pastor. Apparently with the desire to have a thorough house-cleaning before the new servant came, a committee was appointed "to revise the roll." The thoroughness with which they did their work is apparent from the fact that, although thirteen members were admitted and but six removed during the year, the next annual report indicates that the church consisted then of 175 members, none of whom were absent. Beginning with this for a basis, the church made its annual reports until 1882, when it reported a membership of 285, forty seven of whom were absent. At that time, if all whose names were on the roll had been counted, the church would have reported 324 members, eighty-six of whom were absent. Two or three somewhat solemn questions began at this time to agitate the minds of the officers of the church. One was whether they were telling the truth in their annual reports; and another, more solemn than this, was whether the church was fulfilling its covenant with these absent brethren and sisters. The answers which had to be given to these questions brought the officers under conviction of sin and led to repentance and reformation. An accurate list of absentees was made out. It was discovered that about fifty of the eighty-six were lost, in the sense that the pastor and church did not know who of them were living and who were dead, or where the living were residing. A systematic effort was made to discover the facts about these, and to put the church in right relations with all the absentees. After four years of such labor the church can now report that all but five of these absentees have been found, and that sixty-two of them have been removed from the church in legitimate ways, and that twenty-three of the remaining twenty-four are still retained in the church at their own request, or the request of their friends, until they secure a permanent residence somewhere, or until skeptical doubts or religious derelictions are either overcome or so confirmed that the church shall feel compelled to remove them by discipline. Of the sixty-two, five are dead, seven have been removed by discipline, either at their own request as destitute of religious experience and faith, or upon evidence that they were not living Christian lives; the membership of four was terminated because all hope of ever finding them had failed, and the church could no longer fulfil its covenant relation with them; the remainder received letters of dismission in some form. From this experience of a single church the following deductions are drawn:

1. Our churches are very seriously neglectful of their duty to absent members. It is believed that the conduct of this church, which permitted fifty of its members to be practically lost, is fairly typical of the conduct of many other churches, and that the committee which dropped out of sight some sixty of their brethren and sisters simply did what many another church committee has done. But does the church which permits or sanctions such things fulfill its sacred covenant assumed with every one who enters the church, to watch over him with all Christian fidelity and tenderness? Moreover, certain ways resorted to for making compensation for this neglect seem very unfortunate and unscriptural. Sometimes the names of absent members are put into a "retired list," and not counted in the annual report, or, as in the case referred to, they are simply ignored when the report is made. Not only does this commit the church to an untruth, but it tends to relieve the church and its officers from the due sense of responsibility concerning these wandering sheep. Sometimes their "names are dropped" by action of a committee. But whatever is done with these "names," they are still members of the church, for the whole church has covenanted with them, and no committee can annul that covenant. Sometimes they are dropped out by action of the church before all proper efforts have been made to find them and persuade them to take a right attitude toward the church; but this, surely, is a violation of the covenant. The mere fact that a brother or a sister is absent from the town where the church is located, is not a ground for this extreme church discipline. Until every means is used to find him and has failed, this ought not to be done. A "standing rule" which excludes one from the church after one or two years' absence, is unchristian. It reveals and it fosters a low and false idea of the sacredness of church membership.

2. There is no necessity for the accumulation of a long list of absent members. The faithful use of Scriptural means will prevent this. The annual, or at least the frequent printing of the church roll with the residences of all members, tends to prevent members being lost. If the pastor or other officers or members of the church would write frequently to the absentees, it would not only be a means of grace to both parties, but would lead many to take letters who now neglect this duty. Public prayer for absent members, and frequent instruction and exhortation from the pulpit and in the prayer-meeting concerning the duty of those who may remove to keep in communication with the church so long as they remain members of it, and to apply for letters as soon as they are permanently located elsewhere, will check the increase of careless absenteeism.

Our fathers held that there were but three ways out of a church, viz., by death, by discipline, or by letter. We need not add to these: but discipline is of various sorts and degrees, and letters may be variously worded. If a member has been long absent, and the church cannot secure satisfactory evidence that he has been faithful to his Christian covenant through that period, the letter of dismission should state this; or if he has fallen into some grievous sin of which there is a hope that he has repented, the letter may be so worded as to refer to this. And, further, if a church member whose moral conduct is above reproach, affirms that he has lost his Christian faith or purposes, and desires to be released from the false position of seeming to profess to what he does not hold, the church, after it has done what it can to recover him, may properly remove him from its membership. Church membership should always be voluntary, never should it be a matter of compulsion. An absent member who refuses to answer letters of inquiry, or who is hopelessly lost, may properly be removed on these grounds.

The last Year Book reports nearly sixty thousand absent members, or about one seventh of the membership of our churches; and this after deducting those who have been "retired" and "dropped." This seems unnecessary and disgraceful. The evil cannot be cured by increasing our neglect and carelessly casting out those who are absent. Our churches and pastors ought to be more faithful in seeking these wandering sheep and, by setting them the example of faithfulness to the Christian covenant, lead them to fulfil their duty to the church.—The Advance.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Home Readings

LESSON 5, THIRD QUARTER.

M. Jesus Honored.....John 12: 1-19.
T. The Anointing at Capernaum.....Luke 7: 36-50.
W. Gold and Incense.....Isa. 60: 1-10.
T. Love the Best of All Gifts.....1 Cor. 13: 1-13.
F. Christ a King.....Zech. 9: 9-17.
S. Behold, Thy Salvation Cometh.....Isa. 62: 1-12.
S. The Compassionate King.....Luke 19: 37-44.

—From the Westminster Question Book.

International Sunday-School Lesson.

BY REV. JOHN C. VAN DEVENTER.

August 1st.—"Jesus Honored."—John 12: 1-16.

Golden Text.—"Hosanna: Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord."—JOHN 12: 13.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—"Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing."—REV. 5: 12.

INTRODUCTION.

JESUS does not appear to have remained long at Bethany after raising Lazarus from the dead; indeed, it is doubtful whether He went into the village at all at that time. He retired with His disciples to the region of Ephraim, about twenty miles north of Jerusalem, and there engaged in instructing those who were to carry on His work after His departure. We have the account of many events which occurred during this retreat given by the other evangelists. All of these events were of a nature calculated to especially impress the disciples with a sense of the coming crisis, and of the responsibility soon to rest upon them. When the caravans of Passover pilgrims began to journey toward Jerusalem, Jesus started thither, making a detour through Perea, and approaching Jerusalem by way of Jericho and Bethany. This lesson presents to our notice three types of discipleship, which we may study to our profit.

THE LESSON.

I. THE DEVOTED DISCIPLE.—VS. 1-3.

This scene is in keeping with the other glimpses which we have had of Mary's character. We know her to be spiritual, loving, and capable of an absorbing enthusiasm. The lessons received at the feet of Jesus and at the emptied tomb now bring forth their fruit in this act of self-surrender and loving homage.

V. 1.—"Six days before the Passover Jesus came to Bethany." At this time the tide of travel would be at its height, and the roads lined with pilgrims singing the pilgrim songs. Reaching Bethany late in the week, Jesus tarries with His old friends over the Sabbath,—His last Sabbath on earth as the Man of Sorrows. "Where Lazarus was, which had been dead." This miracle had forever associated the name of Lazarus with that of Bethany.

V. 2.—"There they made him a supper." Both Matthew and Mark tell us that this supper was given in the house of Simon the leper. He has been thought to be either the father of Lazarus or the husband of Martha. The tone of the different narratives seems to imply that this gathering was not at the home of the family of Lazarus, but at some friend's where Martha assisted as a friend, and Lazarus was present as a guest. Simon may have been one of those cured by Jesus, who sought to unite his gratitude with that of the sisters in honoring the Master. Martha expressed her regard for Jesus in a characteristic way, by ministering to His wants. Her service was no less real and loving than that of Mary.

V. 3.—"Then took Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus." Such ointment was reserved for very especial occasions. It was fit for the adornment of a bride, or the last honors to the beloved dead. The flasks in which it was imported were made with long and narrow necks, so that it could flow only in single drops, and in that way the waste of such costly ointment would be prevented; but Mary, not content with thus giving her treasure drop by drop, breaks the flask and pours its precious contents upon the feet of her beloved Lord. This homage rendered to Jesus at a time when it was dangerous to be known as His friend, was typical of the service of all true-hearted disciples. It was personal, public, costly, and without regard to consequences. It received the well-merited encomium of our Saviour, "She hath done what she could." In v. 7 Jesus intimates that she had some foresight of His approaching death, and was thus anointing Him for His burial.

II. THE SELF-SEEKING DISCIPLE.—VS. 4-7.

V. 4.—The development of the character of Judas was gradual and probably was not recognized by himself. He appears to have joined the company of disciples from sincere motives, but never to have risen above the temporal conceptions of the Messiah which were shared at the beginning by all the brethren. Even late in the ministry of Jesus we find the most spiritual of all the company seeking official preferment in the expected kingdom. Judas probably followed Christ in order to gain a place in that kingdom, where he would be ennobled and enriched. He was seeking to profit by his discipleship. When he was appointed treasurer of the little company he found opportunities for petty thieving whereby he sought to increase his own resources at the expense of the others. With such a spirit he could not understand or approve such a wasteful exhibit of devotion as that which Mary had just shown. It did no one any good,—was only a sentimental exhibition, and ought to be reproved. He had no objections to Mary giving the value of the ointment to Jesus, for then he would have the management of the funds, but such reckless enthusiasm was uncalled for. So, a little later, when his keen eye saw that there was no opportunity for further profit as a disciple, he changed his course and sold himself to the enemies of Jesus.

V. 5.—"Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence?" This amount of money would, according to present values, represent a laborer's wages for a whole year, and in the mind of one of the poor disciples of Jesus was almost a fortune. "Given to the poor." The explanation that follows indicates that by the poor he meant the disciples themselves.

V. 6.—This exposure of the true character of Judas does not imply that he was suspected by his companions of dishonesty at that time. "Bare what was put therein." If this simply mean that he carried the bag, it is tautology, but if it mean that he carried off for himself portions of the common fund, then it shows the real character of this professed disciple. One who follows Jesus for the loaves and fishes,—for what he can make,—is not to be trusted; he will be ready to betray Him whenever that promises to pay better than formal service.

Jesus promptly and emphatically rebuked both the words and spirit of the critic. He knew the motive of Mary and of Judas equally, and, while pronouncing a blessing upon unselfish devotion, branded forever all self-seeking on the part of those who claim to be His disciples.

Vs. 9–11.—These verses are introduced in order to show the origin of the enthusiastic welcome soon to be accorded to Jesus, and of the well developed plan of His enemies for His arrest and condemnation.

III. THE IMPETUOUS DISCIPLES.—VS. 12–16.

While we cannot doubt the sincerity of the multitude who formed the escort of Jesus into Jerusalem on this occasion, yet their discipleship was not of a pure or worthy type.

V. 12.—"On the next day,"—the day after the Sabbath, and just one week before His resurrection. "Much people that were come to the feast." These were strangers at Jerusalem, probably many of them were Galileans, and were of the common people, who had always been most ready to listen to Jesus.

V. 13.—"Took branches of palm trees." These were emblems of victory, and the people seemed to think that it was now time for Jesus to be recognized as King of the Jews and to enter upon His reign amid the glad acclamations of His subjects. The temporal view of His mission was doubtless uppermost in their minds. "Hosanna: Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord." These shouts indicated their recognition of His royal and Divine authority. If He had proclaimed Himself actual King on that day these multitudes would have laid down their lives in His defence without a murmur. Yet, a few days later, and no voice is raised in His defence. He is left alone to the rage of His enemies.

V. 14.—"Jesus when he had found a young ass sat thereon." John omits the details concerning the sending of the two disciples to obtain this colt for Jesus. This unwonted act on the part of Jesus, assuming royal state, seemed to justify the expectations of the people concerning His kingdom, and so increased their enthusiasm.

V. 15.—This incident had been foreseen and foretold by the prophet, so that it became an added testimony to the truthfulness of Christ's claims.

V. 16.—"These things understood not his disciples at the first." Jesus was becoming more and more a mystery to His friends. They could only love and wait. Their ideas were not so very much clearer than those of the masses, but Jesus had sown seeds of truth, which the Holy Spirit made fruitful for their speedy growth in knowledge and in grace. The discipleship manifested by the palm branches and shouts was hearty but emphemral,—these were stony ground hearers.

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

1. Serve Christ by personal effort.
2. Serve Him heartily.
3. Serve Him with your best.
4. Do not follow for the loaves and fishes.
5. Sacrifice for Christ is the best homage.
6. To be faithful among enemies is true discipleship.
7. Christ comes to you in the name of the Lord. Hear Him.
8. He comes as King. Obey Him.
9. He comes as Saviour. Believe on Him.

A Song of Summer.

THE flowers are fringing the swift meadow brooks,
The songsters are nesting in shadowy nooks;
The birds and the blossoms are thronging to meet us,
With loveliness, perfume, and music they greet us,—
For Summer, the beautiful, reigns!

The bobolink tilts on the tall, nodding clover,
And sings his gay song to us over and over;
The wild roses beckon, with deepening blushes,
And sweet, from the wood, sounds the warble of thrushes,—
For Summer, the beautiful, reigns!

The white lilies sway with the breeze of the morning,
Its raiment more fair than a monarch's adorning;
The bright-throated humming-bird, marvel of fleetness,
Comes questing for honey-blooms, draining their sweetness,—
For Summer, the beautiful, reigns!

High up in the elm is the oriole courting,
A new suit of velvet and gold he is sporting;
With gay bits of caroling tuneful and mellow,
He woos his fair lady-love, clad in plain yellow,—
For Summer, the beautiful, reigns!

The blossoms and birds bring us, yearly, sweet token
That Nature's glad promises never are broken.
Then sing, happy birdlings, nor ever grow weary!
Laugh on, merry children, 'tis time to be cheery!—
For Summer, the beautiful, reigns!

—July St. Nicholas.

The Pocket-Book.

TOM JACKSON says he does not believe there is a God; he says he never saw Him; and I don't know that I believe—I never saw Him," said John Clary, just come in from company of Tom Jackson.

"I do," said his mother; and she said nothing more.

A week or more after this John burst into the kitchen with Tom at his heels.

"See mother," he cried, "what I have found—such a handsome pocket-book!"

"Where did you find it?" asked his mother.

"In Pine Grove; now who do you suppose it belongs to?"

"I dare say it grew there," said his mother.

"Grew there!" exclaimed John, lifting up his eyebrows with a great surprise; "a pocket-book grow in the woods! Who ever heard of such a thing! It could not be."

"Why not?" she asked.

"Why not!" replied the boy; "the pocket-book was made on purpose. Look here!" opening it; "here is a place for bank notes, and here is a little out-of-the-way spot with a snug fastening for gold, and a memorandum book, and a pencil case and a beautiful gold pencil. Look, mother, with a pen and lead, both; it was made for a man to use."

"Some contrivance here, certainly," said his mother, putting down her work and taking it into her hands for further examination. "It is one of the most useful pocket-books I ever saw; if it did not grow there perhaps it made itself."

Both boys stared at her more and more.

"Why, mother, you talk foolishly," said John, with a sober and puzzled look, "there must have been a man with a mind to have made this."

"A man that knew how—a pretty neat workman," added Tom Jackson.

"How do you know? you never saw him."

"No, but I have seen his work, and that's enough to convince me; I am just as certain that somebody made it as if I saw him."

"You are!" said Mrs. Clary, "how so?"

"Why, mother," said John, very much in earnest, "you see the pocket-book had to be planned to answer a certain purpose; now, it must have had a planner, that's the long and short of it; and I know it just as well as if I saw it planned and done by the man himself."

"That is," said his mother, "it shows wise contrivances and it must have had a wise contriver. Somebody must have made it, and thought beforehand how to make it."

"Just so!" exclaimed both boys at once. "It would be foolish to think otherwise," added John.

"I think so," said his mother. "And it is just as foolish," she continued, with a great deal of meaning in her eyes, as she looked into the boys' eyes, "when you see the wonderful contrivances in the beings and things around you, the end for which they were made, and the skill with which they were put together, for you to doubt or deny that there is a God who made them. Who planned your eyes to see with, your ears to hear with? Can eyes make themselves? Can a man make a bird? Who created the sun, and planned night and day? Did your mother or father plan your fingers and make them grow? You never saw who does all these things, but you know perfectly well that a great Somebody thought beforehand, designed and contrived the eye, and the ear, and sun, and your fingers—all things and all beings which are around you. And that great somebody is God, the eternal Mind and great Maker of us all."

The boys did not expect to be condemned from their own mouths in this way.—Early Dew.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Hundreds of Bottles Prescribed.

Dr. C. R. DAKE, Belleville, Ill., says: "I have prescribed hundreds of bottles of it. It is of great value in all forms of nervous disease which are accompanied by loss of power."

Beware of Scrofula

Scrofula is probably more general than any other disease. It is insidious in character, and manifests itself in running sores, pustular eruptions, boils, swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, etc. Hood's Sarsaparilla expels all trace of scrofula from the blood, leaving it pure, enriched, and healthy.

"I was severely afflicted with scrofula, and for over a year had two running sores on my neck. Took five bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and consider myself cured." C. E. LOVEJOY, Lowell, Mass.

C. A. Arnold, Arnold, Me., had scrofulous sores for seven years, spring and fall. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured him.

Salt Rheum

William Spies, Elyria, O., suffered greatly from erysipelas and salt rheum, caused by handling tobacco. At times his hands would crack open and bleed. He tried various preparations without aid; finally took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and now says: "I am entirely well."

"My son had salt rheum on his hands and on the calves of his legs. He took Hood's Sarsaparilla and is entirely cured." J. B. STANTON, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

7% NET Security 3 to 6 times loan. INTEREST semi-annual and paid at your home. 29th year of residence, and 10th of business. No investor ever had to pay taxes, costs of foreclosure, wait for interest, or take land. BEST of References all around you. Write if you have money to loan.

D. S. B. JOHNSTON & SON,
Negotiators of Mortgage Loans,
MENTION THIS PAPER. St. Paul, Minn

7 PER CENT. INTEREST
FIRST MORTGAGE
FARM LOANS.

Personal acquaintance with lands and values. Over 2,000 loans made. NO CUSTOMER has ever LOST A DOLLAR of principal or interest on any loans made here. Interest collected and sent to you, free of cost, each year. These loans are very safe, and pay nearly U.S. BONDS. I am three times as much as known and recommended by leading business men and clergymen, East and West—men for whom I have been making these investments for TEN YEARS PAST.

REFERENCES.

REV. WM. L. GAGE, D.D., Hartford, Ct.
M. E. GATES, PH.D., LL.D., President Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.
DR. WM. J. MILNE, President Geneseo Normal School, Geneseo, N. Y.
HON. E. M. TOPLIFF, Manchester, N. H.
REV. JOHN W. RAY, Lake City, Minn.
DR. JNO. K. BUCKLYN, Mystic Bridge, Ct.
Importers' and Traders' National Bank, New York.
First National Bank, St. Paul, Minn.
The Congregationalist, Boston, N. Y. Observer and hundreds of others in all parts of the United States.

All are pleased with my Investments. Circular, references, letters giving experience and testimony of old customers, and a New Map of Dakota sent free on application. Mention this paper. Address

E. P. GATES,
Pres. Merchant's Bank,
Grand Forks, Dakota

THE SAFEST FOOD IN SUMMER

For Young or Delicate Children.

A Sure Preventive of

CHOLERA INFANTUM.

It has been the positive means of saving many lives where no other food would be retained. Its basis is SUGAR OF MILK, the most important element of mothers' milk.

It contains no unchanged starch and no Cane Sugar, and therefore does not cause sour stomach, irritation, or irregular bowels.

It is the Most Nourishing, the Most Palatable, the Most Economical, of all Prepared Foods.

Sold by druggists—25 cts., 50 cts., $1.00. Send for pamphlet giving important medical opinions on the nutrition of Infants and Invalids.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

6% 7% 8%

The American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, incorporated, with a paid-up capital of $500,000, with branches at Huron and Mitchell, Dakota, offer First Mortgage Farm Loans in Iowa, Minn., Dakota, and Neb., both Principal and Interest Guaranteed. Also 6 per cent. Debenture Bonds (obligations of the Company), running 10 years, secured by Mortgage loans deposited with the Mercantile Trust Co., N. Y. It also issues Demand Certificates of Deposit at 5 per cent. interest. Write for pamphlet and references.

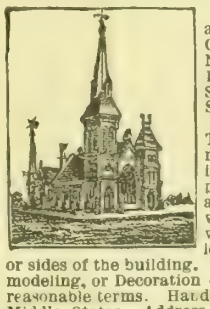
Home Office, Emmetsburg, Iowa.
E. S. Ormsby, Pres., 150 Nassau St., N. Y.

INVEST Through the Sound and Reliable
WESTERN FARM MORTGAGE CO.
F. M. PERKINS, President. LAWRENCE, KAN. L. H. PERKINS, Secretary.
CAPITAL AND SURPLUS, $250,000.
Carefully selected 1st Mortgage Farm Loans payable in N. Y. Unrivalled facilities. Absolute satisfaction. 10 years' experience. No losses. Refer to 3d Nat'l Bank, N.Y. City; Nat'l Bank, Lawrence, Kan.; and Hundreds of Investors. Send for pamphlet, forms and full information. Branch Offices in N.Y.City, Albany & Phila. N.Y.Office, 187 B'way, C.C. Hine & Son, Agts.

MEMORIAL TABLETS.

MEMORIAL WINDOWS.
CHURCH FURNITURE.
INTERIOR DECORATIONS.

J. & R. LAMB, 59 CARMINE ST., NEW YORK.



Pastors or Trustees about to BUILD OR REMODEL Churches, should read our New Handbook on Church Building, Ventilating, Stained Glass and STEREOCHROME OR SECCO PAINTING. This new and beautiful method of decorating the interior of Churches, is superior to any style of decoration in use. The colors are very rich, imperishable, and warranted proof against leaks or damp from the roof or sides of the building. Plans for New or for Remodeling, or Decoration of Churches, furnished on reasonable terms. Handbook sent free as above, in Middle States. Address, J. S. D'ARSAY & CO., Church Architects and Decorators. Office, 67 BIBLE HOUSE, New York. Established 18..

Refers to Rev. J. Gaston, D.D., Passaic, N. J., Rev. E. T. Corwin, D.D., Millstone, N. J., about Secco Painting.

R. H. MACY & CO.,

14TH STREET, SIXTH AVE., AND 13TH STREET NEW YORK.

GRAND CENTRAL FANCY AND DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT.

We Call Attention to Our Large and Varied Stock Goods Adapted to the Summer Season.

Our Customers Residing in the

COUNTRY,

Or Those Visiting the

MOUNTAINS

OR

SEA-SHORE,

Can Rely on Having The'r

ORDERS BY MAIL

Carefully Executed and Promptly Shipped.

OUR PRICES

Are Always the Lowest.

R. H. MACY & CO.

James M'Creery & Co.

AT THEIR SEMI-ANNUAL STOCK INVENTORY ON THE 9TH INST., SELECTED SEVERAL VERY LARGE ASSORTMENTS OF COLORED AND FANCY SILK VELVETS, ETC., WHICH THEY WILL DISPOSE OF DURING THIS MONTH AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Broadway & 11th St., N. Y.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

In the United States, Canada and England wear

"GOOD SENSE"

CORSET WAISTS.

THOUSANDS NOW IN USE.

BEST for HEALTH, ECONOMY, and BEAUTY.

Buttons at front instead of Clasps.

☞ Be sure your Corset is stamped "Good Sense."

Sold by leading Retailers everywhere. Send for Circular.

FERRIS BROS., Manufacturers 81 White St., NEW YORK.

DURKEE'S

GAUNTLET

WARRANTED PERFECTLY PURE TRADE MARK GAUNTLET E. R. DURKEE & CO.

BRAND

SALAD DRESSING

UNEQUALLED FOR EXCELLENCE.

Without a rival as a dressing for all Salads, and as a sauce for Cold Meats, etc. It is prepared with extreme care; all its ingredients are of the purest and best, and will keep good for years.

BEWARE OF ALL IMITATIONS.

A pamphlet containing information concerning the history of Farm Mortgages for the past twenty-five years will be sent free on application to the

Equitable Mortgage Co., 208 B'way, N.Y.

LE PAGE'S LIQUID GLUE

UNEQUALLED FOR CEMENTING WOOD, GLASS, CHINA, PAPER, LEATHER, &c. Awarded GOLD MEDAL, LONDON, 1883. Used by Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Co., Pullman Palace Car Co., &c. Mfd only by the RUSSIA CEMENT CO., GLOUCESTER, MASS. SOLD EVERYWHERE. ☞ Sample Tin Can by Mail, 25c.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE Grammar School,

New Brunswick, N. J.

PREPARES BOYS AND YOUNG MEN FOR COLLEGE OR BUSINESS.

Additional buildings were last year required, erected and filled.

This year additional teachers engaged to meet the increased number of students.

Rooms carpeted and cared for. Some arranged in suites—a study-room 14x14 with two single sleeping-rooms adjoining. A few single rooms to be had if desired.

Last year at the opening of the school every room was engaged, and many applicants were refused admission because of the lack of room. This year rooms will be reserved as applied for.

For catalogues and further information, address E. T. TOMLINSON, HEADMASTER.

BEST TEACHERS AMERICAN and FOREIGN, promptly provided for Families, Schools, Colleges Skilled Teachers supplied with Positions. Circulars of Good Schools free to Parents. School Property rented and sold. School and Kindergarten Material, etc.

J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO., AMERICAN SCHOOL INSTITUTE, 7 East 14th St., N. Y

Elmira College. FOR WOMEN.

Under Care of Synod of New York.

Course of study equal to that of the best Colleges; also Elective and Special Courses. Best advantages in Music and Art. Building with best modern improvements; heated by steam, and furnished with elevator. Astronomical Observatory—Museum and Art Gallery. Terms moderate. Address REV. A. W. COWLES, D.D., Pres't, Elmira, N. Y.

SIGLAR'S PREPARATORY SCHOOL, NEWBURG-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.,

Gives the best preparation for the best colleges. Two Yale valedictorians in three years. Entrance examinations held at the school by member of Yale Faculty. Daily gymnastics under teacher compulsory. For circulars, etc., address HENRY W. SIGLAR, M.A., (Yale) Prin.

ALEXANDER INSTITUTE White Plains, N.Y.

23 miles from New York City by rail. Fits boys for College or business pursuits. 30 to 40 pupils 5 Teachers. Board and Tuition per annum $400. For circulars, apply to the Principal, O. R. WILLIS, Ph.D.

RYE SEMINARY, Rye, NEW YORK. For particulars address Mrs. S. J. LIFE.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

1 hour from New York on the Penna. R. R.

Year begins (examinations for admission) Sept. 2, 1886.

SLOAN PRIZES FOR BEST (CLASSICAL) ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS; 1st, $400 ($100 CASH); 2d, $350 ($50 CASH).

Sixteen Professors; no Tutors. Classical course full and thorough. Increased facilities for the study of French and German, with a view to practical use. Laboratory work for all students in Chemistry. Well-equipped Astronomical Observatory for students' use. Full Geological Cabinet. 50,000 well chosen books in Libraries.

Ample provision for Electives, Junior and Senior years, in Natural Science, History, etc.

The SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT is the New Jersey State College. Constant field-practice in Surveying. Full course in Draughting.

THE AIM OF THE COLLEGE—THOROUGHNESS IN ALL WORK.

Best facilities and personal attention for every student. For full information, address Librarian Rutgers College.

Merrill Edwards Gates, Ph.D., LL.D., Pres't

Riverview Academy, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Prepares for College and the Government Academies, for Business and Social Relations. Thorough Military Instruction. Springfield Cadet Rifles. BISBEE & AMEN, Principals.

38TH YEAR, LYNDON HALL, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—A High-Class School for Young Ladies. Music, Drawing, Painting, Languages, and English branches thoroughly taught, with full regard to the equally important matters of home care and training. Address SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Principal.

YOUNG LADIES SEMINARY, 43d YEAR Begins Sept. 22. Address F. CHANDLER, D. D., Prest. Freehold, N. J.

Deckertown, Sussex Co., N.J. A SELECT ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes. School year begins September 8. For Circular, address, W. H. SEELEY, A.M., Prin.

OSSINING INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG SING SING, N.Y. Ladies & Misses. High Grounds. Best advantages in Music, Art, Elocution. English and Modern Languages. Full or partial courses. 30 miles from N. Y. City. Charges moderate Opens Sept. 21st. REV. C. D. RICE, Principal.

SEYMOUR SMITH INSTITUTE Pine Plains, N. Y., prepares for College. Healthful, homelike, select, thorough. Address Rev. A. MATTICE, A.M., Principal.

Betts' Academy, Stamford, Conn. A Boys' Boarding School of the highest grade. 49th year begins Sept. 15th. WM. J. BETTS, M.A., (Yale), Principal.

PEEKSKILL (N. Y.) MILITARY Academy.

ATLANTIC

Mutual Insurance Co.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 51 WALL STREET

ORGANIZED 1842.

Insures against Marine and Inland Navigation Risks.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest in accordance with its Charter.

J. D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice President
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice Pres't.
A. A. RAVEN 3d Vice Pres't.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

CONTINENTAL Insurance Co.

Continental Buildings
100 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Cor. COURT and MONTAGUE STS., BROOKLYN

106 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, E.D.

Insures against loss by Fire at reasonable rates.

Reserve for re-insurance	$2,265,427 8
of which for Inland Marine, $55,969 52
Reserve ample for all other claims	553,171 95
Capital paid in cash	1,000,000 00
Net surplus	1,358,879 85
Total Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886.	$5,177,478 99

This Company conducts its business under the restrictions of the New York Safety Fund Law. The two Safety Funds together equal $1,200,000.

H. H. LAMPORT, President.

CYRUS PECK, Secretary.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK.

OFFICE, No. 119 BROADWAY.

Sixty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the Condition of the Company on the 1st day of July, 1886.

CASH CAPITAL	$3,000,000 00
Reserve Premium Fund	2,938,020 00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	201,040 10
Net Surplus	1,389,241 71
Cash Assets	$7,628,401 81

SUMMARY OF ASSETS

Cash in Banks	$126,6 8 99
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	743,300 00
United States Stocks (market value)	2,9 2,697 50
Bank and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	1,733,640 00
State and City Bonds (market value)	2 6 000 00
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	130,000 00
Interest due on 1st July, 1886	10,394 74
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	209,646 97
Real Estate	1,364,118 61
Total	$7,628,401 81

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
D. A. HEALD, Vice-President.
J. H. WASHBURN, V. P. & Sec'y
T. B. GREENE, W. L. BIGELOW, E. G. SNOW, JR., } Ass't Sec's.

----FLORIDA.----

—ACADEMY AND COLLEGE AT DeLAND, FLORIDA.—

A first-class Academy for both sexes. Five Courses—College Preparatory, Higher English, Normal, Business, Industrial Drawing. First-class Art and Music Departments. Fine New Dormitory Buildings, enabling us to furnish board and tuition at reasonable rates. The purpose of this Institution is to give, in the delightful climate of FLORIDA, as thorough and liberal an education as can be secured in the best New England schools. DeLand College will also receive students of both sexes prepared to enter the Freshman Class. Send for Catalogue to

J. F. FORBES, President, DeLand, Florida, or H. A. DeLAND, Fairport, N. Y.

The Great Church LIGHT.

FRINK'S Patent Reflectors give the Most Powerful, the Softest, Cheapest and the Best Light known for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Parlors, Banks, Offices, Picture Galleries, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A liberal discount to churches and the trade. I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl Street, N. Y.

J. B. WATKINS LAND MORTGAGE CO.

16 years perfect success, 12,531 Mortgages negotiated, aggregating $8,369,200

All the Interest and Principal paid on day of maturity to amount of 5,135,820

We have decided to place ourselves on a plane above every competitor. Hereafter every mortgage that we negotiate will bear our full legal

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTEE OF BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST,

Interest 6 per cent. payable as in the past, by half yearly coupons, at the

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE IN NEW YORK.

Assets to the value of nearly a MILLION DOLLARS are pledged by our guarantee.

SEND FOR PAMPHLET CONTAINING FACTS AND FIGURES, FORMS, AND 450 TESTIMONIALS

Our Law Department will collect Bonds and other securities in all the Western States for individuals and corporations

Address J. B. WATKINS L. M. CO., Lawrence, Kansas.

Or HENRY DICKINSON, New York Manager, 243 Broadway.

RIDGE'S FOOD
FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS
To Is Without Doubt The Best Of The Many Foods Now In The Market.
Sold Everywhere
FOUR SIZES
.35 .65 1.25 1.75
Woolrich & Co
ON EVERY LABEL.

Thousands Have Been Rescued

In the past twenty-five years from a life of suffering or from an untimely death, where there has been insufficient nourishment, or by nursing the child would have transmitted the seeds of hereditary disease.

A physician in Penn. writes: "The sample (sent free to any physician) of RIDGE'S FOOD received, and think

Just in Time to Save

A little patient of mine."—Another lady in Indiana writes: "We have been using your food for our six-months-old infant boy for five months; he has grown fat and hearty on it; we cheerfully recommend it to all." And the druggist of the place writes us of this case: "I know that RIDGE'S FOOD saved

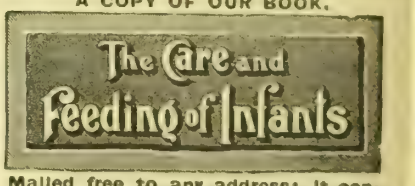
The Life of the Child,

(whose mother died in giving it birth.) The family is first-class. Various other foods were first tried."

Test it Mothers for Yourselves.

Sold by Druggists everywhere; 35c., 65c., 1.25, 1.75.

A COPY OF OUR BOOK.



Mailed free to any address; it contains advice and useful information for nursing mothers and invalids, and an analysis and description of

MELLIN'S FOOD.

DOLIBER, GOODALE & CO., Boston, Mass.

Degraaf and Taylor

LEADING FURNITURE MAKERS AND UPHOLSTERERS

47 and 49 W. 14th st., and 48 W. 15th st.

BETWEEN 5TH AND 6TH AVES.,

NEW YORK.

A MILLION BOOKS

RARE, CURIOUS, CURRENT. IN STOCK.

ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.

Libraries Supplied Cheaper than at any Book Store in the World.

LIBRARIES AND BOOKS BOUGHT.

MAMMOTH CATALOGUE FREE.

LEGGAT BROTHERS,

81 CHAMBERS STREET,

3d door West of City Hall Park. NEW YORK.

The Christian Intelligencer.

Een-dracht maakt macht.

VOL. LVII.—No. 30. WHOLE No. 2922. | NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 1886. | $2.65 A YEAR IN ADVANCE No. 48 CHURCH STREET.

EDITORS: Rev. JOHN M. FERRIS, D.D. Rev. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR: MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

THE ACCOUNT by the Catholic Standard, of Philadelphia, of the investiture of Bishop Gibbons with the beretta of a cardinal, is no doubt correct. It says that after the ceremonies, during the evening, "There was a parade of Catholic societies, which marched about town headed by the Marine Band, of Washington." After the procession had passed in review before the prelates, the band gave the cardinal a serenade, consisting of a long list of selections. The Standard adds: "Secretary Lamar represented the Cabinet at the ceremony of imposing the beretta upon Cardinal Gibbons. President Cleveland sent by Rev. Dr. Chapelle, pastor of St. Matthew's Church, in Washington, a personal letter congratulating the Cardinal, whose acquaintance and personal friendship he has for some time enjoyed." "For some time," probably covers the year or two of the President's residence in Washington.

If governmental recognition of this kind were habitually extended to the ministers elected to influential positions in other religious bodies, no one would be disposed to complain. But it is not; never has been. This one politico-religious body, because it is as much a political as a religious organization, is selected to receive official attention and honors. This alien hierarchy, directed and controlled from Rome, is allowed to over-ride the Constitution of the United States, to confer a princely title on a citizen of this country, and the government of the United States is represented at the ceremonies, congratulates the recipient of unlawful honors, and sends the band of the Presidential mansion, the band belonging to the whole people, to add strains of triumph at the close of proceedings which a larger number of the most intelligent, upright and patriotic citizens regard with great anxiety.

Are we living in New Ireland or in the United States? Is the Papistical Church the State Church of the United States?

The committee of this alien hierarchy has in hand one million of dollars to establish a Papistical University, and has resolved to locate the institution at Washington. When the corps of astute and wily professors of the University shall be gathered at the capitol of the nation evidences of an increased Papal influence over the then existing administration may be expected.

TEN PER CENT.—There are not a few Christians who make conscience of giving to the Lord's cause one-tenth of their income, and there are some who insist that this is the duty of every one under the Gospel. They say that the tithe was imposed upon ancient Israel and that the law on this subject has never been abrogated, which, of course, is true. But the same law forbade the Jew to take interest from his fellow Jew for any loan, and this statute has not been expressly abrogated in the New Testament. Is it, therefore, unlawful for a Christian now to lend money on interest to one of his brethren?

And if this law of the tithe was intended to be universal and perpetual, we should expect to see it reiterated and enforced in the New Testament, and the more so as the duty of beneficence is frequently enjoined there. But nothing of the kind is ever even hinted at, even though two chapters of the Second Epistle to the Corinthians are devoted to this subject. The apostle tells each of his brethren to lay by in store on the first day of the week "as he may prosper" (1 Corin. 16:2), but if the statute of tithes were still binding, would he not rather have referred to this as a standard?

The introduction of this rule would obliterate one of the chief distinctions between the Old Dispensation and the New. The former was a system of minute regulations covering the whole sphere of common life, owing partly to the rude state of the people, and partly to the typical character of its institutions. The latter, on the contrary, is a dispensation of the Spirit, shunning detail but emphasizing principles. It is designed to lift its followers above minutiae and routine into an atmosphere of freedom and spontaneity. The measure of service and sacrifice is determined not by line and rule, but by the sense of what the believer conceives that he owes his Lord. Hence the Apostle says "as he may prosper." There are cases in which the gift of a tithe would be very oppressive, and there are others where it would be a very inadequate expression of gratitude and love. There is, therefore, no iron-bound rule of proportion. The Christian has the call of charity presented to him, and he, and no one else for him, is to determine what he is to do. The basis is laid down by our Lord, "Freely ye have received, freely give." It is not the amount but the heart that God looks at. She whom the Saviour commended gave a sum so small that we have no coin diminutive enough to express it, yet her gift was not governed by the law of ten per cent. She went far beyond that proportion.

Missionary Progress.

ATTENTION was called, a few weeks ago in these columns, to the notable progress made by our own foreign missionary work, and the calls which that work and progress make upon us for larger efforts and further advances. New openings wait to be occupied by men who have offered and are waiting to be sent. The schools that are to supply the awakening multitudes in all our Eastern fields with teachers and preachers of their own, of a higher order and in larger numbers, are waiting for expansion and improvement, that they may be the better adapted for this most important and indispensable service.

It is well to notice, however, and remember that this situation, in its general features, is not peculiar to ourselves. There is the same call to advance in all the great missions of the churches, all along the line, all round the world. The progress within the period of our own foreign missionary activity,—a little more than fifty years,—has been marvellous. All signs show that the work thus accomplished has been in the main preparatory to still larger labors and successes in the present and the near future.

Within this period the great duty and obligation of the Church of Christ to evangelize the nations, if she would be true to herself, to her Lord and His high commission, has been so urged and enforced that it has come to be acknowledged everywhere by every Christian denomination, by the leaders of Christian thought and effort, and by a constantly increasing number of individual believers. It only remains now to urge it till every believer shall embrace it heartily and act upon it.

Within the same period the fundamental principles which underlie the work of missions have been substantially developed, recognized and settled—both those on which it rests for its reason and authority, and those, also, on which its operations should be conducted. And now that these are settled for each working church and mission, the great principle of union and co-operation among the various churches and workers in the different fields, is demanding the consideration it deserves and coming prominently into view. It occupies the minds of many, fires their thoughts, kindles their desires, inspires their prayers and hopes. The times are ripe for it. The Spirit of the Lord is in it—preparing the way for mightier movements and greater blessings and successes, when His churches shall show a united front as they go forth to the conquest of the world in His name.

Within this period, also, the wisdom and success of most of the various methods adopted and employed has been assured by experience. They are no longer experiments. Time and the providence of God have proved their wisdom and efficiency. The introduction of the Gospel and planting of churches by missionaries, the work of education, the training up and sending forth of native preachers and teachers as the chief evangelistic agency, the special work for women, the employment of schools and of the press—these methods have everywhere been tried, are everywhere applicable, and have everywhere achieved success.

And while these principles and methods have been developed and wrought out, how wonderfully the field has widened for their application, within the period named. Nations then closed are open to the Gospel. Continents then unexplored and tribes and nations utterly unknown, have been brought to the knowledge of the civilized and Christian world. Freedom of intercourse, facilities of access and communication, have improved and multiplied beyond the most sanguine expectation of fifty years ago. The secrets of Africa have been laid bare. The doors of China, Corea and Japan have been thrown open. China has been traversed from east to west and north to south by Gospel missionaries, and stations planted in 17 out of her 18 provinces. In every portion of the world, among every considerable people, and among multitudes of minor tribes, a beginning has been made—the standard of the Cross has been at least set up. The Word of God, in more than 300 languages and dialects, the speech of three-fourths at least of our human family, has been translated and is ready for distribution. The early difficulties and hindrances the pioneers encountered, the obstacles from opposing governments, hostile and ignorant prejudices, barbarous and cruel customs, hoary systems of religion are passed or passing; even the bonds of caste are beginning to relax. The running to and fro of many and the increase of knowledge have stirred the most sluggish from the apathy of ages. The fallow ground is broken up by the Providence of the Great Husbandman, and waits for the sowing of the good seed of the Word by the hands of His servants.

In that Providence is to be heard the expression of His will, calling upon all His servants everywhere for more prayer, larger efforts, greater activity and self-denial, that His way may be known on earth, His saving health among all nations. His call to us is but an echo of that addressed to His whole Church. The advance to which it summons us is only in the line of world-wide progress to which He is summoning the entire host of His elect.

The original responsibility for this work is undenied and undeniable. But if responsibility is increased by added knowledge, enlarged opportunity, increased facility of action and greater ability to do, who can estimate the weight of responsibility that rests upon Christians of this generation for the evangelization of the world?

GODLESS SCHOOLS.—Dr. Lyman Beecher once remarked, "Intellectual culture without moral culture is like a Samson without eyes." Shall the Bible be banished from our public schools, and all moral instruction interdicted? That is one of the most serious questions of the hour. In Wisconsin, the Court has decided that simply reading the Bible, without note or comment, falls under the head of "sectarian instruction," forbidden by statute, and is, therefore, no longer to be read in the public schools. Are the people of this country willing to send their children to godless schools, where they shall only receive that education and training which will make them nothing more nor better than a generation of blind Samsons? Read this paragraph from The Presbyterian, contributed by its Chicago correspondent, and make your own reflections:

Our city Board of Education seems to have done "its perfect work" in the exclusion not only of the semblance of religious teaching, but of the very existence of a God from our public schools. The recent graduating class of our Westside High School appointed a committee to wait upon the principal of the school with a request that the graduating exercises, to be held in the First Congregational Church, might be opened with a prayer by some clergyman. This moderate request was positively and not very politely refused. The committee then worked its way to the President of the Board, to be told that no prayer could be offered on the occasion. "To this complexion it has come at last," and the respectable people of the West Division do not seem to be enamored with the complexion. In fact, they are howling mad. What they are going to do remains to be seen. It now looks as if they would do something besides nowl. Perhaps this thing was needed to stir them up.

The United States are not very far behind France in godlessness. Chicago is well nigh abreast with Paris, whose municipal council has forbidden the teaching of theism in the schools, and proscribed the use of a child's book of instruction because of its references to the existence of a God. Everybody knows from what quarter opposition to the Bible and to moral teaching in our public schools chiefly springs. Is it not about time that all Protestants rise up and call a halt?

THE TEMPERANCE CAMPAIGN is unhappily lacking in a definite purpose which all who desire to bring rum selling under subjection can unite upon. There is still the prohibition platform, which tolerates nothing less than prohibition. This is certainly sharply defined and would be sustained by a large body of citizens if they had hope that the result desired can be attained and maintained. But, we venture to claim, the great body of those who wish to restrict the power of the saloon as far as possible, do not believe that in this or adjoining States the traffic in liquors can be abolished. They are convinced that if a prohibitory statute were enacted it could not be executed over a large part of the territory of these States. The fact that prohibition has become the law in Georgia does not remove their conviction. For in Georgia, the colored men, led by their preachers and teachers, voted for prohibition. In other words, it had the support of the workingmen. Just that vote would in all probability, so many think, defeat it here. The persons controlled by such convictions include a large proportion of the most intelligent, upright, philanthropic and Christian citizens. They would probably rally to the support of high license in cities and local option in rural counties. But that is not proposed to them.

In New Jersey a citizen of the highest standing has been nominated for Governor by the Prohibitionists. Gen. Fisk would no doubt make one of the best Governors New Jersey has had. He has had much experience in public life, is beyond reproach, is unquestionably equal to the duties of the office, and has the courage of his convictions Yet, we suppose, no one expects that he will be elected, unless one of the great parties shall endorse his nomination. But neither of the chief parties is likely to do so, unless Gen. Fisk and his friends agree to a local option platform. A meeting has been held in New Jersey to attempt to find some common ground on which all the temperance men of the State can stand, but without result. Massachusetts, too, has held a meeting and the only result there has been a recommendation that a prohibitory constitutional amendment be submitted to the people. But that will not result in united and energetic action against the pestiferous rum shops, and it is positive and energetic action which is needed, and not propositions to do something by-and-by, when the laws may be so and so.

The inevitable result of this division of opinion and purpose will be, the election of the candidates openly or secretly supported by the rum sellers, and the defeat of every candidate nominated for a State office by the temperance people. The city of Brooklyn has a large number of voters anxious to put the sale of liquors under restraint, but, through a want of union among them, power has passed into the hands of the friends of the rum-sellers, and already this year the number of saloons has been increased by one hundred. Good citizens feel outraged, and many meetings are held to protest against the action of the Excise Commissioners. But even there, in the present excited state of feeling, there is no general united effort for a distinct end.

All these attempts, even these differences, would be well enough and could be borne with patience if there were any indications that they were tending to union. But there are no such indications. After each division has endeavored to attain its end and failed, it simply prepares for another effort of the same character and form. Meanwhile there is no abatement of the evils produced by intemperance. The liquor traffic increases and adds to its influence and resources. The liquor dealers and their associations are becoming more and more wealthy, have more money to spend in buying votes, in purchasing members of legislatures and men in office, and do so spend their money and do, as all men believe, buy men engaged in making and executing the laws. The friends of the rum power are in office and rule in the interest of those who elected them.

"Old Colony" Papers.

SUMMER TALK.

MILLENIAL CELEBRATIONS. . . . MY FOURTH OF JULY. . . . . DR. BACON ON VACATIONS. . . . CONGREGATIONAL OUTINGS.

IN these days of centenary celebrations, two of peculiar interest and antiquity have received comparatively little notice. One was the five hundredth anniversary of the battle of Sempach on the 9th of July. It was there, on the shores of Lake Lucerne and in a plain which has well been called "the Marathon of Switzerland," that the Swiss Cantons defeated and destroyed the invading Swabian and Austrian armies, the Grand Duke Leopold of Austria being killed, and thus saved their free and independent confederacy. And there it was that Arnold von Winkelried made his name immortal among the heroes of history. The Austrian ranks stood with their pikes extended like a bristling wall, and the Swiss could make no breach in the solid mass. Then the brave knight Winkelried threw himself upon the foe, gathering all the pikes within his reach into his own breast, and through the opening thus made his countrymen rushed on to victory. Somebody has written a spirited poem about it, which used to be a great favorite for "speaking" among the school boys of my day, beginning:

"'Make way for liberty!' he cried,—
Made way for liberty, and died!"

The world cannot honor its martyrs too much. War shall cease, and liberty shall no longer need contending for, but self-sacrifice is the one godlike thing whose glory can never fade.

The other chance for a celebration, and a millenial one too, has been strangely overlooked. It is indicated in the following passage from the old Saxon Chronicles quoted by Stow and Camden:

"This Citie of London having beene destroyed and brent by the Danes and other Pagan enemies about the yere of CHRIST 839 was by ALFRED, King of the West Saxons, in the yere 886, repayred and honorably restored, and made again habitable."

What a grand time the greatest of cities might have had, if she had possessed more of Yankee enterprise and love of the show business. But probably London has had enough to occupy her, and will have for many years to come, in taking care of her "Warsaw" across the Irish Channel without going a thousand years back for excitement.

I realized vividly and gratefully the value of patriotic holidays, on the late Fourth of July,—all the more because I did not stay at home to have my nerves set on edge by the continuous shock of powder explosions. I was called to take a long railway ride, in the very heart of the day; and so I obtained a sort of bird's-eye view or a running commentary on the universal celebration, as we dashed in and out of towns, and glided through the country, and caught peeps of a thousand homes and secluded spots. It was a specially entertaining trip for one who has an eye for the varieties of human life, and a quick sympathy with the little pleasures of his fellowmen.

As I came down to the depot a lame colored brother in a long duster, and with a mouth conspicuous for its thick lips environed by a bristly coal-black beard, was stumping along with his cane in eager haste for the train. In response to a greeting from a fellow African he shouted, with a peculiarly gummy grin and jubilant guffaw: "I'm for a day out!" At one of the first stations a colored damsel entered, in highly bedizened attire but looking thoroughly respectable, and acting in quite a ladylike way. On securing a seat by an open window she was evidently on the qui vive, handkerchief in hand, for some passing recognition. Presently we emerged upon a little open space by the side of a woods near the track, where was a very plain but picturesque cabin, and ranged before the door and on the fences a flock of small darkeyes of various ages and degrees of dishabille. It was quite a little idyl to watch the glee with which they saluted her, and the tender care she took to wave her handkerchief to them as long as they could see her. For was not this probably the pretty elder sister of whom they were all so proud, and who was going for a holiday excursion to town, where they were sure she would be as handsomely dressed as any lady, and whence she would bring them something nice out of the good wages which she was earning? At another station a white girl came in with some young companions, whose look of dismay was quite tragic as she contemplated her snowy dress and the cindery state of the atmosphere and exclaimed, "Oh my, I shall get perfectly black!"

The cars kept filling and unfilling with excursionists of all sorts and conditions, singly or in groups, young couples to whom love of country was evidently not then the supreme passion, family parties with lunch baskets bound for Coney Island, or scattered members of households hastening to a home reunion. One little child had a whole sheaf of small flags in his hand. Almost all had a bouquet or a "buttonholer" on their breasts. Everyone had a festive air, even the poor imprisoned railway officials appearing to have absorbed the gala spirit by sympathy.

And the same aspect was upon all outside. The fields slept in a Sabbath stillness, and the very cattle seemed in a holiday mood. The depots were deserted by all except excursionists, or persons waiting to receive arriving friends. All along the route the flags were waving from liberty poles and public buildings, or hanging from windows and porticos; and the subdued puff and boom of crackers and cannon was almost all that broke the stillness, except an occasional burst of music or the ringing of the noon bells. Nowhere, by the by, did the bells ring more vigorously or the flags float more conspicuously that day, than in the Irish Catholic churches. And away in the South, they rang and waved and fired as if there had never been a Southern Confederacy, and as if Jeff Davis were as much a myth as John Smith's Pocahontas. There was, of course, the inevitable Fourth of July fire, with its sudden rush and rattle and ringing and sparks of the galloping engine, as I passed through Newark.

It was pleasant to catch glimpses through the trees of handsome villas and shady cottages, where group were gathered on the lawn or piazza, or where you knew that they were sitting with guests, and father and brothers home, at their leisurely and merry dinner. Nor less suggestive was it to see a group of shirt sleeved Irishman, whiling away the time before dinner was ready by playing checkers on the front stoop, or some Germans sitting in a row under a tree smoking off their sauerkraut and lager bier. Here is a hard worked young fellow lolling on a bench, under the dusty tree which stands before the paintless tenement in which he lives. There is a crowd of basellers, waiting on the shady side of a ruined factory e hour for the game to be called. I pass close by a nall and humble tenement crowded in among hers, at whose low window under the roof sits an d and infirm woman who, I have time to see, is essed all in her best, and keeping holiday in that ill and uneventful way so different perhaps from e gay excitements of her Fourth of Julys so many, any years ago.

I see all these and many more little signs of our nited nationality, and thank God for the wonderful e which not only binds but assimilates our other- ise heterogeneous people. And as I observe these idences of a universal resting, and think of Wall reet echoing with its own stillness and the deserted owntown streets, I bless God for holidays, especially ich as are remembrances and reminders of our free- om and favor as a people.

Dr. Leonard Woolsey Bacon is a man of genius, a onspicuous element of which is the genius for fault- nding. His latest exhibition of a sensitive con- ience for other people's faults is in pronouncing inisters' vacations a "necessary evil," and an indi- ation of "ingrained theological error," and a wrong onception alike of the ministry and the church. I eg leave to differ, and to regard vacations as a ecessary good, and none the worse because having a irect relation to the old-fashioned idea which Dr. Bacon sneers at, that the business of the ministry is o "save souls," and hence to "take heed to them- elves" as well as to the flock.

The fallacy of Dr. Bacon is in a total misconcep- ion of the pastoral office, as distinguished from the ork of an evangelist. The pastor is "under con- ract" to his particular congregation, "to do his itmost for their spiritual benefit," and everything he loes for the world or the church outside is a loan of im by the people who have retained his entire ser- ice. And it is to their own interest, as well as his luty to them, that he should have a good clear espite each year from the mental and moral strain of his work. The cumulative effect of taking it all ogether will be worth ten times as much to him as f taken piecemeal; also, at a time of year when toil s most wearing, and when travel and change are nost practicable and beneficial. Especially among he clergy of our times is it most natural that they hould go away when the greater part of their con- gregations go. And hence it is, that the vacations fall mostly during the summer time. There might probably be more systematizing of the going away, and of closing churches, but the instances are now very rare where people who really want a church or a minister are at any loss to find them. At any rate, the pastor of a distinct flock is not, as Dr. Bacon seems to think, under obligation to stay in town twelve months in the year and "lose his life" for the sake of those "within stone's throw of his church and parsonage, but who have no connection with the cor- poration with whom he is under contract." The business of providing for these belongs to the church and to the Christian community, and it will be found that the pastors have already done the lion's share in bringing about such provision.

And the minister must go away, if he is to have rest unto his soul; for it is not the physical toil nor the intellectual exercise, which wastes the nerve force and saps the animal spirits, so much as the ever pres- ent burden of responsibility. It is the universal tes- timony that this can only be shaken off by going away from the daily sight and contact, and plunging one's mind in a bath of new experiences. And it is just the "small talk" and "dawdling" and other lack of "heroic a pect" of such vacationists, which shows how the tense bow is being unbent, and which should rejoice the soul of Dr. Bacon and every brother minister. My only objection is that so many of our ministers do not get enough of this, but go to summer schools and all sorts of conventions, and preach all through their vacations. The latter never seems quite fair to their own people, besides being calculated to neutralize the cumulative effect of a continuous rest, of which I have spoken.

I had meant to speak of a new feature of church life, indicated by such excur ions as Dr. Talmage's 800 to the Thousand Islands, and some other church which went almost in a body to Niagara. It is cer- tainly a favorable symptom in the direction of a developed unity and social feeling in the churches, and has many advantages over a "Cook's tour." But there ought to be more care than has sometimes been taken as to the way these church people spend Sunday. It is hard to see why half the day should be given to boating, fishing and the like on the St. Lawrence, which would not be deemed "good form" for good Presbyterians on the East River.

F. N. ZABRISKIE.

PRINCETON, N. J., July 15th, 1886.

Suggestive.

A SINGLE STITCH.

One stitch dropped as the weaver drove
His nimble shuttle to and fro,
In and out, beneath, above,
Till the pattern seemed to bud and grow
As if the fairies had helping been;—
One small stitch which could scarce be seen;
But the one stitch dropped pulled the next stitch out,
And a weak place grew in the fabric stout;
And the perfect pattern was marred for aye
By the one small stitch that was dropped that day.

One small life in God's great plan,
How futile it seems as the ages roll,
Do what it may, or strive how it can,
To alter the sweep of the infinite whole!
A single stitch in an endless web,
A drop in the ocean's flow and ebb!
But the pattern is rent where the stitch is lost,
Or marred where the tangled threads have crossed;
And each life that fails of its true intent
Mars the perfect plan that the Master meant.

—Susan Coolidge.

STRIKES would be of rare occurrence if all manu- facturers and capitalists were like John Smedley, of Matlock, England, who has in his employ more than a thousand workmen. Work begins at six in the morning; breakfast is furnished at eight o'clock at a moderate cost, and immediately after breakfast the superintendent reads a hymn and some selections from the Bible, or some other book; a short prayer follows, and at nine o'clock the men are at their work again. On five days of the week the operatives work ten hours, and on Saturday the mill is closed at half past twelve, so that a week's working hours amount to fifty-five and one-half. Full wages are paid for Christmas and Good Friday; hospitals are provided for the sick, and care is taken that, in the matter of wages, an operative when taken sick is not cast aside as if there was no common interest between him and his employer. As might be expected, there are no strikes in this mill, no drunkenness, and the work- men are active and happy. The proprietor wisely says that he believes that the present disagreements between employers and employed are largely caused by the neglect of consideration for the workers, and the want of sympathy and personal knowledge and intercourse with them. Cannot some of our manu- facturers learn a lesson from this?

MOSCOW'S GREAT CATHEDRAL.—What must, with- out doubt, be conceded as the most magnificent church edifice in the world is the great cathedral at Moscow, "The Church of St. Saviour," recently completed there.

The foundations of the church are of Finish gran ite, and the whole edifice is faced with marble, the door being of bronze, ornamented with Biblical sub- jects, and lined with oak. The principal entrance measures 30 feet high by 18 feet broad, and the two doors weigh 13 tons, the total cost of the doors being $350,000. The building is erected in the form of a Greek cross, three of the broad ends of which form the corridors, lower and upper, surrounding three sides of, and open to, the central square, or temple proper, while the fourth end is occupied by the altar and its appurtenances.

The total cost of all the marble in the building ex- ceeds $2,000,000. Lifting one s eyes, the galleries are seen to contain 36 windows, and the cupola 16, all of which are double, with frames of bronze. Round the cupola is one row of 640 candelabra, placed there at a cost of $120,000, with a second row of 600, costing an additional $60,000. There are 4 lusters weighing 4 tons each, and the total number of candles to be lighted throughout the building is upward of 3,000.

At the top of the cupola is a painting by Professor Markoff, representing in colossal proportions the first person of the blessed Trinity as an old man with the infant Jesus. The height of the figure is 49 feet, the length of the face 7 feet, and the height of the infant 21 feet. Also, below the cupola are a number of figures of apostles and fathers, each 21 feet high.

Great expense has, of course, been lavished on the eastern end of the church. The cost of the materi- als and workmanship for the altar amounted to $150,000. In this part of the church are some of its most remarkable paintings, most, if not all, by Rus- sian artists. The structure of the altar screen is a departure from the traditional Russian type, for in- stead of a tall, ugly blank partition, half or two- thirds of the height of the church, hiding the east- ern end, the screen of St. Saviour's is low and ele- gant, and throws open, except for a few feet above the floor, the whole of the sanctuary.

This princely cathedral was erected at a cost of $12,000,000, and is said to be capable of accommo- dating 10,000 worshippers, and which, from its con- ception, has been built in a single lifetime.—Brooklyn Magazine.

A BRAZILIAN BOYCOTT.—When was the first boy- cott established and in what land? Ireland has given currency to the word and has made popular the sys- tem of getting even with obnoxious officials. But long before Captain Boycott was beleagured in his house by the Irish peasantry whose enmity he had incurred, the same ostracising of other landlords in other lands had been carried into effect.

Brazil is perhaps the country which most people would consider the least likely to resort to the boy- cott, and yet in the second decade of the present century it had a very lively and thorough one. Some time since a well-known gentleman of this city whose business often takes him to Cuba, heard in Havana considerable talk about an extraordinary document which the citizens of a Brazilian town had issued against religion and its votaries on account of a long and disastrous drought. He tried hard to obtain a copy of it, but without avail until within a few days past, when he received a clipping from a paper with the coveted curiosity.

It is in Spanish, and the following is a translation of it:

The official paper of the State of Morelos copies the following decree, published in 1820 in the town of Custhanas, Empire of Brazil:

TO THE MAYOR OF THE TOWN AND DEPARTMENT OF CUSTHANAS: Whereas, Considering that the Su- preme Maker has not acted rightly toward this prov- ince and town; that only once in the whole of last year it rained a single shower, and that during all this winter, in spite of the religious processions, no- venas and prayers, it has not rained a single drop, and consequently the crop of chestnuts, on which this department is dependent for its prosperity, has been lost;

Resolved, First, That if, in the peremptory term of eight days, to be counted after the publication of this decree, rain does not fall abundantly, nobody will go to mass or say any prayers.

Second, That if the drought still continue eight days more in addition, the churches and chapels will be set on fire, and missals and rosaries and any other object of devotion will be destroyed.

Third, That if finally rain does not fall on a third term of eight days longer the clerics, monks, nuns and saintly women will be put to death; and at pres- ent ample time is given to everybody to count their sins of every kind and description, that thus the Su- preme Maker will certainly understand with whom He has to deal.

This plain avowal of direful events to follow in the event of rain not falling appears to have had the effect of leading the clergy to heartier invocations, for as there is no record of the wholesale killing of these professors of religion, it is supposed that the heavens opened, and the town of Custhanas was drenched with showers.—Selected.

THE ANARCHISTS.—The theory of naturalization is that foreigners coming here and adopting this country as their own will also adopt the American system of government and civilization. But this theory has no place for what actually happens in the case of the Anarchists. They come here, not to adopt American ideas and institutions, but to revolu- tionize the country. From the moment they land they are enemies of the Republic, and they avail themselves of the liberal laws to organize war upon it. The freedom which is the essence of democracy becomes in their hands dangerous license. They abuse it for the worst possible ends; the subversion, namely, of law and order. Now there is no ground for supposing that men of this kind will ever become good citizens. Their characters and purposes are fixed before they come to us. They hate and con- temn our whole civilization. They have but one ob- ject in life, and that is to overthrow if possible the society that shelters them. The question is, how are such people to be dealt with? If, as heretofore, they are let alone, they have full opportunity to pre- pare such outrages as that of the Haymarket. More- over, the experience of the past ten years shows that they are greatly encouraged by non-interference, and that it enables them to spread their doctrines among foreign workingmen, and so to secure sympathizers, if not active allies. But what is to be done with men who are determined to violate the law, and who avail themselves of American freedom to plot against the whole structure of society? If they cannot be kept out of the country the question arises whether it is possible to hold them in check.—N. Y. Tribune.

Our Church.

We are thankful for items of Church News compactly stated; or for marked copies or clippings from local exchanges, which we would not otherwise see. To insure publication in next number, they must reach us by noon on Monday. A condensation of items is unavoidable

Albany's Bi-Centennial.

Extracts from the Historical Discourse preached by the Rev. Prof. D. D Demarest, D.D., in the Madison Avenue Reformed Church of Albany, N. Y., Sunday morning, July 18th, 1886. Published in full in the Albany Evening Journal.

Text.—Isaiah, 54: 13, 14, "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children. In righteousness shalt thou be established; thou shalt be far from oppression—for thou shalt not fear; and from terror, for it shall not come near thee."

. . . . . .

IT is not my purpose to give you, in this discourse, in chronological order, a narrative of the facts connected with the early settlement of Albany and its history antedating the charter. This will be done by other hands. My object is rather to trace the religious influences which were at work from the very beginning and which wrought without observation, yet most potently, and to refer to historical facts only so far as they may serve for the illustration of my theme. Let, us then, in imagination go back to-day 200 years to 1686, the year in which you received your charter as a city. It is the morning of the Lord's day and we attend public worship in the little church standing at the intersection of Yonkers and Handelaers streets (State and Market), and are edified by the ministrations of the Rev. Godfredius Dellius, who had taken charge of the church in 1683, as the associate of the superannuated Dom. Gideon Schaats, who had served the church for 30 years, assisted for a time by Dom. Nieuenhuysen. Its first pastor was the Rev. Johannes Megapolensis, who came in 1642, in fulfillment of a contract made with the Patroon Van Rensse'aer, and remained six years, when he removed to New Amsterdam where he continued in the discharge of the pastoral office 20 years, being in charge at the time of the surrender to the British in 1664. The church building of which we speak was the second one occupied by the congregation. The first one was a temporary wooden structure, in which Dom. Megapolensis, after having held services in his parsonage for three or four years, gathered his congregation. "It stood near the fort, in what is now called Church street. It was a plain, wooden building, 34 feet long by 19 wide, furnished with a pulpit ornamented with a canopy, pews for the magistrates and church officers and nine benches for the people. In this simple structure the congregation worshipped 13 years." The second building was also of wood, was erected in 1656, and the pulpit and bell for it were imported from Holland. The third edifice was of stone, and was erected in 1715, and was built around and over the ancient wooden one, the service being interrupted but two Sabbaths. In 1797 the North Church was erected, but services were continued in the old stone church at the foot of State street until 1806, when it was taken down and replaced by the South Dutch Church, which was built on the cemetery lot on Beaver street, much of the material of the old building being used in this structure, which was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God in 1810. A charter of incorporation was obtained in 1720, about the time of the occupancy of the third, or stone edifice. We attend public worship in the Dutch church on the Lord's day in 1686.

. . . . . .

It is attended by the chief people and the vast majority of the inhabitants. It has had the field entirely to itself for nearly two generations, having had in the earlier part of the time doubtless the ministrations of Voorleser and Krank-besoecker and subsequently of a succession of able and learned ministers of the Word. It had gathered in during that period such persons as had come from Old England or New England to make their home here. It was virtually the one Church to which Providence entrusted the religious training of this infant community until it became a city and for years after that. Was this Church worthy of so important a trust? Was the trust fulfilled? We thus come to the specific inquiry, what influence had this Reformed Church of the Netherlands in the moulding of this community? The only satisfactory way of obtaining an answer to this question is by considering the antecedents and characteristics of this Church, the results to be expected and the results actually seen.

. . . . . .

Let us, then, go back to the fatherland and inquire whether she had there proved herself worthy of being intrusted with important work and interests here. When the first Dutchmen came to Fort Orange about a century had passed since the first rays of evangelical truth had begun to penetrate the papal darkness of the Netherlands. But in no country of Europe were the doctrines of the Reformation received more promptly, generally and joyfully, and in none were greater sacrifices made for their maintenance. The persecutions of the "churches under the cross" are unparalleled in history. Thousands gave up possessions, country and life for the sake of the Word of God, Scriptural worship and liberty to serve God as conscience might dictate. The contest with the Spaniard in this afflicted country was alike for civil and religious liberty, and nobly and heroically was it maintained for 80 years. But out of it came the Dutch Republic, the leading commercial nation of Europe, the home of the oppressed, the seat of learning, the mistress of the seas, and also the Reformed Church of the Netherlands, with her learned divines, sound doctrines, orderly worship, representative government and tolerant, catholic and missionary spirit.

Now, these almost one hundred years were years that tried men's souls. They constituted a protracted, continuous school of discipline for three generations of people, and such as no other people have ever been placed in who yet survived and even triumphed. Their neighbors, the Huguenots, suffered as they did, but their oppressors were in power in their own land, and they triumphed. But here men were born in the midst of the conflict, they died while it was going on, and they bequeathed the fight to their children. Through the firmness and perseverance of successive generations peace and prosperity came at last. Where, in this wide world, could a training school like this have been found at that time for men and women who were to be entrusted with the founding of a State or city in this Western world. We can never cease to abhor and to execrate the infamous tyranny of Spain; but what if she had taken a different course and had readily allowed to her Dutch subjects the liberty they had to fight for? Who can tell what the result would have been? Would the Dutchmen of the opening years of the seventeenth century have been what they were? Would they have had the faith, the firmness, the enterprise, the simplicity, the frugality, the energy and the tolerant spirit which they now possessed? Would they, in a word, have been so well qualified to be the pioneers in the founding of a new State? Did not God use the wrath and folly of Spain for the good of America, for the good of New Netherland, for the good of Albany?

. . . . . .

While we thus speak of the early Dutch colonists and their training, we must not forget the French element connected with them, and which was of great value. The first company that came in 1623, with Capt. Cornelius Jacobson May, to make an agricultural settlement in New Netherland, was composed of 30 families, chiefly Walloons; and of this company 18 families were brought to Fort Orange. The Walloons were the Protestants of the Southern Netherlands, or Belgium, who, driven by persecution across the border, made their home in Northern Netherlands and formed churches in which their native French was used. The Huguenots came from the northeastern provinces of France and joined their Walloon brethren in Holland. Many of these who had been domiciled in Holland came to New Netherland. Agreeing with the Dutch in doctrine, church polity and ritual, and being familiar with their language, they identified themselves with them. While in a few places, as Staten Island, New Paltz and Hackensack in New Jersey, they maintained worship in their own tongue for a time, in New York alone they were able to maintain it permanently. The French Protestants were as true and loyal members of the Reformed Dutch churches as were the native Hollanders themselves. Almost every church had more or less of them. They were more refined, graceful, versatile and vivacious than the Dutch, and what they brought of national characteristics and peculiar culture was so much added to the very solid materials furnished by the Dutch. "Their influence has been compared to the gold which some one cast into the mould filled with the melted metals which were to compose the great bell of Moscow—the gold was not much in quantity, but it gave to the great bell a fineness of tone and a melodious ring it would not have possessed without it."

Dr. Demarest discussed, in a thorough and interesting manner, the system of doctrine and of education, the polity and spirit of the Dutch Church, also the hindrances to her growth, and then concluded as f lows:

And now what are the lessons and duties of the hou Not to brood with vain regrets over the mistakes of t past, but to rejoice that God makes even them to subser His glory and to be thankful for whatever influence good this Church has exerted in this city, State and cou try. She has certainly been for eight generations a stea witness for Christ. The truths of the everlasting Gos have been proclaimed from her pulpits by able and goo men through all these generations. In her consistories a membership have been found men who exerted no little fluence in the State as well as the Church; who adorned t various professions, who bore an important part in shapi the Constitution of the State as well as in regulating m nicipal affairs, and whose zeal for the Church universal not hinder a special devotion to the institutions of th own denomination.

. . . . . .

To-day this Church is girded for her work. She is forget the things that are behind, and to reach forth those things that are before. As the citizens of Albany ter on their third century of corporate civic life t Church is with them, pledged to continue to proclaim a teach the pure doctrines of the Word of God, to encoura every effort for the promotion of wise government, go order, sound morals and true prosperity. She stands dained of God, to help in the training of the people self-government and for the enjoyment of true liberty, a for the promotion here and everywhere of the kingd which is righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Venerable Church, antedating this ancient city's bir thy children rise up before thee and call thee bless From this day with renewed youth do valiantly for Lord Christ.

"Peace be within thy walls
And prosperity within thy palaces,
For my brethren and companions' sakes,
I will now say, peace be within thee."

Abstract of the address delivered by Rev. J. Wilbur Ch man in the First Reformed Church of Albany, N. Sunday evening, July 18th, 1886.

Text.—Deut. 4: 32, "Ask now of the days that are past."

Our doctrinal standards and polity are derived primar from the action of those men who met at Antwerp in 15 We date back more than 300 years, to the day when princes of the German Empire made their manly prot against the decrees of the Diet of Spires, and we are asso ated with those heroes of the fifteenth century used of G to carry the light of the Reformation, where the darkness error was settling, "for Gansevoort and Agricola were t morning stars of the Reformation for Holland, as Wyckli was for England." It is our privilege to remember that years before the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Roc settlers from the mother Church in Holland had here, wh our city now stands, established trading posts, and inde when those noble men reached this country, they came fr their own land by the way of Holland, and abode there years before crossing the seas.

It is believed that our Church, in a formative state least, has been in existence in Albany since its earliest da It is perfectly natural to suppose that those early settl kept up in some way the worship of Almighty God, but know that in 1642 the first church building was erect and Johannes Megapolensis began bodily to preach t unsearchable riches of the Gospel, and from that day t Church has grown apace with the city—in times of pe and of war, in days of darkness and of prosperity, she h been faithful to the city's interests. For Albany her te have fallen and her prayers have ascended, her God h been besought again and again for the fort, the struggli village and the prosperous city. There was a time wh the bell of the Reformed Church rang the curfew 8 o'clock at night. Then the people of the village carefu covered the coals on the kitchen hearths with ashes a went to bed. In this direction the influence of the Chur has waned, for the ringing of her bells would hardly n quiet the streets and homes of our city. The denominati with which we are identified had its part in the gaining the charter, for Peter Schuyler, the first Mayor, who was member of our Church, in company with Robert Livingsto was commissioned by the town of Albany to go to N York and procure the charter for the city. These are da with us, therefore, when we are searching the records of t past, when old parchments, old Bibles, and a thousa ancient relics are made to tell their story. So we take o place in the bi-centennial celebration because we have as denomination a firm hold upon the past. In the 200 yea of the city's history we have had our part, and things whi have been of greatest importance to Albany in that ti have been intimately associated with the Reformed Churc

There are connected with us still by membership three the honored names of Van Rensselaer. There worshi with us a family but four generations removed from hi who bore the charter of Albany from New York and wro his name as Peter Schuyler, the first Mayor of the new cit We are connected with those who are the direct descen ants of him who was not satisfied to have Domine Schaa come every three months to Schenectady to baptize the ch dren, nor was he content to go so long a distance to churc for from the earliest settlement of Schenectady until 16 the people attended church in Albany. So in 1682 Ale der Lindsley Glen built the first church that village and he was married to Catherine Dongan, sister of him who was overnor at the time of the granting of lbany's charter. In 1782 the city was nored with a visit from Gen. Washingn. A public reception was tendered him d an address on that occasion was delived by the Rev. Dr. Westerlo, the pastor of e old Dutch Church. Thus have we emed to play our part with the history of e past and to share with the city both her rrows and her joys.

In 1656 there was sent from Holland an ken pulpit, a fine specimen of architecaral proportions and workmanship and om this pulpit these words are now spoken. wo hundred and thirty years have been umbered with the past since it was placed the old church, and as one thinks about s history it is with reverence. Eleven men f God have from this pulpit told the story f the Cross, and under the ministry of one f them, lasting sixteen years, over 1,100 ere baptized into the church. From 1656 o 1669 this was the only pulpit in the village. Many earnest petitions must have scended from him who stood in this sacred lace that those early settlers might be lessed of God. In 1690—on Saturday ight—the massacre of Schenectady by the rench and Indians took place, and on Sabath morning Simon Schermerhorn brought he tidings to Albany. Then it was feared hat it, too, would suffer in the same way. hen did the people turn to God and the an who stood in this pulpit led them in heir cries to Him that they might be delvred. Here, too, Dr. Westerlo stood during he revolution, taking strong ground on the ide of independence, and just before the urrender of Burgoyne he held special religious services in the church daily for a week, imploring the interposition of God in behalf of our army and animating and ncouraging the people by his prayers and xhortations. Few more interesting or valuable memorials of the past can now be found than this ancient pulpit.

....THE CLASSIS OF NEW YORK held a special meeting in the chapel of the Second Church of Harlem on the 24th of June. The Rev. J. Elmendorf, D.D., presented his letter of dismission from the Classis of Poughkeepsie, and upon his accepting the call extended to him by the consistory of the Reformed Low Dutch Church of Harlem, the following arrangements were made for his installation, to take place on the evening of September 22d: The sermon to be preached by the Rev. Dr. Wm. Ormiston; the charge to the pastor to be made by Rev. Dr. R. Terry; the charge to the people to be given by Rev. Mr. G. H. Smyth.

The Rev. T. J. Kommers, who has recently been installed as pastor-in-charge of the Knox Memorial Mission, was received from the Classis of Passaic.

Mr. Taber Knox, a graduate of the Union Theological Seminary, was examined in the subjects prescribed by the Constitution, and received his "license to preach the Gospel."

S. C.

....STUYVESANT, N. Y.—Rev. George Zabriskie Collier, of the last Class of the New Brunswick Theological Seminary, has accepted a call from this church, and will begin his service in the autumn. He is the son of the late Rev. Ezra W. Collier, of Freehold, N. J., and Coxsackie, N. Y., and a nephew of Rev. Edward Collier, of Kinderhook.

....THE REFORMED CHURCH AT ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES, under the care of the South Classis of Long Island, is now without a pastor. Rev. Anson DuBois, D.D., who has in an acceptable manner served them as pastor for three years past, has been compelled to resign his position on account of the health of his family. The South Classis of Long Island desire to secure some one as soon as possible to take charge of the church. All necessary information in the matter may be secured by addressing Rev. R. G. Strong, the Stated Clerk of the South Classis, at Flatbush, L. I.

....JAPAN MISSION.—The closing exercises of the Union College and Theological School at Tokiyo, were held on June 22d, in the largest hall obtainable in the city, near the foreign concession. Rev. Dr. Amerman presided as the senior Professor, and gave the address of welcome. Prof. Knox (Presbyterian Mission) read the Scriptures and offered the prayer. Addresses were delivered by several of the students and by Dr. Verbeck and others of the missions: that to the graduating class of the Seminary by Rev. Ibuka Kajinosuke, and to the graduating class of the college by Rev. J. M. McCauley. The benediction was pronounced by Prof. Harris. The exercises were interspersed with music. "It was a grand occasion," Dr. Amerman writes, "and well to be remembered by us all."

....ALEXANDRIA BAY, N. Y.—Rev. Dr. E. P. Ingersoll, of Brooklyn, is spending a part of his vacation on the St. Lawrence as the guest of his friend and fellow-citizen ex-Alderman Easton. On last Sabbath evening Dr. Ingersoll preached an excellent sermon in the Reformed Church of the Thousand Isles.

L.

....WESTERN ITEMS. — Rev. N. M. Steffens, D.D., Professor of Theology in the Western Theological Seminary, Holland, Mich., has been honored with the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the University of Jena, Germany....Dr. H. P. Oggel, of Pella, Iowa, has accepted an appointment in the Northwestern Academy. ....Rev. J. W. Warnshuis, of Alton, Iowa, has accepted a call from the Holland Church of Passaic, N. J.

....ALBANY, N. Y.—At the last communion of the First Church, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, pastor, there was an addition of seventeen adults to the membership. Pastor and people alike are greatly encouraged by the increasing audiences and prayerful attention to the preaching of the Gospel.

....THE REV. C. P. MURRAY has resigned as pastor of the Church of Lodi, N. Y.

Gleanings from Our Exchanges.

....The installation of Rev. Henry Martin Voorhees as pastor of the Church of Helderbergh, N. Y., took place Thursday afternoon, July 15th, before a large and deeply-interested attendance. Rev. P. E. Kipp, of Schenectady, preached the sermon. Rev. Laurens Vanderveer, of Rotterdam, N. Y., presided and read the form of installation. Rev. J. K. Rhinehart, of Princetown, N. Y., charged the pastor, and Rev. William Bailey, of Cedar Hill, N. Y., who was himself settled as pastor over the same church more than forty years ago, gave wise and practical counsel to the people respecting their duty to sustain their new minister. The people seem delighted in their new pastor, and the prospects of the church are auspicious.

....The death of the venerable Rev. J. Ford Morris on Sunday morning, July 11th, was not unexpected, but it was sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends. Mr. Morris was born at Somerville, Somerset county, N. J., June 7th, 1801. He graduated from the Theological Seminary at New Brunswick, N. J., and entered the ministry, but after several years of successful pulpit labor was obliged to give up his pastoral duties. He left New Jersey for Illinois in 1857, and settled at Raritan, where he resided about eighteen months, after which he moved to Bushnell, which has since been his home. Mr. Morris was well known throughout this section of country and highly esteemed for his many excellent qualities.—Bushnell (Ill.) Record.

....The Rev. P. K. Hageman and wife, returning from their vacation, were kindly remembered on the part of the people of Shawangunk, N. Y., by a cordial reception at the parsonage and a purse of over $100.

...The Sunday-school of the chapel at Glasco, N. Y., netted about $87 from their Fifth of July festival.

....On Sunday, July 4th, the congregation of the First Church of Ridgewood, N. J., raised the full amount of indebtedness on the church edifice. The congregation has grown very much during the past year, and the change that was made in the auditorium last winter has proved inadequate. It is intended soon to enlarge the present structure and to make such improvements as will be permanent. In the plans proposed there will be a neat spire added, which will beautify the building very much.

....On Sunday, July 11th, commemoration services were held in the church at Saddle River, N. Y., in honor of its one hundredth anniversary. The congregation was organized in 1784, but owing to a vacancy of the pulpit in '84 the commemoration was neglected until now. The principal speaker in the morning was the present pastor, Rev. W. N. Todd, who gave an able address, reviewing the history of the church from its organization by the Holland settlers to the present time. The first church was built of logs and octagonal in shape, the roof running to a point, formed a cupola over the centre of the building. It contained no seats or stoves, and the bell rope hung down in the centre of the room. Each member furnished his own chair, and the children were often forced to stand or sit on the floor by their mother's chair during the lengthy services. In winter foot stoves were used. Stoves were not introduced in the church till 1833. During this period of a hundred years the church has had ten pastors. The Rev. Mr. Vandelinda, who preached at both Paramus and Saddle River, was its first minister. A brief sketch of the lives of the different pastors was given by the speaker. Among the most faithful and long-serving of these was Domine Goetschius, whose bones now rest in the cemetery behind the church. He lived to be an old man, and when 80 years old he used to ride to church or to visit his members on horseback. In 1819 the log church was pulled down and the present stone structure was built. In the evening a centennial address was delivered by Rev. J. A. Van Neste, of Ridgewood, N. J.

The General Outlook.

....The Congregationalist publishes the following in relation to the Congregational Churches of Vermont: "Only three times in the last thirty years have additions to the churches equalled those of the past year. Special quickening came to forty of the two hundred, in some cases with larger accessions than for generations. As might be expected, such special quickening has been anticipated or followed by increased care of sanctuaries and parsonages. Said State Secretary Wild, in his annual report: 'For a decade, at least, there has not been apparent so extensive planning for the improvement of church property as during the last twelve months, nor a larger outlay, actual and prospective....Twenty five or more report an outlay in this direction of from several thousands of dollars, in some instances, for new houses of worship and parsonages, or the thorough remodeling of the old, to the lesser hundreds in the majority of cases, not less an evidence of desire to render the service of the church more attractive.' This in times of business depression. Other hopeful indications are, the organization of three new churches; a decided increase in the number of settled pastors, so that a larger proportion of our congregations than for twenty-five years sit under the stated ministry of the Word. Only sixteen churches are without stated supplies, while during eight of the last twenty five years forty have been destitute. Here also it is proper to recall the present financial depression. New Y. M. C. Associations have been established, and Sabbath-schools have increased by one thousand members."

....The University of Heidelberg celebrates in August the 500th anniversary of its existence. It is the oldest in Germany, having been established in 1386 by Elector Ruprecht. It became famous after it was reorganized by Melancthon in the sixteenth century. It is expected that 100,000 strangers will visit Heidelberg on this memorable occasion. An order has been made for a banquet to be given to 5,000 guests in the castle. The festivities are expected to last eight days and nights. During the nights there will be the grand illumination of the castle, a very imposing sight from below.

....The Rev. E. P. Hammond is holding meetings in Christiana, Norway, in a large hall which is crowded night after night. The desire of the people to hear the truth is so great that they are reluctant to leave at the close of the services. Mr. Hammond considers these the most remarkable meetings he has held in his long career as an evangelist.

News of the Week.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 21.—The Cabinet yesterday afternoon decided to place their resignation in the hands of the Queen.... Great excitement reported in the State of Tamaulipas....A riot reported in Marseilles....Adverse criticisms of the lecture delivered by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher have appeared in several of the London papers. The hall was not filled and the platform was empty....In the Crawford divorce case Mrs. Crawford confessed her guilt....A heavy storm visited Western Nebraska and Eastern Wyoming, wrecking many houses and tearing down thirty telegraph poles. In a violent storm last Sunday afternoon at St. Hilaire, Minn., four Indians were killed and ten injured by lightning. A settler and his wife living on Thief River were killed in the same way....Trial of the Anarchists still going on in Chicago....The Oleomargarine bill passed the Senate yesterday ... An express and gravel train met on a single track in Bridgeport, Conn., and two Italians were killed and five injured....Prefect Oposura of Sonora, and four companions were killed by Apaches in Arizona....A collision reported on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad near Nashville, Tenn., and seven men were instantly killed. Both engines were a total wreck.

THURSDAY, 22.—Mr. Gladstone's resignation accepted by the Queen. London gives very little credit to Gladstone for a great effort to settle the Irish question. Mr. Gladstone's friends think that he intends to lead the Opposition in Parliament....Two hundred rioters were captured by the police at Marseilles....Jesuits are to be expelled from Peru. The feeling against them is growing more and more intense....A hot wave is passing over England, accompanied by severe thunderstorms. Loss of life from drowning reported in France. The Dansette spinnery at Armentieres was struck by lightning and damaged to the amount of 12,500,000 francs. The heat in Paris is excessive....A heavy hailstorm visited Milton and Georgia, Vermont, last Sunday night, doing much damage to fruit trees. Fowls and birds were killed, and the whole region on the shore of Lake Champlain is a picture of havoc and desolation....President Cleveland, Secretaries Bayard and Whitney and Private Secretary Lamont left Washington yesterday to participate in the bi-centennial celebration at Albany....Norman L. Monro's challenge to Jay Gould to race the "Henrietta" against the "Atalanta" for $100,000 a side is not accepted by Gould.

FRIDAY, 23.—Lord Aberdeen has made himself very popular in Ireland and his recent visit to the South was regarded as the most remarkable incident of recent political history....It is stated that China has intrusted French engineers with the construction at an early date of railways in the Empire....Captain Foster admitted his guilt in the Crawford divorce case. A verdict will be rendered to-morrow ...A child standing on the track of the Boston & Lowell Railroad was tossed unhurt from the track by the pilot of the engine....An explosion and fire took place in Ehret's brewery in East Ninety-second street, New York city, yesterday. The explosion took place in the malt mill. Loss $25,000....Simon Wilcox, a farmer, was paralyzed while blaspheming his Creator for the destruction of crops by a hailstorm....While Louis E. Becker, employed in the American Wood Powder Company's Works at Secaucus, N. J., was carrying a 100-pound can of powder, he slipped nd fell; the powder exploded with a terrible report. Parts of Becker's body were found over the buildings and grounds... Albany's 200th birthday dawned bright and fair yesterday. The old Rensselaer cannon sounded 200 times with the rising of the sun. An address was made by Governor Hill, a poem recited by William McElroy, and remarks made by President Cleveland.

SATURDAY, 24.—The jury in the case of Crawford against Crawford and Dilke, found Mrs. Crawford guilty of adultery with Sir Charles Dilke and granted Mr. Crawford a divorce. Sir Charles Dilke has ordered the sale of his house at Chelsea. He will leave England and live permanently in the South of France.

(Cont page thirteen.)

Our Contributors.

August.

BY LILLIAN GREY.

FAIR August, sung the least of all the months!
We fain would give some words of praise to thee;
Thou art the fullness of the summer time,
Thy lavish bounties are so large and free.

June has a winning sweetness all her own;
July bears up her martial crown with pride;
But thou, O August, bring'st first harvests home,
And scatters luscious fruitage far and wide.

Thy fields are rich with goodness of the Lord,
Thy forests don a shade of deeper sheen;
While slacken wheels of toil, and toilers rove
Beside still waters and through pastures green.

They climb the heights to rest in summer calm,
And watch the sunrise and the sunset glow;
Tired eyes long used to walls of brick and stone,
New brightness gain and earth's grand beauties know.

For them, fair month, bring forth thy royal pomp!
Blue mountain peaks against the bluer sky,
Calm star-lit nights and mornings sweet with dew,
All filled with blessing may thy days glide by.

And yet we feel a wistful tenderness
In watching thee, of summer months the last,
Like that we feel toward some sweet frail friend
O'er whom we know the spell of doom is cast.

Soon thou wilt but a precious memory be,—
So fast the seasons urge each other on;
But for thy gifts, thy rest, thy loveliness,
Millions will think of thee when thou art gone!

PEEKSKILL, N. Y.

A Beautiful Life.

BY REV. W. W. HALLOWAY, JR.

THREE things at least are essential to a beautiful life. First, Completeness. Anything unfinished is, so far forth, lacking in beauty. It gives a sense of dissatisfaction. It suggests mishap. To please us and to content us a thing must be complete, a whole. It is true that we see many beautiful things which have not reached full maturity, which are in the course of development. God has provided that life shall move onward by a series of stages, and in each of these stages there is a time of crudeness and a time of completeness. So there is a beauty of bud as well as of flower, of childhood as well as of manhood and age. But the beauty of each is the beauty of perfection in its stage of growth toward final perfection. The bud is complete as a bud. The child is lovable and attractive as a child. Nevertheless, if the child be cut down in its childhood we feel that it has come to an immature and untimely end. The hopes it gave of future usefulness are all disappointed. The joy of work completed is denied it, and we mourn deeply; we feel the incongruity of things. It seems as if there was something wrong. As Christians, we will not murmur at the Lord's doings, but we cannot get rid of the thought, when the child dies in its incomplete fulfillment of promise, that this is not as it should be. And, doubtless, it is not as it would be if there had never been sin. In that case, there would, probably, have been some way provided for man's removal from earth which would not have had the painfulness and tragedy of death. Probably, too, provision would have been made for all to attain the fulness of their powers here.

Now, old age seems something like an approach, at least, to the right order of things. It is the best earthly exhibit of the attainment of human wishes, the realization of early promises, the rounding out of human character. Hence, there is a beauty belonging to old age which belongs to no other period. All the experiences and powers of the previous stages of life have been accumulating for this. It is rich in wisdom and repose and love. There is a better "co-operation of all the faculties one with another, which is something far higher than the disjointed experiences of early life. It is like the action of the Divine mind in which every faculty interpenetrates every other, making God one and perfect. And in man it is an intimation that he is approaching the Divine mind, and getting ready, as it were, for the company of God." And when, at last, the end is reached, in the fulness of age, the man comes to his grave "like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season." There is an appropriateness in his death which, instead of giving an impression of disaster and disappointment, adds to our sense of the beauty of the life.

Another thing necessary to a beautiful life is Unity—the harmony of the outer conditions and the inner man, the adaptation of the powers to the work which is to be done, the symmetry of character and experiences.

A thing may be very beautiful in its place, which, out of its place, would appear ridiculous and mean. The element of fitness must always be taken into consideration when judging an object.

Now every one's life is a plan of God. There is a definite work for each to do, a particular place for each to fill. For that we are destined, and for that prepared with organs and faculties. The beauty and efficiency of life are in proportion to the degree that it fits in with the Divine plan and accomplishes its allotted task. Many are restless and uneasy, and their lives poor and imperfect, because they never discover their real sphere and quality of work. They go from one thing to another, miserable in all, unfitted to all, accomplishing nothing by all. We talk of woman's sphere. And it is, perhaps, true that many foolish things are said about it. Especially is it foolish for men to try to make her sphere for her. None can say to her that she shall not do whatever she finds she can do. Still, the use of the term is a crude recognition of the fact that God has fitted woman with special powers for a special kingdom. She is constituted so as to influence most mightily by the sweet potency of love. Anything that lessens that power, anything that takes her out of the spheres where the affections have best and widest play, will be at the loss of her beauty and usefulness. But it is no more true of women than of men that, to any peace or joy of life, it must move in the right orbit. "Every human soul has a complete and perfect plan, cherished for it in the heart of God, a Divine biography marked out, which it enters into life to live." To miss this plan is to bring disaster, or, at least, to produce discord. To reach it will give dignity to the poorest outward conditions, and grace to the homeliest physical organization, and significance and efficiency to the most delicate and the most retiring life.

A third essential to a beautiful life is Holiness. This is the most necessary of all. Whatever else one has, without the "beauty of holiness" the principal ingredient of a really attractive life is lacking. And this is the crown of all other qualities, because it is most Divine. We read in the Scriptures of "the beauty of the Lord." What is that? It is the beauty of holiness. The glory of God is not the glory of outer surroundings, not the glory and blaze of material riches, not the glory and pomp of power, but the glory of character. When Moses asked God to show him His glory, the Lord passed by before him in response to his prayer, and proclaimed, "the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth." That is, the Lord showed His glory to Moses in revealing His character. He made known to him and to us that the Divine beauty is the beauty of a holy character; that the Divine glory is the glory of goodness and mercy and truth. Holiness, then, makes most beautiful, because it makes us most like God. We partake of His nature in proportion to the measure of His Holy Spirit given to us. This is the law of human beauty. "We all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

DOVER, N. J.

Among the Poor.

BY O. A. BIERSTADT.

CITY people commonly know little and care less about their neighbors, so it is perhaps to be expected that half of New York should be quite ignorant of how the other half lives. But a single personal visit to some of the tenements and slums of the great metropolis would set its well-to-do citizens thinking, and might awaken more of that practical sympathy with the sufferings of the poor which is so urgently needed in the settlement of the pressing social and economic problems of our time.

With an agent of the Children's Aid Society the writer was recently privileged to peep into the homes of a few poor families on the west side of the city. The ostensible object of our visits was to inquire why certain boys and girls were not more regular in attending school. On one of the avenues, much nearer to the Hudson river than to Fifth avenue, stands a miserable little frame building with a liquor-dealer's sign conspicuously displayed. Passing the door of the vile gin-mill, we go through the side entrance, climb a rickety pair of stairs, and find ourselves in presence of a poor Irish family. The room is wretchedly furnished, and its only ornament is a large cross in shell-work on the mantel-piece. Dinner is long since over, but its greasy fragments and plates have not yet been removed from the oil-cloth covered table. A huge wash tub is in the middle of the room with a scrubbing board and a half-wrung garment protruding. Close to the tub two women are seated, stout, lazy, dirty, with uncombed hair, steaming faces and rolled up sleeves. Years have written tenement-house all over them. One of the does most of the talking, and declares that her boy likes best to run wild in the streets and will never go regularly to school until he is frightened into it. There are two men in the room, and rough-looking customers they seem to be. They wear the garb of longshoremen, blue blouses and overalls—both fresh from clean, and have not troubled themselves to take off their caps. They sit there, crouching and drooping down, half awake and half asleep, in a brutish drunken torpor. One of them has not sense enough left to keep the clay pipe in his mouth right side up, while the other can just mutter some unintelligible curses from time to time. The only active person there is a sharp young girl, who flits about everywhere and has not a few words to say. A dark towel is pinned around her head, and we wonder whether she officiates as a walking clothes-line. The last and youngest member of the company is a very little girl, who clings to the skirts of the mistress and peers out at the whole scene with the most innocent eyes and face imaginable. Her mother has gone out for a day's work and has left her there to be taken care of until called for. The child is like a flower amid weeds. In a garden, weeds are exterminated to give life to the flowers, but since in the garden of humanity the weeds cannot be so lightly destroyed, perhaps the only way of saving such a flower is to transplant it.

Far west on one of the numbered side-streets we pass through an alley to reach a dilapidated tenement house, built in the rear of those lining the street. The bit of yard affords a fine view of flutter ing rags, put out to dry, and of a multitude of fire escapes. We walk into the back room on the ground floor of this rear house, and find ourselves in darkness, though the sun is shining brightly enough on the side. In a few moments our eyes grow a trifle more owlish, and we see some scanty furniture and two persons. The floor seems to be below the level of the ground, and a damp, musty, unclean odor pervades the place. A young girl relates the history of the household. She has a pleasant face and modest manners, but can she always keep them, when she is on such a dangerous fence between a virtuous and a vicious life? She has little to say of her parents—perhaps the less said of them the better, but dilates all the more on her sister and brother. Her younger sister was recently attacked by a notorious ruffian, and is now detained under lock and key until her testimony has been given in court. It is a very edifying judicial procedure, that sometimes lets the assailant go free on bail and shuts up the assailed. When this unfortunate sister is delivered from the law's grip she will either return to school or go out to service. The brother helps to support the family, but he is not working to-day, "because he don't feel good." There he is in the darkest corner of the dark room, laid flat on his back upon the bed, with his clothes and his boots on, and breathing very hard. It is only too evident that the fellow is sleeping off the effects of a drunken spree. What a relief the sun is after his dark den!

Climbing up several flights of break-neck stairs we enter a back room just under the roof. Its only occupants are a very old Irish woman and her little grand-daughter. The old woman frames her wrinkled visage in an outlandish cap, pins a faded shawl over her shoulders, and is altogether a very picturesque waif from the Emerald Isle. Though she is almost as deaf as a post, her tongue never tires of ratting on. She came over the water a quarter of a century ago, and for the last eighteen years this house has been her home. It seems a miracle that the old shanty has held together so long. The life of this aged grandmother is not exactly a bed of roses. She points to some kindling wood on the floor, and intimates that she has gathered it up in the streets. Some sort of insurance club or association numbers her among its members, and she has a hard struggle to get together the dues of ten cents that must be paid every week. She brings the palms of her hands together, rolls up her eyes and sighs, as she recalls the time when a charitable gift of groceries kept her from starvation. She is too old and feeble to be very handy about doing the domestic work, and her housekeeper is no other than the little grand-daughter, nine years old. It is a severe task for a child, but she is as cheerful over it as a cricket. The little girl is absent from school just now on account of ill health. She has not inherited the best of blood or her face and neck are swollen, and her blue eyes are so blurred and weak that she should be taken post-haste to an oculist. This miserably poor attic room, the quaint old grandmother, and her brave and helpful little girl housekeeper, once seen, can never be forgotten, and what a lesson of contentment under privation might be drawn from them.

After these and other visits it is pleasant to step into one of the twenty-one day industrial schools maintained by the Children's Aid Society. There can be no nobler work in the world than that accomplished by this single organization in preventing future paupers and criminals by taking up the children of the slums, educating them, and sending many of them to western homes. This particular school is a model of its kind. The children are remarkably neat and clean, however squalid their homes may be, and they seem to average better looking than the offspring of wealthy parents. It is most amusing to see the class of very small children. They combine music and gymnastics in a way that would have delighted Plato, and as they sing some pretty jingle about "Birdie in the green-wood," they swing their arms aloft and act out the words in cunning fashion. Such dear little innocents they are, that one would gladly do his mite to better their homes and lives.

A Summer Bible School.

A Remarkable Gathering of College Men.—Mr. Moody in His Element.—Over 300 Young Men Studying the Bible.—A Noble and Far-Reaching Work.

EDITOR INTELLIGENCER: At your request I send you a brief account of Mr. Moody's Summer School, which it has been a great privilege to attend.

Over 300 students, representing the Y. M. C. Associations in 80 colleges, are now spending the month of July at Mt. Hermon, Mass., Mr. Moody's school for boys. From 8 to 9 A. M. methods of Christian work are fully discussed, and from 10 to 12 o'clock attention is given to the study of the Word. The afternoons are devoted to recreation, such as tennis, baseball, boating, fishing, etc., while the evening is occupied by a singing class and social intercourse.

The chief work, however, is done in the morning session for Bible study. Prof. Towner leads the singing and Mr. Sankey gives an occasional solo. The teachers are Rev. James H. Brooks, D.D., of St. Louis, Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D., of Philadelphia, Rev. Dr. Moorhead, of the Theological Seminary in Xenia, Ohio, Rev. A. J. Gorden, D.D., of Boston, and others.

The subjects presented during the week of my visit were these: Inspiration, The Divinity of Christ, The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit, Synopsis of New Testament Books, How to Study the Scriptures, Foreign Missions, etc.

The students take very full notes and often interrupt the speaker with questions. Passages from the Bible are freely quoted in corroboration of the truths being taught. Dr. Brooks presented verbal inspiration and the Divinity of Christ with sledge-hammer blows, giving a "thus saith the Lord" for every statement, impressing all with the fact that the Bible not only contains but is the Word of God. Dr. Pierson's addresses on The Evidences of Christianity, the Fulfilment of Prophecy, the Destruction of Jerusalem, and Foreign Missions, were an amazement to all who heard him, showing a vast amount of historical research and Bible study, and impressing us with the truthfulness of his conclusions.

One of the most interesting features of this Summer School is the constant questioning of the students. The teachers were beset at all hours of the day and evening with questions on the Scriptures, until some of them were quite exhausted, and Mr. Moody was obliged to ask the boys to let up a little. Saturday noon he told the students to put up their Bible and note books, and not to study or ask another question till Tuesday morning, as he had planned a holiday for Monday. The fact is, these scholars were getting too much as well as their instructors, and all needed a rest.

This is a glorious work, and its influence will be far reaching. These young men will carry back to their homes and their colleges an enthusiasm for Christian work and a knowledge and love for the work, which they have never had before. A large number have already decided for the Christian ministry, and we know of no better way of filling up the empty seats in our theological seminaries than by the establishment of such a Bible school.

We would be glad to call the attention of ministers and all interested in the Word and the work to the convocation to be held in Northfield under the call of Mr. Moody, August 4–14th, notice of which appeared in the INTELLIGENCER last week.

Yours in the truth, W. W. C.

[From the Springfield Republican we see that our correspondent, Rev. Mr. Clark, of Staten Island, has had a very busy week at this Bible School. Copious reports are given of his addresses on the Holy Spirit, and on the New Testament books, while three columns were devoted to the address on "How to Study the Scriptures," which appeared recently in the INTELLIGENCER, and which was given at Mt. Hermon at Mr. Moody's special request.—ED.]

No Indian, No Moose.

A Spring Trip in Fur-Land.

BY EDWARD A. RAND.

MALCOLM hesitated. Leaning over the counter he looked into the Indian's face and then said to himself: "No, no, I must not take advantage of him. I can make a big-sized penny out of this if I want to, but I—won't!"

Having thus reasoned to himself, he said aloud to the Indian: "You did not count your furs right. There are more than you say; two—don't you see? That is to your advantage."

The Indian, who was selling skins at a Hudson's Bay Company fort, saw his mistake, chuckled, grinned, said: "Me no forget you!"

He received the goods due for his skins and left the store. This store was connected with the fort or trading-post. Visit such a place of barter, and you will find there guns, powder, shot, brilliant cloths, warm blankets, glittering beads, and among other things, bright ribbons. In another building you will find the objects dear to the madames and misses that promenade Broadway—the fur of marten and mink, sable and black fox. That of beaver and buffalo, big bear and little bear, will also here be stored to gratify the wishes of varying classes of customers.

Having completed this trade, Malcolm Sprague left the store and prepared for a sledge-ride in quest of furs. His fellow-clerk, David Brown, had been directed to join him, and three half-breeds went with them to drive the dog-teams. Each half breed fastened on his snow shoes, and grasping his whip, prepared to crack it about the ears of the dogs harnessed to the sledges drawing Malcolm and David and their baggage. Four dogs, succeeding one another, were harnessed to a sledge.

"All ready!" cried Malcolm to the drivers.

"All ready!" was David's ringing response to Malcolm.

"Good-by!" shouted a group of spectators from the fort as the sledges began to glide over the snow, the drivers shouting and flourishing their whips, the dogs tossing up their heads and ringing music out of their bells. Malcolm and David turned and shouted "Good-by!"

The party took the bed of the frozen river in front of the fort. It was a picturesque scene. Over this white ice-floor raced the jingling dog teams, urged by the drivers, who, on their snow shoes, travelled by the side of the sledges. The banks of the river rose on either hand, shaggy with emerald forests of pine.

At noon the sledge party halted for a hasty lunch, and toward twilight a camp for the night was selected. A fire was kindled, and brush for bedding was spread over the snow. Then came supper. A man in the service of the Hudson's Bay Company will receive different rations in different districts. A voyager or traveller in Attiabasca is said to receive each day eight pounds of moose meat; in the Saskatchewan ten pounds of buffalo meat; in English River three big white fish; but up in the North he has half fish and reindeer—whatever the quantity, while on the southerly rim of Hudson's Bay he is daily made happy with a wild goose. But we must let our travellers go to bed. Blankets were spread over the brush. That made a mattress. The pilgrims, warmly clad, stretched out upon this, each man covered with a buffalo robe, and his feet toward the hot, crackling fire. The dogs went to bed wherever they could comfortably squat, and David was aroused in the night to find that one dog had crept close up to his male protector. The next morning all were up early. A breakfast that resembled very closely the supper was eaten, and then away went the dog-sledges, while the little bells jingled and the drivers shouted. As the days went on the party saw black bunches out on the white prairie, and knew that it meant buffalo. By-and-by they came into the land of the moose. The sun was now climbing up to higher rounds in that golden ladder it daily scaled, and everything showed signs of the advent of spring. The snow was melting on mountain slope and in the valleys, and down into the gorges sparkled little rivulets of water. Malcolm and his party were encamped in a forest already tenanted by an Indian family who had engaged to furnish them with a canoe for the rest of their river trip. While waiting for their birch bark conveyance, Pierre, a driver, said one day to Malcolm: "Do you want to have a moose-steak for supper?"

"Do I? Give me a chance to get it."

"Come this way, then."

Malcom followed him a mile down the bank of the river and perhaps a mile into the woods, and then Pierre said, "See there!"

There were moose tracks in the soft snow as plain as if this sentence had been written there: "I am a moose."

"There are the broken willow-tops on which he fed not long ago," remarked Pierre, pulling down the willow branches. "He has had a good meal and is resting somewhere up in the woods. I am glad it is a windy day."

For a while a lively wind stirred the lonely forest usually so silent, and at its pressure, occasionally, boughs would snap and rush down to the ground.

"Why glad, Pierre?"

"The moose has a very keen smell and a very sharp hearing, too. When I go through the brush, perhaps breaking it, he would hear me if in the neighborhood, but to day, he knows—that sharp old fellow—it is the wind that is breaking off branches. Then I must look out for his nose. He will smell me if I don't look out. You stay here."

Gun in hand, gliding along on his snow shoes, Pierre vanished into the forest. Malcolm lingered under the lofty trees. How still! No, the wind that had lulled now rose again, and hark! a branch was breaking far overhead, and down it came, sprinkling the snow with its withered twigs. Where was Pierre? At last came a sound that was not the cracking of a branch but a gun, and Malcolm saw a huge mass of horns and body plunging toward him. He was to the leeward of the moose, who had therefore failed to take his scent. The moose saw him and turned. It was only to be the object of a second shot from Pierre and the creature fell to become rations for the travellers if—they could carry their game to camp.

"We must have help," said Pierre.

"You wait here and I'll hurry back to camp and get help," said Malcolm.

While Pierre remained on guard in Mooseville, Malcolm hurried off through the great Canada forest. After a while Malcolm said to himself, "Where is camp? I ought to be there by this time."

The longer he travelled, however, the more he was perplexed. He shifted his course, but he did not find the camp.

"Queer!" he said. By-and-by he halted, sat down on a log, and concluded, "Well, I—I—I—am—" he did not like to say "lost!" It is an ugly word in the Canada wilds. Hark! Did he hear a moose crunching the snow behind him? He turned, and there was an Indian wrapped in his furs and out hunting.

"Oh! oh!" he cried. "Me no forget you!"

It was the Indian who had traded with Malcolm at the fort.

"What you here for?" asked the Indian.

"I—I—don't know where camp is."

"Your camp, your people? Me know; me show you."

And safe to camp he guided Malcolm. Helping hands were secured and the moose brought home. Recalling this, Malcolm would sometimes say, "No Indian, no moose."

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—Statistics of Christian work accomplished in the Sandwich Islands have been heretofore given in various places, but the following facts brought together by Rev. Mr. Forbes, Secretary of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, will be of interest. The first Hawaiian pastor was ordained in 1849. Since that time ninety-five Hawaiians have been ordained, of whom thirty-eight are at present pastors in the home field, and nine are in foreign service, making forty-seven native Hawaiians who are now either pastors or missionaries in active service. Since 1852, when the first Hawaiians went to Micronesia in company with Messrs. Snow, Gulick and Sturges, not less than seventy-five Sandwich Islanders have gone as foreign missionaries, thirty-nine of them males, thirty-six females. The total sum contributed at the Islands for foreign missions has been $170,149.44. Of this amount $133,015.86 was contributed by native Hawaiian churches, the remainder by foreign churches and individuals at the Islands. The contributions of the Hawaiian churches for all purposes from the beginning, so far as can be ascertained, amount to $818 270.35. This record should awaken our gratitude and stimulate our faith.—Missionary Herald.

The Reading Room.

Our Book-Shelves.

.....“CALIFORNIA: From the Conquest in 1846 to the Second Vigilance Committee in San Francisco.” A Study of American Character. By Josiah Royce. (American Commonwealths.) The plan of this volume is essentially that of the historical monograph. The author does not attempt to give a complete history of the State, but limits his review to the critical, formative period from 1846 to 1856, and minutely considers the stirring incidents of those eventful years with a view to exhibiting the distinguishing characteristics which mark the life of the State. His aim,—consistently and satisfactorily realized,—is to show the social condition of the people; to trace the formative process, by which independent and irresponsible communities, animated chiefly by a regard for individual interests, developed in social order, until the separate and often rival interests were merged in the broader life of the State. Everything that may serve to throw light upon this phase of California history is carefully examined and fairly stated. The question of the responsibility for the aggressive acts which led to the acquisition by the United States of the territory is fully discussed, and as it seems to us, with great fairness. The story of the great mining enterprises, especially as they affected social order and efficient government, is clearly and strongly told; and the political conflict, with the incidents which mark the advance from lawlessness to the systematic enforcement of justice, is described with sufficient fulness. The work throughout is carefully and thoroughly done, and will be appreciated by all students of history. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

....“REMINISCENCES OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN,” collected by Mr. Allen Thorndike Rice, editor of the North American Review, abounds in incidents characteristic of the great President, related by distinguished gentlemen who knew him intimately. These incidents were such as impressed them at the time as illustrating the ruling traits of Mr. Lincoln's nature and the principles controlling his policy. They are, therefore, not trivial, but are recorded for the purpose of showing the grounds on which their estimate of a remarkable man rest. The gentlemen who write these recollections and impressions are such as Gen. Grant, Hon. E. B. Washburne, Hon. R. E. Fenton, Hon. J. P. Usher, Hon. George S. Boutwell, Gen. B. F. Butler, Charles Carlton Coffin, Frederick Douglass, Judge Wheldon, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Hon. Cassius Clay, Hon. Chas. A. Dana, Chauncey M. Depew, David R. Locke (Petroleum V. Nasby), Don Piatt, Thomas Hicks (the artist), and eighteen others. Leonard Swett, Esq., contributes “Mr. Lincoln's Story of His Own Life.”

The book has an introduction by Mr. Rice, occupying some seventy or more pages, which is itself very interesting reading, and in which is given in fac-simile the dispatch conveying to Mr. Adams, our Minister at the Court of St. James, Mr. Seward's first full instructions after the outbreak of the Rebellion, and which undoubtedly saved our country from war with England. This fac-simile shows the corrections suggested by President Lincoln. Portraits of Abraham Lincoln, U. S. Grant, E. B. Washburne, R. E. Fenton, George S. Boutwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Frederick Douglass, Schuyler Colfax, and a number of others appear in this attractive volume, engraved expressly for it from photographs furnished by the contributors. (North American Publishing Company.)

.....In “PRÆTERITA,” Volume II., Chapters 1–3, Mr. John Ruskin flows on at his (not always) “sweet will.” He fears that the remainder of his autobiography will not be as pleasing to his readers as the former part, because “the talk must be less of other persons and more of myself.” But he is greatly mistaken, for it is about himself, and about other persons and things only as they are lighted up by their contact with himself, that we want to know. And he is never so charming and characteristic as when he is most egotistic. These three chapters are not quite as irrelevantly, though picturesquely, named as some of the former ones, being entitled “Of Age,” “Rome,” and “Cumæ,”—the first giving the situation of things on his attaining his majority, and the others relating to his first visits to the Eternal City and Naples.

We have here given the influence of his private tutor, Osborne Gordon, in forming his literary character, also an æsthetic plunge into a large collection of Turner's drawings, collected by a retired coach- named Windus, who, with Ruskin himself, are declared to be the only persons in England at that time (and Turner was already sixty) who “cared, in the true sense of the word, for Turner.” Ruskin's career at Oxford was soon cut short by a spitting of blood, and thence came the Italian journey. The story of this journey is very realistically told, and is highly entertaining. Still more is it dramatically interesting, as we find the great future art critic and reformer coming under the spell of classic art, of picturesque Italy, and of Michael Angelo. (John Wiley & Sons.)

....The Bishop Paddock Lectures of the present year (1886) delivered before the General Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church, have just been published. They are entitled “THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE SUPERNATURAL,” by W. H. Platt, D.D., LL.D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Rochester, N.Y.

The lecturer discuss with clearness and ability the questions at issue between materialistic science and Christianity. Lecture I. treats of Supernatural Power, proving that there is such a power, that it implies being and a person—and that it is one with God. The remaining lectures, six in number, discuss “Methods of Supernatural Power,” as related to Miracles, Providence, Law, Creation, Evolution, Correlation and Persistence.

The lectures are somewhat unequal in merit, but manifest sound thinking and careful reading. The style is vigorous, and the book can be accepted as a valuable addition to the literature, already voluminous, which treats of this portion of Christian apologetics. (E. P. Dutton & Co.)

....“THE JEWISH ALTAR: An Inquiry into the Spirit and Intent of the Expiatory Offerings of the Mosaic Ritual, with Special Reference to their Typical Character.” By John Leighton, D.D. This little book, with so long a title, is a protest against the allegorizing school of interpretation, which finds the Gospel typified and symbolized in every feature and detail of the Mosaic ritual. It is a timely and useful work, both for its trenchant attack on a vicious school of exegesis, and its strong affirmation of the worth of the Old Testament, in order to the understanding and interpretation of the New. It argues that the object of the altar service and Mosaic ritual was educational, and not predictive or prophetic. “The services of the altar are to the death of Christ what the axioms and definitions of geometry are to the demonstrations of that science.” (Funk & Wagnalls.)

....“MANY MISTAKES MENDED” is evidently intended to furnish uneducated people with the means of correcting common errors in speaking and writing. The book is likely to prove helpful in many ways, but it might very easily have been made more serviceable, and cannot be commended as a thoroughly safe guide. In order to correct mistakes in an intelligent way, it is necessary to know not only what is correct, but also the rules or principles which determine correct usage. In this particular the work is very defective. In the majority of cases, the anonymous author's statement is the only authority—a very insufficient one—for the corrections suggested, rules and explanatory principles being given in very few instances.

In the matter of classification the work is also faulty.

As the principle of selection is not announced and certainly is not apparent, it is perhaps not a fair subject of criticism, but it may be said that many of the errors pointed out are so obvious that no person of ordinary intelligence will need any instruction regarding them.

The lack of a general index is a serious defect in a book which is likely to be used largely as a work of reference. (N. Tibbals & Sons.)

....“SPUN FROM FACT,” by Pansy, is a story of the “Faith Cure,” said to be founded upon facts in the history of a young girl, the “Jeannie Bartlett” of this book. She was supposed to be a cripple for life, but at last was suddenly and entirely restored in answer to prayer. “Pansy” assures the reader that “every item of importance, every reference to prayer as a constant factor in this life, however improbable in its sound, is strict truth.” This is the “fact” from which her story is “spun.” The narrative flows pleasantly along, and whatever the reader may think of the phenomena presented, it cannot fail to interest those who desire to know more of these remarkable cases. (D. Lothrop & Co.)

....“THE BATTLE OF THE BOOKS,” by Dean Swift, with some of his best verses to Vanessa and Stella, and “POEMS,” by George Crabbe, fill the last two numbers of “Cassell's National Library.” If one wishes to carry in a small space some of the best kind of English literature as he goes on his vacation, he cannot do better than look over this series of reprints. (Cassell & Co.)

Our Library Table.

Periodicals, Serials and Notes.

...Harper's Magazine for August has for its great illustrated articles a descriptive and historical account of Detroit, “the City of the Strait,” by Edmund Kirke; “The Transatlantic Captains,” sketches of the captains of the steamers on our great ocean lines; and “Orchids,” illustrated by Gibson and Parsons. The first of these is of unusual interest for its reading matter. William Winter contributes a sketch of the incomparable actor, “Joe” Jefferson, of whom a portrait in his character of “Bob Acres” is given as a frontispiece. Two poems of exceptional merit are contained in this number: “An Elective Course,” by T. B. Aldrich, and “Veronica,” by the author of “John Halifax.” Richard T. Ely writes with startling intelligence on “The Economic Evils in American Railway Affairs,” and John Habberton humorously on “The Penalties of Authorship.” Titus Munson Coan writes on “Some French Mineral Springs” for whomsoever it may concern. Lucy C. Lillie contributes “De Barbadoesa's Little Hour,” a readable and bright story. Mr. Warner takes his tourists on “Their Pilgrimage” to Bar Harbor. Mr. Curtis discourses in his most characteristic style of “Minding Other People's Business,” “The Wife's Vow of Obedience,” “Jenkins in a new rôle,” etc. The “Editor's Study” is confined mostly to notices of new books.

....The Atlantic for August is filled with good things. Besides the three serial stories, Sarah Orne Jewett begins a somewhat amusing tale of “The Two Browns,” and this is followed in the same vein by “Six Views of St. Augustine,” in which the old Spanish town is pictured from different standpoints. “Domestic Economy in the Confederacy” gives a view of the troubles brought upon Southern households by the strict blockade maintained during the civil war. The critical articles and “Contributors' Club” are worthy of their setting, while the poetry, scattered here and there, is of more than average merit. Summer readers will find the August Atlantic just what they need.

.. An entertaining article on Handwriting in the English Illustrated Magazine has fac-similes of the writing of Canning, Wellington, Scott, Macaulay, Carlyle, Cruikshank and other famous Englishmen. A paper on Charles Kingsley and Eversley, with beautiful pictures of the Rectory and Church and of other views and buildings, written by the Rev. Wm. Harrison, gratifies the eager appetite so many have to know all about one of the noblest natures of these latter days. Mr. Hugh Thomson continues his illustrations of Days With Sir Roger de Coverley, treating this time The Picture Gallery, but with not so much individuality as his previous drawings have led us to expect.

....In the Sidereal Messenger for the month will be found an account of Pulkowa Double-Star Work, by Otto Struve, being selections from a private letter to Mr. S. W. Burnham, of Chicago, and a discussion of Diffraction in modifying measurements of stars, by Mr. Parkhurst; also a Short Method for Computing Occultations, by Chas. L. Woodside, with a diagram, and the conclusion of Prof. H. C. Wilson's examination of Personal Errors in Double-Star Observations, Valuable notes on the comets, the Great Lick Equatorial, on Repolishing Rock Salt Surfaces, and a table of Occultations of Stars in the Hyades, observed in San Francisco, at the Davidson Observatory, give interest to the editorial pages.

....Shoppell's Modern Houses is an illustrated architectural quarterly in its first volume. No. 3, issued this month, and now on our table has interested us very much. It is filled with handsome cuts of cottages which may be built at prices varying from $600 to $18,000. Elevations, floor-plans, all are given, with full details of construction. This magazine is just what everybody feels the need of and should have, who contemplates building, and if one of these designs be selected (and it is hardly possible for even the most fastidious not to find something to his taste in the collection) the work of the architect and of obtaining estimates of cost is already largely done for him. It is published by the Coöperative Building Plan Association, 191 Broadway, N. Y. $1 a number.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

John B. Alden: History of the Conquest of Mexico. With a Preliminary View of the Ancient Mexican Civilization, and the Life of the Conqueror, Hernando Cortes. By William H. Prescott. In two volumes. Vol. I. 12mo, pp. 467. $2.25.

Funk & Wagnalls: Gospel Faith Commended to Common Sense. By John Leighton, D.D. 12mo, pp. 139. 75 cents.

UNBOUND BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Præterita. Outlines of Scenes and Thoughts Perhaps Worthy of Memory in My Past Life. By John Ruskin, LL.D. Vol. II., Chap. 4. Fontainebleau.

Year Book of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church on Staten Island. Organized 1640. Incorporated 1792. Published by Authority A.D. 1886. 16mo, pp. 26.

The Sixty-Second Annual Report of the American Sunday-School Union. May, 1886. 8vo, pp. 80.

Year Book of the Young Men's Christian Association of the United States and Dominion of Canada. For the Year 1886. 8vo, pp. 193.

The Acts and Proceedings of the Eightieth Regular Session of the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America, Convened at New Brunswick, N. J., June, 1886.

Like Lucifer. A Novel. By Denzil Vane. (No. 535, Harper's Franklin Square Library.) 4to, pp. 59. 20 cents; also,

The Fall of Asgard. A Novel. By Julian Corbett. (No. 86, Harper's Handy Series.) 16mo, pp. 193. 25 cents.

Plutarch's Lives of Alcibiades and Coriolanus, Aristides and Cato the Censor. Translated by J. and W. Langhorne. (Vol. I., No. 26, Cassell's National Library.) 32mo, pp. 192. 10 cents.

PERIODICALS.

July.—The Lutheran Church Review, Publishers' Weekly, The American Antiquarian and Oriental Journal.

August.—Wide Awake, The Guardian, St. Nicholas, The Popular Science Monthly, Harper's Monthly, The Art Journal, The Domestic Monthly, The Pulpit Treasury, The Forum, Magazine of American History, Outing.

Atheistic French Rulers.

A SCENE has just taken place in our Municipal Council in Paris, characteristic of the attitude of many minds in France in relation to religion, that I cannot refrain from giving you a brief sketch of what took place. I refer to the discussion in one of the sessions of last month, as to the rules which should regulate the choice of books for the elementary schools of Paris. These schools are unfortunately under the control of the Municipal Council, which has a fanatical horror of all religion. The Council not only uses but abuses its authority. For instance, a few years ago, under the pretext of maintaining the great principle of religious neutrality in the whole service of the State, after having torn down the crosses placed at the entrance of the cemeteries, it went on to remove all the crucifixes which from time immemorial have hung in the schools, and consigned them to some lumber-room. The action taken by the Council in relation to public instruction is far more serious. It has pushed the principle of neutrality to such extreme issues as render it practically absurd and impossible, or rather to falsify it in the most serious manner. The intention of the law was that primary instruction should be neutral. The idea was simply to exclude the teaching of any creed, so that, for example, a child of Protestant parents should not be taught Catholic tenets, and on the other hand, that the child of Catholic parents should not hear the faith of its parents impugned in the school to which they sent him. This did not imply that the master of the school was under any prohibition to speak of God, His goodoess, and His holy laws, so long as he did not attempt any theological definitions. The law was thus understood by the higher Council of Public Instruction, which recognized in the programme it drew up the religious basis of all morality in the broadest sense. This the Municipal Council of Paris, the zealous guardian of free thought, cannot endorse. Hence it burst into a storm of indignation the other day, when it discovered in a little manual in use in the schools of Paris, some faint traces of a belief in God. The irony of the thing is that the manual in question is written by one of the most advanced philosophers of the freethinking school—M. Fouillée, lecturer in the higher normal school in which the professors for our colleges are trained. Any words of mine would fail to do justice to the scene when M. Fouillée was anathematized in the Council. I lay before your readers a verbatim report of what transpired.

"Last Monday the venerable doctors and pontiffs of this sacred college being gathered together in solemn session, one of them drew attention to a little book which was doing much harm among young people. Its title was 'Premier livre de lecture et d'instruction pour l'enfant.' The censor, who held it open in his hand, seemed as if he could not bring himself to read the last extracts, so shocking and offensive would they be to the faith of the pious assembly. He asked pardon for having to read such utterances of folly in their hearing. Then in an angry voice he went on, 'This is what is being taught our children:

"'Q. Towards whom have you duties?

"'A. First, towards God.

"'Q. Do you think of loving Him and thanking Him? Children, there is some one who is better to you than your mother; it is He who gave you this good mother; it is He who made this earth upon which we live; it is God....

"'A. I know nothing; but I should like to learn, to become good, to love God with all my heart. If I work I shall soon learn to read; if I pray, I shall grow better, etc.'

"Upon this the most fervent of our freethinkers shouted 'Blasphemy!' and if they did not rend their garments, it was because this is not now the custom. One of them stood up and said it was intolerable; that M. Fouillée was a clericalist; that it was necessary to defend the sound doctrine of Atheism and Materialism even more resolutely against the false teachers of the University than against the preachers in the Church. The charge was considered proved; the case was flagrant, and the sentence was short and sharp. M. Fouillée was excommunicated as a clericalist and a mystic, and his books were henceforth to be proscribed in all the schools of Paris as blasphemies against freethought, absurd and vicious. An order was also passed that all schoolmasters, families, or children possessing copies, should give them up, and it was forbidden, under heavy penalties, either to read or to retain them."

I have kept the best until last. It is not only theism in any form, however vague, which is to be banished from the teaching of the schools, but even the most elementary morality. This is made clear by the following words, used by one of the most influential members of the Municipal Council, who was chairman of this debate. "Since immorality," he said, "varies according to the age, place, and degree of civilization of a nation, it is not possible to conceive of one universal and eternal system of morals. The teaching of morals, therefore, as a positive science, must be banished from the school curriculum."

These insane utterances have called forth an eloquent protest from Père Hyacinthe, which has appeared in Le Matin. He says: "This is what I call the official triumph of atheism, and the legal triumph of the Commune of 1886—a commune more dangerous, in my opinion, than its predecessors of 1873 and 1871. Can we wonder at all, after this, at the anti religious and anti-social blasphemies which disfigure our popular press and degrade our public assemblies? The true danger to France lies here, and nowhere else—in the growing spirit of impiety and lawlessness, which is deteriorating mind and morals, and may at any moment issue in a national catastrophe."

I hope that our public men, headed by the Minister of Public Instruction, who are trying to make the State the preacher of morals in opposition to the Church, will ponder well this suggestive sitting of the Municipal Council of Paris, and will wake up to the danger impending if such texts are to be handled by such preachers. If once the cure of souls is entrusted to the State, we may see atheism enthroned over the nation. A reaction from universal suffrage would suffice to bring this about.—Dr. E. de Pressensé, in Christian World, London.

A THOUSAND DOLLAR PRIZE.—The American Sunday-School Union, 1122 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, in accordance with the terms of the John C. Green Fund, offers a prize of a thousand dollars for the best book, written for the Society upon "the Christian Obligations of Property and Labor." The book must be of a popular character and of a "high order of merit," and must consist of not less than 60,000 nor more than 100,000 words. The manuscript must be submitted to the Committee of Publication on or before November 1st, 1887. Each manuscript should have a special mark, and the name and address of the author should be sent at the same time in a sealed envelope, bearing the same mark. The manuscript approved by the committee is to become the property of the Union, and the $1,000 will be paid when the copyright of the same is secured by the Society. Unaccepted manuscript will be returned to the writers at their expense

JUST PUBLISHED.

AS COMMON MORTALS.

A Novel. 1 vol., 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

"A strong story, the scene of which is laid in the city of Brooklyn, and will be read with the greatest interest and feeling."

Cassell's "Select" Library

OF ENTERTAINING FICTION.

A collection of complete stories by leading writers. Price, 15 cents per volume.

NOW READY.

A Race for Life, etc.
My Night Adventure, etc.

NEW VOLUMES IN

Cassell's "Rainbow" Series.

Price, 25 cents per volume.

Wanted—A Sensation.
A Saratoga incident. By EDWARD S. VAN ZILE
Marvelous in Our Eyes.
Scruples. By MRS. J. H. WALWORTH.
A Moral Sinner.

NEW VOLUMES IN

Cassell's National Library.

Price, 10 cents per volume.

Plutarch's Lives of Alcibiades and Coriolanus, Aristides and Cato the Censor.
Nature and Art. By MRS. INCHBALD.
Voyagers' Tales.
Hamlet. By SHAKESPEARE.

Complete catalogue sent free on application.

Cassell & Company, Limited,

789 and 741 Broadway, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED BY

—MORRIS COSTER,—

1166 Broadway, N. Y.

(NO. 11, VOL 3,)

New Amsterdam Gazette,

Containing sketch of the Dutch family Vermeule, with portrait. A full report of Passaic's Bi-Centennial Celebration. Interesting news from Holland and Colonies, and several matters in connection with the old Dutch families in this country.

Price per volume, 12 numbers, on superfine paper, all illustrated, $1.50. Subscription also taken at the office of THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers, 805 Broadway, New York.

See this "NOTES ON DECORATIVE ART," free for postage. Covering information on Tapestry, Lustra, Kensington, Oil and Mineral Painting. Regular lessons by mail. Painted and chromo designs to rent. Orders executed.
42 W. 23d St., H. A. JOHNSON, New York.

BARNES'

NATIONAL INK.

GEO. MATHER'S SONS,

PRINTING INK

Manufacturers. Superior Black and Colored Ink Lithographic and Plate Ink. Varnishes, etc. 60 John street, New York.
The Intellgencer is printed with our ink.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S

STEEL PENS

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION-1878.

PresbyterianBoard of Publication's

LATE BOOKS.

GRIFFEN ALLEY FOLK.
Showing that even those sorely degraded by intemperance may be raised from the gutter to new lives.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

FROM ACCADIA TO MACHPELAH.
In which the life of Abraham is made interesting by being made real.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.15

MABEL'S SUMMER.
A tale of Child life in Northern India.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, 85 cents.

RALPH WESTON'S SECRET.
Showing how the appetite fo strong drink may descend from father to daughter, and again from mother to son.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

THE WEDDED LIFE.
By REV. J. R. MILLER, D.D
A little volume intended for presentation to the newly-wedded, and containing a marriage certificate.
16mo. Price, 60 cents.

Address orders to
JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't,
1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St, New York, N. Y.

Church Decoration.
Church Furnishing.

DESIGNS AND ESTIMATES SUBMITTED.

J. & R. LAMB,

59 CARMINE ST., N. Y.

CURE for the DEAF By Peck's Pat. Improved Cushioned Ear Drums. Whispers heard distinctly. Comfortable, invisible. Illustrated book & proofs, FREE. Address or call on F. HISCOX 853 Broadway, N. Y. Name this paper.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.

CATARRH

Also good for Cold in the Head, Headache, Hay Fever, &c. 50 cents.

CONSUMPTION

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong in my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address. DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., N. Y.

THE

Christian Intelligencer

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT

48 Church St., cor. Fulton, N. Y.,

BY THE

CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOC.

Editors:
REV. J. M. FERRIS, D.D.,
REV. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
Associate Editor:
MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

TERMS,

$2.65 per annum.

Ministers and Theological Students, $2.

SINGLE COPIES, 3 CENTS.

Read these Instructions carefully.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS pertaining to the literary columns of the paper must be addressed to the Editors; and those inclosing manuscripts to be returned must be accompanied with envelopes stamped and addressed. No attention will be paid to anonymous communications.

THOSE relating to the business department, to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION, Box 2117, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIBERS, NOTICE.—The date following your name on the direction label informs you to what month and year your subscription is paid. If this date is not changed within two weeks after payment is made, drop us a postal card and we will investigate and reply. Please examine the date, and if in arrears, remit the amount due.

REMITTANCES ARE AT THE RISK OF THE SENDER, unless made by Draft, Check, or P. O. Money Order. These, if lost, can be readily replaced.

Checks, etc., to order of CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION.

IN CHANGING AN ADDRESS, it is necessary to send the OLD as well as NEW address. The change cannot be made unless this is done. And in order to prevent the loss of papers, it will be well to notify the office at least ten days before the contemplated change, as the mail lists are prepared that much in advance of each issue.

ALWAYS GIVE THE NAME OF THE P. O. where the paper is received.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

The Home.

AUNT MARJORIE'S CORNER

Dream Children.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

I HAVE borrowed a title merely. I am not dreaming of writing a critique on the beautiful essay of Elia, so tender in its pathos, so abiding in its charm. And you need not beg pardon if you postpone the reading of this bit of talk until you have dipped into your favorite volume again, and once more looked over that exquisite page on which the "children of Alice called Bertram father." Still I want you, if you are a mother or teacher, or by right divine of womanhood a lover of children, to listen to my sermonette. It was born of a letter and a girl's impulsive speech.

"There is no use in my trying," said the latter, pensively looking up from the hammock in which she was idly swinging. "I'm not in the least like mamma's ideal, and I never shall be, so I've given up in despair. I must simply be my own unsatisfactory self."

The letter said, "I cannot withhold from you, dear Mother Confessor, that Liebchen is as great a puzzle to me as ever. Every day she baffles me. I anticipate with confidence a time when my daughter shall be a comfort to me, but the time is not yet. Our present is too often a scene of 'confusion and creature complaints,' and I scarcely know which way to turn."

Many puzzled mothers can sympathize with my anxious friend. For the babies, bless their hearts, are not out of our arms before they begin to show wills and tempers of their own, traits derived from eccentric or unamiable ancestors, astonishing tendencies to naughtiness, while we are still convinced that they are pure cherubs in their composition. Heaven lies about us in our infancy, and yet, peeping furtively through the tinted mask, the dimples and the soft bloom, is ever and anon the old Adam.

Flesh and blood children are in sharp contrast with the dream children of shadowy fancy, much harder to manage than those airy puppets of an unsubstantial realm, and much more satisfactory, too. It was a woman with never a babe of her own to cradle who said that all shadows faded out of a mother's horizon in the dawn of baby's smile, and the first year of a little one's life must be unutterably happy to every maternal heart. It is later, when more than the brooding instinct is wanted, more than the intuitive yearning over the helpless morsel, whose cry is a command, whose blindest motion an appeal, that the mother's solicitude is awakened.

"How shall I govern my child?" "By governing yourself, forsooth, madam." Precisely!

Advice is cheap. To govern one's self is to-day, as in the time of Solomon, so difficult and so praiseworthy in task and attainment that better is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city. Easy to do it, sitting in church, with palm-leaf swaying languidly, a sunbeam stealing through a storied window, and the minister's voice inciting you to Christian endeavor, or uplifting you to heavenly heights. Not so easy next day, when Amy slaps Kitty, and the gentle Louise suddenly develops an attack of obstinacy, or your whole soul stands still because the dove-eyed Mary, sweetest of your band, amazes you by telling a falsehood.

Whatever you do or leave undone, you must teach the children to be truthful, and train them to be obedient.

Rose Terry Cooke, with a spice of common sense, says: "Never mind whether they are your own children, your step-children, or your children by adoption, see that they mind when they are spoken to." To this I would add, that whether you meet the disobedient child and conquer its iniquity by the old-fashioned allopathic or the new-fashioned homeopathic remedies, may be left, as to methods, to your own discretion, but, if you desire peace at home, you must be the head of the house. A sweet young mother, her pretty little girl on her knee, observed sensibly, "I am determined that baby shall be lovable, and she never will be so unless she is obedient, so I've begun at the beginning." The mother who fails here is a pitiful weakling.

To pass on, do not try, because it is fair neither to yourself nor them, to make your children conform to your ideal child. The Lord does not run us all into one mould. He respects our individuality and gives us our work according to our fitness. Gauge the capability of each child in the household by its own measure, not by the tape line which applies to your neighbor's child. Do not compare your child unfavorably with your memory of yourself at the same age. Perhaps you were more wisely controlled and perhaps you had less to contend with than your darling has, life being carried on at present under conditions of high pressure, which both directly and indirectly affect the children as well as their elders. Try to educate the child so that you shall make him able to use his powers of mind, heart and body to the best advantage. Do the best, as it is given you to see it, letting worrying and fretting be the portion of others. Believe me, that the child is not much to be pitied who, though occasionally punished with severity, is on the whole treated with absolute candor and even-handed justice. Reserve compassion for the other child whose mother in tones of acidulated complaint is forever nagging, till a continual dropping on a very rainy day is the only comparison that occurs. In "Oldtown Folks," the grandmother, you remember, was sometimes given to the discipline in which the word and the blow are simultaneous, yet everybody loved her, everybody took refuge under her wing, and she was decidedly preferred by the children to the sharp tongued Aunt Lois, who took her share of the management in scolding and satire. It is a dreadful thing to discourage, to take the heart out of a child by invidious criticism or your openly proclaimed disappointment.

We make such mistakes determining that our girls shall shine, our boys excel in a certain direction only, rebelling against the logic of capacity which decrees that they shall fail where we have invested most hopeful pride.

To take a common example:

On the principle that a bird which can sing and won't, must be made to sing, infatuated mothers compel unfortunate victims to sit hour after hour practising upon key boards which they hate, evolving noise, not harmony, and wasting time which might be better employed. It is vexatious enough when you know that Mehitable's music is this year costing you two needed gowns and a winter cloak, or a new carpet and a shelf full of the best literature which you, for her sake, are silently doing without, to hear Mehitable reeling off "Old Jim Crow" instead of flying up and down the scales. But if the piano is a penance to her and a torture to her neighbors, why not take pains to ascertain for what particular art or science she has a talent, and spend your energies there? The forcing of the round peg into the square hole is always an absurdity, and sometimes a reckless improvidence and unthrift.

Most grown-up people can recall some bête noir of childhood, made so by the injudicious and indiscriminate praise which held the other up as a good example. "Little Charlotte never behaves in that way," is repeated to little Melissa, till all the honey of the latter's nature, so far as Charlotte is concerned, turns to the gall of envy or the bitterness of despair. The chances are that little Melissa, barring exterior graces perhaps, is really better than little Charlotte. From the bottom of my soul I detest a priggish or a pattern child, and it is usually that style of child which is held up in the way of universal praise. To the obedient and truthful girl or boy almost every other foible or fault may be pardoned; infelicities of manner and lapses of deportment will yield to association and the pruning of time.

The round hole and the square peg, returning to our muttons, lead us to another step.

The dream children have faded away when Elsie wears her first train, and Benjamin caresses the silken fuzz on his upper lip, secretly trusting that people see his moustache. Now for the crowning mistakes, when it comes to the choice of a profession or trade, and parents ignore or disdain a manifest bent, and force young people into a sphere for which they have neither preparation nor aptitude. Many a life is thus all but ruined.

Equally, in childhood, it is useless to try to put delf to the uses of porcelain, or to expect of the fragile beautiful the homely durable.

Does a thoughtful reader interpose with a question as to whether fathers and mothers ever know which child is delf, which is porcelain? Are not all crows white in the eye of the mother? I do not know. In the nursery, each babe as the mother lulls its rest or watches its unfolding life, is perfect. We grow keener of sight as we go on in years. The elderly woman, at least, looking from the vantage ground she has gained, surveying through the clear glasses of experience, is able very accurately to measure her grown sons and daughters. Not always does the glamour last, which at the first threw its soft radiance over the commonplace and made the dawnings of intellect seem the adumbrations of genius. The mother, in her wisdom, loves her children none the less that she judges them more truly, and perhaps she helps them the better when some of her illusions have fled.

Our children, as they are, are trusts for which we are responsible. While we are regretting that they are not exactly like the dream children of fancy, lo! the years are gone, and they are children no longer. The King's business requireth haste! Let us lose no time in being what we ought in their sight.

Since, when the last word is said, the Amen must always remain, "what we are is more potential than what we do."

Grumbletown.

WITH those articles indispensable to a lady's outfit, the useful umbrella and satchel, I set out from my pleasant home to take a stage for L——, a village some fourteen miles distant.

Filled with bright anticipations of my visit, I settled into a comfortable corner of the capacious coach and prepared for a full enjoyment of the journey.

Such a glorious morning as it proved! The air was fragrant with apple blossoms, tender leaflets ornamented tree and shrub, while the springing grass covered field and roadside. The birds were jubilant with song, and I, escaped from city quarters, was in just the mood to appreciate nature's beauties. A feeling of contentment stole over me such as I had seldom experienced, making me devoutly thankful that I formed a part and parcel of this wonderful creation.

It seemed difficult to realize the exchange of my daily routine for a season of unalloyed freedom. In order to assure myself that I was on my contemplated journey, I occasionally lifted my veil and leaned forward to inhale the invigorating breezes.

Soothed by the swaying motion of the coach and the low voices of my companions, I presently lost consciousness in sleep. I know not how long my nap continued. I only remember being aroused to consciousness by an exclamation from my fellow passengers.

Not wishing to appear curious, I assumed an upright position, gazing from one side of the road to the other in the hope to discover for myself the cause of such apparent enthusiasm.

My eyes once fairly opened, I found we were approaching one of the most enchanting little villages it had ever been my privilege to gaze upon.

The avenues were long and broad, bordered upon either side by loftly, interlacing maples. The dwellings, though not palatial, were comfortably commodious, while the surrounding gardens gave evidence of wealth and artistic taste. Two handsome church edifices, with a noble schoolhouse, large and well ventilated, adorned the town, bespeaking for its inhabitants the possession of both cultivation and refinement.

"Charming!" was my unuttered comment.

"May I inquire the name of this place?" turning to the driver.

"Grumbletown, madam," was the sepulchral reply.

"Grumbletown!" I exclaimed. "Pray why burden so beautiful a spot with a name so inappropriate? What queer people," I continued.

"You're right. Tisn't the place, it's the people," muttered this incomprehensible creature.

"Pray do you reside here?" directing my question to the same source.

"Yes," was his only reply.

"Then, if you are a type of the people, I do not wonder at the appellation," was my inward reflection, annoyed at his curtness.

A closer view of the little village served to deepen my impression concerning its loveliness. Extremely anxious to ascertain something of its history, I began to take sidelong glances at my companions in hopes of opening a conversation upon the subject.

On my right sat a pleasant old lady to whom I turned a longing eye. I think she comprehended my anxiety, as she answered my appealing look with a kindly smile. I immediately summoned courage and made a sudden onset.

"Are you a Grumbletonian?" I asked in "blander accents."

"Oh, no!" she replied. "I live just over the border."

"Then I suppose you are almost strangers to one another?"

"Well, not exactly. Sometimes I fear we feel the effects of the neighborhood more than we are aware

As adjoining villages, there is necessarily more or less communication."

"You do not speak favorably. Can you tell me the origin of this singular name? Why not change even at this late day?"

"My dear madam, it is the most suitable of titles. It would hardly be justifiable to suggest such a change. There is a tradition connected with this beautiful town which I will relate if you please."

Assuring the lady that nothing would delight me more, I listened eagerly to the following story told by my accommodating friend.

"You see," she continued in her free and easy manner, "it all happened when this part of the country was a dense wilderness.

"The tradition is: A man of frugal and industrious habits, but of a roving and consequently unhappy disposition, weary of home and friends, sauntered forth with his little family in search of some place where he might retire from the world and become of 'all men most miserable.' Grumbletown is the site he selected. While his patient wife arranged the newly-erected dwelling, himself and sons began to clear away and prepare the land for cultivation.

"Under his skillful management he soon found himself the possessor of a pleasant farm. Whatever he undertook proved successful. The crops prospered and the money bags grew in proportion. Still the man was discontented.

"Mother, all alone at home, sang to the accompaniment of her spinning-wheel or the splish, splash of the churn. As long as the summer days lasted the wife was happy. But when winter came and the family sat together, our little woman forgot her song in the never-ceasing complaints of father and sons, for it is a sad fact that the children, from daily intercourse with their father, soon imitated this unpleasant characteristic.

"Years glided by, and the boys, grown to manhood's estate, longing for other associations, brought wives from amongst the 'Canaanites,' returning to the parental roof only sufficiently long to erect dwellings for themselves.

"Still dissatisfaction reigned supreme. Nothing brought contentment, although outwardly everything prospered. The wives, unable to restore happiness, grew discontented, and the little ones brought up under the influence of such an example partook of the same disagreeable traits. Travellers journeying through the little settlement forgot the family name in the more applicable sobriquet of 'Grumbler & Co.'

"I presume it was this very habit of fault-finding that really added to the beauty of their surroundings. 'It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good," they say. The desire for something better compelled them to add or take from until the most suitable thing was procured.

"Thus the community grew in importance and thrived accordingly. Consequently, the town being built and improved by 'Grumbler & Co.,' it was honored in receiving the family name. If once in awhile a stranger, attracted by its location, desires to settle within its boundaries, he is either driven away by the constant jarring or else becomes a prey to the same detestable habit. The disease seems in the air, a sort of malarial fever. It is very unfortunate," sighed the old lady, finishing her recital, "that it should be so unpleasantly distinguished. However," was smilingly added, "I must remark if occasionally an individual is found inclined to look on the sunny side of life, it is immediately asserted that he or she, whoever it may be, is a lineal descendant—of the old lady. But these are rare cases, you must understand, 'like angels' visits, few and far between.'"

Thanking my companion for her kindness, I settled down again and began to reflect how many of the same sort of people inhabited this beautiful world. They may not gather into communities, yet still they cross us in every possible walk of life, darkening our homes, disturbing our peace of mind, and throwing a damper over our brightest projects.

Oh for a "Growlery" where we might escape from this "terrible East wind."

Somehow, hearing others fret and fault-find, reminds me I am slightly tainted with the same spirit, and an envious feeling starts over me as I recall to mind the dear old lady living "just over the border." L. B.

To be God's instrument in saving one soul is a greater work than all the angels in heaven ever accomplished. An angel told Cornelius to send for Peter, and an angel told Philip to go down the desert road to Gaza, that he might preach to the eunuch; but neither of those heavenly messengers could himself do the work of an evangelist.

CHILDREN'S PORTFOLIO.

A Shower.

HERE a drop and there a drop;
"Is something spilling over?"
And a little, prinking pink sweet pea
Tried to get under cover.

Here a drop and there a drop—
Ha, what a dash of water!
"How did the sea come up in the sky?"
Said the pansy's little daughter.

Rivers and rills come pouring down,
The pinks, with tangled tresses,
Beg the stately phlox to try
And save their new silk dresses.

But dear old Grandma Hollyhock,
Shaking her cap, said: "May be
These young ones will be wise sometime—
What can you expect of a baby?"

"Why, darlings, 'tis only a shower of rain,
We never think of a cover;
And the harder it rains the surer you are
To grow when it is over." —Congregationalist.

How the Prayer-Meeting was Started.

"BUT, Auntie, do you really mean that you think I ought to start a boys' prayer-meeting? Why, they'd all laugh at the idea of seeing me, the most mischievous boy in school, in one, and if I were to start one they would all be sure to go just to see what new tricks I was up to."

"No, Dick, I did not say that. In fact, I am not sure that it would be the best thing. What I want is to see you ready to stand up for your colors, not afraid of anything the other boys may say or do. If the Lord wants you to start a prayer-meeting, He Himself will tell you so, and will give you the needed strength. It seems to me your work just now is to get rid of the reputation of 'the most mischievous boy in school.'"

Dick Eastman, aged fourteen, had lived with "Aunty Madge" ever since he could remember, for his parents had been killed in a railway accident when he was a mere baby, and his aunt had undertaken the care of him. Naturally fond of fun, he was a recognized leader in pranks, and much mischief that did not belong there was laid at his door just on account of his reputation. On the evening of which I write he had gone as Aunty Madge's escort to the church prayer-meeting. An evangelist, passing through the town, had consented to lead the meeting, and through that one service many souls were led to Christ. After he had finished his talk he asked all those who had decided to lead a Christian life to stand up. Among others, our friend Dick arose. This was what he and his aunt were talking about when he asked the question that heads our story.

Long after he was in bed that night he lay awake thinking it all over and wishing, oh! so much, that some of the other boys might feel the peace he felt, and that they could have a little prayer meeting. Yet it would be very hard, he thought, to tell them about the change in himself. When he fell asleep it was with the decision that he would try to play no more unkind tricks, and that he would do just what he felt the Lord wished him to about the other matter. For had not "Aunty Madge" said He would give the strength? And didn't she know?

The next morning on his way to school Dick met his two special friends a little before they passed the house where lame Herbert White, the oldest and brightest boy in school, lived. Herbert was rather reserved in his ways, and on account of his deformity could not often mingle with the others in their sports. Consequently, he was by no means a favorite. He was so fine a scholar, however, that they all had great respect for him.

As the boys passed his gate they saw one end of his crutch sticking through the fence, but he was not in sight. The other two wanted to pull it out and hide it, for then Herbert would have to hunt for it, probably a long time, and would be late for school, perhaps would not go at all. Wouldn't it be fine to have the best scholar, the one who was always held up as their example, reproved? Dick refused. The other two looked at him, and were about to ask the reason, but just then more of their friends came along and the question was dropped.

At recess, with all the boys around, one of the two exclaimed: "I say, Dick, why under the sun wouldn't you do that this morning? You know what I mean."

Dick, with heightened color, was about to explain when Herbert White hobbled up to him, and with one hand on his shoulder, said in a clear voice: "Yes, and I know, too; perhaps I can answer as well as he. This morning as I was in the garden three boys, one of whom was Dick, passed by. My crutch had slipped from my hand and was lying in plain sight. The other two wanted to hide it, but Dick refused to have anything to do with such an act, and I shall tell you why, for I am certain he wants to have it known. Last evening he and I were the only boys from this school who went out to meeting. He stood up and said he was going to be a Christian. I wanted to do so, too, but thought I'd wait to see if it made any difference in his school life. It has changed him already, and now that I see there is something in religion, I am going to be a Christian, too."

The room was perfectly still for two or three minutes. Then the boy who had suggested hiding Herbert's crutch, said: "We have fifteen minutes; can't we boys have a prayer-meeting right here? Herbert, will you lead? First let me say that I was one of the two, and that I am very sorry for my thoughtlessness."

Herbert commenced, and there were very few who had not taken part when the bell rang and the teacher entered the room. Every week since those boys have had their meeting. Some of them have come to Christ and others are seriously thinking about giving themselves to Him. E. C.

The Well-Kept Promise.

A MOTHER on the green hills of Vermont stood at the garden gate holding by the hand a beloved son, a boy of sixteen. He was leaving home to go to sea. "Edward," she said, "they tell me the great temptation of a sailor's life is to drink. Promise me, before you quit your mother's hand, that you will never, never drink."

"I gave her the promise," said Edward. "I went the great world over,—Calcutta, the Mediterranean, San Francisco, the Cape of Good Hope, and for forty years, whenever I saw a glass filled with the sparkling liquor, my mother's face at the garden gate on the hillside of Vermont rose up before me; and to-day, at nearly sixty, my lips are innocent of the taste of liquor."

The only safe and manly stand.

A Wise Conclusion.

ONE summer evening, after Harry and his sister Helen had been put to bed, a severe thunder-storm came up.

Their cribs stood side by side; and their mother, in the next room, heard them as they sat up in bed and talked, in low voices, about the thunder and lightning.

They told each other their fears. They were afraid the lightning would strike them.

They wondered whether they would be killed right off, and whether the house would be burned up. They trembled afresh at each peal.

But tired nature could not hold out as long as the storm.

Harry became very sleepy, and at last, with renewed cheerfulness in his voice, he said, as he laid his head on the pillow, "Well, I'm going to trust in God."

Little Helen sat a minute longer thinking it over, and then laid her own little head down, saying, "Well, I dess I will too."

And they both went to sleep, without more words. —Youth's Companion.

Little Heads Together.

HIDDEN PROVERB.

Take one word from each of the following sentences in order to make a familiar proverb:

It is now over a week since Julia and Amy took a long walk. The story of it is a short one. Julia is an excellent girl. She had been ill for a few days and wanted fresh air. She got more of it than she needed, for soon after they started a violent wind arose.

"I am glad that it is so cool," said she at first. Yet a while after she said: "How very hard it blows! Nobody could enjoy walking on such a day. I hope I will not feel any bad effects from the exertion."

"Oh, no!" replied Amy, when at length they approached their home, "I think that the exercise has done you good."

BEHEADINGS.

1. Behead a part of a ship and leave to trouble.
2. Behead one who walks nimbly and leave one who tears open.
3. Behead the act of going before and leave the act of receding. EDW.

DIAMOND.

1. In approaching. 2. A boy's nickname. 3. A girl's name. 4. A plant. 5. Something for you to enjoy. 6. A dignity. 7. Hauled. 8. Three letters in Mithridates. 9. In opposition. V.

Answers to Puzzles of July 7th.

Diamond.—

P
T E A
P E A R L
A R M
L

Square Word.—

A R A B
R I P E
A P E S
B E S T

Correct answers from "Prague" and Rappie Bowne.

The Albany Bi-Centennial.

WE left New York amid the rain on Wednesday morning on the day boat "C. Vibbard," and sped up the noble Hudson, meeting on board the Rev. John A. Davis, of the Second Reformed Church of Newark, N. J., whose company it was our pleasure to enjoy in conversation and at lunch until the boat reached Rhinebeck. The sun had come out, and the sail past the Catkills up to the Capital City was made amid charming summer beauties of sky and field and wave. Arrived in Albany, we were immediately among scenes of unusual interest and excitement. The streets were thronged with citizens, the buildings along Broadway, State, Pearl and other streets were decorated with flags, streamers and inscriptions.

After a short call upon the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, the popular pastor of the First Reformed Church, who presented us with a corporation medal of the bi-centennial of the granting the city charter and a copy of the neat and attractive programme of commemorative union services of the Reformed churches, held in the First Church on the evening of Sunday, July 18th, we took supper at the St. Marc restaurant, and proceeded up State street to the Capital Park, where the grand stand had been erected to review the processions of the week.

On Monday, July 19th, the children of the city had given a musical and literary exhibition, and the various trades had paraded. On Tuesday representatives of "All Nations" had made a procession in honor of the ancient town and charter. Wednesday had been "Civic Day," ushered in with a national salute of thirty-eight guns, and noted in the morning for a parade of local and visiting civic organizations, firemen, sons of veterans, secret societies, political and social clubs. Races and a grand concert had marked the afternoon, and we had arrived in town and at the grand stand in time for the Historical Pageant, which rolled through the city in the evening, passing the City Hall about nine 9 o'clock. A band under the trees and the electric light discoursed popular music to the throng in front. We had the promise of the Governor of the State and his staff, but these gentlemen did not appear, and we had to content ourselves with the Mayor, the Hon. John B. Thacher, whose praises were sounded on all sides for the grace, wisdom and dignity with which he had arranged and conducted the celebration.

After much waiting, during which we surveyed and admired the orderly and amiable crowd of American citizens, who swayed to and fro and promenaded before the stand, the pageant passed amid the glare of lights directed toward the several cars or floats. The first had a representation of the city seals with a genuine Dutchman in front and a live Indian on the reverse. Then a shell carried the Spirit of Discovery, incarnate in three lovely representatives of the fair sex, who filled all masculine hearts with admiration. A third car rumbled by with a crew of "Northmen of 1000 A. D.," shaggy-bearded, bare-limbed pirates at oar and helm, with a mast and sail—Dutchmen of the early Middle Ages. Then came Columbus landing in America, with red men bobbing back and forth around the West Indian trees. The Fort Orange of 1624 was next depicted, with the First Land Purchase by the honest Hollanders from the American Mugwumps of the seventeenth century hard after. The Dutch legend of Rip Van Winkle excited peals of irrepressible laughter as the Knickerbocker gods rolled their balls in the cave of the Catskills amid celestial thunder in the tin heavens and earth at the back of the car. Then a blaze of royalty burst upon us—King Charles II. delivering the royal charter, followed by a lesser blaze of representative royalty,—Governor Dongan making over his incorporating manuscript to the illustrious Schuyler and Livingston. A home scene, a Dutch interior of 1686, a log cabin in flames attacked by the Indians, General Burgcyne tendering his sword to General Gates at Saratoga, 1777, Indians attacking the Schuyler mansion, with Madame Schuyler ascending the staircase, babe in arms, the wedding tableau of a Rensselaer-Schuyler matrimonial alliance passed in review. Then came a canal-boat with a horse being driven through a lock of the Erie Canal, and the final float presented a revolving circle of rays, which we took for the paddle wheel of Robert Fulton's "Clermont," until the official pictures instructed us that the tableau was Prosperity and Progress, and the paddle wheel was the shining sun.

So in fifteen minutes the carts and the lights had swept by, the music again filled the air, and we ambled over to the Academy where the Loan Exhibition was open to the public throughout the week. We had only half an hour and no catalogue. But many articles were labeled and all seemed genuine. We must mention the original Dongan charter, in all its majesty of poor chirography but leaden seal and precious contents—the guilty cause of all the bi-centennial agony. Time would fail us to tell of all the Dutch ceramics, bric-à-brac, clocks, chairs, fireplaces, robes, weapons, relics patrician and plebeian, canvasses in portraits, landscapes and historic events. All the old things in Albany had been brought out from attics and parlors, dusted, numbered, and put in a thick glass case safe from the relic hunters. Bands, too, were made ubiquitous during the bi-centennial. Fortunately the Dutch did not invent the bag-pipe; some had the full modern orchestra. It is needless to say that there was a band at the Loan Exhibition. It was eminently proper. But at ten o'clock that band played "Home, Sweet Home," and with sorrowful heart we left the glories of our Knickerbocker ancestors to rest in their glass cases and betook ourselves to the "Kenmore," where we rested our tired eyes and limbs until the morning sun and the booming gun should usher in Thursday,

BI-CENTENNIAL DAY.

The sun rose and the gun boomed. We hastily dressed and paid our respects to breakfast, the Albany Argus and the grand stand. This time we were promised the President of the United States and members of his Cabinet. At twenty minutes past ten the parade swept by in four divisions with brass bands beyond the power of the addition table. There were sturdy national guardsmen from all over, the famous Company A, of Albany, Company D, from Philadelphia, the persecuted Seventh Regiment Veterans, fleeing from New York, three hundred strong, to the open Albany arms that gladly took them in, the ferocious bear-skin hatted, scarlet-coated Jackson and Burgesses Corps, who marched like a mathematical ramrod on the horizontal. Thirty minutes, and they were gone. But no President had come to the stand save in the four-in-hand landau in the procession, baring his head continually as the people cheered. Secretaries Bayard and Whitney were with him, and Governor Hill followed in the august train. At one o'clock the procession came down State street. The President reviewed the head of the column at the City Hall and then drove away. For there were orations, poems and speeches in the rink in the afternoon, which we did not hear and will therefore not report.

Calling on the Rev. Dr. W. R. Davis, the genial and delightful pastor of the Second Reformed Church, we were received with whole-souled hospitality. In the evening we proceeded to the residence of one of the doctor's parishioners, facing the side of Washington Park, and ascending with the family to the roof, prepared to view the fireworks in the Park. Here we enjoyed the blaze of glory for an hour and a half—bombs, rockets, serpents, flower-pots, mines, stars, and illustrative pieces filling the air with smoke and flame. The delivery of the charter was burned up, and we were done with it. Then the Half-Moon sailed up the Hudson, until it got tired and blazed out. Then we arose to go, but suddenly Niagara burst forth with a cataract of glory and held us spell-bound until the energy was spent, and the blackness of night covered the scene, broken by the stars above and the electricity below.

We then proceeded to the Fort Orange Club, where the President, the Governor, and the Cabinet were welcomed by the elite of Albany. Good cheer, hearty salutations, and excellent music abounded. Before we could present our salaam to the President and the Governor, they had swept by us in their exit, leaving the grounds amid hearty applause. But representatives of the Knickerbockers remained. There was Judge Van Vorst, President of the Holland Society of New York, and there was the Rev. Dr. W. H. Ten Eyck, Stated Clerk pro tem of General Synod, who greeted us with cordial surprise. The list of worthies would be too long to state.

But all good things come to a close. We one by one slipped away to our various homes and couches. The Delavan sheltered many—among them the writer. The morning sun, the cool breezes which have crowned the bi-centennial week with heavenly benediction, again greeted us as we forsook the ancient city on the morning train for Saratoga. We left the oldest house in the city, erected 1667, still standing on Pearl and State streets, and the evergreen arches on Broadway at the sites of the old city gates. Now, on State street, hangs a yellow oval decoration with the words "Esto Vigilans," in excellent keeping with the city motto, "Assiduity." Thus speaks old Albany to us and the world; and, as we remember her ancient worth and history, her noble people, who have welcomed and delighted many with generous hearts, we wave a farewell of gratitude and good wishes, saying "Esto perpetua."

E. J. RUNK.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., July 24th, 1886.

Sun Spots.

THE sun spot periods cover about twelve years, are sometimes longer, sometimes shorter. About one-half of these years are those in which the spots increase in number and in activity, and these five to six years compose the maximum period. During the following five or six years the spots decline in number, size and activity, and this is the minimum period, when there are many days on which no spots are seen, and when the faculæ or hydrogen flames are much less abundant and conspicuous than at other times.

A spot represents, as the spectroscope teaches, a downrush of metallic vapors. It often presents the appearance of a vast whirlpool from three or four thousand to even twelve to fifteen thousand miles in diameter. This downrush must be preceded or accompanied somewhere on the sun with an outrush of the flames and vapor of burning metals. A large amount of blazing hydrogen is one of the prominent features of a spot and the faculæ surrounding it.

Mighty movements of the magnetic currents of the earth are co-incident with large and active spots on the sun. Electric storms of great power also coincide with the outbreak of spots. There seems to be a connection between the agitation visible on the surface of the sun and the electric and magnetic condition of the earth.

The present theory in regard to the sun spot period is that during the years of the maximum of spots an average lower barometer prevails on the earth, more distinctly marked in tropical than in other regions; that the rainfall generally is more abundant; that the earth generally is more fruitful, producing an abundance of food. It is not improbable also, that the fruitfulness of the earth is largely dependent on the electrical condition not only of the atmosphere but also of the ground, for the ground-currents of electricity and magnetism have equal if not superior volume and power to those of the atmosphere. It may be regarded as established that electricity promotes vegetation and fruitfulness. And, as during the maximum of spots on the sun, the earth seems to be more than ordinarily charged with electricity and its complement magnetism, it is not improbable that for this reason the maximum periods may prove to be those of greatest terrestrial fruitfulness.

The last maximum period of spots concluded in the autumn of 1884. The period had been one of marked fruitfulness in the majority of countries—it was characterized by a growing fruitfulness. The period began in the summer of 1879. The immediately preceding period, the last minimum of spots, had been one of heat, drought and widespread unfruitfulness. The unfruitfulness increased as that period advanced to the last number of spots, until there were extensive districts of famine in India, China and Brazil.

The world is now again under a minimum period of spots. Last year the earth at large was less fruitful than during 1884. This year the prospect is that the world's yield will be still more reduced, and, if the theory is correct, for two or three years to come, through a lack of rainfall over extensive districts and a want of electricity or of electrical movements in the earth, the harvests will diminish, until the spots on the sun again begin to increase.

Ancient Oriental nations stored grain in what were large quantities for those days. Perhaps thay had noticed a periodicity in the productiveness of the earth. It may be that modern nations, under the observations and conclusions of modern science, are to learn to gather into storehouses the surplus of the years when spots are numerous and active on the mighty orb which dominates this and every other planet.

F.

Financial.

TUESDAY, July 27th.

THE imports of merchandise at this port last week amounted to $9,942,745, and since January 1st to $241,808,979; the exports for the week to $6,305,533 and for the year thus far to $170,173,969. The imports exceed those of the corresponding part of last year by 30 millions and the exports are nearly 15 millions of dollars less, making our foreign trade 45 millions of dollars less favorable for this country. To this must be added the cost of ocean freights which go to foreign shipowners and for a half year amounts to about $30,000,000.

The Associated Banks of the city added $659,275 to the surplus of legal reserve, and it is now $14,270,200. Loans were increased $188,400, specie $254,300, while legal tenders were reduced $73,800 and deposits $1,915,100. The export of specie for the week amounted to $167,900, making the export since January 1st $42,919,579. Foreign exchange closed at $4.85 3–4 for 60 day bills and $4 87 1–2 for demand for sterling. The average rate for money on call was 2 per cent, but the rate rose on Friday to 4 per cent and receded on Saturday to 2. The best commercial paper was discounted at from 3 1–2 to 5 per cent. The Bank of England adheres to 2 1–2 per cent as the minimum rate of discount.

The Stock Exchange is awaiting developments. The railway reports generally show an increase of earnings, but crop reports are still doubtful and such a road as the Illinois Central reduced its dividend. The market, however, has still the strong undertone which it has exhibited for some time. Railway mortgages were fairly active. The Government issued again a call for $4,000,000 of 3 per cents, and will probably call a like amount month by month.

The European markets for grain were quiet but steady. New wheat here is coming in and the visible supply increases, but the stock in hand steadily falls more and more below that of last year and the year before and will probably continue to do so. On Saturday No. 1 red wheat sold here for cash at 91 cents, No. 2 red, 85 1 2, State white, 88 cents; corn at 48 cents; and oats for 37 1-4. Hay, under a light supply, has risen to 85 and 92 1-2 for choice timothy, and 50 to 55 for clover mixed. No. 1 rye straw is quoted at 80 to 85 cents, oat at 40 to 45, and wheat straw at 35 to 40. The closing quotations of the week for cotton were: July 9.50–51; August the same; Sept. 9.46–47; Oct. 9 33–35; Nov. 9.31–33; Dec. 9.35–36. Liverpool reported a fair business doing and prices unchanged.

Silver bullion broke again last week and fell to the lowest price on record. The silver dollar as bullion was worth on Saturday 74 1-10 cents. That dishonest dollar bears the legend, "In God We Trust." Ordinary decency demands that the legend be erased. The Government profit on every dollar coined and pushed into circulation is certainly 24 cents. Nobody wants these dollars. Everybody after receiving them pays them out again as soon as possible. Even the men who vote for silver dollars do not hold them a moment longer than necessity compels. The country has now as many and more of these dollars than it needs, and the coinage ought to be interrupted at least for the present.

News of the Week.

(Continued from page five.)

Sebastopol and other Black Sea ports are now protected by an electric apparatus placed in the sea to destroy hostile torpedo boats. American engineers have invented the apparatus and kept it a secret....The Marquis of Salisbury arrived in London from France yesterday. A great crowd met him and gave him a warm welcome....Fishermen along the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador are starving. One hundred and fifty have died and two thousand five hundred are on the verge of death for want of food. ...."Steve" Brodie jumped from the Brooklyn Bridge in safety, a distance of 120 feet, yesterday. The doctor pronounced him uninjured. He was protected by braces and bandages; otherwise it is believed that he could not have made the jump in safety. ...The water tower at the Seaside House, Rockaway, containing 10,000 gallons of water, fell last night. Had it fallen toward the hotel the loss of life would have been serious....Elm trees in Flatbush are being destroyed by the saw fly.

MONDAY, 26.—Lord Salisbury was received by the Queen at the Osborne House. It is reported that Her Majesty has made a direct personal appeal to Lord Hartington and other Whigs to join the new Ministry. There is great excitement in the clubs over the project of royal interference in the cause of a Coalition Ministry....Madagascar has been informed by the French Government that the loan which that country proposes to raise in London is a violation of existing treaties ...Forty persons killed by an explosion in the Government magazine near Constantinople .... Consul - General Phelan received a check from the Canadian Minister of Customs covering the costs illegally exacted by Collector Atwood at Shelburne in the case of the seized American schooners....The Canadian Government will send a steamer from Quebec to the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador to carry provisions for the starving people there. On June 12th the mercury stood 18 deg below zero, and had been lower.... General J. H. Van Alen committed suicide by jumping from the steamer "Umbria," of the Cunard Line, in mid-ocean, July 22d. It is thought that his mind was affected, caused by his son's severe illness....A boy eighteen years old attempted to jump from the Brooklyn Bridge yesterday. He said he was anxious to earn some money for his father, but a younger brother warned the police and he was arrested.

TUESDAY, 27.—The Marquis of Salisbury has received the Queen's commands and returned to London....The London Social Democrats insist upon free speech....Starvation continues in Labrador. In Astoria out of a total of 200 persons, over 100 have died, mostly women and children....Testimony damaging to the Anarchists, of a Socialist city official in the Anarchist trial in Chicago, was taken yesterday....Col. W. H. Balton, a chief official in the Chicago Post-office, has been arrested. He is charged with the embezzlement of public funds .... An attempt was made last night to blow up the "Sylvan Stream," on which the Brazilian Prince was returning from Coney Island. ...Hubert O. Thompson, of this city, leader of the County Democracy, died yesterday....The Eagle Tube Works destroyed by fire.

Subscribers Notice.

We need a few copies of the INTELLIGENCER of July 7th, 1886. Subscribers having a copy of that date and not caring to preserve it would confer a favor by sending same to this office.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, Depression of Spirits and General Debility, in the various forms; also as a preventive against Fever and Ague, and other Intermittent Fevers, the "Ferro Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from Fever or other sickness has no equal.

Market Report.

Review of the New York Market for Butter, Cheese, etc. Reported by DAVID W. LEWIS & Co., Produce Commission Merchants, 49 Pearl St., New York.
Commission on Butter, Eggs, Poultry, etc., is five per cent; Flour, Grain, etc., 2½ per cent.
Marking-plates furnished when desired.

NEW YORK, July 24, 1886.

BUTTER.—Receipts for the week, 46,975 pks.; exports 7,901 pks.

July and August are the poorest months for the making of Western butter, and it arrives here light body and summer flavor, and the available supply of finest make here is lessened and mostly confined now for July and August to N. Y. State creameries, and from among these buyers bid up for special selections. At the same time during these two months the exodus of people from the cities is at its height, and the demand is light. Finest fresh last week's make N. Y. State creamery pails were firm and sold at the close at 20c. Fifty-six tubs common Western dairy sold at 10½c.; 35 tubs fair Western creamery at 14c.; 74 pks. choice Western creamery at 16a16½c., and to-day on 'Change extra firsts June creamery were offered at 17¼c., and had 16½c. bid, and 25 tubs Western creamery September make, seller September, was offered at 23c. Held butter must be rated from 2a5c. lower than fresh makes. There is quite a speculative feeling based upon the proposed U. S. Oleo. law. The N. Y State law, passed in the spring of 1884, provoked a similar disposition, yet the crop of that year was overheld and went out at a very low figure. Now this proposed U. S. Oleo. law, embracing as it does the whole of the "land of the free and the home of the brave," it is thought will surely put up prices, and its influence is a factor in the present market. We quote:

Fancy creamery	19 @20
do dairy (selections)	— @17
Good to fine	13 @15
Poor to common	9 @12½

Publisher's Department.

SINCE LADIES HAVE BEEN ACCUSTOMED to use Glenn's Sulphur Soap in their toilet their personal attractions have been multiplied, and it is seldom they are seen disfigured with blotches and pimples, or rough or coarse skins. Sold by Druggists, Grocers and Fancy Goods Dealers.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap heals and beautifies, 25c.
German Corn Remover kills Corns, Bunions, 25c
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye—Black & Brown, 50c.
Pike's Toothache Drops cure in 1 Minute, 25c.

Food for Invalids.

Hundreds of invalids fail to regain their health and strength because of inability to digest and assimilate their food. If they would use the Lactated Food, they would find it an article which is most easily digested, and will be assimilated by the stomach when all other foods fail. It is predigested, non-irritating, and has great nutritive properties. It can be prepared in many different ways, and is a palatable and delicate article of diet. Sold by druggists everywhere. 25c., 50c., and $1.

In hundreds of cases, Hood's Sarsaparilla, by purifying and enriching the blood, has proven a potent remedy for rheumatism. Hence, if you suffer the pains and aches of this disease, it is fair to assume that Hood's Sarsaparilla will cure you. Give it a trial.

Ayer's Hair Vigor has no equal, in merit and efficiency, as a hair dressing and for the prevention of baldness. It eradicates dandruff, keeps the scalp moist, clean, and healthy, and gives vitality and color to weak, faded, and gray hair. The most popular of toilet articles.

Relief is immediate, and a sure cure. Piso's Remedy for Catarrh. 50 cents.

MARRIAGES.

HALL—RIGHTMIRE.—At Freehold, N. J., July 22, Dr. Charles E. Hall and Miss Luella D. Rightmire, by Rev. I. P. Brokaw.

MCNEILL—CANTLY.—At the parsonage of the Grove Church, New Durham, N. J., July 15, by the Rev. I. W. Gowen, Eliza Cantly to William Henry McNeill, both of Weehawken, N. J.

OSTRANDER—VAN ZANDT.—At Niskayuna, N. Y., July 21, by Rev. C. P. Ditmars, Mr. Jacob C. Ostrander to Miss Rozella Van Zandt, both of Lisha's Kill, N. Y.

PREDDLE—GUMMER.—At Niskayuna, N. Y., May 26, by Rev. C. P. Ditmars, Mr. Walter Preddle to Miss Elizabeth Gummer, both of Watervliet, N.Y.

DEATHS.

Obituary notices five cents per line (nine word to the line.) For subscribers we will insert fifteen lines free; all lines in excess of that number will be charged same as non-subscribers.

COFFIN.—At Greenville, N. J., July 20, Richard, infant son of John P. and Charlotte R. Coffin, aged 9 months and 3 days.

THOSE GONE BEFORE.

They have crossed the mystic river,
They have passed beyond our sight;
Left this vale of care and sorrow,
Passed from darkness into light.

Yet our inmost feelings teach us
That they hover round our heads;
That a kind and loving Father
Leaves them watchers o'er our beds.

In the morning they will greet us,
When is set our earthly sun,
To arise in endless glory
For the eternal day begun.

Let us look beyond the coffin
Which contains the lifeless clay;
See the spirit of our loved ones
Basking in eternal day.

Then we'll bear the pain of parting;
We will smile beneath the rod;
For we know the pain but transient
To the endless day with God. J. P. C.

FRYMIRE.—At South Bend, Ind., July 17, David Frymire, aged 40 years.

A good soldier of his country, he had been in nine of the hot battles of the late war, from Dalton, Ga., to Nashville, Tenn., when only a little over 18 years old. A good soldier of Jesus Christ, he, though his life was ended by the bursting of an enlarged artery in his neck, died exhorting his wife and five little daughters to "trust in the Lord." His funeral in the Reformed church was largely attended by members of the Grand Army and of the Ladies' Relief Corps, who had cared for him and his family during a long illness.

LEE.—At "the Lee Homestead," Yorktown, Westchester Co., N. Y., July 19, Randolph M. Lee, youngest son of the late Robert P. Lee, Esq., and brother of the late Rev. Robert P. Lee, D.D., of Montgomery, N. Y, in the 57th year of his age.

He died in the full assurance of hope through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. During an illness of fifteen years he bowed with sweet Christian submission to the Divine will.

QUICK.—On Saturday, June 19, at his late residence near Lake City, Mich., Rev. John J. Quick, in the 76th year of his age.

He gave his heart to the Lord under the teachings of the late Rev. Dr. Ludlow, of Neshanic, N. J. Graduated at Rutgers College and Theological Seminary, and soon after began the active work of the Gospel ministry, consecrating his life and talents to the work of the Lord.

His ancestors were in the "covenant," and the blessings of the covenant God came upon their seed. His bodily sufferings during his last illness were very intense, but he bore them without a murmur, wishing that if it were the Lord's will they might be even heavier, and he might be as patient as the Saviour was.

As a shock of corn cometh in in his season fully ripe, so he peacefully entered into his rest.

TALMAGE.—On Monday morning, July 12, in New York city, Robert G. Talmage, son of Mary S. and the late Rev. James R. Talmage, D.D., aged 25 years.

Notices and Acknowledgments

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—Evangelical but not denominational. Prints in 147 languages in aid of foreign missions; grants religious reading to the needy; sends colporters to millions in our highways and hedges, and to the immigrants in Castle Garden and elsewhere. This work depends wholly on charitable gifts. Donations and legacies are earnestly solicited. A summary of the sixtieth year mailed free. O. R. Kingsbury, Treasurer, 150 Nassau street, New York.

FULTON STREET DAILY NOON PRAYER-MEETING,
113 Fulton Street, and 58 Ann Street,
Just east of Broadway, near William Street.
COME IN, REST, AND PRAY.
Stop 5, 10 15 or 20 minutes, or the hour, as your time permits.

Woman's Board of Foreign Missions.

RECEIPTS FROM JUNE 10 TO JULY 15, 1886.

From Red Hill Chapel, Greenport, Col. Co., N.Y., $60; Catskill, aux., 24.80; Bible and Missionary Class, North Newark, N.J., 52; Clover Hill, N.J., 23.33; Golden Rule Band, S. S., 1st Albany, N.Y., 30; Happy Hours Association, 5th av. and 29th st., 8.39; Greennille, N. J., aux., 85; Joy Bells Mission Band, Yonkers, N.Y., 40; Miss Josephine Penfold, 120; A lady in Utica, aux., 30; 3d Albany, N.Y., aux., 5; Walden, N.Y., aux., 42.68; Willing Workers, 5.50; 1st Poughkeepsie, N. Y., 60; Owasco Outlet, N.Y., 5; A friend, Montclair, Fla., 3. Total, $549.70.

Parties wishing to remit will please do so by check, if possible, made payable to the Treasurer, or by registered letter, but not by Post-Office order.

MRS. PETER DONALD, Treasurer,
39 West 46th street, New York City.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall-st., N. Y.

NATURE'S CURE FOR CONSTIPATION, A Palatable Remedy.

TARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT Seltzer Aperient.

This is no violent purgative, but an elegant remedial agent, which is invaluable for the cure of Constipation, Torpid Liver, Sick Headache and Dyspepsia. It promotes the action of the bowels, skin and kidneys; is an efficient febrifuge, and is useful in all inflammatory diseases.

Sick-Headache, AND DYSPEPSIA.

It is the most economical, elegant and effective remedy ever offered to the public, and is prescribed by physicians and recommended by druggists throughout the land. Manufactured only by TARRANT & CO., New York.

The Appetite

May be increased, the Digestive organs strengthened, and the Bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition. They contain neither calomel nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was constantly afflicted with Headache and Dizziness. I consulted our family doctor, who prescribed for me, at various times, without affording more than temporary relief. I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time my digestion and appetite my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches had disappeared, and I became strong and well.—Darius M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

IMPROVED

I was troubled, for over a year, with Loss of Appetite, and General Debility. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored. —C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING

three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kans.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from Indigestion and Headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hemmenway, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me increased vigor, and restored my health.—John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

The Church.

At the Gate.

"For, behold the kingdom of God is within you."

THY kingdom here?
Lord, can it be.
Searching and seeking everywhere
For many a year,
"Thy kingdom come" has been my prayer.
Was that dear kingdom all the while so near?

Blinded and dull
With selfish sin,
Have I been sitting at the gates
Called Beautiful,
Where Thy fair angel stands and waits,
With hand upon the lock, to let me in?

Was I the wall
Which barred the way,
Darkening the glory of Thy grace,
Hiding the ray
Which, shining out as from Thy very face,
Had shown to other men the perfect day?

Was I the bar
Which shut me out
From the full joyance which they taste
Whose spirits are Within Thy Paradise embraced—
Thy blessed Paradise, which seems so far?

Let me not sit
Another hour,
Idly awaiting what is mine to win,
Blinded in wit.
Lord Jesus, rend these walls of self and sin,
Beat down the gate, that I may enter in.

—The English Pulpit.

Ten Millions for Missions.

IT is sadly evident that the Presbyterian Church in the United States is not doing what it might do for the salvation of our country and of the world. And we must not comfort ourselves with the fact that we are doing as much, in proportion to our numbers and means, as the other denominations. That is not the standard by which God will judge us. His rule is, "Freely ye have received, freely give." He expects us to do what we can without any reference to what others do. Are we doing what we can, all that we can? No one will pretend for a moment that we are. Let us try to reach an honest estimate of our ability, and then we will know the measure of our duty.

The number of communicants, as reported to the General Assembly in 1885, was over 720,000. Many of them are women and children, but it is safe to estimate the number of families at 300,000. Each of these families has an annual income varying from $500 to $50,000 and over. Presbyterians are generally thrifty and in good circumstances. Very few of them are absolutely poor. It is safe, therefore, to put the average annual income of these 300,000 families at $1,000. Now, should not all of these families, as stewards of the Lord, give at least five per cent of their income to Him for His work at home and abroad? Well, five per cent of $300,000,000—the gross income of our 300,000 families—is $15,000,000. But there are a great many rich Presbyterians in this country. Men whose income is above $5,000 a year ought to give a great deal more than five per cent. If I earn $2,000 a year, and contribute $100 of that to the Church, living comfortably on $1,900 or less, my brother who earns or receives from his investments $10,000 a year, and whose living expenses need not be greater than mine, ought to contribute, not $500 in order to be even with me, but $8,100, for this leaves him $1,900 for family expenses. The special donations of the rich should increase the $15,000,000 to at least $17,000,000. Last year our congregational expenses, as reported, were about $7,500,000. Everybody knows that these are higher than they need to be. But let us strike off only half a million for extravagant expenditures in music, etc. We then, having an aggregate income for the Lord's cause of $17 000,000, take $7,000,000 of it for congregational expenses, and there is left $10 000,000 for missions and Christian education—four times as much as we gave to those objects last year.

Does it seem incredible that our Church could quadruple its contributions to missions in a single year? Review the figures just presented. Is there any error in them? Is there anything unreasonable in claiming that every one who has given himself to the Lord should give one-twentieth of his income to the Lord?

The principal reason that our benevolent contributions are not four times greater is, that we neglect the Gospel rule as laid down by Paul in 1 Cor. 16: 2. We do not lay by in store, on the first day of the week, as God has prospered us. Suppose in our 300 000 Presbyterian families every Sabbath morning the question were asked, How much can we spare for the Lord from the income or earnings of this week? Or to put it in a better form, How much ought we to lay aside for the Lord of the money He has given us this week? Suppose this question were asked after family worship, when all hearts were aglow with communion with God! Would not $1 for the week seem quite small enough as a thank-offering in at least 290,000 of these homes? And are there not ten, or twice ten thousand where five times that amount would seem the merest pittance? In nearly all these homes is there not more than $1 expended every week for things not really needed? Could not $1 a week be saved in providing for the table, and yet the family have all the necessaries and many of the luxuries of life? Could not $1 a week be saved in the family wardrobe and yet all its members be well dressed?

What we need is a little system in our giving, and a little self-denial. When we have money we spend it, without thinking that the Gospel has claims upon our purses as well as upon our hearts. And then when some object of benevolence is presented our money is gone, and we feel poor, because we have been thoughtless and self-indulgent. So we give a mere pittance of what we ought to give, and do not give even that cheerfully. The more we study that simple rule, about laying aside every Sabbath as God has prospered us, the higher is our estimate of its wisdom. In its observance by every Christian and Christian household, we have the financial problem solved. Let us all do in the fear and love of God what Paul exhorted the Corinthians to do, and no special appeals for money would be needed; the treasury of the Church would always be full.

Ten millions a year for missions! Does that seem a large sum? It is small when we consider that it is our contribution for the conversion of the world. There are hundreds of millions of people interested in the expenditure of that ten millions of dollars. They are waiting for what it would do in China and in Africa. Let our Church say to our missionaries all around the globe, "Enlarge your plans, multiply your agencies, engage all the native helpers you need, order all the Bibles that you can distribute. You who have given your lives to the evangelization of the world shall not be cramped in your work for want of money." O, how such a message would cheer the hearts and strengthen the hands of our brethren and sisters in the foreign field! And how it would encourage our young men preparing for the ministry to go abroad and help the faithful workers there! They would be certain that the Church at home would sustain them. Ten millions a year for the salvation of the world! Why there are no less than 1,000,000,000 who have never heard the Gospel. For their evangelization our great Church would give, year by year, a cent for each soul! A million of dollars for each one hundred millions who are perishing in their sins.

But while the field is the world our own country is to us the nearest and the most important portion of that field. Suppose that of the ten millions for missions we could have five millions next year to sustain our feeble churches, to explore new fields, to endow institutions of learning, to build houses of worship, to evangelize and educate the freedmen.—The Interior.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Home Readings.

LESSON 6, THIRD QUARTER.

M. Gentiles Seeking Jesus.....John 12: 20-36.
T. Christ Rejected.....John 12: 37-50.
W. "In the Glory of His Father." .....Matt. 16: 21-28.
T. The Bitter Cup.....Matt. 26: 36-46.
F. "Thus it Must Be."..... .....Matt. 26: 47-64.
S. Perfect through Suffering..... .Heb. 2: 1-18.
S. The Name above Every Name.....Heb. 2: 1-16.

—From the Westminster Question Book.

International Sunday-School Lesson.

BY REV. JOHN C. VAN DEVENTER.

August 8th.—"Gentiles Seeking Jesus."—John 12: 20-36.

Golden Text.—"And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."—JOHN 12: 32.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—"Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."—ISA. 45: 22.

INTRODUCTION.

THE entry of Jesus into Jerusalem amid the praises of the multitude was on the first day of the week in which He was crucified. He visited the city each day, but did not spend the night within the walls. These last few days were full of events which served to illustrate and enforce His claims to Divine authority. He drove the traders out of the temple a second time; healed the blind and lame; cursed the barren fig-tree; uttered many significant parables; and foretold the destruction of Jerusalem. All of these things served only to deepen the opposition against Him, and the rulers were desperately plotting His speedy destruction. It was while the popular enthusiasm was still unchecked, and the enmity of the rulers was growing more and more bitter, that the incident occurred which furnished Him with the suggestion of the brief discourse that occupies our attention in this lesson.

THE LESSON.

I. THE VISIT.—VS. 20-22.

V. 20.—"There were certain Greeks among those that went up to worship at the feast." These were proselytes of the gate,—Greeks who had forsaken idolatry and adopted the Jewish religion, but who had not submitted to circumcision, and therefore were not recognized as Jews. The expression indicates that they were in the habit of visiting Jerusalem on the occasion of the great feasts.

V. 21.—"These, therefore, came to Philip." A great deal of effort has been expended upon the question, why Philip was chosen to convey their request to Jesus. We do not know that he was chosen; he may have been the first disciple whom they recognized, and they naturally hastened to prefer their request to him. "Sir, we would see Jesus." This request implies something more than the gratification of curiosity. They evidently had something to ask of Him, or were ready to offer Him their allegiance.

V. 22—"Philip cometh, and telleth Andrew." The time was a critical one, and Philip felt unwilling to bring these strangers to a personal interview with Jesus on his own responsibility. "They tell Jesus." Whether Jesus granted these men an audience, or what was the result of such an interview we cannot tell. Jesus immediately improved the opportunity to give some much needed lessons to His disciples and, perhaps, to the Greeks, who may have stood near.

II. THE DISCOURSE.—VS. 23-36.

This discourse is really a series of suggestive remarks, the connection of which it is somewhat difficult to detect, and yet all spring out of the incident of the visit of the Greeks, and refer to His approaching death.

V 23.—"The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified." The anointing at Bethany, the palm branches, and the hosannas of the children had been marks of honor given to Jesus, but in this seeking on the part of Gentiles, He recognized a prophecy of a greater glory, when the isles of the sea and the uttermost parts of the earth should become His kingdom. This fuller glory was to be made possible only by the cross, so that the hour of His glory began in the hour of His deepest humiliation.

V. 24.—"Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone." By this figure Jesus shows the necessity and meaning of His death. He died in order to give life. "If I die, it bringeth forth much fruit." That which was true concerning Himself was also true concerning all His disciples. Not by self-preservation but by sacrifice is the kingdom won.

V. 25.—"He that loveth his life shall lose it." The man who is spending his energies upon the problem of his own existence is wasting time, and strength, and himself. The great question for us is not how shall I live, but, how shall I serve?

V. 26—"If any man serve me, let him follow me." Into the deepening shades, to the garden and the cross, must the disciple go tracing the footsteps of his Lord. "If any man serve Me him will my Father honor." If the first requirement seem hard, let this blessed promise be its compensation. Jesus was made perfect through suffering, and it is enough that the disciple be as his LORD

V. 27—"Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say?" The shadow of the cross had already fallen over His path. The bitterness of the cup was not confined to Gethsemane. Even when the people seemed ready to crown Him as their king, He felt the terrible struggle going on in His soul, which reached its height when He cried, "My God! My God! why hast thou forsaken Me?" "Father, save Me from this hour." This is what His disciples in their shortsightedness would have had Him pray. This expression is not properly a part of His prayer to His Father, but is addressed to the disciples in order to probe their feelings. "For this cause came I unto this hour." The cross stood before Him when He entered upon His life on earth. It had been drawing nearer every moment of this life, until now it stood right in His pathway. He would not, could not shrink from that which He had willingly accepted for Himself.

V. 28—"Father, glorify thy name." This was His prayer, and the constant wish of His heart. Blessed are the sufferers in life who can adopt the petition as their own. "I have both glorified it and will glorify it again." For the third time God spake from heaven in attestation of His Son's authority, and in approval of His service.

V. 29.—"The people, therefore, that stood by and heard it said, that it thundered, others said, An angel spake unto him." These men heard the sound but their ears were too gross to distinguish the speech. It is possible that some of the disciples heard the words and understood the message.

V 30.—"This voice came, not for me, but for your sakes." It is more important to men that they should believe, than it is to Jesus that He should be believed. He that sinneth against Me wrongeth his own soul.

V. 31.—"Now is the judgment of this world." The rulers thought that they were judging the Nazarene, when they were being judged themselves. The hour of triumph for the powers of darkness was in reality the hour of their defeat. "Now shall the prince of this world be cast out." From the time of Christ's death Satan has been losing his dominion, and will continue so to lose, until he shall be cast chained into the bottomless pit.

V. 32—"I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Two things are especially noticeable about this remark: First, there was at that time no human probability of Christ being crucified. Death by stoning was far more to be expected, for that was the penalty for blasphemy. Yet Jesus knew that He was to die upon the Cross. Second, Jesus looked beyond the Cross and all the days of small things to the fulfillment of His Father's promise, "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance." The Cross is the great power of attraction in the world to day, and is gaining instead of losing power as the ages pass by.

V 34—"We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth forever" The offence of the Cross began to operate before it had been erected. These people were willing to acknowledge Jesus as Christ, but His own words seemed to contradict His claims and make them impossible. "Who is this Son of man?" Both the human and the Divine natures of Christ are perplexing mysteries except as we are taught by the Holy Ghost.

V 35—"Yet a little while is the light with you." The blessed opportunities which those men were enjoying were soon to cease. If they would have a Divine Teacher they must yield themselves promptly to His instruction. "He that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." The men of this world, whom the god of this world hath blinded go stumbling along, ever seeking after light, and always missing it.

V. 36—"While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of the light." There is a beautiful progress of experience indicated in this clause. The light comes to us from without, it is in the world; we walk in the light, enjoy its help while it is present; we are to receive it into ourselves, believe in the light; and then we shall become children of light, or light-bearers.

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

1. Let us try to see Jesus in every lesson.
2. Let us try to bring others to Jesus.
3. Let us lose our lives in loving service.
4. If we would share His throne, we must share His Cross.
5. Let our prayer in every trial be, "Father, glorify thy name."
6. Let us lift up Jesus before the world, by our faithful living.
7. If we are walking in the light we shall seek to get more light.
8. If we are children of the light we shall let our light shine.

The American Sunday-School Union.

IN no country with which we are acquainted has there ever been such a flood of population as has rolled from the eastern part of this country westward within the last fifty years. We have no example of it in all the history of the world. In 1790 the population of this country was only about five millions of people. To-day we have fifty millions. Now, where are they! More than one-half of them are in a part of the country that was a wilderness when the constitution of the United States was adopted. More than one-half of them live west of the central portions of Ohio. Many of you can remember when we thought of Ohio as the far West. It is now no longer the far West. It is the very centre of the population of this Union. And the population that has gone west of Ohio, peopling Indiana, Illinois and largely Kentucky and Tennessee, Iowa, Arkansas, Wisconsin and Colorado, to say nothing of the Pacific coast, has gone out into the wilderness, and there they have made free and intelligent communities. They have gone out to the western prairies where the population at first was sparse, where there were no churches and no Sabbath-schools, where a Christian family might live for years without having any association with any other Christian family.

Let me mention a single instance in my own experience. A half dozen years ago I went through the territory of Montana. There were no roads; there were no public conveyances. I took a horse and rode on horseback for about one month through Montana. In the course of my riding through that territory I came across one ranche after another, and I was in the habit (I had several companions with me) of going into ranches and having conversations with the different individuals I found there. I went into one which was a better-looking ranche than any other, where there was some agriculture and some irrigation. I spent about an hour or an hour and a half in that ranche. I found there a middle-aged lady, with her husband and a family of seven or eight children (I do not remember the number). I got into conversation with this lady, and asked her where she came from. She said she came from central New York.

"How long have you been here?"

"Seventeen years."

"Seventeen years out here in this prairie! How near have you any neighbors?"

"Five miles off."

"Have you any church near by?"

"No. About ten miles off there is a schoolhouse, where a Methodist minister comes about once a year; and I have heard him preach twice during the seventeen years I have lived here."

"Have you any school here?"

"No."

"Can the children read?"

"Oh yes; I have taught them to read."

"So you and your husband and your children have been here for seventeen years, and have been at church but twice, and your children have never seen a Sabbath school, and I can find no book in your house but the Bible and the Pilgrim's Progress" (I found those two books there).

Yes, that was the state of things there. She was a professor of religion. She had been a member of New York Avenue Church. No colporteur of the Tract Association and no missionary of the American Sunday School Union had ever been there on her ranche. This shows a case which was not a solitary one. It is true I have never seen any other exactly like it, but I have no doubt that such cases are spread all over the great territory of the West, which we must remember is greater than the territory east of the Mississippi.

There are persons who have gone there from Christian churches with children, the children never having known the privilege of a Sabbath-school or even of a church, who have never heard a Christian minister. How are these children growing up? True, if they have faithful Christian parents, they may be instructed in the way of life; but we all know that where Christian parents do not have the privilege of attendance upon churches or association with other Christians, Christian love fades out and becomes dim. It needs the help of association in churches, association with other Christians; and that is what this Sunday-School Union is doing.

It sends out its missionary with papers and books, and he goes into one of these neighborhoods where there are several families living, perhaps within three or four or five miles of each other. He takes these books and shows them to the parents or children. He finds in that neighborhood, or within ten miles of it, some person who has been a member of a Christian church in the East. This missionary spends his days there in visiting in these different ranches and houses, and he gathers a Sabbath school, it may be, in one of the ranches. There are very few school houses there. It may be that it is under a tree, if there are any trees in the neighborhood; in some dwelling or room or storehouse, he gathers a Sunday-school. He spends a Sabbath, it may be, at that Sunday-school. He instructs the superintendent and advises him until he is able to engage in the work. Having started that Sunday school, he goes on and establishes another in another neighborhood. After a while he returns, gives his encouragement, leaves his books there, induces them to buy as far as he can, and, where he cannot induce them to buy, donates the books.

In hundreds of cases, in thousands of cases, these little Sunday-schools have grown up into self-sustaining churches, in which have been gathered many repentant sinners, who have accepted Christ as their Saviour and rejoice in Him now at this day. Many of the most valuable churches in the State of Ohio and in the territories, and the most efficient churches, are the outgrowth of those Sunday-schools which have been established by the agents of the American Sunday-School Union. — Hon. William Strong, LL.D., in the Sunday School World.

THE Waldensians, at the General Conference at Florence, Italy, have decreed that hereafter female members who have reached the age of twenty-one shall be allowed to vote, but not to speak, at church meetings.

HOW HE "JINED" THEM —One of the waiters at a hotel in Grenada, Mass, told us that a colored wedding was coming off that evening, and several white people went over to the house designated to witness the affair. The happy couple finally stood up before the minister, who said: "Samuel, you an' Lucinda are shortly to be jined together. Does you desire to back out?" "No, sah." "How am it with you, Lucinda? Does yere want to flunk afore these yere white folks?" "No, sah." "Den you two hitch hands." They hitched. "Samuel, does you take her for better or wuss? Am you gwine to do the fa'r thing by dis yere gurl, whos' fadder was killed on de railroad up nigh Jackson?" "Yes, sah." "Lucinda, does you realize de seriousness of dis opportunity? Am you gwine to stick to Samuel clean frew to the judgment day, or am you gwine to trifle around arter odder men?" "I'ze gwine to stick." "Den, chill'en, in de presence of dese yere white men from the Norf, one of whom subscribed two bits yesterday to help to build up de meetin' house dat was blowed down by the sighclone, I denounce you as hitched, jined, an' mar'd 'cordin' to de law an' Gospel. Now you go 'long an' behave yerselves!"—Detroit Free Press.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate

In Debility from Overwork.

Dr. G. W. COLLINS, Tipton, Ind., says: "I used it in nervous debility brought on by overwork in warm weather, with good results."

That Tired Feeling

The warm weather has a debilitating effect, especially upon those who are within doors most of the time. The peculiar, yet common, complaint known as "that tired feeling," is the result. This feeling can be entirely overcome by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which gives new life and strength to all the functions of the body.

"I could not sleep; had no appetite. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon began to sleep soundly; could get up without that tired and languid feeling; and my appetite improved." R. A. SANFORD, Kent, Ohio.

Strengthen the System

Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarities: 1st, the combination of remedial agents; 2d, the proportion; 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, effecting cures hitherto unknown. Send for book containing additional evidence.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over." J. P. THOMPSON, Register of Deeds, Lowell, Mass.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla beats all others, and is worth its weight in gold." I. BARRINGTON, 130 Bank Street, New York City.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

7% NET Security 3 to 6 times loan. INTEREST semi-annual and paid at your home. 29th year of residence, and 10th of business. No investor ever had to pay taxes, costs of foreclosure, wait for interest, or take land. BEST of References all around you. Write if you have money to loan.

D. S. B. JOHNSTON & SON,

Negotiators of Mortgage Loans,

MENTION THIS PAPER. St. Paul, Minn

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE, Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and endorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it. A. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 238 S. Second St., Phil., Pa.

THE SAFEST FOOD IN SUMMER

For Young or Delicate Children.

A Sure Preventive of

CHOLERA INFANTUM.

It has been the positive means of saving many lives where no other food would be retained. Its basis is SUGAR OF MILK, the most important element of mothers' milk.

It contains no unchanged starch and no Cane Sugar, and therefore does not cause sour stomach, irritation, or irregular bowels.

It is the Most Nourishing, the Most Palatable, the Most Economical, of all Prepared Foods.

Sold by druggists—25 cts., 50 cts., $1.00. Send for pamphlet giving important medical opinions on the nutrition of Infants and Invalids.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

7 PER CENT. INTEREST

FIRST MORTGAGE

FARM LOANS.

Personal acquaintance with lands and values. Over 2,000 loans made. NO CUSTOMER has ever LOST A DOLLAR of principal or interest on any loans made here. Interest collected and sent to you, free of cost, each year. These loans are very safe, and pay nearly U.S. BONDS, I am three times as much as known and recommended by leading business men and clergymen, East and West—men for whom I have been making these investments for TEN YEARS PAST.

REFERENCES.

REV. WM. L. GAGE, D.D., Hartford, Ct.
M. E. GATES, PH.D., LL.D., President Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.
DR. WM. J MILNE, President Geneseo Normal School, Geneseo, N. Y
HON. E. M. TOPLIFF, Manchester, N. H.
REV. JOHN W. RAY, Lake City, Minn.
DR. JNO. K. BUCKLYN, Mystic Bridge, Ct.
Importers' and Traders' National Bank, New York.
First National Bank, St. Paul, Minn
The Congregationalist, Boston, N. Y. Observer, and hundreds of others in all parts of the United States.

All are pleased with my Investments. Circular, references, letters giving experience and testimony of old customers, and a New Map of Dakota sent free on application. Mention this paper. Address

E. P. GATES,

Pres. Merchant's Bank,
Grand Forks, Dakota

6%, 7%, 8%

The American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, incorporated, with a paid-up capital of $500,000, with branches at Huron and Mitchell, Dakota, offer First Mortgage Farm Loans in Iowa, Minn., Dakota, and Neb., both Principal and Interest Guaranteed. Also 6 per cent Debenture Bonds (obligations of the Company), running 10 years, secured by Mortgage loans deposited with the Mercantile Trust Co., N. Y. It also issues Demand Certificates of Deposit at 5 per cent. interest. Write for pamphlet and references.

Home Office, Emmetsburg, Iowa.
E. S. Ormsby, Pres., 150 Nassau St., N. Y.

INVEST Through the Sound and Reliable
WESTERN FARM MORTGAGE CO.

F. M. PERKINS, President. LAWRENCE, KAN. L. H. PERKINS, Secretary.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS, $250,000.

Carefully selected 1st Mortgage Farm Loans payable in N. Y. Unrivalled facilities. Absolute satisfaction. 10 years' experience. No losses. Refer to 3d Nat'l Bank, N.Y. City; Nat'l Bank, Lawrence, Kan.; and Hundreds of Investors. Send for pamphlet, forms and full information. Branch Offices in N.Y. City, Albany & Phila. N.Y. Office, 137 B'way, C.C. Hine & Son, Agts.

Pastors or Trustees about to BUILD OR REMODEL Churches, should read our New Handbook on Church Building, Ventilating, Stained Glass and STEREOCHROME OR SECCO PAINTING. This new and beautiful method of decorating the interior of Churches, is superior to any style of decoration in use. The colors are very rich, imperishable, and warranted proof against leaks or damp from the roof or sides of the building. Plans for New or for Remodeling, or Decoration of Churches, furnished on reasonable terms. Handbook sent free as above, in Middle States. Address, J. S. D'ORSAY & CO., Church Architects and Decorators. Office, 67 BIBLE HOUSE, New York. Established 18[illegible].

Refers to Rev. J. Gaston, D.D., Passaic, N. J., Rev E. T. Corwin, D.D., Millstone, N. J., about Secco Painting.

BELLS

McShane Bell Foundry
Finest Grade of Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS for CHURCHES, &c.
Send for Price and Catalogue. Address
H. McSHANE & CO.,
Mention this paper. Baltimore, Md

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Fire Alarms, Farms, etc. FULLY WARRANTED. Catalogue sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

MENEELY & COMPANY.
West Troy, N. Y. Bells,
For Churches, Schools, etc., also Chimes and Peals. For more than half a century noted for superiority over all others

R. H. MACY & CO.,

14TH STREET, SIXTH AVE., AND 13TH STREET NEW YORK.

GRAND CENTRAL FANCY AND DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT.

We Call Attention to Our Large and Varied Stock Goods Adapted to the Summer Season.

Our Customers Residing in the

COUNTRY,

Or Those Visiting the

MOUNTAINS

OR

SEA-SHORE,

Can Rely on Having Their

ORDERS BY MAIL

Carefully Executed and Promptly Shipped.

OUR PRICES

Are Always the Lowest.

R. H. MACY & CO.

ATLANTIC

Mutual Insurance Co.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 51 WALL STREET

ORGANIZED 1842.

Insures against Marine and Inland Navigation Risks.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest in accordance with its Charter.

J. D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice President
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice Pres't.
A. A. RAVEN 3d Vice Pres't.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

CONTINENTAL

Insurance Co.

Continental Buildings
100 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Cor. COURT and MONTAGUE STS., BROOKLYN

106 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, E.D.

Insures against loss by Fire at reasonable rates.

Reserve for re-insurance	$2,265,427 8
of which for Inland Marine, $55,969 52
Reserve ample for all other claims	553,171 2.
Capital paid in cash	1,000,000 00
Net surplus	1,358,879 85
Total Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886.	$5,177,478 99

This Company conducts its business under the restrictions of the New York Safety Fund Law. The two Safety Funds together equal $1,200,000.

H. H. LAMPORT, President.

CYRUS PECK, Secretary.

HOME

INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK.

OFFICE, No. 119 BROADWAY.

Sixty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the Condition of the Company on the first day of July, 1886.

CASH CAPITAL	$3,000,000 00
Reserve Premium Fund	2,938,020 00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	301,040 10
Net Surplus	1,389,341 71
Cash Assets	$7,628,401 81

SUMMARY OF ASSETS

Cash in Banks	$126,678 99
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	743,300 00
United States Stocks (market value)	2,9 2,697 50
Bank and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	1,733,640 00
State and City Bonds (market value)	226,000 00
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	130,000 00
Interest due on 1st July, 1886	10?,394 74
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	239,646 97
Real Estate	1,354,113 61
Total	$7,628,401 81

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
D. A. HEALD, Vice-President.
J. H. WASHBURN, V. P. & Sec'y

T. B. GREENE,
W. L. BIGELOW,
E. G. SNOW, JR., } Ass't Sec's.

James M'Creery & Co.

AT THEIR SEMI-ANNUAL STOCK INVENTORY ON THE 9TH INST., SELECTED SEVERAL VERY LARGE ASSORTMENTS OF COLORED AND FANCY SILK VELVETS, ETC., WHICH THEY WILL DISPOSE OF DURING THIS MONTH AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Broadway & 11th St., N. Y.

Degraaf and Taylor

LEADING FURNITURE MAKERS AND UPHOLSTERERS

47 and 49 W. 14th st., and 48 W. 15th st.
BETWEEN 5TH AND 6TH AVES.,
NEW YORK.

As you drive by one house the outside betokens the tasteful elegance of the occupant; in the next one you expect to see overdressed, ridiculous ignorance come to the door. Try our Pure Colors, $1.35 per gal. Paint, much the cheapest still more the best. F. J. Nash M'f'g Co., Manufacturers of Ready Mixed Paint, Nyack, Rockland Co., New York. Interesting Circulars Free. If your dealer refuses you these goods apply to us direct.

LE PAGE'S LIQUID GLUE

Is used by thousands of first class Manufacturers and Mechanics on their best work. Received GOLD MEDAL, London, '83. Pronounced strongest glue known. Send card of dealer who does not keep it, with five 2c stamps for SAMPLE CAN FREE

Russia Cement Co., Gloucester, Mass.

EDUCATIONAL.

VASSAR COLLEGE,

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

FOR WOMEN, with a complete College Course. School of Painting and Music, Astronomical Observatory, Laboratory of Chemistry and Physics, Cabinets of Natural History, a Museum of Art, a Library of 15,000 Volumes, ten Professors, twenty-three Teachers. Catalogues sent on application.

REV. JAMES M. TAYLOR, D.D., President.

Riverview Academy,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Prepares for College and the Government Academies, for Business and Social relations. Thorough Military Instruction. Springfield Cadet Rifles.

BISBEE & AMEN, Principals.

38TH YEAR. LYNDON HALL. POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—A High-Class School for Young Ladies. Music, Drawing, Painting, Languages, and English branches thoroughly taught, with full regard to the equally important matters of home care and training. Address

SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Principal.

YOUNG LADIES SEMINARY.
43d YEAR
Begins Sept. 22.
Address
F. CHANDLER, D. D., Prest. Freehold, N. J.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE Grammar School,

New Brunswick, N. J.

PREPARES BOYS AND YOUNG MEN FOR COLLEGE OR BUSINESS.

Additional buildings were last year required, erected and filled.

This year additional teachers engaged to meet the increased number of students.

Rooms carpeted and cared for. Some arranged in suites—a study-room 14x14 with two single sleeping-rooms adjoining. A few single rooms to be had if desired.

Last year at the opening of the school every room was engaged, and many applicants were refused admission because of the lack of room. This year rooms will be reserved as applied for.

For catalogues and further information, address E. T. TOMLINSON, HEADMASTER.

BEST TEACHERS AMERICAN and FOREIGN, promptly provided for Families, Schools, Colleges
Skilled Teachers supplied with Positions.
Circulars of Good Schools free to Parents.
School Property rented and sold.
School and Kindergarten Material, etc.
J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO.,
AMERICAN SCHOOL INSTITUTE, 7 East 14th St., N. Y

The Misses Anable's

English, French and German Boarding and Day-School

WILL REOPEN SEPTEMBER 22D.

40 BAYARD ST., New Brunswick, N. J.

Elmira College. FOR WOMEN.

Under Care of Synod of New York.

Course of study equal to that of the best Colleges; also Elective and Special Courses. Best advantages in Music and Art. Building with best modern improvements; heated by steam, and furnished with elevator. Astronomical Observatory —Museum and Art Gallery. Terms moderate. Address REV. A. W. COWLES, D.D., Pres't, Elmira, N. Y.

SIGLAR'S PREPARATORY SCHOOL,
NEWBURG-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.,

Gives the best preparation for the best colleges. Two Yale valedictorians in three years. Entrance examinations held at the school by member of Yale Faculty. Daily gymnastics under teacher compulsory. For circulars, etc., address

HENRY W. SIGLAR, M.A., (Yale) Prin.

ALEXANDER INSTITUTE White Plains, N.Y.

23 miles from New York City by rail. Fits boys for College or business pursuits. 30 to 40 pupils 5 Teachers. Board and Tuition per annum $400. For circulars, apply to the Principal, O. R. WILLIS, Ph.D.

Deckertown, Sussex Co., N.J.

A SELECT ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes. School year begins September 8. For Circular, address,

W. H. SEELEY, A.M., Prin.

SEYMOUR SMITH INSTITUTE

Pine Plains, N. Y., prepares for College. Healthful, homelike, select, thorough. Address Rev. A. MATTICE, A.M., Principal.

Betts' Academy, Stamford, Conn.

A Boys' Boarding School of the highest grade. 49th year begins Sept. 15th. WM. J. BETTS, M.A., (Yale), Principal.

RYE SEMINARY, Rye, NEW YORK.
For particulars address Mrs. S. J. LIFE.

PEEKSKILL (N. Y.) MILITARY Academy.

YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL

Finds pleasure in its Music. Bright Songs make the Children happy. If you are in need of a new set of Singing Books, examine the following:

Songs of Promise. For Sunday Schools, Prayer and Conference Meetings. By J. H. Tenney and E. A. Hoffman. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.

SONGS OF PROMISE fill this beautiful book, and they have a great variety, having been contributed by many able writers. The book has 160 pages and 149 hymns, each with its own tune. Music and words mostly new.

Singing on the Way. By Mrs. Belle M. Jewett and Dr. Holbrook. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.

A capital book, containing 160 pages of excellent songs, hymns, and "occasional" pieces, such as will be welcomed in the Sunday school. Each piece may be played upon the organ.

Song Worship. For Sunday Schools. By L. O. Emerson and W. F. Sherwin. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.

A book that is intended to lift the service of song in the Sabbath school above the ordinary level, without putting it beyond the reach of the vast majority.

Fresh Flowers. For Infant Classes in Sunday Schools. By Emma Pitt. Price 25 cents; per dozen, $2.40.

A dainty little book, as full as it can hold of sweet melodies with pretty verses set to them, such as every child will understand and enjoy.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y.

THE CAROL

—A BOOK OF—

Religious Songs

—FOR THE—

Sunday School and the Home,

—BY—

CHARLES W. WENDTE,

With poetical contributions by

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Miss Louisa M. Alcott, Hezekiah Butterworth, and many others.

The Music, original and selected, by Geo. F. Root, J. R. Murray, J. B. Sharland, P. P. Bliss and J. B. Dykes, Stainer, Barnby, Handel, Mendelssohn and other eminent composers, old and new.

This work, long in preparation by an experienced Sunday School worker, contains over 200 separate musical selections, together with a number of musical and responsive services for the festival and ordinary occasions of the Sunday School and the Home Altar.

Price 35 cents each by mail, postpaid; $3.60 a dozen by express, charges not prepaid.
☞ Specimen Pages Free.

PUBLISHED BY

THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O.
The J. CHURCH CO., 19 E. 16th St., New York City.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for

PLATFORM ECHOES

OR LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART,

By John B. Gough.

His last and crowning life work, brim full of thrilling interest, humor and pathos. Bright, pure, and good, full of "laughter and tears," it sells at sight to all. To it is added the Life and Death of Mr. Gough, by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT. 1000 Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $100 to $200 a month made. ☞ Distance no hindrance as we give Extra Terms and Pay Freights. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

EQUITABLE

Mortgage Company,

SIX AND SEVEN PER CENT

FARM Mortgages & Municipal in Kansas, Missouri & Nebraska BONDS

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST

GUARANTEED.

Capital, $600,000.00.

A pamphlet containing information concerning the history of Farm Mortgages for the past twenty-five years sent free on application.

OFFICES:

NEW YORK, 208 B'way, Evening Post Bl'dg.
CHARLES N. FOWLER, V.
BOSTON, 23 Court Street.
H. H. FITCH, Manager.
PHILADELPHIA, 112 South Fourth Street.
CHAS. BENJ. WILKINSON, Manag
KANSAS CITY, Mo.
JOHN AVERY, General Manager.

N. W. HARRIS & CO.,
115-117 Monroe St., CHICAGO.
BONDS Of Counties, Cities, &c. of high grade a specialty Send for descriptive lists.

A MILLION BOOKS

RARE, CURIOUS, CURRENT. IN STOCK.

ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.

Libraries Supplied Cheaper than at any Book Store in the World.

LIBRARIES AND BOOKS BOUGHT.

MAMMOTH CATALOGUE FREE.

LEGGAT BROTHERS,
81 CHAMBERS STREET,
3d door West of City Hall Park. NEW YORK.

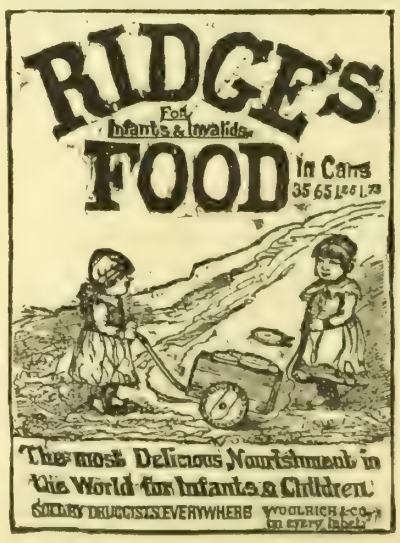
OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 Days. No Pay until Cured. J. L. STEPHENS, M. D., Lebanon, Ohio.

----FLORIDA.----

—ACADEMY AND COLLEGE AT DeLAND, FLORIDA.—

A first-class Academy for both sexes. Five Courses—College Preparatory, Higher English, Normal, Business, Industrial Drawing. First-class Art and Music Departments. Fine New Dormitory Buildings, enabling us to furnish board and tuition at reasonable rates. The purpose of this Institution is to give, in the delightful climate of FLORIDA, as thorough and liberal an education as can be secured in the best New England schools. DeLand College will also receive students of both sexes prepared to enter the Freshman Class. Send for Catalogue to

J. F. FORBES, President, DeLand, Florida, or H. A. DeLAND, Fairport, N. Y.



The following is a nurse's experience in one of Boston's best families; few can boast of bringing up 5 children in a single family. It speaks well for both the nurse and the food.

BOSTON, June 18, 1886.

Messrs. WOOLRICH & CO.

Gentlemen:—I feel it my duty to write and tell you of my experience with RIDGE'S FOOD. When I first began to use it I expected, of course, to obtain some benefit, but was not prepared for such wonderful results. Instead of the baby being feeble, cross and sickly, it was well and hearty all the time. I thought at first that it must be because it was that kind of a baby; but now I have brought up five babies on it, and my experience is the same with all. They are all well and hearty; there is never any fear for sickness, you can sleep all night, and I know it is the food that does it. I think every mother ought to know about this, and then there would not be any more fretful, cross and sickly babies.

MARY MONOHAN.

Such letters as these show that where any hereditary disease is present RIDGE'S FOOD should be adopted at once. The physician writes from Van Buren, Hancock Co., Ohio:

"I commenced treating a child of fourteen months on the day sample was received, who was badly afflicted with 'marasmus,' and whose mother had dregs of blood poison in her system. By the continued use of the food for three months the child improved well, and was at the end of six months robust and healthy. Am now using RIDGE'S FOOD in another case with equal advantage, and have prescribed for the last year frequently. The little pamphlet I regard as quite an adjunct to the treatment."

This pamphlet will be sent to any address by mentioning this journal.

Address

Woolrich & Co.,
Palmer, Mass.

The Christian Intelligencer.

Een-dracht maakt macht.

VOL. LVII.—No. 31. WHOLE No. 2923.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1886.

$2.65 A YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 48 CHURCH STREET.

EDITORS: Rev. JOHN M. FERRIS, D.D. Rev. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR: MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

MORMONISM seems to be one of the most vile and stubborn evils that this country has to deal with. It is a beast strong and defiant. It is a despotic hierarchy strongly entrenched within our borders, and as such, in direct antagonism with our Republican form of government and the spirit of our institutions. Notwithstanding all that has so far been done by the government to suppress polygamy and destroy this curse, Mormonism is constantly increasing in numbers and strength by recruits from foreign shores. Only two weeks ago four hundred converts from Europe arrived at Castle Garden. It is reported that one of the Scandinavian women had so large a family of her own children with her that she became confused, and was carrying away a small boy, when he protested: "Oi ain't none o' yez." It is admitted that the most alarming feature of the Mormon problem is this importation of recruits by hundreds at a time.

Is it possible that this government is powerless to protect us against this outrage, and the stain and disgrace of this foul sin? The Courts have achieved some success against polygamy, but it is evident that a far more vigorous interference is required than any yet instituted in order to abolish the whole thing, root and branch. We heartily endorse what The Interior says upon this subject:

It is high time for disestablishment in Utah. We have been advising England to take that mote out of her eye called Episcopacy, and have not discovered the beam of Mormonism in our own. Yet the Rocky Mountains have their State Church, with their pope, inquisition and all. To abolish polygamy and leave the hierarchy untouched would be futile. To abolish everything by statute and leave the ignorance and superstition of the youth unsheltered, would be but breeding cancers for the coming body politic. Protect the peasants that are shipped to Salt Lake from the impositions of the so-called theocracy, disestablish Mormonism, quench disloyalty, and give Christianity a clear field.

REV. SAM. JONES.—One of the benefits received from a sojourn in vacation time at such a place as Mohonk Lake is that a number of active Christians from various parts of the country are met with under associations promoting unusually free and unreserved intercourse. These Christian people are also efficient in various occupations, have been successful in their pursuits, are intelligent and sagacious. After such a winter as the last the talk turns naturally on the desirability of a great revival like that of 1858, the preparations for it and the methods to be adopted when a special religious interest is manifested. The company of Christians we have conferred with during a few weeks testify to a more than usual religious interest manifested at the beginning of last winter by a larger attendance on church services and an apparently more serious attention to the preaching. Generally some additional services were held in the churches with a promise of good results. As generally in the localities where unusual interest was manifested the churches united in the employment of evangelists who conducted services in one or more central locations. As generally the opinion has been reached that the course pursued was unwise. Let Cincinnati be taken as an example. There was a prospect of making a decided impression and of making important gains. The churches were active and earnest. A great deal of work was done in an admirable spirit and Christians generally seemed animated with a common resolution to overcome the irreligion of the city, or to make a decided impression upon it. The attendance on the church services was increasing and the indications of a revival became more numerous and more distinct. It was proposed to send for the Rev. Sam. Jones. His services were secured. A large public hall was hired, was crowded with hearers. Thousands often could not get in and stood on the streets around the hall, or were, in part, gathered in an overflow meeting. The special church meetings were interrupted. The young people, and those who had been attracted to the church meetings, were now attracted to the services in the hall. When the meetings in the public hall were over, the churches were unable to regain their hold upon non-communicants, unable to revive the interest exhibited previous to the great union services. Very few additions to the number of church-goers, very few conversions resulted from the exhortations of the Rev. Sam. Jones. The great union meetings, these judicious Christians we have met, think were a mistake. It would have been better if the separate churches had continued in the work they had begun. Christianity in Cincinnati would have been stronger to-day, so they think, if the Rev. Sam. Jones had not preached. They fear that his undeserved criticisms of Christians and of ministers have inflicted injury on the cause of Christ in that city.

Christians from other localities, who are pillars in the churches to which they belong, regret the employment of evangelists last winter by the churches of the towns in which they live. The conviction seems to have been formed that it is better that the churches do their own work by their own pastors and members, and that the religious interest of last winter was dissipated and not deepened or extended or instructed by the employment of evangelists.

DURING AUGUST the summer resorts will probably be filled with guests. By attention to a few points of conduct we can avoid trying the nerves of sensitive people, and the number of Americans is large whose nerves can be easily vexed. It is often an exasperating and distressing thing to those in rooms adjoining or under us if we tramp about the floor early in the morning, or right after dinner, or late in the evening, in a heavy pair of boots or shoes. In few summer hotels are the floors deadened. Not a few are sounding wooden drums. It is easy to carry slippers with us and is not a severe labor to put off noisy or creaking shoes and to wear slippers while in our rooms. It certainly saves many persons much annoyance.

It is no hardship to avoid loud talking at unseasonable hours in the halls which separate private apartments. A few years ago in a popular house there were thirty or forty people lodged along such a hall. The quiet which reigned was delightful. A gentleman came with his wife and daughter, and were assigned to rooms on that hall. Those two women made more noise than the forty other guests. They had strong voices, and talked at the top of their voices in the hall and in their rooms. It was a relief when they started for a walk or drive, and an inexpressible relief when they followed their trunks to return home. Such people deserve to have their names published and to be exhibited as specimens of gross and habitual discourtesy.

We can spare many persons a great deal of almost intolerable annoyance by not practising exercises on the piano in the public parlor, by not making exhibitions of fingering on the instrument, by not thrumming a little of this or a little of that by the hour. "My dear," said a mother to her daughter on arriving at a summer hotel, "I expect you to keep up your practising while here; to practice an hour every day." What shameful forgetfulness of the rights of others! What a disregard of the comfort of the other occupants of a public room and of those in rooms adjoining or overhead! One of the most trying and irritating of nuisances in summer hotels is the everlasting thrumming on the piano, the exhibitions of skill in fingering in which hardly a strain of melody occurs, and the idle, meaningless performance of snatches of this and that. Ordinarily, it is a very small minority, perhaps a dozen or less, out of two hundred or three hundred people, who destroy the enjoyment and the comfort of all around them by their incessant torture of the piano in the public parlor.

Now that the matter is in hand, it may be added that it is an annoyance to not a few persons to be compelled to eat at the same table with one or two women who invariably come to their meals with their hats on. There are occasions when it is a great convenience to a lady to be allowed to wear her hat at table, but there are women who come habitually to their meals with hats on. They do not do it at home, would regard it as unseemly and discourteous there. Is it at all less unseemly and discourteous at a summer resort?

"TEN PER CENT" AGAIN.—A correspondent writes—one who was for nearly fifteen years pastor of one of our Reformed churches—I was much impressed by the short article in your last issue entitled "Ten per cent." It states very clearly and forcibly my own views on the subject, which, I venture to think, is very much misunderstood. No one, of course, can object to the practice of those "Christians who make conscience of giving to the Lord's cause one-tenth of their income." It is their right and privilege so to do, if they are able. But it may not be their duty, or it may be their duty to give more because able to give more. And it is certainly neither their duty nor their right to insist upon this as the rule for all Christians.

If the example of the Jew is cited, the example fails. For it has been often shown that, "in tithes and offerings," the devout and faithful Jew gave much more than a tenth, perhaps a fifth, to the Lord's service.

But the example and the law of the Jew can in no sense bind the Christian conscience. To insist upon it is to impart into Christian life and practice a species of "legalism" which has no warrant in the New Testament, as you justly say, and no congruity with "the perfect law of liberty," of love and holy stewardship, under which every believer comes.

There are no doubt "cases when the gift of a tithe would be very oppressive." But the chief danger, practically, lies not here. In the great majority of cases, probably, the standard it fixes is too low. The New Testament rule, the only rule applicable by the Christian, "as he may prosper"—or "as the Lord hath prospered him," in the King James' version,—would produce results that would surprise the givers themselves and the Church, if it were lovingly, gratefully, conscientiously applied.

It was once my privilege to be associated as a pastor with an elder of large means and even larger heart. He had, to my personal knowledge, given more than $50,000 within three or four years for church building and various kinds of Christian work, in the immediate neighborhood of his home. On one occasion I wrote him a note, laying before him an object of interest which I thought worthy of his attention and benevolence. His reply was to the effect that, while thanking me for bringing it to his notice, he was sorry not to be able to respond. He had already pledged for various benevolent objects twenty per cent of his income, and was under promise to others to an extent he did not then know exactly.

It is such a spirit, and not a rule of "ten per cent," that is needed. The message of the Lord and of His Church on this subject has yet to be uttered or heeded as distinctly and as heartily as it ought to be. By too many of us not only the one talent, but the five and ten, the "lord's money" are hid. They may be hid under a rule of "ten per cent."

N.

STRANGE.—In the July number of Harper's Monthly Dr. Titus M. Coan speaks of the overthrow of the Roman civilization as "the greatest misfortune that has ever happened to men, and a misfortune still uncompensated by what later centuries have given us." This is an extremely odd notion. What misfortune is it to have lost the gladiatorial brutalities of this boasted civilization, its hideous slavery, its subjection of women, its glaring immorality, its disregard of the claims of children, its neglect of the blind, the deaf and dumb, the insane, the orphan and the widow, its worn-out religions, and its steadfast denial of all political rights? There is no country in Christian Europe in which there is not more peace, more progress, more provision for human comfort, a higher tone of morals and a greater regard for individual and social rights than there was in the same region during the palmiest days of Roman civilization.

TO REACH the great multitude of men who do not frequent the house of God, who are without God and without hope in the world, ought to be the aim and endeavor of every Christian church. In such an endeavor ordinarily the pastor must lead, and ought to have the hearty, earnest and constant co operation of the membership. To attain such an aim it is necessary to strive for it. The way to do anything is to go at it with open and observing eyes, with a readiness to learn from experience, with a determination to succeed, with an expectation of some fruitless efforts and a resolution not to be discouraged by them. In the Christian work of leading souls to God through Christ endeavor must also be prayerful; and effort attended with prayer to God cannot fail. As we have said, ordinarily the pastor must lead. In our judgment he is the Divinely appointed leader. God has called him to the ministry that he may lead in just such work as this. It is his part to summon the people of God to efforts to gather the outlying population into the church and to go before them in the assaults of Christian love upon the domain of irreligion. He is primarily responsible before God if the church under his care neglects the hundreds and thousands around it who are living worldly, ungodly and sinful lives. And when the pastor leads, the people ought to follow and do with their might what their hands find to do. They have the Word of God in trust. An enjoyment of the grace of God is given to them that they may tell others of the riches of that grace. God has visited them in the communities in which they live, in which they have been born and reared, or into which they have been providentially led, that they may tell others of the new life given them, of the light, the support, the comfort, the hope, the joy they receive. They are to be the light and salt of those communities. The masses have been reached, have been attracted and led to the services of the church and have been won to Christ again and again in the past; they can be won again, can be won to-day. The Church of to-day has no impossible task before it, but just such a work as has been often accomplished. The church of the future will be the church which wins the masses of to day, and the church which will win the masses will be the church which endeavors to win them by the use of the time honored means which God has ordained for the salvation of men.

"Old Colony" Papers.

SUMMER TALK.

WHAT I might WRITE .... ESTEEMED CONTEMPORARIES .... A WORD TO THE YOUNG DOMINES ... A "RELIGIOUS" SENSATION .... STILL ANOTHER CENTENARY .... SHOULD BRIDES "OBEY"?

SOME one has written a clever sonnet on "A Drop of Ink," finding in it, by the aid of a powerful imagination, as remarkable possibilities as the "hell of witchcraft" which Shakespeare discerned in "the small orb of one particular tear." He queries what that drop left in his pen might, like an atom of literary protoplasm, evolve itself into under "Milton's mighty hand" or "at Shakespeare's high command," at "Goethe's touch," or as "a grand amen" from "Beethoven's soul." It might unveil "truth beyond our present ken," or some blessed promise, or some new law revolutionizing science; or it might write a "venomous lie," or some "grim sentence dread as death." Now, that strikes me as a rather large contract for one drop of ink to take. What would the bold imaginer have conceived of the latent possibilities of a newly filled fountain pen, such as that which is just now suspended over this unsoiled page?

But why should I toy with such a fancy? I have no great truth, any more than a "venomous lie" imprisoned in this black tube. What makes me pause, at the moment of unplugging my "fountain" of ink, is the conscientious question whether the reluctant jet and spray have refreshment or sparkle for any mortal.

The fact is that, so far from bearing any analogy to Milton's mighty hand or Goethe's touch, I feel myself only a little humdrum woodpecker, tapping about the trunk of the dry and rather scaly news tree to find a tid bit here and there, and making as big a noise as possible to conceal the emptiness of result. Thank heaven, though, that I am not as other journalistic woodpeckers are, who spread out for our morning repast all the most horned and hideous and slimy creeping things they can gather by tapping the rotten places of society's trunk and branches. Reader, please imagine a special rat-tat-tat of drumbeats, as I reel off the above bit of introductory "pharaseeism."

This has been, thus far, a phenomenally good season for the newspapers. Usually the summer brings with it a "solstice" indeed of news, and the poor editor is at his wit's end for matter that can decently be put into the form of head lines.

But thanks to the elocutionary and circumlocutionary powers of the present Congress, and its kind consideration in diversifying its fights over private pension bills and log rolling "grabs" and the merits of oleomargarine and the painful position of Senator Paine by personal shindies, (resulting, of course, from the bad ventilation of the House—especially in the neighborhood of the "tea" room!); thanks also to Mr. Gladstone, and Billy Maloney, and the Chicago Anarchists, and the various boycotters who are being taught that this is a free country where every man has an equal right to be put in jail for breaking the laws; thanks to the opportune Extradition treaty, which promises to remove one branch of the Protective system between the United States and Canada and to inaugurate free trade in "boodle" aldermen, bank cashiers, dynamiters and other mutual commodities; thanks to Squire, the poet statesman of New York, and to the fishery disputes, which ever and anon rumble dreamily across the Northwestern horizon to result in reassuring this country and England of each other's good will and good sense,—thanks to a great many highly accommodating happenings and sensations, the papers have really been able to spice their dreary monotony of neighborhood scandals and chapters of accidents and horse racings, and other insignificances and disagreeablenesses, with some real items of news calculated to interest an intelligent and self respecting reader.

By this time, nearly all the ingenuous youths who graduated from our theological seminaries this year have been both called and chosen, and perhaps have entered upon their "fields of labor" (what a dreadfully hackneyed and almost cant expression that has become, by the way). Perhaps a word to these well-beloved clericuli may not be unseasonable, especially as I have no design of adding another to the set "charges," to which they have been and are being subjected. I only want to say, as the result of quite a grandfatherly experience, that these fields of God cannot be cultivated or reaped by machine. There are, of course, improved methods, and there is great power in the organizing of work, but there are no McCormicks or Husseys in the spiritual husbandry. The fruit must be hand picked, and the reaper must go with his sickle, and put his arm around each bundle ere he gathers and binds it for his Lord.

Which is an allegory, illustrating two things. First, that in your efforts to save and sanctify men you must individualize, both in and out of the pulpit. You must make a study of each one, as the diplomatist or the advocate or the physician or the keen merchant does. You must know your flock.

And, secondly, you must go in and out among them lovingly, disinterestedly, sympathizingly, as nearly as possible as Jesus went among men. The power of kindness is irresistible,—write that down as a golden sentence (it is not mine) on the top of every page of your "Pastor's Note Book." Never drag your official garments in the mire, nor give a less real impression of your supreme purpose when out of the pulpit than when in it, but let there be no ex officio aspect or spirit in any of your personal dealings with your people. Let the minister never hide the man. Your flock must know you if you are to be a good shepherd.

By the way, I have discovered a new, and not by any means insignificant, Centennial. In my reading yesterday I accidentally came across the following: "The forerunner of the present form of (mowing and reaping) machines....was one constructed by Pitt in 1786, in which a cylinder armed with combs plucked off the ears and discharged them into a box"

It was not, however, till about forty years ago that the invention was brought to a condition of great efficiency, and still less since it came into general use. "Old Colony" is not much of an antique, but he can recall the days when he spent his school vacations on a farm, taking his optional share in the hay and harvest fields, without ever seeing one of these war-chariots careering over the fields of peace. And the little experience and much observation of those summers gives him a vivid and grateful appreciation of the amount of the curse which has been lifted from the backs and shoulders of toil, of which a younger generation has little conception.

The whole progress of agricultural improvements has been extraordinarily slow. It was not till the last century that even drilling was practised, or the horse-hoe invented. The threshing machine was invented at the same time, but the flail was almost universally used till the present century. Wooden ploughs were general till after 1800. To the last fifty or sixty years is to be credited, also, the horse-rake, the sub-soil plough, the sowers, cultivators, straw and root cutters, and the great arsenal of improved implements which so contribute to the "joy of harvest" but are now taken as a matter of course. I feel like lifting up a harvest hymn every time I hear the rattle of the mower, or watch the great flaps of the Reaper gaily traversing the golden fields.

It is often said that "Baptism is not a saving ordinance." And yet the ordinance itself needs saving,—from the abuses which sometimes accompany its administration. What, for instance, shall we think of a clergyman and a convert appearing suddenly in the midst of a hundred frolicking bathers on an ocean beach, and inserting a baptism into the astonished scene, after which the clergyman continues his private bath? Does not this come under the too prevalent practice of mistaking the secularizing of sacred things for the sanctifying of secular things? Some applauded this performance—on the mistaken principle, we suppose, of what is known as "professing religion" in contradistinction to confessing Christ, and confessing sin. Professing religion is bad enough, but to make a "circus" of it is surely an abomination to the Lord.

The genial and ingenious "Easy Chair" of Harper's Magazine for August takes up the question, apropos of the President's marriage ceremony, of the omission of a promise to "obey," as well as to love and honor, on the part of the bride. The editor, as might be expected of so doughty a champion of Woman's Rights (as distinct from Duties), evidently does not favor the pledge nor the thing pledged. Also, as might be expected from his religious "liberalism," he entirely ignores the whole Scriptural teaching on the subject. The Bible utters no uncertain sound. It distinctly recognizes the husband as "the head of the wife," tracing it back to the original constitution of the sexes and of the marriage relation. And it as distinctly charges the wife to obey her husband, exactly as it charges the child to obey the parent,—but never charges the husband to obey the wife. And a reference to the eternal fitness of things and the analogies of nature, and the interests of society and of the family, leads inevitably to the same conclusion.

It is, of course, not necessary that the wife should expressly stipulate in the wedding ceremony that she will obey, any more than it is necessary for her to pledge herself to "love and honor." But it is hard to see how we can have a Scriptural marriage, a union in the full sense of the divine plan, where the bride does not say all these things in her heart and stands a purposed rebel at the side of her lord. There is no such thing as a "matrimonial republic," as the Easy Chair calls it. And yet even a republic implies constituted authority, and official headship. And the fact that aside from this official relation there is perfect personal equality, or that might is often arbitrarily exercised against right and reason, does not alter the essential obligation.

F. N. ZABRISKIE.

True to His Waiting Wife.

BY GEORGE W. BUNGAY.

I LOVE the lyric of the English lark;
He builds a circling stair of sweetest song
Betwixt the green earth and the golden sky,
On which he climbs up to the gates of heaven.
At dawn the laureate of the air ascends
From his bow round nest in the dewy mead,
With cheerful hymns to greet the maiden morn
When she comes radiant from the door of night,
Which stands ajar upon the sill of day,
Crowned with the sun in newest light arrayed.
Around and up, up and around he soared,
Until he faded from the eager eye;
E'en then his rich strains filled the list'ning space,
The music showering down like drops from clouds.
Then like a falling meteor he fell
Fraught with the morning music of the spheres,
True to his native nest and waiting wife.

The Elements of a True Education.

AT the recent Commencement of Williams College the Rev. Mark Hopkins, D.D., LL.D., delivered an address commemorating the 50th anniversary of his Presidency of the college. He is now in his 84th year, and is still vigorous in body and mind. From a full report in the Evangelist we make a selection. After a review of the history of the college, President Hopkins considered the elements of a true education. First he said the aim should be to promote soundness of body, physical health and power, and then proceeded as follows:

A second thing aimed at and attained would be a disciplined mind. By this I mean a power of concentrating attention for a long time on one subject. I do not mean the power to hold the attention thus on some one subject to which the person may have a bent, and to which the tendency may become so strong as to mount the man on a hobby, or to become an insanity, but I mean the power of so commanding the mind as to be able to give concentrated attention to any subject when it is required. Only thus can there be profound thought, only thus can all the relations of the subject, within and without, be seen. Dr. Emmons, of Franklin, said he wanted a student who could look fifteen minutes at the point of a cambric needle without winking. This power is obtained with difficulty. It is in the exercise of it that mental labor consists, "than which,' says Dr. Barrow, "there is nothing more laborious, more straining nature, and more trying our spirits." It cannot be attained by light reading. That rather weakens it. Nor do I believe that it would be attained by the average student by a wide range of option. True, we attend most readily to subjects that we like, but what we need is mental robustness that gives the power of hard study, that will enable us to attend to subjects that we do not like at first, that we never should choose, to master them, and so to come to enjoy them. When gold lies hidden in quartz, no matter how hard the quartz, we must be able to break it up.

A third thing that would be aimed at and attained, would be a liberal education. I hold strongly to the distinction commonly made between a liberal education and one that is special, or professional. Blend they may, and must more or less; but in a broad view their objects are different. Of the one the object is breadth, comprehensiveness, symmetry; of the other concentration. Of the one it has been well said the object is to know something of everything; of the other, to know everything of something. Of the one, the object is to make of the young man more of a man; of the other, to make of him more of a minister, a lawyer, a doctor, an engineer. The one is born of a conception of man as having an intellect that is related to all knowledge; as capable of pursuing it for its own sake; of thinking, as Kepler said, "the thoughts of God, of finding in the comprehension of His works and words, and also of abstract relations (as those of mathematics), a high and pure joy, and of entering upon a line of progress that cannot be limited by time or space." The other is born of a conception of man chiefly as he is related to animal want, and to social and political distinction. The affinities of the one are with the fine arts, of the other with the useful arts. And what is thus true of the intellect, is also true of the sensibility as related to all beauty. Beauty the young man should be taught to trace to its source, to appreciate in all its forms, whether of nature or of art, and to pursue for its own sake. Nor is it for the sake of the individual alone that liberal education is needed. Nothing adds so much to the respectability and security and rational enjoyment of a people, as a large infusion of this element. Such an education cannot be had by the larger number. The conditions of the present life preclude the possibility of that. But where it is possible, the way should be open for the pursuit of an ideal perfection unrelated to animal wants.

But knowing the object of a liberal education, we need also to know the studies best fitted to ensure or constitute it. At this point there was formerly no doubt. Those studies were chiefly the classics, mathematics and logic. But now a liberal education, involving as it does the power to survey in outline the whole field of knowledge, and to follow in some measure every line of thought, must be quite a different thing from what it was formerly. Science has so marvellously advanced, there are so many new branches of knowledge, that opinions may well differ respecting the studies which should occupy the undergraduate course, which would best discipline and furnish the mind, and which should be regarded as constituting a liberal education.

To decide this point, including the order of the studies as they are related to each other and to the opening powers of the student, requires wide information and sound judgment; and that the college should decide it, seems to me due to itself and the young men who come to it. If not the college, who then? Is it said, The young men themselves are competent to do it? Whence this competency? Not from heredity, for their fathers did not have it, and certainly not from experience or study. Some option there should be, especially in the latter part of the course, and in outlying branches of study, as modern languages, and the higher mathematics, and music and drawing. These I would have provided for and made optional, but would admit of no such range of option as to make graduation possible with the omission of the most essential parts of a liberal education, as is done when a man can graduate without studying mental or moral science. Nor would I by the range of option so vacate the college degree of any definite meaning as to preclude the possibility of having, as we have now, a body of liberally educated men throughout the country, standing on essentially the same ground.

Of the particular studies that should be regarded as constituting a liberal education and of their order, I cannot now speak. My views on this point are essentially contained in an admirable article by Dr. Andrew P. Peabody in the January number of the New Englander.

A fourth thing that would be aimed at and generally attained under the conditions specified, would be a right character. By a right character I mean one that would make a man a vital coöperative force in all that would tend to build up society, and to aid in the onward movement of the moral government of God. Character transcends knowledge. Knowledge is instrumental, character is directive. Knowledge teaches us how to do, character determines what we will do. It is a man's deepest love, and will determine his ultimate destiny. Hence the highest form of benevolence is in seeking to improve character. This is the object of missions. This was the object of Christ. His coming was a testimony to the value of character. He who appreciates this value clearly, and devotes himself with energy and self-denial to its improvement in himself and others, is the highest style of man; and the institution that does most for character, will do most for the individual and for the country. Mere teaching without formative influence on character, is simply a trade. But can education insure right character? No. Character is not from the intellect, but from the will, or rather the person that lies back of the will. To the old question whether virtue can be taught, we say no. Some knowledge may be forced upon us, a right character cannot be: still, there are indirect formative influences, and the education that ignores character, is radically defective; the most important question a man can ask who has a son to educate, would respect the surroundings and influences that bear upon character.

What, then, are the surroundings and influences that bear upon character, and what should they be? Into these, those things that constitute the equipment for intellectual education, buildings, apparatus, libraries, cabinets, enter but slightly, if at all. The first thing to be mentioned is negative. There should be, as far as possible, the absence of temptation. Temptation must come, and some are disposed rather to welcome it as tending to form a strong character, but a wise parent will heed the spirit of the petition, "Lead us not into temptation." That character in its strict sense is largely affected by the surroundings of natural scenery, I am not prepared to assert. Character is moral, nature is not. It is characteristics rather than character that are thus affected. Most young men are absorbed in other things. Seeing they see not. Still there is a refining and elevating influence in fine scenery that will reach some in every class. Between this and moral influence there is an affinity, and I should have little fear for the character of a young man who has a genuine love of nature.

But whatever may, or may not be the effect of nature, the law prevails here as elsewhere, that like produces like. "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise." If right character is to be produced in connection with an institution, it must be through the influence of those who have a right character. This influence will be either unconscious, or from direct and purposed agency. Of these the silent influence of high character, moving steadily as the Sun in the path of duty, is invaluable. This is so far understood and conceded that it need not be dwelt upon. The main inquiry respects what can be done by direct or purposed agencies. Where classes are not too large, much may be done in this way by personal intercourse. In this there should be nothing magisterial, of which there was formerly too much. It should be natural and free. Everything opposed to this is to be deprecated. But the chief influence that can be brought to bear upon character, is through Christianity. This Christianity is God's method of renovating and improving character. The character it would form, is the only perfect character for man; and the influences connected with it, as the Word and Spirit of God, are the only influences that will lead him to form such a character. That Christianity will form such a character, must form it if fully received, is its glory, and an absolute proof of its truth. If, therefore, the College is to be responsible for character at all, and is not bewildered, it must avail itself of this as a means of forming it. But here, too, the rule holds that character is from character. No formal arrangement without Christian men, no having, or saying of prayers, will avail anything without men who pray. Christianity is not a mere set of dogmas. It is Christ revealed in His perfect character. He is the head of the race. He is not only the light of the world as a perfect teacher in all that relates to character and ultimate destiny, but also a perfect example. He is the Man. In His religion is the hope of the world. The greatest boon that can come to anyone, is to be brought into personal relation to Him, and sympathize with Him by voluntary commitment, and by having a character like His. Herein is the difference between the place of Christianity in a Theological Seminary and a College. In a College it should be so handled as to bear upon character without sectarianism. This can and ought to be done. Christianity is the greatest civilizing, moulding, uplifting power on this globe, and it is a sad defect in any institution of high learning if it does not bring those under its care into the closest possible relation to it, so far as it is such a power. Through it the students are to be trained in moral and spiritual gymnastics. Why not? We here reach the broadest and most philosophical conception of education. It includes the whole man. If man is to be educated physically and intellectually because he has a physical and intellectual nature, why should he not be educated and trained morally and spiritually because he has a moral and spiritual nature?

Our Church.

We are thankful for items of Church News compactly stated; or for marked copies or clippings from local exchanges, which we would not otherwise see. To insure publication in next number, they must reach us by noon on Monday. A condensation of items is unavoidable

An Unfounded Imputation.

IN the Baptist Missionary Magazine for May, (1886,) the Rev. E. H. Jones, of Sendai, Japan, says: "The Japanese are great students of the Bible, and I may add, that, as the Bible published by the pedo-Baptists here is not honestly translated, or rather is dishonestly translated, it is highly important for the cause of truth that we give this people an honest translation."

The version of the New Testament to which Mr. Jones refers is that published by the American Bible Society. The responsible translators were the venerable Dr. J. C. Hepburn, the late Dr. S. R. Brown, and Rev. David C. Greene, representing the Presbyterian, the Reformed and the American Boards. It has already had an immense circulation, and is used by missionaries of all denominations, British as well as American.

The attention of Dr. Hepburn having been called to this utterly unfounded imputation, he wrote as follows:

YOKOHAMA, June 22d, 1886.

DEAR MR. LOOMIS: I have received your note enclosing an extract from the Baptist Magazine, in which the Rev. E H. Jones, of Sendai, charges the translation of the New Testament made by the Yokohama Committee as being "dishonestly translated," and that "it is highly important for the cause of truth that we give this people an honest translation."

No one should be surprised at a charge of this kind coming from one of the Baptist denomination. It is their stereotyped utterance; and has been made as well against every version of the Scriptures in which the word baptizo has not been translated "to immerse." The charge of "dishonesty," I suppose, has reference only to this one item. The Rev. Nathan Brown, D.D., was a member of the Committee when the rendering of baptizo came up. He would like, no doubt, to have had the word translated shinrei, or shizumeru, "immerse;" but the other four members of the Committee could not agree with him. And in order to have the judgment of all the missionaries in Japan on the subject of rendering this word, it was referred to their decision, whether the word should be transferred untranslated, or rendered by the Chinese word Senrei, which had been adopted by all the Protestant missionaries in China who were not Baptists. It was decided by a vote of some 32 against 16 that the word should be transferred untranslated. This is the way the word Baputesma came to be used in our translation.

Dr. Brown expressed himself at that time as being satisfied with the decision, and said "that it should be so used in the public reading of the Scriptures in the Baptist churches." But the Doctor did not long continue in this opinion; for he soon after resigned his place on the Committee and went about to translate the New Testament in his own way. As to the merits of our translation, which the Rev. E H. Jones (who, I understand, has been in Japan a year), feels himself competent to criticize, I leave the native Christians belonging to his communion to decide; for I am informed on the best authority that our version is the one preferred and most generally used by them. And one of the oldest and most earnest of the Baptist missionaries (who labored most in Sendai) told me that he never distributed Dr Brown's version amongst his people while he had any other version to give them.

Do not be troubled nor let any of our friends be troubled at the sayings or the doings of this denomination of Christians, whose existence depends upon the rendering of the Greek word Baptizo; who condemn our translation, who re-baptize our converts, who re-ordain our evangelists, and who hold themselves aloof from our communion. I am, dear sir,

Very sincerely yours, J. C. HEPBURN.

....THE HUDSON RIVER MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION met on Monday, July 26th, at Kinderhook. The weather and vacations affected somewhat the attendance, but the meeting was pleasant and profitable. The exegesis was by Dr. J. B. Drury, on "Anti-Christ," and reviewing the various opinions and examining them in the light of the several passages of Scripture usually referred to anti-Christ, the exegete decided there was no warrant for regarding him as a single individual, or for indentifying him with the Papal Church. The view advocated was that anti-Christ is the personification of the Satanically-inspired opposition of the world to Christ and His kingdom. Rev. John G. Gebhard preached an admirable sermon on "Christ, the Word of God—the full expression of the Father," from Rev. 19: 13 and John 1: 18. The essay, by Rev. George Lefevre, on "Ministerial Plagiarism," was thoughtful and suggestive. He carefully distinguished between what is, and what is not this offence. He showed that much that is called plagiarism is not properly such, and that it is only committed when there is the appropriation of the thoughts, expressions, and productions of another, with the intent to deceive.

As ever, Kinderhook maintained its just fame for graceful hospitality. B.

....THE CLASSIS OF NEWARK met in special session July 23d in the Clinton Avenue Church of Newark, and dissolved the pastoral relation at Franklin, N. J. The Rev. D. W. Skellenger has accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church of Dunellan, N. J., and was dismissed to the Presbytery of Elizabeth. The following minute expresses the sentiments of the Classis:

"In parting from our brother, the Rev. D. W. Skellenger, the Classis of Newark bears cheerful testimony to the earnestness and fidelity of his ministry in the church at Franklin, and also express their sense of his worth as an associate in the work of the Lord, as well as their regret for the early termination of his pastorate and his removal from the bounds of the Reformed Church. They also wish for him the more abundant blessings of the Head of the Church in his new field of labor, and that his personal and official relations with brethren of another fold may be as happy as those which we now reluctantly sever."

The Church of Franklin naturally feels sad and discouraged in being thus so soon deprived of a beloved pastor; but action was taken by the Classis which guarantees them sympathy and counsel in the emergency.

The coincidence was noted that exactly twenty-five years ago to the very hour, the Classis ordained and installed, at a special meeting, the present pastor of the Irvington Reformed Church. The following minutes were adopted:

Whereas, The Classis of Newark, in special session in the Clinton Avenue Church, on the 23d day of July, 1886, is reminded of the fact that on this day and at this hour, twenty-five years ago, the pastoral connection between the Rev. H. Vehslage and the Church of Irvington was established,

Be it Resolved, That this Classis offer its hearty congratulations to the beloved brother, the pastor of that church, upon his long, happy and prosperous pastorate; and, further, the Classis expresses its gratification that the Trustees of Rutgers College have marked this period of our brother's ministry by conferring upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

Be it Resolved, also, That the Classis send its greetings and good wishes to the Church of Irvington upon this occasion, praying that the Great Head of the Church may continue to bless both people and pastor most richly with all spiritual blessings.

S. C.

....SOUTH BUSHWICK, L. I.—On July 11th Rev. Geo. D. Hulst preached his 17th anniversary sermon. During the year 52 united with the church, 19 by confession, 33 by certificate, making 435 in the 17 years. The church has now a membership of over 350, not counting those on the absentee list. During the 17 years the pastor has been out of the pulpit only three times from sickness. The Sabbath-school has a total of over 850 scholars, of which about 75 men and women, young and old, are in the pastor's Bible class.

....KERHONKSON, N. Y.—The Rev. W. B. Darrach, pastor of the church at this place, acknowledges the receipt of papers and books for distribution among the boatmen from Rev. Dr. Zabriskie, Princeton, N J., Rev. Dr. Woodbridge and family, Miss M. Suddely, A. S. Tanner, Irvington, N. J., Ladies in Newburg, N. Y., Society of Christian Endeavor of the Reformed Church, Fort Plain, N. Y., Rev. Dr. James Demarest, Jr., (a box of books and papers weighing 300 pounds,) Mrs. Henry Hart, Walden, N. Y., Friends at North Branch, N. J., and Mrs. Lewis Fluchiger, Kerhonkson, N. Y.

Mr. Darrach says: The supply enables us to give something to every boat, and besides to give the Sabbath-school matter sent to our needy schools in the back districts. The supply of all kinds is sufficient at present. They are supplying a need that there is every reason to believe will bear good fruit. The matter is being more and more appreciated. Will the friends in the future kindly bear in mind the request that packages be prepaid, as there is no fund to draw from, and what expense is incurred must be met by the pastor, whose resources are not great, and may be seriously taxed if this matter is not heeded by the kind donors to this work.

....PEEKSKILL, N. Y.—There were added to this church at the last communion two on confession. A site has been purchased for a parsonage.

. . .ON A RECENT SUNDAY in a very rigid Reformed P. D. church not a hundred miles from New York, an amusing incident took place The church is rather widely known for its very fine choir, as well as its excellent congregational singing, and the pastor is in fair standing for ability. The service opened with Baumbach's arrangement of "Hear us, O Father;" the pastor began the invocation, when a stranger hurriedly arose and left the church. Meeting an usher in the vestibule, he asked: "Is this a Reformed Dutch church?" "Yes, sir." "I know better. You can't deceive me. I am a member of the Collegiate Church, and know a Dutch church when I get in it. They never allow such fancy singing in Dutch churches, and the minister has no gown on. I won't stay here." "Hadn't you better go in and see how the whole service goes?" "No, sir." And out he went to the Episcopal church near by, where they have a boy choir and the whole service is intoned.

The pastor, on being told, began to wonder, 1st, In how great a majority are the gowned Dutch ministers? and 2d, What does that very fine quartette, in the perhaps most prominent Collegiate church, sing, when not leading the congregation in the singing of the hymns?

N. B.—The usher spoken of above thought the stranger had a decidedly Scotch brogue.

Rev. John Ford Morris.

ANOTHER devoted follower of Christ has passed from the sufferings of earth to the rest and blessedness of heaven.

The Rev. John Ford Morris, an eminent servant of the Lord, and one most true to the interests of our Zion in the West, fell asleep in Jesus on Sabbath morning, July 11th, in the city of Bushnell, Ill. He was a man greatly beloved by all who knew his worth. We shall miss his genial countenance, his kindly words of cheer, his vigorous thoughtful mind, always busy in developing plans for the growth and prosperity of the Reformed Church in the West. We remember his example, his counsel, his prayers, his regular appearance in the house of God until the silver cord was loosed and the golden bowl broken at the cistern. Noble man! Thy record when forgotten on earth will be remembered on high. Would there were more such men of pious zeal and example to cheer the hearts of God's servants in our western field of labor! He was a man of retired habits and disposition. A life of seclusion was more congenial to his taste than of observation; yet that life sent forth living streams of usefulness.

Brother Morris was born in Somerville, N. J., in the year 1801. He studied theology at our Seminary at New Brunswick, N. J., had a charge at Nassau, N. Y., and labored in other towns of New York and New Jersey. He continued to preach until he was attacked with a disease of the throat, which so impaired his voice that he could no longer be distinctly heard as a public speaker.

He removed with his family to the West in the year 1857, where he purchased a farm in the neighborhood of Raritan, Ill. Here he afforded great help in the organization of the Raritan Church by occasionally preaching in schoolhouses and private dwellings until such time as a large and beautiful church edifice was erected. He was just the man that was needed at that time and in that community. He did his work well, and the Lord crowned it with success.

After remaining at Raritan about two years he removed to Bushnell, Ill., where he lived until the close of life. Here he greatly assisted Domine Livingston, who had begun a good work in that town and who was so successful in the erection of a church edifice. To what extent the labors of Dr. Livingston were assisted by the wise counsel and efficient help of Brother Morris, and how much the succeeding pastors of that church were benefitted by his kindly words of cheer, is known only to a few of the older members of Classis. In the darkest hours of that church, when gloom surrounded her portals and the heart of the vine-dresser was sad, and the strongest pillars of the church trembled through fear, there was a voice of cheer from the bed of paralyzed strength, saying: "Be of good courage, trust in the Lord and go forward!" That voice though weak in the flesh was strong in the spirit. Although his right hand had forgot its cunning by disease, yet his tongue did not cleave to the roof of his mouth. In its weakness God gave it strength to encourage the church in the perils that threatened it. Few men deserve more praise for their interest in our western field of labor than our Brother Morris.

After the service of a long life, many of the years of which were marked by weakness and pain, it is our consolation to know that he has entered into the joy of his Lord. The patience he manifested in his sufferings, the childlike faith he reposed in his precious Redeemer, the oft-repeated testimony that the joy of his soul was in those blessed words of Christ, "Where I am ye may be also," give a sweet assurance that he has now received the crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, gives to all who love His appearing and His kingdom.

After the funeral discourse by Rev. Mr. Sharpley, a former pastor of the church, and prayer by Rev. S. A Bumstead, of Norris, Ill., the remains were conveyed to the cemetery near Bushnell. His stricken widow who for so many years had been the faithful companion of his life, and several children and grandchildren, with a large number of friends from the church and the community, with sorrowing hearts committed the body of this beloved servant of God to the house appointed for all living. B.

....Our Foreign Missions.—The receipts for July were $3,812.79. In July, 1885, they were $3,979 10. Of this sum, however, $1,790.89 came in the form of a legacy, leaving, as the contributions of churches, etc., $3,188.21. The increase this year, therefore, is $1,624.58 or almost exactly 75 per cent. For the first quarter of the fiscal year, now complete, the Board has received, from usual sources, $10,107.58, as against $6,440 94 from the same sources last year. Including legacy last year and donations for the Sturges Seminary, Nagasaki, $4,976.30 this year, the account stands thus: 1885, first quarter $8,231.83; 1886, same quarter $15,083.88; an increase of $6,852.05.

It is cheering to note and pleasant to acknowledge and record such a fact. At the same time it is neither needless nor should it be thought ungracious, to remind the brethren that the receipts are still very far from meeting current expenditures. If they could be brought near together the relief would be unspeakable and the encouragement proportionately great. Cor. Sec.

....Silver Wedding in Japan.—Rev. and Mrs. James H. Ballagh observed the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding on May 15th. Mr. Ballagh started on the cars for Wado Mura, twenty-five miles north of Tokio, to participate in a church dedication, and his friends postponed their congratulations to the day of his return. Twenty-five years ago he started on that day through the lines of Union and Confederate troops on his way to Japan, the Civil War having begun. Now, after his return to Yokohama, on the evening of Friday, May 21st, the members of our Mission at Tokio and Yokohama and many Yokohama friends celebrated the silver wedding, presenting hearty congratulations and good wishes and confirmed their good words by substantial and handsome gifts.

....The Classis of Grand River has appointed the evening of Thursday, August 12th, for the ordination to missionary service of Mr. Albert Oltmans, licentiate, and member of the last graduating class of the Theological Seminary at New Brunswick. Mr. Oltmans expects to leave immediately for Nagasaki, where his prospective field of labor will be in connection with the "Steele Memorial" School for boys. He sails from San Francisco on the 31st.

....Middleburgh, N. Y.—Some time prior to the year 1732 the "Reformed Low Dutch Church" of Middleburgh, N. Y. was organized. The first building was destroyed by fire October 17th, 1780, by Sir John Johnston, commanding a party of Tories and Indians. In the year 1786 the present building was erected, so that it is now one hundred years old. The consistory have decided to celebrate the event, and have made the following arrangements: On Sabbath morning, August 15th, the pastor, Rev. D. K. Van Doren, will preach a centennial sermon; and on Thursday, August 19th, George L. Danforth, Esq., will deliver the historical address. This will be followed by addresses by ex-pastors, representatives from neighboring Classes, and others. A cordial invitation is extended to the friends of the church to be present on this occasion. V.

....Freehold, N. J.—At a meeting of the congregation of the Second Church, held on Saturday, July 24th, the salary of the pastor, Rev. Isaac P. Brokaw, was increased from $1,200 to $1,500; the project of a new parsonage is also under consideration.

....Western Items.—The Rev. H. E. Dosker has accepted the position of Lecturer on Sacred and Ecclesiastical History in the Western Theological Seminary at Holland, Mich ..Rev. A. Vennema, of Kalamazoo, Mich., has declined the call to the First Church of New Brunswick, N. J.

...Nyack, N. Y.—At a meeting of the congregation held on last Wednesday evening to vote on calling a pastor, the Rev. Isaac P. Brokaw, of Freehold, N. J., was the choice of a large majority, and it is likely that a formal call will soon be tendered him by the consistory.

....The receipts of the American Home Missionary Society for the year amounted to $254,544, an increase of $73,000 over 1884–85. Two years ago the Society received the large Swett missionary legacy, from which it has realized $460,583. In sixty years the Society has received $11,103,712.

At Mt. Hermon.

THE following interesting account of the meetings for Bible Study under Mr. Moody at Mt. Hermon is taken from the Springfield Republican under date of July 27th:

The missionary fire among the students burns higher than ever and will blaze the more because of the oil that Dr. William Ashmore, of the Chinese field, poured on it this morning. His address was clear, able and comprehensive and convincing, too, if the special missionary meeting of 15 minutes held afterward, which well-nigh 150 young men attended, is any criterion. He viewed the mission work as a work of conquest in which the nations of heathendom were to be brought under the dominion of Christ the King. Here nearly all have lost the spirit and, he said, I have found men who seem to doubt whether the Gospel was created for anybody else but Americans. Then he told of the field, the 300,000,000 people and the 700 missionaries in India; the 400,000,000 people and 600 missionaries in China; the 37,000,000 people and the 200 missionaries in Japan; the 40,000,000 in Africa; and he pleaded earnestly for the work, and the call on young men to take it up. The Bible was the one instrument. It must be learned, must be believed in. As he closed Mr. Moody called up Mr. Sankey to sing the song "Tell it to all the nations that the Lord is King," and then he prayed earnestly that the missionary spirit might fall on some of the young men there present. Dr. Pierson was present and undertook to answer briefly some 40 questions of all kinds which had been handed in on the missionary work. His answers were clear and of value. Explanations were made of industrial and medical missions, of the alleged unhealthfulness of the Congo and other tropical fields and other points. He spoke particularly of the duty of going and the call for individual decision and action. He advised that a man "go double." Dr. Pierson considered the foreign mission field the most important because of its extent, the scarcity of men and the greatness of the results. He advised a thorough and complete training for the work. God is in no hurry and you can afford to wait for your preparation to be thorough.

The morning talks of the students and how to strengthen and promote the work of the Young Men's Christian Associations in colleges have borne a bit of good fruit in the line of the missions. They had previously decided that letters to and from the Christian colleges in foreign lands would be of great advantage in the work, and this morning they drew up a circular letter to be sent to the students of each one of those colleges, which was heartily indorsed by everyone at the close of the general meeting. Its substance is this:

Fellow-students—We greet you in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. It has long been the desire of many of us to send you a personal assurance of the Christian love we bear you and the joy we have in hearing of your growth in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour. But we never had so good an opportunity to do this as is offered by our present situation. Two hundred and fifty students from 90 colleges are spending a month at Mr. Moody's school on Mt. Hermon to study the Bible and methods of Christian work, under the leadership of Mr. Moody and other eminent teachers of the Word. Our purpose is to become better qualified for Christian work in our colleges. As we have studied and talked and prayed together, our hearts have gone out to you, our fellow-students, in foreign lands. Fully 50 of our number intend to spend their lives in the glorious work of telling your people the good news of Christ's salvation. Over 20 of these have decided to do this since coming to this meeting. One of our meetings was addressed by students of 10 different nations, who pleaded with us to carry the Gospel to their people. As they told us of your need of more workers our hearts burned with eager desire to go; and when they repeated "God is Love," in the language of Japan, China, Siam, India, Persia, Armenia and other countries, we prayed that many of our number might be permitted to tell of God's love in all those languages. We are very anxious to form a bond of union between you and ourselves which will enable you to communicate with us regularly and impress our students with the claim of your work. We have an inter collegiate Young Men's Christian Association in America which enables us to help each other very much in our work. In behalf of the 10 000 Christian students, members of our organizations, whom we represent, we are yours in Christian fellowship.

This was signed by secretaries and other members of college associations. The secretaries will push this along and follow it up with individual letters. They hope to make the project contained in it of establishing the Young Men's Christian Association in those colleges and seminaries a success and productive of great results.

The General Outlook.

....The Christian World, London, reports: Rev. Dr. Mackay, the venerable leader of the Free Church Constitutional Party in the Highlands, has just died at Inverness, at the age of ninety, and in the fifty-eighth year of his ministry. Deceased occupied his own pulpit a fortnight previously, his death being accelerated by a slight accident. Dr. Mackay had always shown a remarkable independence of spirit. In early life he was presented to the parish of Clyne by the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, but he accepted it only on the condition that he was regularly called by the congregation. In the ten years' conflict he took a prominent part, and at the Disruption went out with his congregation, as he once said, "not knowing whither he went." He, however, adhered to his flock, and by his vigorous preaching soon attracted attention. In 1845 he accepted a call, signed by 1,400 persons, to the Free North Church, Inverness, of which he has ever since been the attached and venerated pastor. In the controversies which have agitated the church so much in recent years, Dr. Mackay took a prominent part. He was one of the "old school," who protested, with characteristic Highland vigor, against the introduction of "innovations." At the jubilee of his ministry Dr. Mackay was presented with £900.

....A meeting was recently held at Kensington, England, to bid farewell to a party of emigrants about to embark for South Africa to found a new colony on total abstinence principles. Mr. Arnold White selected the emigrants, who number eighty men, women and children, and a lady who wishes to have her name kept secret provides the funds. The party will proceed to some part of Kaffraria. Lord Wolseley occupied the chair, and Cardinal Manning gave an address. Baron Rothschild also offered some words of advice.

.. The seventieth annual report of the Am. Bible Society has just been published in pamphlet form. The total issue of Bibles and portions of Bibles by the Society for the year ending March 31st, 1886, was 1,437,440 copies in 48 different languages and dialects, and including 207 volumes in raised letters for the blind. The total receipts for the year available for the general purposes of the Society were $523,910.59, a decrease from the previous year of $64,003.75; the total expenditures were $499,998.75, or $23,911.84 less than the receipts, and $119,883 83 less than was expended the previous year. The reduction in expenditures was made by decreasing the amount of colportage in the United States. The foreign work has been steadily advancing; and last year the total circulation of the Scriptures in foreign lands, both by sale and gift, was largely in advance of any figures previously reported. Fifty-five new local Bible societies have been recognized as auxiliaries to the Society, and 384 new life members were admitted.

....It is one hundred years since the first Wesleyan mission in the West Indies was established. There are now in connection with their church in that field, 257 churches, 151 other places of worship, ninety ministers, 43,390 church members, 23,421 Sunday-school scholars, and 2,320 teachers. The churches are scattered among twenty-four islands, and along more than one hundred miles of the South American coast. This, the centennial year, will be made the occasion for a special increase in church funds and church missions.

News of the Week.

Wednesday, July 28.—It is stated that Lord Salisbury has a great deal of trouble in getting a suitable man to fill the post of Chief Secretary for Ireland. No suitable man desires to take the office under the new Government....Lord Salisbury addressed 400 Tories at the Carlton Club....The Mexican masses feel very bitter toward the Americans ...The number of people that have died from exposure and starvation on the Newfoundland coast is estimated at 3,500. A snow storm has buried Eastern Labrador, cutting off all communication.... Lord Salisbury shows a determination to have Parliament sit in August....Twenty persons reported killed and eighty wounded in the riots at Amsterdam....Important evidence has been given against Spies and Schwab, the Chicago Anarchists....The funeral of Hubert O. Thompson will be held in Trinity Chapel, New York city, to-morrow morning....Charles Engel, a professional burglar, whose robberies have extended all over the country, was arrested by Pinkerton's detectives in Chicago yesterday. Jewelry that had been stolen from Admiral Baldwin's house at Newport, R. I., was found under a stone by some farmers.

Thursday, 29.—It is stated that Lord Salisbury, with the Queen's approval, proposed to Lord Hartington that he should form a government, and offered to serve under him. The Chief Secretaryship was offered to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach.... Labouchere advocates a new election as soon as possible....Herr Fischer, the African explorer, reports that he has reached Wanga after a journey of terrible hardships lasting thirty days. Two hundred and thirty natives accompanied the party; 57 died from disease and starvation or from wounds received in battle ...Reports from White Bay says over 1,000 bears have appeared near Cape Mugford. Indians in that region are eating the dead bodies of their companions....The circulation of Russian coin has been prohibited in Bulgaria by Prince Alexander....Khartoum has been razed by the rebels....Abbé Liszt, the pianist, is dangerously ill....A convention between England and China has been signed at Pekin. China agrees to the occupation of Burmah by the English....Spies is identified in the Anarchist trial in Chicago as the man who lighted the bomb ...A letter written by Commissioner Squire, containing a corrupt offer to Maurice B. Flynn, that his resignation and the control of his office would be put in his hands if he would secure the votes of four Aldermen in his behalf, has been brought to light by Mayor Grace.

Friday, 30.—Smallpox has appeared in St. Pierre, Miquelon. Business has been suspended....Dublin is placarded with appeals to Irishmen to assemble in their thousands to make the greatest demonstation possible on the occasion of the departure of Lord Lieutenant Aberdeen and his wife from Ireland next week....M. de Lesseps pledges himself that he will open the Panama Canal in 1889 within the cost estimated by the Congress in 1879....Chinese pirates attacked and took possession of the Dutch steamship "Hok" of Canton. They killed the captain, first mate and the chief engineer. The pirates demand $15,000 ransom for the surrender of the captives. ....Mrs. Elizabeth Clairmont took a dose of poison and then shot herself in the brain in the Barrett House, New York city, last Wednesday. She was recognized by her father. It is thought domestic troubles caused her to take her life....A great deal of damage done by a hail storm between Elmira and Big Flats, N. Y....A woman in Harlem burned to a crisp by the explosion of a kerosene oil stove....Nearly 2,000 cigarmakers out of work....Three thousand pounds of bad tea found by Dr. Cyrus Edson in New York.

Saturday, 31.—Macfarlane, the crofter considers Argyll as responsible for the trouble at Tiree. Argyll thinks that the crofters wish to destroy tenant prosperity. ....Home Rule demanded in Wales.... Rauttermeister, an accomplice of Most, has been arrested at Mannheim.

(Continued on page thirteen.)

Our Contributors.

Evensong.

BY G. DE LA POER.

A LIGHT is burning dim and low
In yonder house of God,
Where many come and many go,
Whose feet with truth are shod.

All men unite, a noble throng,
Humbly to kneel and pray;
To hush with holy evensong
The tumult of the day.

There meet the lab'rer from the field,
The wise man school'd in lore,
The warrior with his scarr6d shield,
To worship and adore.

Be brave, O heart! and spend the day
In acts of love divine;
Rise and forever cast away
This languid faith of thine.

Life's day is short, life's work is long,
Yet if we toil aright,
Sweet is the sound of evensong
Which ushers in the night.

"Pagoda Shadows."

BY REV P. W. PITCHER.

JUST across the bay from our mission house on the island of Kolongsu, there is a high mountain peak. At its very summit there stands a monument of false gods. The mountain itself looks desolate enough. Very little if any vegetation appears on its surface. Bare, black rock and rough stones abound everywhere. But this pagoda seems to enhance the gloom and desolation as its shadow falls upon it. A little farther toward the west in the bay itself there is a very small island, less than a half mile in circumference. Nothing whatever is on this island save a pagoda. Our home holds these two temples in full view. Our attention is always directed toward one or the other of them. What solemn thoughts they awaken! How they seem to unroll the past and lay it open before you like some spread-out map.

For centuries they have stood there as some phantom sentinels, not only watching the onward flight of time, but as superstitious guardians of this harbor. Generations have come and gone but they have only been watchers. They have been no true guardians, they have afforded no protection; for the enemies of men have entered this harbor and departed, leaving behind them desolation in life and in death. Their worshippers have looked upon them with veneration and then passed away to their long home filled with a vain hope.

These temples have long been witnesses also of ignorance and superstition. Degradation and sin in human form have passed under its ban. Cold and lifeless themselves, and all they represent, they have bestowed no mercy nor afforded relief to those in the throe of sorrow and distress. They have never been representatives of charity, and those about them have perished as brutes die. Ignorance has not been bliss here. The gentle touch, a kind, encouraging word, a helping hand has been rare. Of a friend that sticketh closer than a brother they have known nothing. Of unselfish motives, of noble principles, of the great possibilities of life they were and many are still ignorant. And these temples have been witnesses of superstition. Superstition has been an heirloom in this great family of Chinese. It has been handed down from generations. It is a monster. And these monuments have not only been watchers of this evil, but instigators. Like as the stones that Joshua commanded to be set awakened the mind of the children of that day, so these stones have awakened each generation as it passed upon the scene. What mean ye by the stones? They are representatives of false gods. But these fathers and mothers would not say "false," they would say "our gods." "These are the gods our fathers worshipped. Beware lest you anger them. Follow the gods of your fathers. He was good enough for our fathers, therefore is good enough for us." And in embracing these false gods they have also accepted all the superstitious rites.

If you can bear the sight, let us pause here and conjure up the awful tragedies that have been acted out in living characters at the feet of these monuments. Think of the poverty, the vice, the slain innocents—slain is too refined a word—murdered, butchered innocents; the ruined homes, the desolated hearts, the unhappy, miserable lives, the degraded lives, the sorrows, the tears, unsatisfied longings, the waste, the squallidness, the filth, the murders, the suicides. Then think of all that has followed this. Behold that army as they rise from their graves. It is one great host of skeletons and in every forehead is written, Pestilence, or Famine, or Disease. That host is ever being supplied.

China is one great graveyard. There are graves in our yards, there are graves along the way, there are graves in the city, there are graves on the hillsides, on the hilltops and in the valleys. There are graves everywhere.

It is enough to make one tremble to think of these things. Aye, why tremble? At my own responsibility—my personal responsibility. Have I done aught to assuage this misery? What have I done to bring about happy homes? What have I done to institute sanitary laws and regulations? Above all, what have I done to tell them of the one true God and a dying Saviour? What have I done to awaken in them nobler desires, higher motives and holy principles? Oh, my God and Saviour! why have these ages gone by and so little done for this people? And why are Thy redeemed ones so backward? Why do they wait? Oh, let pity awaken all to zeal and let zeal bring forth good works for the cause.

Dwelling as I am under the shadow of these pagodas, let me tell you more fully of some of the shadows that rest upon this land. It may be difficult for you who are so far away to realize these things as they really are; we see them every day and know them to be true, and they never cease to bear to our hearts a burden of sorrow.

The first shadow I shall speak of is, Ignorance. Ah, it has been a dark cloud. And because its shadow has fallen upon this nation so long some of their minds are well-nigh dead—almost unimpressible. People cannot live in darkness, neither can the mind. It is only after repeated effort that impressions are made. They must be talked with again and again to be made to understand the simple truths of the Gospel. How very little they know of "the breadth and length and depth and height" of the ever glorious Gospel.

Very few could tell you the meaning of justification by faith or the doctrine of the Holy Spirit or the mystery of the Godhead, etc. But can we wonder at it since ignorance has shadowed them for centuries? Of the two sexes woman's mind is perhaps the most clouded, as they have had no opportunities whatever. Like all barbarian nations, so here the women have been regarded little better than beasts. They have had no advantages of the men. Man might learn if he would, but woman never had the chance before Christianity came. They were made to toil and prepare food for hard taskmasters.

Some illustrations will show you how difficult it is to make an impression on these minds.

One of our lady missionaries was once examining some girls in arithmetic. She gave them a simple example in addition. How do you suppose they did it? Instead of putting down the right hand figure and carrying the left they did just the opposite. "Why do you do that way?" the lady asked. "Oh, we were taught to do so," they replied. They had been taught right but they understood wrong. Now I have something more dreadful to tell, and were it not for your enlightenment I would withhold it. If you are led to smile, may you also be led to pity. A woman was at one time asked if she could tell who composed the Trinity. Oh, yes; she could tell. "Well, who?" She replied: "Mary, Martha and Lazarus."

Another was asked about the order of creation, and she began with the Commandments. So she said the first day thou shalt have not other gods before me, and so on to the eighth, "thou shalt not steal," etc. Another one said Paul was the successor of Moses. One more: A woman was telling about the furnace of Nebuchadnezzar. Finally she came to the place where they were seen walking in the burning furnace. She said one was God, one was Jesus Christ, and she had forgotten who the third was, but thought it must be Jehovah.

But the men are no exception. Probably they could do no better and they might show their ignorance by not answering at all. The idea seems to have gone abroad that the Chinese people are an educated people. There may be some great heads among them, but as a people they are ignorant. There is, I venture to say, not one in ten that we would count good readers. I doubt very much whether there is one in twenty that can begin to read their books. The fact, it is an idio-graphic and not an alphabetical language, makes it a lifelong study, and there are but few with ambition enough to gain that high position of devoting a life to study.

True, there are a great many who can read? That is to say, they can read enough to carry on their business. But what is the motive of this knowledge? It is the lowest. The great use of knowledge is promotion, temporal improvement, increased wealth. They possess none of the higher motives of education. They prostitute education for selfish purposes. That is all education is to them.

Another shadow that rests upon this land is, Superstition. It raises false hope, it dashes to the ground and crushes out the life. It makes wretched lives and gloomy homes, causes strife and separates households.

Sometime ago a vegetarian died and was buried. In life he probably had been despised and neglected, but in death behold a transformation; he became famous and multitudes seek him. Once his name was known only by a few, to-day his name is widely known. How did this dead man gain such a fame. It came about through a dream. A certain man who had been afflicted with disease had tried many medicines without relief. One night the dead vegetarian appeared to him and prescribed for him. He took the medicine and was cured. The result was that others heard of this remarkable cure and so began to make pilgrimages to the grave, and were there healed of all their diseases. This new revelation spread and multitudes went thither. The friends of the dead man took good care to keep up the excitement, and crowds at one time could be seen approaching the place.

You probably know that the Chinese do not like girls and are very fond of boys. So they do everything they can to protect the boys from evil spirits. They try to deceive the spirits by giving the boys girls' names or some other outrageous cognomen. One boy was called "Rotten Egg." They supposed if the spirits knew he was as bad as a rotten egg they would not want him. My letter is becoming too long again, and so I must not stop to speak of superstitious worship of ancestral tablets—graves, wind and water,—or their superstitious ideas about burying the dead, of building, of marrying, etc, or of that great shadow, Idolatry. Enough. We are in a land of shadows. There is a reflex action of all this which falls upon the Christian professor. Let any disease come upon a village, let there be a failure of a crop, let misfortune come, and persecution is heaped upon the Christian. All the blame is laid at his door. "You have offended the gods," they say, "by worshipping the God of the foreigners, and we have to suffer." "Our gods are angry; either leave that new found God or suffer."

But behind this dark background, picture to yourself a great multitude seeking after true knowledge with high motives. And this knowledge is elevating them and causing them, in the midst of temptations you know not of, to stand firm in the faith. Behold them turning the right and the left cheek to the blow, giving forth expression to noble lives, redeemed by the blood of Christ and sustained by His grace. When will this whole nation follow in their footsteps? When will the cloud be lifted? Say, Christian friends, when?

Amoy, April 12th, 1886.

On the Neilgherries India.

Coonoor, May 28th, 1886.

YOU will notice that I am writing this in Coonoor. I came up here with my family on the 21st of last month, and a most delightful change it is. No one, who has never felt the literal burning of an April and May atmosphere on the sea-level plains of India, can conceive the relief afforded by a skyward leap of six or seven thousand feet. Here, perched on the Southern slope of the "Blue Mountains," not far below their loftiest peak, we are enjoying a delightful temperature of from 65 to 75 deg. Fah., while people below are sweltering in a furnace heat which keeps the mercury steadily above 95 deg., and carries it up at midday to 103 and 104 deg.

The scenery, too, is as charming as the air is salubrious. Look in what direction we may, our eyes are fascinated by grand and impressive views. On three sides of our cottage the springing mountain-tops lift their crowning forests high in air. In our front a vast valley, ten miles long by from two to three miles wide, sweeps majestically down to the very foot of the range, and conveys to the lowlands a bright stream, which in its haste to find a quiet level now pours down a precipice, and again rushes, with foam and noisy petulance, over and around obstructing boulders. At times a vast wedge of glistening vapor, detaching itself from a cloud-ocean below presses, like the bore in some mighty river, up the wide rift in our front, obliterating rock and forest, until, as we watch its coming, it envelopes us in its misty folds, and passing upward overleaps the summits in our rear.

Everything is on a grand scale, and one never tires of looking at the impressive scene. To my mind, nothing gives the idea of superhuman power more effectively than a mountain range with its majestic diversities. None but an Almighty hand could lift up such peaks and hollow out such valleys as surround us here.

When you come to India you must take a trip up here and see all the fine sights for yourself.

We are gratified and very thankful to hear that the financial prospect looks so cheering. The old Church generally comes up to the mark; but rather too much on the festina lente principle. If only she would apply that principle in equable monthly measure throughout the year, it would save you and us a vast amount of anxiety.

Thanks for your review of the religious and political state of affairs. We are glad to get something other than the stereotype newspaper account of things. The labor question must soon be honestly faced and settled the world over. Socialism is bad in many aspects, but it has underlying its vagaries a powerful truth which will exact recognition sooner or later. J. W. Scudder.

Offerings to the Lord.

It gave me pleasure to learn that many Christians are giving one tenth of their income to the Lord's cause, though I regret that some insist that this is a duty. The rule of the Old Testament has been superceded by the rule of the New, which tells us to give "as God hath prospered" us. This rule fits all alike, and everywhere. Look to what God has given you, and then, in view of His goodness to you, settle between Him and your soul what you may give to the Lord's cause.

But certainly, we should not allow ourselves to come behind the people of God under the Old Testament in our willingness to offer unto the Lord of our substance. I would not make it a duty to give one-tenth, but I would make it a matter of conscience to foster the spirit of liberality till at least the rule of the Old Testament was equalled or surpassed. I do not suppose anyone thinks that one-tenth is too much to give to the Lord's work. There may be cases where it could not be done, but I have never yet heard of such. On the other hand, I know of many who make it a matter of conscience to give at least a tenth of their income, and all that I know agree in declaring that they find it a great improvement over their former, unsystematic manner of giving. Everyone who tries this method of giving systematically at least one-tenth of his income is surprised at the results. I used to think I gave about as much as anyone else and about as much as I could afford to give; but when I tried this plan, in imitation of an honored minister of the Gospel, I discovered that I could give about five times as much as I had given before, and I felt ashamed that for so many years I had given so little.

While I would not try to prove it a duty to give one-tenth, I can, however, from my own experience as well as from the experience of others, recommend this method as an effective measure to increase the offering of the Church of Christ for the purpose of furthering His cause.

If Christians would determine not to fall below the one-tenth limit,—and I cannot believe that this is asking too much,—there would be a far greater supply of means to push the work of the Church. If our 83 000 church members held one-tenth of their income sacred to the Lord's cause, we would not be obliged to work our home and foreign mission fields so painfully economically; and those who labor in the Master's work would be more effectually freed from worldly care.

One more advantage I find in actually laying in store a regular portion of one's income; it furnishes the means to meet every appeal for help, without making the many calls burdensome. By having on hand a certain amount of money, set apart for benevolent purposes, we will feel it a real pleasure to assist where assistance is needed, instead of trying to pass the Samaritan on the other side.

The language of the Apostle, "Upon the first day of the week let everyone of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him," while it does not state a regular proportion in figures, does certainly express that he believes in systematic benevolence. Many people apparently shun system in religion. Their entire religious life is made up of impulses; their religion varies with their feelings. They go to church when they feel like it; they read their Bibles when they feel like it; they seek God in prayer when they feel like it; and they give when they feel like it. But this is not the best way. We should not be governed by feeling but by principle, and if our principle is right, our feelings will become so too.

If you make trial of this plan of giving one-tenth of your income, you will, perhaps, like it enough to recommend it to your neighbor. K.

A Church Service in Holland.

BY REV. WM H. DE HART.

THE service was held in St. Peter's Church, Leyden, the city so famous in history on account of its successful resistance amid great suffering to the prolonged siege of the Spanish troops in 1573–4. St. Peter's Church is the largest in the city and over 570 years old, having been erected in 1315. It is an immense edifice, with bare white walls and ceilings darkened by age. The floor to a great extent is composed of stone slabs, beneath which sleep the dead, many of whom have left behind them records never to be forgotten. Among the illustrious dead there entombed are Boerhaave, the great physician, and John Robinson, the leader of the first Puritan party banished from England.

The church, if all occupied, would accommodate as many as seven or eight thousand persons. Only a portion of it is furnished with sittings. These are sufficient to seat three thousand. The time for the service was 10 A.M. We arrived at the church about a quarter to ten. We informed the usher that we were strangers and desired seats. He told us we must first purchase tickets and pointed to the place where we might do so. Thither we went and found two men at a table selling them. We paid our money, 10 cents each, 4 cents in U. S. currency. Provided with tickets we were shown to our seats. On looking over the audience we found that the men and women were separated from each other. The women were seated near the pulpit and the men in a circle behind them. About 9 45 the Voorlezer commenced to read the Scriptures from his desk in front of the pulpit. He continued reading them until the hour of service, amid all the confusion attendant upon the entering and seating of the people. From where we sat scarcely a word he read could be heard, and the people generally seemed to pay little attention to what was being done. About 10 o'clock the domine ascended the pulpit, placed against one of the columns of the church. While the invocation, a brief one, was being offered, the men stood and the vast assembly was hushed. After the invocation a Psalm was sung by the congregation. Then followed a prayer, the men standing. The domine announced his text, Rev. 19: 11–16. When the sermon was about half through another Psalm was sung, after which the domine proceeded with his discourse. Then followed prayer, singing and the benediction. The people seemed attentive to the services, several during the delivery of the sermon rising to their feet and leaning forward that they might hear the better. (My friend suggests to me that I am mistaken in this, that they stand up because they are sleepy and desire to keep awake.) After the sermon was commenced the officers rose to take up the collections. I say collections, because there were three. In the church at Rotterdam I was told one collection was for the poor, one for the orphans and the other for the church. These collections were taken in small velvet bags attached to long poles, and during nearly all the time the domine was preaching the poles and bags were moving around in the air, reminding me of the windmills so common to the country. Occasionally the contents of the small bags were emptied into a larger receptacle carried about for the purpose. During the services many of the men kept their hats on, this being necessary on account of the draughts and chilly air of the large edifice. Very few children were present. I am told in the cities a special church and special services are provided for the children.

Contrasting the service with that in our American churches, I could not help being unfavorably impressed. The immense edifice, so cold and barren, so poorly adapted to Protestant worship, while it may be hallowed by age and precious associations, cannot for a moment compare with our American churches for comfort and for hearing the Word preached. The separation of the men from the women, of husband from wife, and the absence of the children were, to my mind, far from as pleasing as the sitting together of families in the house of God at home. The collections during the sermon deprived those who take them from hearing, and must to some extent distract the attention of all the congregation. However, it is the Dutch way. It has been their way for years gone by, and they still survive. Their churches are many, and from what I have seen, well attended. But I could not help feeling that if our forefathers in America worshipped this way, say ye not, the former days were better than these.

Leyden, Netherlands, July 18th, 1886.

A Trip Through Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

BY E. P. VAN NORDEN.

OUR party started from Detroit Monday evening, June 28th, on the "Badger State," one of the comfortable steamers which belong to the Superior Transit Company. The next morning we were wakened at four o'clock by the noise of washing the decks, and it was really surprising how much confusion there seemed to be for the size of the vessel. We were on the point of leaving St. Clair Lake for the apparently boundless Huron, which is in reality 250 miles long and 100 in width, varying in depth from 100 to 750 feet. After six o'clock we made no stop Tuesday, but steered our course in such a direction that we were out of sight of land by noon.

Captain G—— was very kind, and always ready to answer questions; he was an intelligent young man, a strong contrast to the first mate, who was a regular "old tar."

Wednesday was the most enjoyable day we had on board, there was so much more variety of scenery. During the morning we passed through the Sault de St. Marie River, which stream is the only outlet of Lake Superior. The views on every hand were superb, often reminding us of the island portion of Lake George; for, now and again as the river wound in and out, it seemed as though there would be no way for us to proceed.

About noon we reached the Sault de St. Marie Falls, which are often traversed by Indians in their birch canoes, but the passage would be impracticable for a vessel like the one on which we travelled. A canal has been constructed to overcome this difficulty, so by dinner time we were steaming along on the largest body of fresh water in the world.

Lake Superior is 360 miles long, 140 miles in width in the widest part, and has a depth of 800 feet, which is 200 below the sea level. The water is so cold no man has ever lived in it more than twenty minutes, while women perish almost immediately. We were very much disappointed to learn that we would pass the famous Pictured Rocks in the dark, for we had counted on seeing them.

The sunsets were a prominent feature of our trip, for they were magnificent in every respect. The few clouds were lit up until they seemed on fire; while from the sun to the steamer there was a golden path; and when once a little fishing boat glided across this trail it became so brilliant one could scarcely look at it.

Thursday and Friday were more tedious, for there were long stops for the taking off of freight, and the weather was hot and oppressive. And so, although our voyage had been full of pleasure, Saturday morning we were ready to say farewell to the "Badger State" and return to terra firma.

Manitou, Colorado, July 23d, 1886.

The Friends of the Temperance Movement will be encouraged by the following account given in the Christian, London, of July 1st:

Saturday week, in the presence of, and assisted by, the members of the Highgate Gospel Temperance Help One Another Society, Mr. William Green, of Bishopwood House, Highgate, the president of the Society, destroyed his cellar of wine, about 2,500 bottles, valued at about £600. In a speech explaining his reasons, he said that after mature reflection and earnest prayer he had come to the conclusion that it was God's will that he should part with the contents of his wine cellar. Three methods were pressed upon him from time to time. One was to sell the wine to the trade, knowing that they would sell wine, whether his or not; the second was to sell it and give the money to some charity; and the third was to give it, as it was, to the hospitals. In pursuing the first course he would be participating in the sale of an article which had been proved to militate against the physical, social, and spiritual advancement of society. The same reasons were equally applicable to the second course, and beyond them there was in addition the inconsistency of causing injury to others in order to benefit some one else. The third course was met by the success of the London Temperance Hospital, where it had been proved that alcohol was not necessary in the treatment of any disease. After this address the contents of the bottles were poured into the sewer.

The Reading Room.

Our Book-Shelves.

....“Aristocracy in England.” By Adam Badeau. General Badeau’s little book is especially adapted to the desires of the August tourist. It bears the interruptions often produced by fellow travellers or fellow sojourners at a summer home. We speak from experience, as we have carried the volume with us for a week past to fill up the intervals between walks and rides, talk and sight seeing. Each chapter is almost complete in itself and the impression of every paragraph or page is so definite that, after an interruption, the thread of the description is taken up promptly and easily. The General was a Secretary of our American Legation in London and afterward Consul General, and had many opportunities to become familiar with the character and ways of the British nobility. He makes opinions already formed more distinct and adds to the knowledge well-read Americans have by telling what he has seen and heard, and by relating many incidents illustrating the points under treatment. The Queen, the Prince of Wales and the Princess of Wales are each allowed a chapter, and are weighed without partiality. The means by which the English aristocracy has been maintained at great cost to the members of noble families and to the nation are clearly disclosed, and the present value of the order justly estimated. The author considers the institution doomed. The Established Church is severely and in the main justly criticized and condemned, but it would have been more fair to have added something about the large philanthropic and religious work the Church maintains. The justice of the conclusions and descriptions of Gen. Badeau will be generally conceded. The book is of interest just now when the people of Great Britain seem to be weighing the aristocracy and the Church in the balances and disposed to disestablish both. The extension of the suffrage transfers political power to classes who will consider the actual value of both his lordship the duke and his lordship the bishop. One likes to know beforehand just what the new voters have to deal with—what its character, organization, means of existence and real value are. Gen. Badeau satisfies the desire. Seldom is the style of a book so admirably adapted to the theme. (Harper & Bros.)

....“Representative Poems of Living Poets, American and English.” Selected by the poets themselves. With an Introduction by George Parsons Lathrop. This is probably as choice a collection of poems as was ever compiled. The compilers were really and specifically the poets themselves, while to Jeannette Leonard Gilder belongs the credit of the happy conceit. We have in this royal volume close to four hundred poems by eighty of the living American and English poets, which they themselves selected as their representative poems.

No doubt the general compiler of the book was correct in assuming that to know what poems were favorites with the poets, and, in their opinion, best represented their work, would meet a widespread desire. Perhaps some of the selections made will cause surprise; be that as it may, fortunately all do not think alike, nor are all alike impressed. The poets themselves were invited to be judges, and they have judged, and it is the privilege of the reader to take pleasure in the result as herein presented.

We cannot refrain from quoting a single paragraph from Mr. Lathrop’s splendid introduction: “Since no collection can be made that will satisfy all persons, it is pleasant to know that we have here one which ought at least to satisfy the poets themselves. They make a reception for us, in their studies....and read us a few of the poems they would like us to hear. We find in these a reflex of nearly all the characteristic moods of daily life; we find the airy forms of elusive thoughts, so delicately netted in the web of language, that they seem to be felt by the eye as the sight of a solid body. We find ballads, idyls, narratives stirring, pathetic, elevating; and things described that exist only to the imagination, but by it are made true and real—such as Aldrich’s ‘Identity,’ or Matthew Arnold’s ‘Forsaken Merman.’ There is much penetrating philosophy also, subtle and terse, drawn out in a single line,—like a thread of gossamer, which yet may reflect all the glory of a sunbeam—and drawn with the certainty that is possible only to poetic insight. Indeed, the variety of subject is a noticable fact of the book.”

It is an elegant volume that all lovers of poetry will highly prize. (Cassell & Co.)

....“Kidnapped.” Being the Adventures of David Balfour in the Year 1751, written by himself, and now set forth by Robert Louis Stevenson. The character of this volume is shown by the further description on the title page: “How He was Kidnapped and Cast Away; His Sufferings in a Deserted Isle; His Journey in the Wild Highlands; His Acquaintance with Alan Breck Stewart and Other Notorious Highland Jacobites; with all that He Suffered at the Hands of His Uncle Ebenezer Balfour, of Shaws, Falsely So-Called.”

It is a tale of adventure very cleverly written, abounding with vivid descriptions of scenery and fine sketches of character. It is a new field for Mr. Stevenson, but his pen has its accustomed vigor. The long and toilsome pilgrimage through the Highlands and the short but exciting voyage of the ship that was wrecked, are set forth with a naturalness not surpassed by De Foe. None will commence the book without finishing it. (Scribners.)

....“The American Salmon Fisherman.” By Henry P. Wells. We have always held tenaciously that a fisherman, as truly as a poet, is born, not made. Yet even the born fisherman will find much in this capital book that it will profit him to heed, unless his experience has been as wide, and his success as great, as that of its accomplished author. If any fisherman who cannot boast his birth desires to see if it is not profitable that one should be self-made, this book, with its companion, “Fly Rods and Fly Tackle,” if anything can, will show him how. At any rate, if he follows its directions, as to field, rods, tackle, methods and equipment generally, and does not come out a fisherman, it will be because the fault is in himself. There is everything here he needs to know, except the teaching that experience alone can give. The racy style in which it is written makes it very entertaining reading even for those who have no thought of putting its precepts into practice. (Harpers.)

....“A Timid Brave: The Story of an Indian Uprising.” By William Justin Harsha. It need scarcely be said that this is an exceedingly striking story—it is taken for granted that Indian tales will be thrilling. It is not always, however, that narratives of Indian life give so clear a picture of character and native customs as is to be found in this book. The moral of the story is, of course, the wrongs of the subject race, and very forcibly are they described. The author earnestly pleads for a recognition of the Indian’s right to protection under the laws to which the white man successfully appeals. (Funk & Wagnalls.)

....“Cassandra’s Casket.” By Emma Marshall. The literary quality of this story is a good deal above the average of works prepared for our Sunday-school libraries. The plot is involved but is cleverly handled and consistently wrought out, and the portraiture of character is strong and lifelike. From first to last the narrative is wholesome in tone and contains many a lesson which young people may profitably consider. (Carters.)

....“Practical Recitations,” by Caroline B. Le Row, is designed to furnish selections for literary exercises in schools, appropriate for reception days, holidays, poet’s birthdays, etc. The selection is made from a wide range of authors and subjects; is characterized by discrimination and good taste, and, all things considered, is one of the best collections for its purpose with which we are acquainted. (Clark & Maynard.)

....“A Prince of Darkness,” by Florence Warden, carries the novel of “crime” to its highest (or more properly, deepest) point. If a character of more unmitigated scoundrelism can be found in all literature than the hero of this book, we are not aware of it. And the heroine is not enough better to create any sympathy for her misfortunes. The book absolutely wallows in crime. It seems curious that a woman should write such stories. We cannot commend it, however powerful and absorbing at times, as anything else than unwholesome reading. And in power, it is not equal to “The House on the Marsh,” being too intricate, and too long drawn out. (Cassell & Co.)

Our Library Table.

Periodicals, Serials and Notes.

...The midsummer Century (August) is an exceedingly attractive number, more space than usual being given to illustrated articles, showing fine artistic execution. Of these there are five, not counting the war papers, namely, “Algiers and its Suburbs,” “Heidelberg,” “A Gypsy Beauty,” “Sea-Birds at the Farne Islands,” and “The Western Art Movement.” Washington Gladden discusses very thoroughly and interestingly the Capital and Labor Question, which everybody should procure and read. Julian Hawthorne contributes a very pleasing short story, entitled “Colonel Spaight’s Prejudices.” The new serial by Frank R. Stockton, “The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine,” begins in this number, and if it continues and ends in as facetious a strain as it opens, the succeeding instalments will be looked for with greedy delight. Fredericksberg is the subject of the War articles, comprising four illustrated papers: “Lee at Fredericksberg,” by Major J. Horace Lacy; “The Battle of Fredericksberg,” by General James Longstreet; Sumner’s “Right Grand Division,” by General D. N. Couch; Franklin’s “Left Grand Division,” by General W. F. Smith.

....In the Expositor for July Dr. Maclaren continues his searching Exposition of Colossians and Prof. Kirkpatrick his judicious notes on the Revised Version of the Old Testament. But the chief features of the number are Dr. Warfield’s account of the Predictions in the Epistles to the Thessalonians (referring the Man of Sin to the Roman Emperors), and Dr. Sanday’s article on Bishop Lightfoot, accompanied with an etched portrait, in which he sets forth with masterly skill the Bishop’s excellencies as an exegete. It is pleasant to light upon a criticism at once so discriminating and so candid.

....The New Englander and Yale Review for August contains a most instructive paper on Tonquin, or the French in Annam, by President Martin of Peking; a novel view of Ophelia in Hamlet; a fair statement of the dictum that conjugal infidelity is the only Scriptural Ground of Divorce, by P. R. Hurd; and a plea for religious error under the title, The New Method of Church Discipline, by L. W. Bacon. The Educational Department brings a wholesome lesson from Germany for American students. The notices of books are few, but thorough and trustworthy.

....The Homiletic Review for August is full and fertile in thought as ever. The symposiums that have occupied portions in previous numbers are continued by able writers. In the review section the following timely subjects are also discussed: “How a Pastor May Turn His Vacation to Good Account,” “Short Pastorates,” with suggestive remedies, “Some Modern Funeral Usages.” All the sections are creditably sustained.

....The Pulpit Treasury for August presents an attractive and interesting variety of sermons and short articles on practical themes. The post of honor is assigned to the Rev. N. H. Van Arsdale, well known to our readers as Junior Editor of The Christian Intelligencer, and pastor of the Broadway Church, Paterson, N. J. The opening sermon on “Hosannas to Jesus” is from his pen, and is a pleasing presentation of a fruitful theme. A sketch of his life by Rev. J. B. Drury, D.D., and a view of his church, erected under his pastorate, are also given. Other full sermons are by Dr. W. H. Anderson of Kentucky, and Dr. A. H. Moment of Brooklyn. There is a telling article by Dr. A. T. Pierson on the Christian and the World; one by Dr. Cuyler on the Work that Pays; one by D. L. Moody on Church Choirs; one by Dr. Talmage on the Religion for an Emergency, and several others equally suitable and interesting.

....The August Outing opens with an attractive frontispiece, “Heaving the Lead,” followed by a third paper by Captain R. F. Coffin on “The History of American Yachting,” treating especially of the International Period, accompanied by ten cuts of sloops and schooners. Mere mention of the titles of the articles will suffice to convince any that persons fond of reading thrilling recitals of sport and adventure may find plenty of it here: “Ranch Life and Game Shooting in the West;” “Around the World on a Bicycle;” “After Geronimo;” “A Bit of Racing;” “The Last Voyage of the ‘Surprise’;” “The Sunset Land,” a tale of Rocky Mountain adventure. These are all serials, and illustrated. The magazine is running too much into serials.

Books Received.

Cassell & Co.: The Phantom City. A Volcanic Romance. By William Westall. 12mo, pp. 288.

Unbound Books and Pamphlets.

The Gospel to the Poor versus Pew Rents. By B. F. Austin, B.D. With Introduction by Bishop Carman, and papers on the Pew System by Rev. Newman Hall, LL.B., and others. 16mo, pp. 110. 25 cents. William Briggs, Toronto.

Keep My Secret. A Novel. By G. M. Robins. (No. 536, Harper’s Franklin Square Library.) 4to, pp. 56. 20 cents; also, Katharine Blythe. A Novel. By Katharine Lee. (No. 87, Harper’s Handy Series.) 16mo, pp. 258. 25 cents.

A Race for Life, and Other Complete Stories. By Leading Writers. (Cassell’s “Select” Library of Entertaining Fiction.) 16mo, pp. 142. 15 cents; also,

My Night Adventure, and Other Complete Stories. By Leading Writers. 16mo, pp. 142. 15 cents; also, Wanted—A Sensation. A Saratoga Incident. By Edward S. Van Zile. (Cassell’s “Rainbow” Series of Original Novels.) 12mo, pp. 173. 25 cents.

Periodicals.

August.—The Homiletic Review, The Pansy, Lippincott’s, The Century, New Englander and Yale Review, The Brooklyn Magazine, Our Little Ones and the Nursery, The Book Buyer.

Christ the Metropolis of the Scriptures.

A YOUNG man had been preaching in the presence of a venerable divine, and after he had done, he went to the old minister and said:

"What do you think of my sermon?"

"A very poor sermon, indeed," said he.

"A poor sermon?" said the young man, "it took me a long time to study it."

"Aye, no doubt of it."

"Why, did you not think my explanation of the text a very good one?"

"Oh, yes," said the old preacher, "very good, indeed."

"Well, then, why do you say it is a poor sermon? Didn't you think the metaphors were appropriate, and the arguments conclusive?"

"Yes, they were very good, so far as that goes; but still, it was a very poor sermon."

"Will you tell me why you think it was a poor sermon?"

"Because," said he, "there was no Christ in it."

"Well," said the young man, "Christ was not in the text; we are not to be preaching Christ always; we must preach what is in the text."

So the old man said: "Don't you know, young man, that from every town and every village, and every little hamlet in England, wherever it may be, there is a road to London?"

"Yes," said the young man.

"Ah," said the old divine, "and from every text in Scripture there is a road to the metropolis of the Scriptures—that is Christ. And, my dear brother, your business is, when you get a text, to say, 'Now, what is the road to Christ?' and then preach a sermon, running along the road to the great metropolis—Christ. And," said he, "I have not yet found a text that hasn't a road to Christ in it. If I should, I would make one. I would go over hedge and ditch, but I would get at my Master, for the sermon cannot do any good unless there is a savor of Christ in it."—Words and Weapons.

....The corner-stone of the new Infirmary of the Five Points' House of Industry in this city was laid on last Saturday afternoon with interesting ceremonies. The box placed in the stone contains copies of various religious and secular papers, act of incoration and last annual report of the Five Points' House of Industry, list of names of managers and officers of the Institution and names of architects and builders. The following was the order of service: Processional, sung by the children, Responsive Scripture Reading, Hymn, Address by Superintendent William F. Barnard, Prayer by the children, and then came the placing of the stone.

Financial.

TUESDAY, Aug. 3d.

THE Associated Banks of this city increased loans last week by $523,400, added to specie $293,200, lost in legal tenders $1,961,900, and in deposits $1,108 900. The surplus of reserve was reduced $1,391,475, but still remained $12,878,725. The rate for call loans advanced to 3 per cent, and for prime mercantile paper to 4 to 6 per cent.

The imports of merchandise at this port for the week were valued at $7,789,632, and the exports at $7,208,209. The export of specie was $203,805. Foreign exchange declined, closing on Saturday at $4.85 for 60 day bills, and $4.86 1-4 for demand drafts for sterling.

The Stock Market maintained a firm undertone. There was a foreign demand for the Vanderbilt stocks, advancing New York Central nearly 5 per cent, and that tended to stiffen the whole list. Railway mortgages were fairly active. The best continue to be strongly held, and not a few of them are virtually out of the market, as lots of any size are not to be had except at an advance.

Silver has had such a tumble that men begin to say now that before long it may not be worth more than copper. The "In God We Trust" dollar at the end of the week was worth 71 cents as bullion, that is, the Government, in a time of peace and prosperity, under the control of crazy financiers, is paying its dues at a discount of 29 cents on the dollar. If these dollars could be limited in use to those who like them and not be forced by law on those who have no confidence in them it would be well.

There is very little doubt in the minds of those who have no part in speculation that the harvest of cereals has been seriously reduced by heat and drought prevailing over large sections of the country. The visible supply of wheat has increased rapidly during a few days at the chief central depots, but the amount of wheat in the country is undoubtedly considerably less than it has been for a few years at the corresponding period. The stock held in Europe on the Continent is certainly not large, probably quite small, and Great Britain, the facilities for transportation being ample, makes no pretence of keeping on hand such supplies as a few years ago were regarded as necessary. It would be proper that we should carry the world's surplus of grain if we were masters of the situation; but for the present European dealers make the prices. The day may come, however, when the European "bears" will be caught in a trap. Quotations here on Saturday were: Wheat, 85 1-8; corn, 50; oats 33 1-4. Hay continues firm, but rye straw is a little cheaper, the quotations being: Choice timothy 85 to 90 cents; clover mixed 50 to 60; No. 1 rye straw 70 to 85; oat 40 to 50, and wheat 30 to 45. Wool is a little cheaper in consequence of a larger supply, but is still a very good thing to have. The demand for cotton has been more brisk, and the week closed with the following bids: Aug. 9.45, Sept. 9.41, Oct. 9.33, Nov. 9.31, Dec. 9 33, Jan. 9.42, Feb. 9.52.

The prospects of the fall trade are generally regarded as good.

Church Decoration.
Church Furnishing.

DESIGNS AND ESTIMATES SUBMITTED.

J. & R. LAMB,

59 CARMINE ST., N. Y.

A COPY OF OUR BOOK,

The Care and Feeding of Infants

Mailed free to any address; it contains advice and useful information for nursing mothers and invalids, and an analysis and description of

MELLIN'S FOOD.

DOLIBER, GOODALE & CO., Boston, Mass.

BOARDERS WANTED

Five or six persons can find a pleasant home in the country during the remainder of summer season. Railroad depot, post-office, church, etc., near farmhouse. Good table, plenty shade, healthy location. Terms, $5 and $6 per week. References exchanged. Address G. B. CONKLIN, Salt Point, Dutchess Co., N.Y.

See this "NOTES ON DECORATIVE ART," free for postage. Covering information on Tapestry, Lustra, Kensington, Oil and Mineral Painting. Regular lessons by mail. Painted and chromo designs to rent. Orders executed.
42 W. 23d St., H. A. JOHNSON, New York.

AGENTS coin money with our Amateur Photo outfit, and collecting family pictures to enlarge. Special 40 day offer. Empire Copying Co., 831 Canal St., New York.

Presbyterian Board of Publication's
LATE BOOKS.

GRIFFEN ALLEY FOLK.
Showing that even those sorely degraded by intemperance may be raised from the gutter to new lives.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

FROM ACCADIA TO MACHPELAH.
In which the life of Abraham is made interesting by being made real.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.15

MABEL'S SUMMER.
A tale of Child life in Northern India.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, 85 cents.

RALPH WESTON'S SECRET.
Showing how the appetite fo strong drink may descend from father to daughter, and again from mother to son.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

THE WEDDED LIFE.
By REV. J. R. MILLER, D.D
A little volume intended for presentation to the newly-wedded, and containing a marriage certificate.
16mo. Price, 60 cents.

Address orders to
JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't,
1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St., New York, N. Y.

NATURE'S CURE FOR CONSTIPATION, A Palatable Remedy.
TARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT
Seltzer Aperient.
TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT
Sick-Headache, AND DYSPEPSIA.
This is no violent purgative, but an elegant remedial agent, which is invaluable for the cure of Constipation, Torpid Liver, Sick Headache and Dyspepsia. It promotes the action of the bowels, skin and kidneys; is an efficient febrifuge, and is useful in all inflammatory diseases.
It is the most economical, elegant and effective remedy ever offered to the public, and is prescribed by physicians and recommended by druggists throughout the land. Manufactured only by TARRANT & CO., New York.

Useful for Everybody.
MANY MISTAKES MENDED
IN READING, WRITING and SPEAKING.
12mo. 320 pages. $1 by mail.
N. TIBBALS & SONS, New York

THE CAROL
—A BOOK OF—
Religious Songs
—FOR THE—
Sunday School and the Home,
—BY—
CHARLES W. WENDTE,
With poetical contributions by
Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Miss Louisa M. Alcott, Hezekiah Butterworth, and many others.
The Music, original and selected, by Geo. F. Root, J. R. Murray, J. B. Sharland, P. P. Bliss and J. B. Dykes, Stainer, Baruby, Handel, Mendelssohn and other eminent composers, old and new.
This work, long in preparation by an experienced Sunday School worker, contains over 200 separate musical selections, together with a number of musical and responsive services for the festival and ordinary occasions of the Sunday School and the Home Altar.
Price 35 cents each by mail, postpaid; $3.60 a dozen by express, charges not prepaid.
☞ Specimen Pages Free.
PUBLISHED BY
THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O,
The J. CHURCH CO., 19 E. 16th St., New York City.

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers 805 Broadway, New York

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for
PLATFORM ECHOES
or LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART,
By John B. Gough.
His last and crowning life work, brim full of thrilling interest, humor and pathos. Bright, pure, and good, full of "laughter and tears," it sells at sight to all. To it is added the Life and Death of Mr. Gough, by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT. 1000 Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $100 to $200 a month made. ☞ Distance no hindrance as we give Extra Terms and Pay Freights. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

GEO. MATHER'S SONS,
PRINTING INK
Manufacturers. Superior Black and Colored Ink Lithographic and Plate Ink. Varnishes, etc. 60 John street, New York.
The Intelligencer is printed with our ink.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 Days. No Pay until Cured. J. L. STEPHENS, M. D., Lebanon, Ohio.

YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL
Finds pleasure in its Music. Bright Songs make the Children happy. If you are in need of a new set of Singing Books, examine the following:

Songs of Promise. For Sunday Schools, Prayer and Conference Meetings. By J. H. Tenney and E. A. Hoffman. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.
SONGS OF PROMISE fill this beautiful book, and they have a great variety, having been contributed by many able writers. The book has 160 pages and 149 hymns, each with its own tune. Music and words mostly new.

Singing on the Way. By Mrs. Belle M. Jewett and Dr. Holbrook. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.
A capital book, containing 160 pages of excellent songs, hymns, and "occasional" pieces, such as will be welcomed in the Sunday school. Each piece may be played upon the organ.

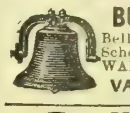
Song Worship. For Sunday Schools. By L. O. Emerson and W. F. Sherwin. Price 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.
A book that is intended to lift the service of song in the Sabbath school above the ordinary level, without putting it beyond the reach of the vast majority.

Fresh Flowers. For Infant Classes in Sunday Schools. By Emma Pitt. Price 25 cents; per dozen, $2.40.
A dainty little book, as full as it can hold of sweet melodies with pretty verses set to them, such as every child will understand and enjoy.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y.

BELLS.

McShane Bell Foundry
Finest Grade of Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS for CHURCHES, &c.
Send for Price and Catalogue. Address
H. McSHANE & CO.,
Mention this paper. Baltimore, Md.



BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Fire Alarms, Farms, etc. FULLY WARRANTED. Catalogue sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

MENEELY & COMPANY
West Troy, N. Y. Bells,
For Churches, Schools, etc., also Chimes and Peals. For more than half a century noted for superiority over all others

CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO
SUCCESSORS IN BELLS TO THE
BLYMYER MANUFACTURING CO
CATALOGUE WITH 1500 TESTIMONIALS
CINCINNATI O. BELLS, CHURCH, SCHOOL, FIRE ALARM

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

I CURE FITS!
When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS, a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.
Address, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

THE
Christian Intelligencer
IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT
48 Church St., cor. Fulton, N. Y.,
BY THE
CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOC.
Editors:
REV. J. M. FERRIS, D.D.,
REV. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
Associate Editor:
MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

TERMS,
$2.65 per annum.
Ministers and Theological Students, $2.
SINGLE COPIES, 3 CENTS.
☞ Read these Instructions carefully.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS pertaining to the literary columns of the paper must be addressed to the Editors; and those inclosing manuscripts to be returned must be accompanied with envelopes stamped and addressed. No attention will be paid to anonymous communications.

THOSE relating to the business department, to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION, Box 2117, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIBERS, NOTICE.—The date following your name on the direction label informs you to what month and year your subscription is paid. If this date is not changed within two weeks after payment is made, drop us a postal card and we will investigate and reply. Please examine the date, and if in arrears, remit the amount due.

REMITTANCES ARE AT THE RISK OF THE SENDER, unless made by Draft, Check, or P. O. Money Order. These, if lost, can be readily replaced.

Checks, etc., to order of CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION.

IN CHANGING AN ADDRESS, it is necessary to send the OLD as well as NEW address. The change cannot be made unless this is done. And in order to prevent the loss of papers, it will be well to notify the office at least ten days before the contemplated change, as the mail lists are prepared that much in advance of each issue.

ALWAYS GIVE THE NAME OF THE P. O. where the paper is received.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

The Home.

AUNT MARJORIE'S CORNER

The Lesson of the Blind Man.

IN the scene which formed one of our recent Sunday-school lessons, where Christ heals the man born blind and His disciples ask Him: "Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he should be born blind?" how strange, how almost incomprehensible must have seemed to them His answer, "Neither hath this man sinned nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest in him."

This was indeed a new doctrine; in every heathen nation prosperity had been considered an indication of the favor of the gods; the Jews themselves were accustomed to regard affliction as the visible sign of Jehovah's displeasure. It was on this that Job's friends based their argument that his sufferings must be the punishment for his sins. The ministry of suffering, the blessedness of affliction, sorrow, loss and pain, as part of God's thoughts of love toward us, was all uncomprehended. True, in that sublime drama, God Himself had vindicated Job and reproved his false accusers; true, the prophets had caught faint echoes of the glorious truth, but it was faint and dim indeed to the toiling multitudes of earth, till Christ unfolded in all its heavenly fulness the manifestation of Himself, that through discipline and trial was to be wrought in the hearts of men. Paul voices the same truth when he declares, "All things work together for good to them that love God," and again, "For we know that our light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

And still to-day it is a truth hard to be understood. And alas! how often we forget the words of the Master, and sitting under the shadow of bereavement and in the darkness of trial cry out, "Who did sin? What have we done to merit this? Why is heaven's displeasure visited on us?" and seek for the wrath in the stroke rather than the love. In the story it is not only the eyes, but the soul of the blind man that is opened. "Lord, I believe," is the cry of his heart, and we see that the darkness of years is indeed the way by which he has been led to the knowledge of Christ and His salvation. But how is it, O friend, with you and I? Are the trials of this life, its sorrows, its burdens, drawing us nearer and revealing to us more clearly He who is indeed the Light of the World. In every hour of darkness are we seeking the lesson that God would have it hold for us?

For few, if any, are the hearts but know such hours, and feel the weight of such burdens. The mother has her manifold cares,—the sick baby, the turbulent children, the wants and often waywardness of the little flock committed to her care; the housekeeper, her countless fretting perplexities; the teacher, her routine or wearisome duties; the business man, his sharp anxieties; the laboring man, his constant struggle in the fight for existence. To one it may be sickness; to another bereavement; to another disappointment, hopes deferred, ambitions crushed, failure of heart's desires. Some have poverty; others loneliness; others the fierce stress of sore temptation, or it may be a life-long struggle against some tendency to evil. The burdens of life are as varied as humanity itself, and many of its heaviest ones are carried in a secrecy whose very enforced silence is an added weight. God pity the heart that can ask no human sympathy, that must conceal their pain with a smile, and break and make no sign.

But whatever the trial, how are we bearing it? remains the supreme question. As the wheel shapes the diamond, into what fashion are these wheels of sharp pressure shaping us. For no trial, no grief, not even one of the pin-pricking daily frets, but leaves its impress on the soul for time and eternity. Are we learning through them patience, self control, kindliness? are they making us narrow in thought, contracted in sympathy, bitter toward God and hard toward man? or are we growing sweeter in nature, broader in sympathy, stronger in faith, and nearer to God?

Happy, indeed, if through cross and loss, and pain and grief, the "works of God" are being made manifest in us.

ELA THOMAS.

The Use of the Fan

MAY Aunt Marjorie have a word about the use of the fan in church? It is the greatest comfort to fan one's self if the day be oppressive, but who has a right to fan so recklessly that a stream of ice-cold air is poured upon the shivering shoulders of a neighbor or on the back of her neck? The lady in the pew just in front may not feel incommoded by the heat which almost prostrates you; it is quite likely that for her the temperature is agreeable. Meanwhile, the draught of chilled air which she cannot escape, kept up as it is by the passage to and fro of your merciless fan, is very likely to give her neuralgia or send her home with a chill which anticipates headache or fever. Please fan yourself only, and not your next neighbor or the lady in front.

College Boys on a Train.

IT was a railroad train they were on, although the use of the word in another and familiar sense would not be incorrect; and could boys be blamed for feeling somewhat exuberant at their release from the severer training of a whole year—four years, for aught I know? Their conversation, though by no means rude, was loud enough to be public property, so that whatever of it was of public interest may be publicly repeated. I withhold, however, all names, places and dates (only giving, in a parenthetical whisper, this clew to the curious reader—that the incident occurred on a well-known railway east of the Mississippi, during the month of June last past; that the young men were members of an American institution of learning; and that they were between fourteen and twenty-one years of age). They talked freely about the brilliant pranks of the closing days (or nights) of the term—something about transposed signs, stenciled fences, and somebody's horse carried somewhere where he didn't belong, or painted in an unnatural color, green for instance—just the same silly things that college boys did, to the best of my knowledge and memory, a generation ago—and I wondered that, with the marvellous progress in the science of education, they had not outgrown such fooleries. (These probably come in, however, as electives.)

After awhile one of the students took out from his hand bag a package of letters, and seemed absorbed in reading them, one after another; the writing, as I could see across the side, was neat and delicate—were they a mother's letters? and were they being read now for the first time? The young man answered the first question, if not the second, when his companion rallied him about his "love letters."

"Oh, they are only my mother's letters; I thought it would be the right thing to read them over, and get a little familiar with the home news before I got there!"

Meantime, another took out of his pocket a little phial of cachous, saying, "I must take a little something to cleanse my breath before I get to my mother; it might make her feel badly—not but that she probably knows I smoke, but I don't want to come in upon her suddenly so, and it is necessary to practice a little deceit, you know, to have everything smooth and pleasant."

When the conversation had again subsided, a middle aged, motherly looking lady who sat near them, and had of course seen and heard all that had passed, leaned forward and touched the arm of the last speaker, saying in a kindly way, "Excuse me for speaking to you, but I would like to ask you a question or two. I am thinking of sending my boy to your college, and I am curious to know whether it is customary for students there to read their mother's letters for the first time when on their way home; if so, I might save myself all the trouble of writing, and tell it all to him in vacation."

The student took it good-naturedly, and explained his companion's remarks after a fashion, but the lady had another question.

"And do all the young men have to take those little silver pills before they get home, so as not to distress their mothers?"

"Oh, she knows I smoke, only—"

"Yes, I heard what you said about it." And then she went on, in a lower voice, to tell him (and the rest, for all were listening) the experience of one of her sons, who—as nearly as I could catch the story—while away at some other school or college, had been converted to Christ, and then wrote home how, by the grace of his new life, he had given up one bad or doubtful habit after another—wine, tobacco, cards.

The last of her words I heard plainly: "He has been a very happy boy since, and I have been a very happy mother!"

I could see the tears in her eyes as she spoke, and, I thought, in those of the students, too.

By this time the cars had reached "the quiet little town," as the boys called it, where they lived, and they got out. I am sure that sincere prayers followed them then, and have gone up for them since, that the words so fitly spoken might be made words of help; and that they, with all other youth going out from the influences of Christian homes to meet the temptations of college life, might be kept from falling through the power of Christ resting upon them.
—Passenger, in The Congregationalist.

Warm Weather.

WITH all the suffering warm weather brings, it is well to remember that summer is ripening the autumn fruits and filling the barns with plenty. Instead of repining because we are sometimes too warm, let us go on with our work and think as little about the heat as possible, thankful that we are not operatives in stifling factories, or forced to stand over steaming tubs or smoking irons. Can we not by wearing plain, unruffled dresses, lessen the sultry work of the laundress in the heated term?

BETHANY BEE.

Tell Your Mother.

I WONDER how many girls tell their mothers everything! Not those "young ladies" who, going to and from school, smile, bow and exchange notes and cartes de visites with young men who laugh at you and your pictures, speaking in a way that would make your cheeks burn with shame if you heard it. All this, most incredulous and romantic young ladies, they will do, although they gaze at your fresh young faces admiringly, and send or give you charming verses or bouquets. No matter "what other girls do," don't you do it. School-girl flirtation may end disastrously, as many a foolish and wretched young girl can tell you. Your yearning for some one to love is a great need of a woman's heart. But there is a time for everything. Do not let the bloom and freshness of your heart be brushed off in a silly flirtation.

And, above all, tell your mother everything. "Fun" in your dictionary would be indiscretion in hers. It would be no harm to look and see. Never be ashamed to tell her, who should be your best friend and confidant, all you think and feel. It is very strange that so many young girls will tell every person before "mother" that which is most important she should know. It is very sad that indifferent persons should know more about her fair young daughter than she herself. Have no secrets that you would not be willing to trust to your mother. She is your best friend, and is ever devoted to your honor and interest. Tell her all.—Fanny Fern.

All for the Best.

A YOUNG mother was languishing on a bed of pain and weariness. Hopes and fears alternately prevailed in regard to her recovery; but as the days passed more particularly the latter. There were strong reasons why it seemed desirable that she should be spared. There were infirm parents, loving sisters, an affectionate husband, and a dependent child of a year old, whose comfort pleaded for lengthened life. But the sick one was patient and resigned. Her trust was in the unerring wisdom of her heavenly Father. To her absent mother she dictated the following message: "Tell her not to worry. God is planning it all just right."

She confided to His hands all her earthly interests, and earnestly plead with her own covenant God and Saviour in behalf of her dear boy soon to be motherless; and after a few more days of suffering she entered into that blessed world where "there shall be no more pain."

The plans of God are often quite different from ours. As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are His ways higher than our ways and His thoughts than our thoughts. But He is "excellent in counsel and wonderful in working." His plans are all laid in infinite wisdom and goodness. When we shall come to understand them we shall see that He made no mistakes, but that all things have worked together for good to them that love Him.—American Messenger.

Bits.

....Small service is true service while it lasts,
Of humblest friends, bright creature, scorn not one.
The daisy by the shadow that it casts,
Protects the lingering dewdrop from the sun.
—Wordsworth.

....Always say a kind word if you can, if only that it may come in, perhaps, with singular opportuneness, entering some sad man's darkened room like a beautiful firefly, whose happy convolutions he can not but watch, forgetting his many troubles.

....Whether we go or stay, we all move on; from our Mondays to our Saturdays; from one experiencto another, and before us and beside us passes always and abides near that presence of the Lord.

....“Rolf House,” by Lucy C. Lillie, is among numerous stories for girls one of the most delightful. As a sequel to “Nan,” another charming tale by the same author, it has already appeared in the pages of Harper's Young People. Both have awakened the clamorous enthusiasm of the multitude of juveniles who read that favorite periodical. The attractive volume, replete with illustrations, now offered by the publishers, is sure to meet with favor. (Harper & Bros.)

....“Griffin Alley Folk; or, Pearls from the Slums,” by Ernest Gilmore, belongs to an order of stories which perhaps do not furnish the healthiest sort of reading for young people. It may have a mission to fulfil in calling attention to the condition of the poor and degraded, yet the impressions it makes upon the mind, besides being of themselves unpleasant, seem calculated to stimulate the imagination rather than the heart and life. (Presbyterian Board of Publication.)

....“Silver Rags,” one of the “Pine Cone Series,” by Willis Boyd Allen, is an entertaining story which will give much pleasure to the young people. The boys and girls of whom it tells spent a happy summer on a farm in the heart of the Maine woods. Their sports and adventures are well described, and the book is fitly illustrated. (D. Lothrop & Co.)

CHILDREN'S PORTFOLIO.

Xiphosura, the Sword-Tail Crab.

“This great and wide sea wherein are things creeping innumerable.” —Psalm 104:25.

COULD you stand beside me this beautiful July morning on the tower built upon the mountain-top just opposite my home, you would behold

“A lovely plain, as Eden fair,
Extending to the sea.”

Then I would change our little Psalm-verse, as our friends have changed it in the Revised Bible. Handing you my spy glass, and pointing in the right direction, I would say to you,

“Yonder is the sea great and wide,
Wherein are things creeping innumerable.”

Among the “things creeping innumerable” in this “great and wide sea” are the distinguished Limuli, or King Crabs.

On Fourth of July eve my brother brought home with him, to contribute to my enjoyment, not only Roman candles, blue lights, spinning wheels, etc., but a large, living King Crab, with a grand Greek name, for he carried a long, straight-pointed sword-like appendage, called a tail.

XIPHOSURA, THE SWORD-TAIL CRAB,

As soon as Xiphosúra arrived he received the attention he deserved, and was shown to his apartment, closely resembling the one occupied in former days by Diogenes, the Greek philosopher. Expressing the hope that Xiphosúra, like Diogenes, would make himself at home in his tub, we remembered that his tastes were not in all respects similar to those of this cynic philosopher, (so-called because of his surly, dog-like disposition). You have doubtless heard that Diogenes was asked by Alexander the Greek one day: “Can I render you any service?” To this polite inquiry, Diogenes replied: “Yes; stand out between me and the sun!” Xiphosúra, though a crab, was not crabbed like Diogenes, and was pleased to have us shade him from the sun. He did not enjoy the sunbeams. Why, they may have been the cause of his discovery and capture! He may have left his ocean home for a stroll upon the shore, but finding the sun's rays unendurable have sheltered himself therefrom by burrowing in the sand and hiding himself in the hole thus made; unfortunately, however, letting his pointed tail show itself above the sand to the fisherman who brought him away. In Molucca, members of Xiphosúra's family are known by the name of “the Long Tailed Molucca Crabs,” and their tails are used by the natives for spear-heads and arrow-points, thus producing fearful wounds. They are said to be harmless weapons while in the possession of their rightful owners, the King Crabs; probably only worn by them for useful and ornamental purposes.

Xiphosúra, being “out of his element,” we gave him an abundance of fresh water, salted with salt, that he might not remember too regretfully his watery kingdom, “the great and wide sea.” As he moved about therein, his body and limbs were entirely concealed by a curious horse-foot-shaped shield or buckler, appearing to be in two parts, joined across the centre of his back. Upon the upper surface of this large rounded shell were the eyes of Xiphosúra, one on either “cheek.” They were not single like yours and mine, but compound and facetted; that is, each one resembled somewhat a diamond or a multiplying glass, in having several surfaces. This arrangement enabled Xiphosúra to look in several directions at once. His shield or buckler, because of its shape, gave him the name of the Horse-foot Crab. When he lay upon his back we saw how closely on its under side it resembled a horseshoe in form, and why he was called the Horseshoe Crab.

He had a very singular head, for on one side of the shell were his eyes, and on this other side we now saw his mouth, with its upper and under lips. Surrounding the mouth were his jaws, having serrated (saw-like) teeth; from these extended his six pairs of shelly legs, ending with sharp claws, which carried the food to his jaws to be properly prepared before swallowing. This arrangement gave him the name of “the Mouth-footed Crab.”

I could not perceive that Xiphosúra had a nose or ears, but he doubtless had the senses of smelling and hearing.

I was very much interested in what I called his “swimming apparatus,” consisting of six leathery flaps, fitting perfectly the one over the other. To the inner and upper surfaces of five of these his gills or breathing organs were attached, numbering hundreds of beautiful little rounded leaves lying closely one above another, too many to be counted, and so thin and yet so firm in texture that I marvelled. Truly, Xiphosúra was “wonderfully made.”

On Fourth of July (Sunday) afternoon, Xiphosúra became motionless, and we saw to our sorrow that he no longer breathed. His limbs and body have been removed from his shell, but his sword-tail is still in its place. In the East Indies, where the distant relatives of Xiphosúra may be found, we would be told that this shell can be made useful as a saucepan or a ladle; and that our lamented Xiphosúra, the Sword-Tail Crab, is after all no better than his unknown relatives, the Sauce pan Crabs, whom he sufficiently resembled to be called by their family name.

Xiphosúra, the King Crab, has been teaching you and me that the great God who made him is very wise and very good. While we have been thinking about Xiphosúra, I hope we have all been feeling as the Psalmist did when he sang:

“O Lord, how manifold
Thy works in wisdom framed!
The earth is full of wealth untold,
Beneficence unnamed.

“So this great sea and wide,
Where things unnumbered creep;
Beasts small and great there swiftly glide,
And populate the deep.

“Thy love and pity grand
Assure them timely food;
Thou op'nest Thy paternal hand,
And they are filled with good.”

E. S. C.

Humming-Birds.

OUR pretty little humming-birds are universally admired for their small size, as well as for the metallic lustre of their plumage. Their throats are especially brilliant, and are often adorned with a variety of beautiful colors. The bills of these birds are always long and slender, but it has been observed that they are either straight or curved, according to the shape of the flowers they frequent.

These active little birds visit the flowers not so much to obtain honey as to capture the insects that have been attracted there by the sweet juices. The tongue, however, contains two hollow tubes, and it is divided at the end, thus serving the double purpose of catching insects and of sucking the juices from flowers.

The humming sound which accompanies the flight of these birds, and from which they take their name, is produced by the exceeding rapid motion of their wings. They seldom alight when taking their food. By beating the air they hover before the flowers long enough to secure the feast; then they dart so suddenly from one blossom to another that we are scarcely able to catch more than a glimpse of the glitter and sparkle of their bright colors.

Humming-birds live in pairs, and the male defends his little family with much spirit. Indeed, the female herself is not wanting in courage, and is slow to abandon her nest even after it has been torn down. A brave little humming bird once won the admiration of her observers by sticking to her nest and raising her brood after the branch on which the nest was situated had been cut from the tree. As soon as it was discovered, the branch was immediately tacked up on a fence near by, and fortunately the birds did not allow their domestic arrangements to be interrupted by the accident.

These birds sometimes return to the same tree for several seasons in succession, and the young birds appear to stay with their parents until the fall, when they all go South together.

The cup-shaped nest of our common humming bird (the ruby-throat) is a tiny affair, made of soft down taken from the stems of ferns. It is then covered with mosses and lichens so closely resembling the branch on which it is placed that it is extremely difficult to find the nest.

In many cases of discovering these nests the birds have betrayed their own secret by their suspicious activity. In one instance that came to our notice the birds made frequent visits to a blackberry bush, where they collected cobwebs and carried them to a certain spot on the branch of a tall tree. Curiosity was excited by their movements, and on examining the spot, after some time had been allowed to pass, a beautifully finished nest was found, containing two white eggs scarcely larger than peas.—Harper's Young People.

Black Your Boots.

A BOOK has lately been issued containing the following story: One day, when I was in college, I heard a young lady say, “I don't think much of college fellows!” To my inquiry as to the grounds of so singular an opinion, she replied: “They do not black the heels of their boots.”

When I protested that the charge could not be true of them all, she responded:

“Oh no, I suppose not; but the exception proves the rule. I have noticed that most of them only black the front part of their boots; and they like reversible collars and cuffs.”

What does it indicate when the heels of the boots are not blacked? The boy is not thorough. He only does what he is forced to do. If he thought he would pass among people if he did not black his boots at all, they would never be blackened.

Boys laugh at girls, and they say they pay too much attention to clothes. How do the boys like to see their sisters with soiled collars, buttons off their boots, a ruffle hanging on their dress? It is the evidence of a true gentleman or a true lady when the clothing worn is in order and suitable.

Dress and the way it is worn is an indication of character. If the heels of the boots are blacked, you may be pretty sure that the boy or man is thorough in whatever he undertakes.

Little Heads Together.

NELLIE'S PUZZLE.

Take the first and the last letter of each of the required words in order to form the name of a capital city of Europe.

My first is composed of seven letters and is the capital of Ceylon Island.

My second is composed of eleven letters and is a name given to certain brilliant flowers.

My third, which is composed of seven letters, is a girl's name.

My fourth is composed of four letters and is the home of a bird.

My fifth is composed of six letters and is the name of a native of this country.

My sixth has twelve letters and is the office of an overseer

My seventh has five letters and is a cup with a long handle.

This puzzle was invented for the “Little Heads” by NELLIE LEFFERTS.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

MISPLACED WORDS.

Arrange the following words to make the introductory lines of a poem by Jean Ingelow.

Grew corn deep ripening thick and while,
There here and and stood men reap to,
Morn put I one heart sleep to my,
Way took I lanes my to the and,
Thistle-head on a goldfinch the
Seedlets scattering stood the while fed;
Gossip spread pretty wrens the their,
Roundelay random joined or a.

Answers to Puzzles of July 14th.

Enigma.—Attila, Titus, Latinus, Otho, Hannibal, Ovid Leo, Flavian, Vitellius, Galba, Sabines, Veii, Aedui.
I have been all things, and all is of little value

Diamond.—
A FUN
FUSED
AUSTRIA NERVE
DIE
A

Pi.— There is a pleasure in the pathless woods;
There is a rapture on the lonely shore;
There is society where none intrudes
By the deep sea and music in its roar.

Correct answers from “Ittalie,” “Prague,” Rapple Bowne Lewis D. and Jennie Labagh.

Pharaoh's House in Tahpanhes.

Interesting Discovery by Mr. Flinders Petrie.—A Palace Mentioned by the Prophet Jeremiah.—The Refuge of the Daughters of Zedekiah.

A VERY curious and interesting discovery has been made in the loneliest and dreariest corner of the Northeastern Delta. In a land where previous explorers have found only temples and tombs—the monuments of an extinct faith and the graves of a dead nation—Mr. Flinders Petrie has lighted upon the ruins of a royal palace. Not a palace of the dubious prehistoric Byzantine sort, but a genuine and highly respectable structure, with an unblemished pedigree and a definite place in the history of four great nations. In a word, the fortunate finder of Naukratis has for the last six or eight weeks been working upon a large mound, or group of mounds, called Tell Defenneh, which Egyptologists and historians have long identified with the "Pelusiac Daphnæ" of the Greek writers and the "Tahpanhes" of the Bible. Here he has discovered the ruins of that very palace to which, as recorded in the Book of the Prophet Jeremiah (chapter 43), Johanan, the son of Kareah, followed by "all the captains of the forces" and "the remnant of Judah," brought the fugitive daughters of Zedekiah, then a dethroned and mutilated captive in Babylon. This flight of the Hebrew princesses took place about B. C. 585, during the reign of Ua-ab-Ra (26th Egyptian dynasty), whom the Hebrews call Hophra, and the Greeks Apries. The Pharaoh received them with hospitality. To the mass of Jewish immigrants he granted tracts of land extending from Tahpanhes to Bubastis, while to the daughters of Zedekiah, his former ally, he assigned this royal residence, which the Bible calls "Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes."

At the time when these events happened the whole of this part of the Delta, to the westward as far as Tanis (San), to the southward as far as the Wady Tûmîlât, was a rich pastoral district, fertilized by the annual overflow of the Pelusiac and Tanitic arms of the Nile. It is now a wilderness, half marsh, half desert. Towards the eastern extremity of this wilderness, in the midst of an arid waste relieved by only a few sand hills overgrown with stunted tamarisk bushes, lie the mounds of Defenneh. Far from roads, villages, or cultivated soil, it is a place which no traveller goes out of his way to visit, and which no explorer has hitherto attempted to excavate. Sixteen miles of marsh separate it on the one side from Tanis, while on the other the horizon is bounded by the heron-haunted lagunes of Lake Menzaleh and the mud-swamps of the plain of Pelusium. The mound consists of three groups situate from half a mile to a mile apart, the intermediate flat being covered with stone chips, potsherds, and the remains of brick foundations. These chips, potsherds, and foundations mark the site of an important city in which the lines of the streets and the boundaries of two or three large enclosures are yet visible. Two of the mounds are apparently mere rubbish heaps of the ordinary type; the third is entirely composed of the burnt and blackened ruins of a huge pile of brick buildings, visible, like a lesser Birs Nimroud, for a great distance across the plain. Arriving at his destination towards evening, footsore and weary, Mr. Petrie beheld this singular object standing high against a lurid sky and reddened by a fiery sunset. His Arabs hastened to tell him its local name; and he may be envied the delightful surprise with which he learned that it is known far and near as "El Kasr el Bint el Yahudî—the Castle of the Jew's Daughter."

Seeing at once that the interest of the place centred in this "Kasr," Mr. Petrie forthwith pitched his camp at the foot of the slope between the tamarisks and the right bank of the brackish canal which intersects the outskirts of the mound and expands somewhat higher up into two good-sized lakes. The place being literally in the midst of an uninhabited desert, he had brought with him a patriarchal following of Nebesheh folk—men, boys, and girls, some forty souls in all, to say nothing of camels and baggage. How, with true Arab ingenuity, they then and there extemporized a camp, and were immediately at home and contented, is best described in a passage from Mr. Petrie's journal, written the next evening:

As I write here in my tent there is a continual prattle and babble going on among the Arabs under the surrounding bushes. Some have dug out burrows in the sandy hillocks and stacked branches of tamarisk around; others have mounded up walls of earth and roofed them over with boughs. Every bush has its bird. One one side is a group of men and boys all in the dark, doing dervishes at a "zikr," howling, groaning, calling upon Allah, louder and louder, quicker and quicker, till they break down from exhaustion. On the other side is a party of girls wildly singing shreds of songs in unison chorus, to the clapping of their hands. It is a picturesque scene. All around are clumps of tamarisk bushes, lit by the orange glow of a big fire here and there. Yonder, showing darkly, are the mounds of Tahpanhes; and here the old canal gleams in the dim starlight.

Want of space forbids us to follow Mr. Petrie step by step in his work of exploration; enough that he at once concentrated his forces upon the "Kasr," which has now been so thoroughly cleared out and cleared up that not only its architectural structure, but its history has been rescued from oblivion.

The building was first a stronghold, quadrangular, lofty, massive; in appearance very like the keep of Rochester Castle. It contained sixteen square chambers on each floor, both the outer walls and partition walls being of enormous strength. It is, of course, impossible to guess of how many stories it was originally composed; but the bulk of the mound consists of its débris. This stronghold was built by Psammetichus I., whose foundation deposits (consisting of libation-vessels, corn-rubbers, specimens of ores, model bricks, the bones of a sacrificial ox and of a small bird, and a series of little tablets in gold, silver, lapis-lazuli, jasper, cornelian, and porcelain, engraved with the royal name and titles) have been discovered by Mr. Petrie under the four corners of the building. The name of the founder being thus determined, we at once know for what purpose the castle was erected. Having fought his way to the throne by means of a force of Carian and Ionian mercenaries, Psammetichus granted them a permanent settlement at "Daphnæ of Pelusium," where, according to Herodotus, they occupied two large camps, one on each side of the river. Here they continued to be quartered till Amasis, a later king of the same dynasty, transferred them to Memphis.

"The docks where their vessels were laid up and the ruins of their habitations," says Herodotus, "were still to be seen in my day at the place where they dwelt originally, before they were removed by Amasis." (Book ii., chap. 154.)

Now, this "Kasr," built by Psammetichus, probably about B. C. 665 or 666, stands in the midst of what was once a square courtyard, the whole being again enclosed within an immense walled area measuring 2,000 feet in length by 1,000 feet in breadth. This area has a north gate opening upon the canal and a south gate towards the ancient military route between Egypt and Syria; and its great boundary wall was fifty feet in thickness. Some three or four acres of the enclosed soil have been turned over by Mr. Petrie's Arabs to a depth of six inches, and have yielded an extraordinary number of arrow-heads, in bronze and iron, besides horses' bits, iron and bronze tools, fragments of iron grating, iron chains, etc. Here, then, we have one of the camps mentioned by Herodotus, and that necessary adjunct, a strong and lofty tower, which not only commanded an uninterrupted view of the surrounding country, but served for the headquarters of the general and his staff and for an occasional royal residence. The other camp should be sought on the opposite side of the canal, which is, in fact, the ancient Pelusiac branch, now silted up and canalized. As for the docks which were visible in the old traveller's time, they are perhaps yet traceable where one of the before-mentioned lakes is dammed across by an antique "Gisr," or dyke, which only needs a little repairing to be as sound as ever.

The "Kasr," however, does not consist of the tower only; neither is it all of the one date. A number of later structures have been added on against its outer walls, thus forming a curiously irregular ground plan and more than doubling the superficial extent of the original building. These "annexes" appear to have opened outwards, and to have had no communication with the central tower. One was built by the founder; but some of the other additions (including a court with a fine limestone cornice, many blocks of which yet strew the ground) were probably the work of later kings. So much for this curious building, which is unlike any other ruin in Egypt. What the excavations have disclosed is, however, still more curious. And here it is necessary to remember that the place is not merely a ruin, but a burnt ruin, the upper portions of which have fallen in and buried the basements. Furthermore, it was plundered, dismantled, and literally hacked to pieces before it was set on fire. The state rooms, if one may use so modern a phrase, were lined with slabs of fine limestone covered with hieroglyphic inscriptions, bas-relief figures of captives, and the like, most delicately sculptured and painted. These now lie in splintered fragments, from among which Mr. Petrie has with difficulty selected a few perfect specimens. The whole place, in short, tells a tale of rapine and vengeance. It would be idle, under these circumstances, to hope for the discovery of objects of value among the ruins. Moreover, it was only in the basement chambers, where things might have fallen through from above, or have been left in situ, that there seemed to be any prospect of "finds" for the explorer. Now, the basements were the offices, and some of these offices have been found intact under the superincumbent rubbish. There is certainly nothing very romantic in the discovery of a kitchen, a butler's pantry, and a scullery. It would be more satisfactory to find a throne room or a treasure chamber. Yet even these domestic arcana become interesting when they form a part of an ancient Egyptian palace of 2,552 years ago. The kitchen of "Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes" is a big room with recesses in the thickness of the walls, which served for dressers. Here some fourteen large jars and two large flat dishes were standing in their places, unharmed amid the general destruction. A pair of stone corn rubbers, a large iron knife, various weights, and three small flat iron pokers—or possibly spits—were also found in this room. The butler's pantry, it need scarcely be said, was the room to which wine jars were brought from the cellars to be opened. It contained no amphoræ, but hundreds of jar-lids and plaster amphoræ-stoppers, some stamped with the royal ovals of Psammetichus, and some with those of Necho, his successor. Here, also, was found a pot of resin. The empty amphoræ, with quantities of other pottery, mostly broken, were piled in a kind of rubbish depot close by. Some of these amphoræ have the lute-shaped hieroglyph signifying "nefer" (good) scrawled three times in ink upon the side, which not to speak it profanely, may probably indicate some kind of "XXX" for Pharaoh's consumption. Most curious of all, however, is a small room evidently sacred to the scullery-maid. It contains a recess with a sink; a built bench to stand things upon; and recesses in the wall by way of shelves, in which to place what has been washed up. "The sink," writes Mr. Petrie, "is formed of a large jar with the bottom knocked out, and filled with broken potsherds placed on edge. The water ran through this, and thence into more broken pots below, placed one in another, all bottomless, going down to the clean sand some four or five feet below." The potsherds in this sink were covered with organic matter, and clogged with fish bones.

In other chambers there have been found large quantities of early Greek vases ranging from B.C. 550 to B.C. 600, some finely painted with scenes of gigantomachia, chimeras, harpies, sphinxes, processions of damsels, dancers, chariot races, and the like, nearly all broken, but many quite mendable; also several big amphoræ with large loop handles, quite perfect. A sword-handle with a wide curved guard, some scale-armor, bronze rings, amulets, beads, seals, small brass vessels, and other minor objects of interest have also turned up, and two rings engraved with the titles of a priest of Amen. Some small tablets inscribed with the name of Amasis (Ahmes II.) and a large bronze seal of Apries (Hophra) are important, inasmuch as they complete the name-links in the historic chain of the twenty-sixth dynasty.

Apries brings us to B. C. 591—570, and to the time of the flight of the daughters of Zedekiah. It may be that the Egyptian monarch added on some of the later external chambers of the "Kasr" for the accommodation of their suite; for "all the captains of the forces," all the nobles, and priests, and merchants of Judea were among the immigrant multitude. With them also, sorely against his will and judgment, came the prophet Jeremiah, whose first act on arriving at the Tehpanhes was to foretell the pursuit of the Babylonian host:

Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying, Take great stones in thine hand, and hide them in mortar in the brickwork which is at the entry of Pharoah's house in Tahpanhes, in the sight of the men of Judah; and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel: Behold I will send and take Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon, my servant, and will set his throne upon these stones that I have hid; and he shall spread his royal pavilion over them. And he shall come, and shall smite the land of Egypt; such as are for death shall be given to death, and such as are for captivity to captivity, and such as for the sword to the sword. (Jeremiah, chap. 43, v. 8, 9, 10, 11.)

We quote from the Revised Version, which has an important alternative reading in the margin to which we will presently refer. In the meantime, here is a verbatim extract from a page of Mr Petrie's journal written early in April :

Outside the buildings of the Kasr, I find by repeated trenchings an area of continuous brickwork resting on sand, about 100 feet by 60 feet facing the entrance of the later buildings at the east corner. The roadway ran up a recess between the buildings and this platform. The platform has no traces of chambers, and seems to be an open air place for out-door purposes, such as loading goods, arranging things, etc.; just such a place as is needed for business, and such as even poor villagers make before their houses, levelling a smooth, hard bed of mud, which they keep clean swept. It is curious how exactly this answers to the brick area, "at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes," and it would be exactly the place where Nebuchadnezzar would "spread his royal pavilion." The rains have washed away this area and denuded the surface, so that, although it is two or three feet thick near the palace, it is reduced in greater part to a few inches, and is altogether gone at the northwest corner.

Now, the Arabic name for a platform of this kind is "Balât," and that we have in this "Balât" the brickwork referred to in the Bible is scarcely to be doubted by the most determined sceptic. And it is to be noted that in the alternative reading above mentioned "brickwork which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house" is rendered as "the pavement or square."

To identify Jeremiah's stones (unless he had first inscribed them, which is unlikely) would of course be impossible. Yet Mr. Petrie has looked for them diligently, and turned up the brickwork in every part. Some unhewn stones have indeed been dug out from below the surface, and it is open to enthusiasts to identify them or not as they think fit, but about the "Balât" it is scarcely possible that there should be a difference of opinion. Did Nebuchadnezzar really come to Tahpanhes and spread his royal pavilion on that very spot, and was Jeremiah's prophecy fulfilled? Egyptian inscriptions say that he came, and that Apries defeated him; Babylonian inscriptions state that he conquered, and the truth is hard to discover. At all events, there are three clay cylinders of Nebuchadnezzar in the Museum at Bulak inscribed with the great king's name, titles, parentage, etc., which there is much reason to believe were found a few years ago at this place, and not, as the Arab sellers stated, at Tussûn, in the isthmus. Such cylinders were taken with him by Nebuchadnezzar in his campaigns for the purpose of marking the place where he planted his standard and throne of victory.

The smashed, shattered, and calcined ruins of "Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes" tell the end of the story.—London Times.

....Each member of the Congregationalist Sunday school at Sunderland, Conn., is invited to place in a box on his birthday as many pennies as he has years—$25 was thus raised during the past year for missionary purposes.

News of the Week.

(Continued from page five.)

The appointment of Henry Matthews as Home Secretary has caused quite a sensation in the new Cabinet. The appointment was due to the suggestion of the Queen. She was charmed by his vindication in the Crawford trial of the sanctities of English home life....A fatal fire in Thirty-second street, New York city. One man killed while making his way through a window, and three women injured ...New England visited by a heavy storm Thursday evening and Friday morning. Several buildings struck by lightning and burned. A few lives reported lost....A severe thunder storm reported in New York State last night. A great deal of damage done at Coney Island and Rockaway Beach....Two towns in Ohio, Allentown and Vaughnsville, completely swept away. Hail stones three inches in diameter fell....The body of Schnaubelt, the man who threw the Haymarket bomb, was found floating in the Erie Bay yesterday. His clothing had the appearance of having been torn by some great force, and wood splinters were found sticking in them.

MONDAY, AUG 2—A serious riot took place in Belfast last Saturday evening. The mob wrecked a number of houses thought to be inhabited by Catholics. Many persons were injured and one boy shot dead. Forty-six arrests have been made ...Abbé Liszt, the pianist, will be buried on Tuesday next in Bayreuth at his own request. ....Parnellites are willing to give the Tory Government time to prepare an Irish bill, but they will demand a measure for the suspension of evictions....Two men attempted to cross the Hudson river yesterday in a rowboat from Seventy-second street, when a swell from a passing steamer, supposed to be the "Long Branch," upset the boat and the occupants were drowned....All of the bodies have been taken from the schooner "Sarah Craig," which capsized off Sandy Hook in the heavy gale of last Friday evening. The bodies recovered were Mrs. Stevens, Miss Mamie Stevens, Miss Emma Merritt, Miss Maud Reltew, Mrs. Cora Askin and Chester Clark....Forty two shoe factories closed in Brocton, Mass....A man about twenty-eight years old was found dead in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, yesterday ...A heavy rain reported throughout Wyoming Valley. Crops injured, roads washed out, buildings carried away and bridges destroyed.

TUESDAY, 3.—Exception is taken by a prominent Englishman to Article V. of the Extradition Treaty....The new Government has made additional Ministerial appointments ...In France the latest returns show the election of 829 Republicans and 420 Conservatives....Seven lives were lost at a fire in Nantes....Mayor Harrison, of Chicago, gave his testimony yesterday in the Anarchist trial....General Butler and others visited the Englisb cutter "Galatea" in Marblehead Harbor....The United States Marshal took forcible possession of the City Hall at Utica, N. Y....Lawyer J. A. L. Whittier, of Boston, was arrested for embezzling $125,000 of his clients' money.... Maurice B. Flynn expelled from the Executive Committee of the County Democracy. ....Captain G. S. Burger committed suicide at Mamaroneck, by shooting himself.... John W. Britton is dead.

The purest, sweetest and best Cod Liver Oil in the world, manufactured from fresh, healthly livers, upon the sea-shore. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in the market. Made by CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., New York.

PIMPLES removed and the Skin made smooth by using Juniper Tar Soap, manufactured by Caswell Hazard & Co., New York
Sold by druggists.

Market Report.

Review of the New York Market for Butter, Cheese, etc. Reported by DAVID W. LEWIS & Co., Produce Commission Merchants, 49 Pearl St., New York.
Commission on Butter, Eggs, Poultry, etc., is five per cent; Flour, Grain, etc., 2½ per cent.
Marking-plates furnished when desired.

NEW YORK, July 31, 1886.

BUTTER.—Receipts for the week, 39,804 pks.; exports 2,382 pks.

The weather has been intensely warm all the week and most of the stock has arrived heated and oily; even that shipped by ice-cars has come in store with tops soft, owing to the delays at our railroad depots. This, together with a dull demand, has made free sales difficult, and the advance made early in the week barely sustained. Early in the week fancy creamery pails were sold at 21c., and even 22c. was talked of, but buyers hesitated, and later this style butter was in ample supply and freely offered at 20½c., and some lots went over unsold. Finest fresh dairy makes were in light supply and sold at 16a17c, with some special marks selling a trifle higher. Finest fresh Western creameries sold at 18a18½c., and we note sales of few parcels for export at 17½a18c., and 400 to 500 tubs of very good creameries at 16a16½c. Seconds and lower grades butter are very plentiful and in light demand at irregular prices. Over half of the exports were low grades for German account at 9a10c. We quote :

Fancy creamery	20	@ 0½
do dairy (selections)	—	@17
Good to fine	14	@16
Poor to common	9	@12½

CHEESE.—Receipts for the week, 57,970 boxes; exports 57,886 boxes.

Shippers have taken fine cheese all the week at 8c., with a few sales reported at ½c. more at the close. There was more enquiry for fair to good full creams, and best night's milk skims sold readily at our quotations. It fact, there was good steady demand for all kinds of cheese, and receipts about all taken. We quote :

Factory, white, full cream, finest	—	@ 8
" colored, " "	—	@ 8
" good to fine "	7	@ 7¾
" night milk skims	5	@ 6½
" skims	1	@ 3

EGGS.—Receipts for the week were 16,342 bbls.

Hot weather, liberal receipts and very moderate demand gave buyers the advantage, and prices ruled weak and lower. Strictly fresh near-by marks, however, have plenty of friends at this season of year at outside prices. We quote :

Near-by marks, strictly fresh laid, per doz. 15½@16
Western and Canada .....13½@14½

Publisher's Department.

A SOFT, VELVET TEXTURE is imparted to the skin by the use of Glenn's Sulphur Soap. For skin diseases it should be used freely. Never take a bath without it. It is also especially useful as a means of bleaching and purifying woolen, cotton and linen fabrics.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap heals and beautifies, 25c.
German Corn Remover kills Corns, Bunions, 25c
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye—Black & Brown, 50c.
Pike's Toothache Drops cure in 1 Minute, 25c.

Ayer's Ague Cure never fails to neutralize the poisons of malaria, and eradicate them from the system. This preparation is purely vegetable, contains no harmful ingredients, and, if taken according to directions, is warranted to cure fever and ague. Try it.

Scrofula, salt rheum, all humors, boils, pimples, and diseases of the blood, general debility, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, kidney and liver complaints, catarrh and rheumatism, are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Take it now. 100 Doses One Dollar.

The best cough medicine is Piso's Cure for Consumption. Sold everywhere. 25c.

Notice to Subscribers.

The little yellow label on your wrapper informs you to what time your subscription is paid. Kindly consult same, and if in arrears remit the amount due.

Our readers will confer a favor upon the publishers of this paper and, perhaps, find it to their own advantage if, when answering an advertisement found in these columns, mention is made that it was seen in THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

MARRIAGES.

BLAIR—NASH.—At Schuylerville, N. Y., on July 25, by the Rev. E. A. McCullum, Albert Blair to Marion Nash, all of Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

KEVITT—DOREMUS.—July 28, in Athenia, N. J., at the residence of the bride's parents, by Rev. Jno. L. Stillwell, Mr. Cornelius Kevitt to Miss Lavenia Doremus, both of Athenia.

VAN NAME — WYCKOFF. — In the Reformed Church of Currytown, Aug. 1, by Rev. Garret Wyckoff, assisted by Rev. J. H. Wyckoff, George W. Van Name, of Staten Island, to Lizzie, youngest daughter of Garret Wyckoff, Esq., and sister of the officiating clergymen.

DEATHS.

Obituary notices five cents per line (nine word to the line.) For subscribers we will insert fifteen lines free; all lines in excess of that number will be charged same as non-subscribers.

GARRABRANT.—On Saturday morning, July 24, at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. H. K. Cadmus, in East Orange, N. J., Mrs. Ann Garrabrant, aged 79 years and 3 months.

This remarkable woman was indeed a "mother in Israel."

Her life was one of the most unselfish devotion. The last person in the home of whom she thought was herself. Of domestic virtue and grace she was a model. "Her children" and grandchildren "arise up and call her blessed."

Nor was her walk and conversation outside the family circle any the less self-sacrificing. Pastors and friends all testify to Christian consistency and worth.

She loved her Lord, His Word and His Church. In her case "the shadow of death was turned into the morning."

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints." R. W. B.

Notices and Acknowledgments

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—Evangelical but not denominational. Prints in 147 languages in aid of foreign missions; grants religious reading to the needy; sends colporters to millions in our highways and hedges, and to the immigrants in Castle Garden and elsewhere. This work depends wholly on charitable gifts. Donations and legacies are earnestly solicited. A summary of the sixtieth year mailed free. O. R. Kingsbury, Treasurer, 150 Nassau street, New York.

FULTON STREET DAILY NOON PRAYER-MEETING,
113 Fulton Street, and 58 Ann Street,
Just east of Broadway, near William Street.
COME IN, REST, AND PRAY.
Stop 5, 10 15 or 20 minutes, or the hour, as your time permits.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall-st., N. Y.

JAMES PYLE'S

The Great Invention,
For EASY WASHING,
IN HARD OR SOFT, HOT OR COLD WATER.
Without Harm to FABRIC or HANDS
and particularly adapted to Warm Climates.
No family, rich or poor, should be without it.
Sold by all Grocers, but beware of vile imitations. PEARLINE is manufactured only by
JAMES PYLE, NEW YORK.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

By Taking

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

CURE FOR THE DEAF
PECK'S PATENT IMPROVED CUSHIONED EAR DRUMS Perfectly Restore the Hearing, and perform the work of the natural drum. Invisible, comfortable and always in position. All conversation and even whispers heard distinctly. Send for illustrated book with testimonials, FREE. Address or call on F. HISCOX, 853 Broadway, New York. Mention this paper.

The Church.

The Petrified Fern.

IN a valley, centuries ago,
Grew a little fern-leaf, green and slender,
Veining delicate and fibres tender;
Waving when the wind crept down so low.
Rushes tall, and moss, and grass grew round it,
Playful sunbeams darted in and found it
Drops of dew stole in by night, and crowned it;
But no foot of man e're trod that way,—
Earth was young and keeping holiday.

Monster fishes swam the silent main,
Stately forests waved their giant branches,
Mountains hurled their snowy avalanches,
Mammoth creatures stalked across the plain;
Nature reveled in grand mysteries,—
But the little fern was not of these,
Did not number with the hills and trees;
Only grew and waved its wild, sweet way;
No one came to note it day by day.

Earth, one time, put on a frolic mood,
Heaved the rocks and changed the mighty motion
Of the deep-strung currents of the ocean,
Moved the plain and shook the haughty wood,
Crushed the little fern in soft, moist clay,—
Covered it, and hid it safe away.
O the long, long centuries since that day!
O the changes! O life; bitter cost
Since that useless little fern was lost!

Useless? Lost? There came a thoughtful man
Searching Nature's secrets, far and deep;
From a fissure in a rocky steep
He withdrew a stone, o'er which there ran
Fairy pencilings, a quaint design,
Veinings, leafage, fibres clear and fine,
And the fern's life lay in every line!
So, I think, God hides some souls away,
Sweetly to surprise us, the last day.

—Mary L. Bolles Branch, in Journal of Education.

The Bible the Book of the People.

From the Address of Rev. Dr. Joseph Parker before the Joint Assemblies of the Congregational and Baptist Unions, London, May 14th, 1886.

I BELIEVE we shall largely qualify ourselves for a great and enduring work in proportion as we risk everything as to our church life and influence upon a grammatical interpretation of the Holy Bible in the light of human experience and a fearless interpretation of nature in the light of impartial science. I claim the supreme place for the Bible. I do not go to the theologian, but to the living fountain to which the theologian himself went. I have dismissed the priest who pretended to keep the altar of worship, and I will dismiss the priest who pretends to keep the altar of truth. If every man is to have free access to the throne of grace by Christ Jesus our Lord, every man must have free access to the Book of Revelations under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

There is no second Bible. There is no divinely-authorized metamorphosis or alias of the Bible. There are helps to Bible reading many and invaluable; but the Bible must be read by itself, for itself, in the light of itself, and every man must be responsible to its Divine author and not to its human interpreters. To some of those interpreters we may have been unjust. We may have made cast-iron of thoughts or expressions which the interpreters themselves would be the first to change under the influence of wider knowledge and clearer visions. My simple claim is that the Bible should always be allowed to speak for itself, because my belief is that whatever is essential to human redemption, pardon, purity and development is written in the Bible with a pencil of light. Again and again I would disclaim saying one word against learned and reverent interpreters of the Bible. I simply wish them to be kept in their right places as elder brethren, and not to be set up as idols, ruling generations of whose progress and advantages they could have had no personal knowledge.

There is a deep sense in which every man must be his own theologian. Human expressions of theology must change because language itself changes, and every tide of time's great sea brings in riches from the land that is beyond which must be added to the abounding treasures of the church. No one man knows all the truth; no sect has all the truth; that is as certain as that no vision can absorb all the sunshine and no roof can accommodate all the sky. It does seem to me, then, a thing worth doing to send men into all the villages of England who will help the people to read the Bible and lead the people to see that nature and revelation are expressions of the same God, and that both are open to reverent and patient inquiry without human penalty and without ecclesiastical degradation.

We may not, indeed, be always able to send learned men into the villages of England; but I will tell you whom we can send—we can send men who will say to the peasantry of England, "Let us read the Bible in our mother tongue together; let us read the 23d Psalm; let us listen to the sermon on the Mount; let us commit to memory the parable of the prodigal son; let us watch and wonder and pray at the cross of the Son of Man." Can such words be read in a right spirit without Jesus Himself drawing near and setting the heart aglow with a love kindred to His own, and making the darkening eventide brighter than the summer dawn? This is what we aim to do: to get men to read the Bible, to read it in the houses of the people, to read it at the bedside of the people, to read it as the book of the people, and to make the people feel that, come what may, the Word of the Lord endureth forever and is an open vision to the broken heart and the contrite spirit.

At the Prayer Meeting.

IT is to be greatly deprecated, when, for any reason, the idea goes abroad that every one present at a social prayer-meeting ought to be ready to lead in prayer. We grant there is a natural timidity which should by all means be conquered. Yet there are some whose temperament is such that it would be positive torture for them to take a leading part in public worship; and it might be something like tortures for others to listen to them, or at the very least would not tend to edification.

God's gifts are varied, and the silent prayers of these uneloquent souls may have wonderful power with the heart of God, though they do not reach the ear of any man. When they stay away from prayer-meeting because of their inability to do as others do, it is an unfortunate and needless sense of shame that keeps them back; but when others increase the reproach by their harsh judgments, it is unpardonable Pharisaism.—Moravian.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Home Readings.

LESSON 7, THIRD QUARTER.

M. The Last Supper ..... Luke 22: 1-30.
T. Jesus Teaching Humility..... John 13: 1-17.
W. The Chief Should be Servant..... Matt. 20: 20-34.
T. Humility before Honor ..... James 4: 6-17.
F. "In Honor Preferring One Another."... Rom. 12: 1-16.
S. Becoming Poor for Us..... 2 Cor. 8: 1-12.
S. Christ Pleased not Himself..... Rom. 15: 1-14.

—From the Westminster Question Book.

International Sunday-School Lesson.

BY REV. JOHN C. VAN DEVENTER.

August 15th.—"Jesus Teaching Humility."—John 13: 1-17.

Golden Text.—"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."—JOHN 13: 17.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—"He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."—LUKE 14: 11.

INTRODUCTION.

JOHN is now about to lead us into the very Holy of Holies of the Gospel temple. May we enter its sacred enclosure with loving reverence and eager heed to hear what God the Lord will say to each one of us. At the proper time Jesus sent two disciples into the city to find the designated "upper room" where He and His family might celebrate the Passover together. On the way to this gathering the old dispute about precedence broke out, so that the harmony of the occasion was marred by these small bickerings. So engrossed had they been with the question, "Who shall be greatest?" that it had not entered into the mind of any of them to volunteer to perform the lowly service of bathing the feet of the company upon their entering the room, although this was an attention which all had been accustomed to, and the absence of which they would regard as a personal discomfort, yet, as they had no servant, they must either serve one another or go unwashen. It was probably to administer a rebuke to the high-mindedness of His disciples that Jesus performed the wonderful act of condescension that now engages our attention.

THE LESSON.

SUBJECT—JESUS WASHING HIS DISCIPLES' FEET.

I. THE OCCASION.—VS. 1-3

V. 1.—"Now before the feast of the Passover." It seems probable that Jesus anticipated the regular time for celebrating the feast in order that He Himself, as the true Paschal Lamb, might be slain on the day appointed for the killing of the sacrifice. "When Jesus knew that his hour was come." Jesus had come up to Jerusalem for the purpose of giving His life for His sheep. He knew that His enemies were about to enjoy a seeming triumph over Him, and that He must go down into the lowest depths of humiliation before He could return to His Father's bosom. "Having loved his own which were in the world he loved them unto the end." Personal considerations, however absorbing, could not exclude thoughts of love from His heart. He took only a few moments for Himself, and gladly gave hours to His disciples at this time. The love of Jesus was persistent. He loved to the end; not merely the end of His life, but to the fulfilment of His loving plans.

V. 2.—"Supper being ended." Rather, supper being served. The foot-washing doubtless occurred at an early stage of the meal. "The Devil having now put it into the heart of Judas Iscariot." The direful contract had been made, and the traitor was only waiting a fit opportunity to fulfil his promise.

V. 3.—"Jesus knowing...." With full consciousness of His Divine prerogatives, and rapidly approaching glory, He assumed the lowly place of a common servant. The combination of circumstances by which this act was surrounded causes it to appear in a most wonderful light. In the face of His approaching agony, for the sake of an unworthy company, no one of whom would have done this service to his brethren, in disregard of all that He might claim of exaltation and honor, Jesus teaches the nobility of service.

II. THE SERVICE.—VS. 4-11.

V. 4.—"Laid aside His garments, and took a towel, and girded Himself." The outer robe of dignity is laid aside, even as He had emptied Himself at His incarnation; the badge of a menial office is assumed, and the Master is become a servant.

V. 5.—"Began to wash the disciples' feet." The water and vessel for this service were among the appointments of such a room, and, before the astonished company could recover themselves, He was bending over their feet in this work. He who accepted as His right the precious anointing at Bethany is now bestowing honor upon those who had murmured at the waste then. "And to wipe them with the towel." His service was not slighted. We may imagine the consciences of these men stirring them most unpleasantly as Jesus with eloquent silence rebukes their selfishness.

V. 6.—"Peter saith unto Him, Lord dost Thou wash my feet?" Conscious of his unworthiness, like the Baptist he shrinks from such a relation. He has not yet learned to trust and obey in silence.

V. 7.—"What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." The contrast between these clauses is hidden in our translation, What thou knowest not now, thou shalt learn hereafter. A fuller course of training is needed before he will be able to understand and appreciate his Lord.

V. 8.—"Thou shalt never wash My feet." He is not willing to submit to the Master. The preceding words ought to have silenced his opposition, but, instead, it becomes more emphatic, and demands a sharper rebuke. "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me." This act was something more than a simple every day service; it had a symbolic meaning, and Peter could not afford to wilfully throw away the grace offered to him in this symbol. We may almost regard this washing of the feet as the baptism of the disciples received at the hands of the Master Himself.

V. 9.—The sudden rush to the opposite extreme is very characteristic of Peter. He would not lose his interest in Christ for any consideration, and was ready to be immersed if that would secure the needed grace.

V. 10.—"He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet." Jesus borrows his figure from every-day life. After taking a full bath, for so the word is in the original, and returning home through the dusty streets, a person would find that his feet had become very much soiled, yet it would be only necessary to subject them to the customary washing to remove all travel stains and become "clean every whit." By this He teaches us that our pardon so far removes our guilt that we shall never need a repetition of that grace, but, that in our walk through life we shall be liable to contaminations which need to be often removed by penitence and prayer. "Ye are clean but not all." Knowing who should betray Him, He sought in this gentle way to arouse his conscience without attracting the attention of the others. He would do nothing to deliver Himself from the cross, but he would, if possible, still rescue Judas from hell.

III. THE LESSON.—VS. 12-17.

V. 12.—"After he had washed their feet." With the exception of Peter's remonstrance it is probable that entire silence accompanied the Saviour on His round of the couches. He breaks this silence Himself by calling their attention to His conduct. He asks, "Know ye what I have done to you?" not for the purpose of eliciting an answer, which they were not able to give, but in order to arouse their attention to the meaning of the act.

V. 13.—"Ye call me Master and Lord." These were the highest titles conferred by Jews upon their teachers and rulers. They were the due recognition of the dignity and authority of Jesus. This honor Jesus here claims as His right. "Ye do well, for so I am."

V. 14.—"If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet." If there was nothing incompatible with His station in rendering this service, then they ought never to allow a false sense of dignity to stand in the way of doing anything in the name of Christ which might be needed by a brother.

V. 15.—"For I have given you an example." One among multitudes of luminous, loving, lasting examples of our Lord. Oh that we might take to heart the counsel, "Do as I have done to you," then would Christ's people be Christlike, and the world would soon believe the Father sent Him.

V. 16.—"The servant is not greater than his lord." In other places than the Vatican do we find the servants demanding greater privileges and emoluments than those which the Master sought. He asked simply the privilege to serve, we ask to be served. He was content to minister, we seek to be ministered unto. Our comforts and joys in this life condemn us, unless we lay them all under tribute, and excel in service as we abound in blessings.

V 17.—"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." We know; are we doing? Is our knowledge practical? Is our faith living? or while we have a name, that we live are we dead?

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

1. Faithful love never fails

2 In yielding to temptation we become confederate with Satan.

3. Service is never undignified.

4 It is pride, not humility, that refuses to accept service from Christ.

5 Jesus knows just what service we need at His hand.

6. External rites cannot save. Jesus washed the feet of Judas.

7. We should imitate Jesus in spirit, word, and action

8. "IF YE KNOW THESE THINGS, HAPPY ARE YE IF YE DO THEM"

Past Influence.

"Gather up my influence, and bury it with me."—A young man's dying words.

BIND the free winds in their varying motion,
Chain the wild waves of the turbulent ocean,
Grasp, in its flight, the red bolt of the storm,
Choose for the cyclone the path it shall form,
Say to the rage of the tempest, be still,
But bid not past influence yield to thy will.

Thy light tongue hath spoken full many a word
That now pierces deeply the heart it once stirred;
Thy hand hath touched chords which are vibrating still,
And long shall re-echo the tones of thy will,
And deeper and louder will be sounding on
When thy soul to the far realm of spirits hath gone.

How vast was thy power no mortal may say,
It waits the revealing of earth's Judgment Day,
When thou at the bar of the highest shall meet
The Eye from whose glance there is then no retreat,
And withering beneath it, shall see the soul there
Which thou hast led blindly to guilt and despair,
The mind thou hast blasted with infidel thought,
Deep marked with the lines thine example hath wrought,
And shalt read in that dark and agonized brow,
THINE INFLUENCE, THINE INFLUENCE, ETERNAL AS THOU.

—S. A. J., in The Watchman.

Poor, Plain Annie.

SO graduation day came with its fine dresses and flushed faces.

Tom and I went. We always go. It pleases Prof. Pratt. Poor man, he works hard enough to be pleased once a year. He urges us to come in often and we promise to, but the year goes by before we really think of our promise.

But graduation day is always one to be remembered. This year several girls were to be graduated. We knew them well.

On our arrival we found the chapel crowded as usual, but Prof. Pratt beckoned us to seats where we could see and hear.

Moll Alderich was about to read her essay. Moll was popular for a certain sort of generosity. She rarely came to school without candy or peanuts She was constantly champing, and she loved to have others champ with her. So she would scatter her benefits freely. The champing ones all liked Moll. She was not particularly well dressed or handsome, and she had quite a struggle to keep her hands out of her pockets. But she triumphed fairly well by holding firmly to her tinted paper essay and hurrying through as fast as her tongue would let her. Her essay was something about going to Florida, taking a homestead and raising cane and peanuts. She was soon done, her bow made, bouquets gathered, seat regained and her busy fingers searching in her pocket for a caramel.

Josie Mason came next; a girl of brilliant mind. She could grasp things quickly and hold them firmly. Her essay was bright and strong and it elicited frequent applause

Annie Safford followed. We always liked Annie for her many excellent qualities, especially for her perseverance. Prof. Pratt said she would never give up till the hard problem was mastered. But Annie was plain and poor and her chances not at all flattering. She was doomed to leave the stage without a word or look of encouragement, except that two strange gentlemen exchanged glances as she passed to her seat as though they had said, "You'll hear from that girl some day!"

Over in the corner sat her father, and I noticed he wiped big tears away as she came near him and he whispered something whereat she smiled and blushed.

Victoria Granger was then announced. All eyes were now turned. She was the belle of Dunnvale. Of course Miss Victoria was almost overwhelmed with flowers as she retired from the platform

Artie Barr was the fifth. Her father was a millionaire, and he had early spoiled his child with finery and a fondness for show. In dress and jewels she seemed a queen. Indeed, for the abundance and glitter of it all she could hardly be seen.

That night Prof. Pratt gave a reception. Plain Annie was there with the others. Few noticed her, however; none invited her to the supper table. At last Tom and I urged her to go with us Occasionally she would cast a look over to the opposite table where the other girls, with several of the first young gentlemen of Dunnvale, were enjoying themselves to their utmost. Sparkle and fun and peals of laughter were there I wondered what Annie was thinking about, meanwhile.

Graduation day was now over. Each went their several ways, and the village prophets prophesied. A brilliant future was promised certain ones who had made the most sensation the day before. None wasted any prophetic breath on plain, poor Annie Safford.

Tom and I heard what was said, and laid it away and wondered how it would all turn out.

. . . . . .

It is some years now since graduation day. Many things have turned out, but not one as the prophets said.

Champing Moll is a confirmed dyspeptic. Tom and I often meet her in the confectionary. Her face is much older. Her eyes wander through the glass case in search of candy Still she champs much as a cow chews her cud. She has had an entirely new set of teeth, and her dentist says these must soon be replaced The village doctor says the tissues of her stomach are broken down, and that if she lives till she is thirty she will have the appearance of a person of sixty. So much for Moll. Her Florida cane field and garden of peanuts are—the candy store.

The brilliant Josie accepted a brilliant suitor. True worth in another was rejected because it did not glitter. But her husband's dazzling mind was not above strong drink. Her story is the story of the thousand; a broken heart; a speedy grave.

Poor Josie; her miserable companion was drunk on the very day we buried her!

Victoria was sought for her beauty. Then came the wedding day; the town with its society and sight seeing. And there were other eyes to see and covet and praise Victoria's charms. Then the old story of jealousy.

The proprietor of the hotel where they were stopping heard entreaties and groans from Victoria's room; then pistol shots. Forcing the door, he found Victoria and her husband weltering in their blood, side by side.

What prophet would have had the courage to foresee this of the beautiful belle of Dunnvale on graduation day?

Tom and I were walking in the park one day. A gay turn-out dashed by. It contained Artie Barr. She gave Tom a nod. She is still a millionaire's daughter. That is all, however.

Plain, poor Annie Safford somehow got money enough together to push her way through the university.

On the day of her graduation she was unanimously chosen to the chair of Belles-lettres, with a salary of $1,000.

Last night Tom was reading aloud an article from one of the leading magazines. He likes almost every thing he finds there; but much of it is exceedingly dull to me. I was sewing when he opened to one and began to read. He had not got half down the first page, when I was not sewing but listening. Very soon my work had dropped from my lap, and I found myself saying: "Beautiful! beautiful! BEAUTIFUL!" At last I broke out:

"Say, Tom, who wrote that?" He read right through with a merry twinkle in his eye.

At last it was done; the magazine closed and tossed upon the lounge, and Tom began to clapp; and so did I; and then he broke out with "Three cheers for—plain, poor Annie Safford."—Rev C M Livingston, in Chicago Interior.

AT Baalbec, in a quarry, lies a magnificent column, the largest worked stone in the world, almost detached and ready for transportation. And in the ruined Temple of the Sun, near by, is a niche still waiting for it, after forty centuries. So large, so grand, it is a failure, because it never filled the place for which it was quarried and hewn. Like failures are many human lives. Who can tell how many men lie among the waste and ruins of life, but who, when called, refused to go? They folded their talents away, and buried them; and forever they will lay in the quarries, pale ghosts of glorious "might-have-beens," while the niches in God's temple, which they were meant to fill, remain forever vacant —S. S Times.

WHAT is principle? Yonder is a grand old ocean steamer, and when the wind blows she spreads her sails and works her steam and on she goes, and when the wind lulls, the engineer turns his throttle wider open and she goes at the rate of fifteen miles an hour whether the wind blows or not. And that is the difference between principle and feeling —Rev Sam. Jones

Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Beware of Imitations.

Imitations and counterfeits have again appeared. Be sure that the word "HORSFORD'S" is on the wrapper. None are genuine without it

Care for the Children

Children feel the debility of the changing seasons, even more than adults, and they become cross, peevish, and uncontrollable. The blood should be cleansed and the system invigorated by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Last Spring my two children were vaccinated. Soon after, they broke all out with running sores, so dreadful I thought I should lose them. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured them completely; and they have been healthy ever since. I do feel that Hood's Sarsaparilla saved my children to me." MRS. C. L. THOMPSON, West Warren, Mass.

Purify the Blood

Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarities: 1st, the combination of remedial agents; 2d, the proportion; 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, effecting cures hitherto unknown. Send for book containing additional evidence.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over." J. P. THOMPSON, Register of Deeds, Lowell, Mass.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla beats all others, and is worth its weight in gold." I. BARRINGTON, 130 Bank Street, New York City.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

7% NET Security 3 to 6 times loan. INTEREST semi-annual and paid at your home. 29th year of residence, and 10th of business. No investor ever had to pay taxes, costs of foreclosure, wait for interest, or take land. BEST of References all around you. Write if you have money to loan.

D. S. B. JOHNSTON & SON,
Negotiators of Mortgage Loans.
MENTION THIS PAPER. St. Paul, Minn.

BARLOW'S INDICO BLUE.
Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and endorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it. WILTBERGER, Prop., 232 N. Second St Phil., Pa.

7 PER CENT. INTEREST
FIRST MORTGAGE
FARM LOANS.

Personal acquaintance with lands and values. Over 2,000 loans made. NO CUSTOMER has ever LOST A DOLLAR of principal or interest on any loans made here. Interest collected and sent to you, free of cost, each year. These loans are very safe, and pay nearly three times as much as U.S. BONDS, known and recommended by leading business men and clergymen, East and West—men for whom I have been making these investments for TEN YEARS PAST.

☞ REFERENCES. ☜

REV. WM L. GAGE, D.D., Hartford, Ct.
M. E. GATES, PH.D., LL.D., President Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.
DR. WM. J MILNE, President Geneseo Normal School, Geneseo, N. Y
HON. E. M. TOPLIFF, Manchester, N. H.
REV. JOHN W. RAY, Lake City, Minn.
DR. JNO. K. BUCKLYN, Mystic Bridge, Ct.
Importers' and Traders' National Bank, New York.
First National Bank, St. Paul, Minn
The Congregationalist, Boston, N. Y. Observer and hundreds of others in all parts of the United States.

All are pleased with my Investments. Circular, references, letters giving experience and testimony of old customers, and a New Map of Dakota sent free on application. Mention this paper. Address

E. P. GATES,
Pres. Merchant's Bank,
Grand Forks, Dakota

Lactated Food

The Most Successful PREPARED FOOD
FOR NEW-BORN INFANTS.

It may be used with confidence when the mother is unable wholly or in part, to nurse the child, as safe substitute for mother's milk.

No other food answers so perfectly in such cases. It causes no disturbance of digestion, and will be relished by the child.

In CHOLERA INFANTUM,

This predigested and easily assimilated Food will surely prevent fatal results.

FOR INVALIDS, it is a Perfect Nutrient in either Chronic or Acute Cases.

Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value. It will be retained when even lime water and milk is rejected by the stomach In dyspepsia, and in all wasting diseases it has proved the most nutritious and palatable, and at the same time the most economical of Foods There can be made for an infant

150 MEALS for $1.00.

Sold by Druggists—25c., 50c. $1. 0.

☞ A valuable pamphlet on "The Nutrition of Infants and Invalids" free on application
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

6% 7% 8%

The American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, incorporated, with a paid-up capital of $500,000, with branches at Huron and Mitchell, Dakota offer First Mortgage Farm Loans in Iowa, Minn., Dakota, and Neb., both Principal and Interest Guaranteed. Also 6 per cent Debenture Bonds (obligations of the Company), running 10 years secured by Mortgage loans deposited with the Mercantile Trust Co., N. Y. It also issues Demand Certificates of Deposit at 5 per cent. interest. Write for pamphlet and references.

Home Office, Emmetsburg, Iowa.
E. S. Ormsby, Pres., 150 Nassau St., N. Y.

INVEST Through the Sound and Reliable
WESTERN FARM MORTGAGE CO.
F. M. PERKINS, President. LAWRENCE, KAN. L. H. PERKINS, Secretary.
CAPITAL AND SURPLUS, $250,000.
Carefully selected 1st Mortgage Farm Loans payable in N. Y. Unrivalled facilities. Absolute satisfaction. 10 years' experience. No losses. Refer to 3d Nat'l Bank, N. Y. City; Nat'l Bank, Lawrence, Kan.; and Hundreds of Investors. Send for pamphlet, forms and full information. Branch Offices in N. Y. City, Albany & Phila. N. Y. Office, 137 B'way, C. C. Hine & Son, Agts.

Pastors or Trustees about to BUILD OR REMODEL churches, should read our New Handbook on Church Building, Ventilating, Stained Glass and STEREOCHROME OR SECCO PAINTING. This new and beautiful method of decorating the interior of Churches, is superior to any style of decoration in use. The colors are very rich, imperishable, and warranted proof against leaks or damp from the roof or sides of the building. Plans for New or for Remodeling, or Decoration of Churches, furnished on reasonable terms Handbook sent free as above, in Middle States. Address. J. S. D'ORSAY & CO., Church Architects and Decorators. Office, 67 BIBLE HOUSE, New York. Established 181 .

Refers to Rev. J. Gaston, D.D., Passaic, N. J., Rev F. T. Corwin, D.D., Millstone, N. J., about Secco Painting.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free. FOR OIL.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

Established 1857.

The GREAT CHURCH LIGHT

FRINK'S Patent Reflectors for Gas or Oil, give the most powerful, softest cheapest & Best light known for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Banks, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A Liberal discount to churches and the trade. Don't be deceived by cheap imitations.
I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St., N. Y.

R. H. MACY & CO.,

14TH STREET, SIXTH AVE., AND 13TH STREET NEW YORK.

GRAND CENTRAL FANCY AND DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT.

We Call Attention to Our Large and Varied Stock Goods Adapted to the Summer Season.

Our Customers Residing in the

COUNTRY,

Or Those Visiting the

MOUNTAINS

OR

SEA-SHORE,

Can Rely on Having Their

ORDERS BY MAIL

Carefully Executed and Promptly Shipped.

OUR PRICES

Are Always the Lowest.

R. H. MACY & CO.

James M'Creery & Co.

AT THEIR SEMI-ANNUAL STOCK INVENTORY ON THE 9TH INST., SELECTED SEVERAL VERY LARGE ASSORTMENTS OF COLORED AND FANCY SILK VELVETS, ETC., WHICH THEY WILL DISPOSE OF DURING THIS MONTH AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Broadway & 11th St., N. Y.

THINK FOR YOURSELF.

IF YOU ARE A SENSIBLE WOMAN AND BELIEVE THAT Health, Comfort, and Beauty ARE DESIRABLE THINGS, BUY

GOOD SENSE

CORDED CORSET WAISTS. Beautifully made of BEST MATERIALS throughout.

THOUSANDS NOW IN USE.

☞ Be sure your Corset is stamped "Good Sense."

FIT ALL AGES Infants to Adults.

Sold by leading retailers everywhere. Send for circular.

FERRIS BROS., Manufacturers 81 White St., NEW YORK.

DURKEE'S

GAUNTLET

WARRANTED PERFECTLY PURE TRADE MARK GAUNTLET E. R. DURKEE & CO'S

BRAND

SALAD DRESSING

UNEQUALLED FOR EXCELLENCE.

Without a rival as a dressing for all Salads, and as a sauce for Cold Meats, etc. It is prepared with extreme care; all its ingredients are of the purest and best; and will keep good for years.

BEWARE OF ALL IMITATIONS.

EDUCATIONAL.

SEYMOUR SMITH INSTITUTE Pine Plains, N. Y., prepares for College. Healthful, homelike, select, thorough. Address Rev. A. MATTICE, A.M., Principal.

Betts' Academy, Stamford, Conn. A Boys' Boarding School of the highest grade. 49th year begins Sept. 16th. WM. J. BETTS, M.A., (Yale), Principal.

RYE SEMINARY, Rye, NEW YORK. For particulars address Mrs. S. J. LIFE.

EDUCATIONAL.

BEST TEACHERS AMERICAN and FOREIGN, promptly provided for Families, Schools, Colleges Skilled Teachers supplied with Positions. Circulars of Good Schools free to Parents. School Property rented and sold. School and Kindergarten Material, etc. J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO., AMERICAN SCHOOL INSTITUTE, 7 East 14th St., N. Y

RUTGERS COLLEGE Grammar School,

New Brunswick, N. J.

PREPARES BOYS AND YOUNG MEN FOR COLLEGE OR BUSINESS.

Additional buildings were last year required, erected and filled.

This year additional teachers engaged to meet the increased number of students.

Rooms carpeted and cared for. Some arranged in suites—a study-room 14x14 with two single sleeping-rooms adjoining. A few single rooms to be had if desired.

Last year at the opening of the school every room was engaged, and many applicants were refused admission because of the lack of room. This year rooms will be reserved as applied for.

For catalogues and further information, address E. T. TOMLINSON, HEADMASTER.

The Misses Anable's English, French and German Boarding and Day-School

WILL REOPEN SEPTEMBER 22D.

40 BAYARD ST., New Brunswick, N. J.

SIGLAR'S PREPARATORY SCHOOL, NEWBURG-ON-HUDSON, N. Y., Gives the best preparation for the best colleges. Two Yale valedictorians in three years. Entrance examinations held at the school by member of Yale Faculty. Daily gymnastics under teacher compulsory. For circulars, etc., address HENRY W. SIGLAR, M.A., (Yale) Prin.

ALEXANDER INSTITUTE White Plains, N.Y. 23 miles from New York City by rail. Fits boys for College or business pursuits. 30 to 40 pupils 5 Teachers. Board and Tuition per annum $400. For circulars, apply to the Principal, O. R. WILLIS, Ph.D.

Deckertown, Sussex Co., N.J. A SELECT ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes. School year begins September 8. For Circular, address, W. H. SEELEY, A.M., Prin.

PEEKSKILL (N. Y.) MILITARY Academy.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

1 hour from New York on the Penna. R. R.

Year begins (examinations for admission) Sept. 22, 1886.

SLOAN PRIZES FOR BEST (CLASSICAL) ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS; 1st, $400 ($100 CASH); 2d, $350 ($50 CASH).

Sixteen Professors; no Tutors. Classical course full and thorough. Increased facilities for the study of French and German, with a view to practical use. Laboratory work for all students in Chemistry. Well-equipped Astronomical Observatory for students' use. Full Geological Cabinet. 50,000 well chosen books in Libraries.

Ample provision for Electives. Junior and Senior years, in Natural Science, History, etc.

The SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT is the New Jersey State College. Constant field-practice in Surveying. Full course in Draughting.

THE AIM OF THE COLLEGE—THOROUGHNESS IN ALL WORK.

Best facilities and personal attention for every student. For full information, address Librarian Rutgers College.

Merrill Edwards Gates, Ph.D., LL.D., Pres't

Rutgers Female College,

58 West 55th street, commences 49th year September 22d. Rev. John Hall, D.D., President of the Board of Trustees. Boarding and Kindergarten Departments. Address the College.

HEMPSTEAD INSTITUTE. Hempstead, Long Island, N. Y. A Thorough English Boarding School for Boys. Primary, Intermediate, Higher English and Commercial Courses. Twenty-seventh year begins September 15. Catalogues sent on Application.

BRIGHTON HEIGHTS LADIES' SEMINARY New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y., Re-opens Sept. 22d, 1886. This is Strictly a Home School. For full information, Circulars, etc., address GEORGE W. COOK, Ph.D.

Riverview Academy,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Prepares for College and the Government Academies, for Business and Social relations. Thorough Military Instruction. Springfield Cadet Rifles. BISBEE & AMEN, Principals.

38TH YEAR. LYNDON HALL, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—A High-Class School for Young Ladies. Music, Drawing, Painting, Languages, and English branches thoroughly taught, with full regard to the equally important matters of home care and training. Address SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Principal.

YOUNG LADIES SEMINARY. 43d YEAR Begins Sept. 22. Address F. CHANDLER, D. D., Prest. Freehold, N. J.

OSSINING INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG LADIES SING SING, N.Y. Ladies & Misses. High Grounds. Best advantages in Music, Art, Elocution. English and Modern Languages. Full or partial courses. 30 miles from N. Y. City. Charges moderate Opens Sept. 21st. REV. C. D. RICE, Principal.

ATLANTIC

Mutual Insurance Co.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 51 WALL STREET

ORGANIZED 1842.

Insures against Marine and Inland Navigation Risks.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest in accordance with its Charter.

J. D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice President
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice Pres't.
A. A. RAVEN 3d Vice Pres't.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

CONTINENTAL Insurance Co.

Continental Buildings
100 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Cor. COURT and MONTAGUE STS., BROOKLYN

106 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, E.D.

Insures against loss by Fire at reasonable rates.

Reserve for re-insurance	$2,265,427 8
of which for Inland Marine, $55,969 52
Reserve ample for all other claims	553,171 2.
Capital paid in cash	1,000,000 00
Net surplus	1,358,879 85
Total Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886.	$5,177,478 99

This Company conducts its business under the restrictions of the New York Safety Fund Law. The two Safety Funds together equal $1,200,000.

H. H. LAMPORT, President.

CYRUS PECK, Secretary.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

OFFICE, No. 119 BROADWAY.

Sixty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the Condition of the Company on the 1st day of July, 1886.

CASH CAPITAL	$3,000,000 00
Reserve Premium Fund	2,938,020 00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	201,040 10
Net Surplus	1,389,341 71
Cash Assets	$7,628,401 81

SUMMARY OF ASSETS

Cash in Banks	$126,678 99
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	743,500 00
United States Stocks (market value)	2,9 2,697 50
Bank and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	1,733,649 00
State and City Bonds (market value)	2:6,000 00
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	130,000 00
Interest due on 1st July, 1886	10?,394 74
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	299,646 97
Real Estate	1,364,113 61
Total	$7,628,401 81

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
D. A. HEALD, Vice-President.
J. H. WASHBURN, V. P. & Sec'y

T. B. GREENE, W. L. BIGELOW, E. G. SNOW, JR., } Ass't Sec's.

A MILLION BOOKS

RARE, CURIOUS, CURRENT. IN STOCK.

ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.

Libraries Supplied Cheaper than at any Book Store in the World.

LIBRARIES AND BOOKS BOUGHT.

MAMMOTH CATALOGUE FREE.

LEGGAT BROTHERS,

81 CHAMBERS STREET,

3d door West of City Hall Park. NEW YORK.

—FLORIDA.—

—ACADEMY AND COLLEGE AT DeLAND, FLORIDA.—

A first-class Academy for both sexes. Five Courses—College Preparatory, Higher English, Normal, Business, Industrial Drawing. First-class Art and Music Departments. Fine New Dormitory Buildings, enabling us to furnish board and tuition at reasonable rates. The purpose of this Institution is to give, in the delightful climate of FLORIDA, as thorough and liberal an education as can be secured in the best New England schools. DeLand College will also receive students of both sexes prepared to enter the Freshman Class. Send for Catalogue to

J. F. FORBES, President, DeLand, Florida, or H. A. DeLAND, Fairport, N. Y.

J. B. WATKINS LAND MORTGAGE CO.

16 years perfect success, 12,531 Mortgages negotiated, aggregating $8,369,200

All the Interest and Principal paid on day of maturity to amount of 5,135,820

We have decided to place ourselves on a plane above every competitor. Hereafter every mortgage that we negotiate will bear our full legal

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTEE OF BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST,

Interest 6 per cent, payable as in the past, by half yearly coupons, at the

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE IN NEW YORK.

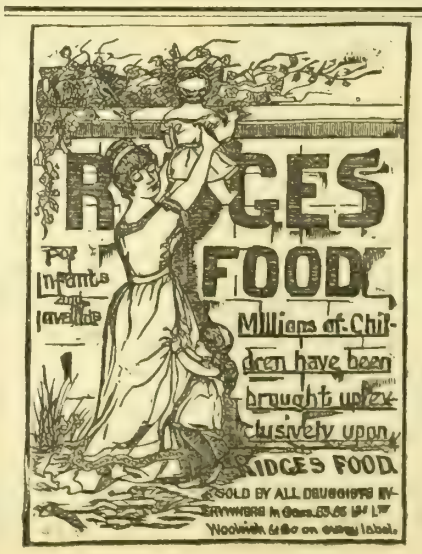
Assets to the value of nearly a MILLION DOLLARS are pledged by our guarantee.

SEND FOR PAMPHLET CONTAINING FACTS AND FIGURES, FORMS, AND 450 TESTIMONIALS.

Our Law Department will collect Bonds and other securities in all the Western States for individuals and corporations.

Address J. B. WATKINS L. M. CO., Lawrence, Kansas.

Or HENRY DICKINSON, New York Manager, 243 Broadway.



RIDGE'S
FOOD
For Infants and Invalids
Millions of Children have been brought up exclusively upon
RIDGE'S FOOD
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE
Woolrich & Co on every label.

THE INTEREST IN THE PASSING PROCESSION

Of infants and little ones who are to-day using RIDGE'S FOOD as an exclusive diet, if they could be brought in grand review, would scarcely be exceeded by the grand review of our own countrymen who passed from the scenes of war and its desolation before our late grand hero, to their homes once more to till the soil, to fill our shops, to gladden the hearts and hearthstones. Some idea of the magnitude of the chorus that could be heard and the shout for RIDGE'S FOOD that would be raised is given in the fact that the proprietors have shipped when no inducement for quantity for over two gross is given, in a single order,

Over Two Tons in Weight.

WOOLRICH & CO. will be pleased to send free to any address mentioning this publication, a pamphlet on the rearing of children, and hints for the sick, and care of invalids and the aged. Address

WOOLRICH & CO., Palmer, Mass.

N. W. HARRIS & CO.,

115-117 Monroe St., CHICAGO.

BONDS Of Counties, Cities, &c. of high grade a specialty. Send for descriptive lists.

You don't need to go to Europe for your Paints. The best pigments from all quarters of the Globe are in our Ready Mixed $1.35 per gallon Paint. Cheap is it not for all this? The F. J. Nash M'f'g Co., Nyack, Rockland Co., New York. Interesting Circulars Free. If your dealer refuses you these goods apply to us direct.

LE PAGE'S LIQUID GLUE

UNEQUALLED FOR CEMENTING WOOD, GLASS, CHINA, PAPER, LEATHER, &c. Awarded GOLD MEDAL, LONDON, 1883. Used by Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Co., Pullman Palace Car Co., &c. M'f'd only by the RUSSIA CEMENT CO., GLOUCESTER, MASS. SOLD EVERYWHERE. Sample Tin Can by Mail, 25c.

The Christian Intelligencer

Een-dracht maakt macht.

VOL. LVII.—No. 32. WHOLE No. 2924.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 11, 1886.

$2.65 A YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 48 CHURCH STREET.

EDITORS: Rev. JOHN M. FERRIS, D.D. Rev. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR: MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

THE AMERICAN people are a law-abiding people. They believe just laws, faithfully administered, to be the basis of civilization and of the welfare of the whole community. They bear patiently with legal evils until they can be properly removed, because they are conscious that they have in their hands the power of correcting unjust or unequal legislation and of removing unfaithful administrators of the laws. There is nothing to hinder or delay the correction of legal evils by the people, when disposed to do so. The general and State constitutions recognize no privileged classes. Lawless foreigners, with their pitiful handful of American allies, who attempt to regulate our affairs by violence, by dynamite, by the destruction of life and property, who take to themselves the right to be judge, jury and executioner, are to be patiently expostulated with and instructed, and then if they persist in devising, counselling and practising deeds of violence are to be punished to the full extent of the law. They ought to be made to feel the contempt, scorn and indignation of an intelligent, free people, determined to maintain the law and preserve the order on which the well-being of society depends. The laws are just, the most just man has had since God gave law to Israel. They are to be maintained. Those who attempt to destroy them assail everything men hold precious, are guilty of the sum, the climax of all crimes, and cannot be punished with too great severity.

THE DEATH of Mr. Tilden removes a leader, perhaps the most sagacious counsellor, from the political party to which he adhered. Through years of great physical infirmity, almost to the day of his death, the power of his opinions continued. Few men could as wisely order the arrangements of a campaign, and few were as prompt to use the means furnished by fresh inventions or demanded by new phases in social conditions. Although he had passed the limit of three score and ten years his mind was young, he lived in the present and, while profiting from the lessons of an unusual experience, was among the most ready to discern the changes occurring every year and to devise and adopt the new measures they demanded. In foresight he was eminent, and excelled in penetrating to the results which would follow the adoption of one or another course of action. But great as was the reliance upon his clear judgment and strong as was the desire of thousands of men that his years might be prolonged, they could not postpone the inevitable hour which came to him, as it will to all men, when the eyes must be closed upon loved and friendly faces and upon all earthly scenes. A mighty influence has been taken out of our American political life and new men must now assume the trying duties and responsibilities of leadership.

WHEN CARDINAL GIBBONS received the "scarlet beretta," the Cabinet, we are told by the daily papers, was represented by one of the Secretaries! The sermon on the occasion was preached by Archbishop Ryan, who said what follows, to which we append the shrewd comments of the National Baptist:

Most Eminent Cardinal, Venerable Fathers of the Hierarchy and Clergy, Dear Brethren of the Laity: We behold the inauguration to day of one who takes his place as a prince in the kingdom of God on this earth—the Church of Jesus Christ. He shall belong to its supreme senate, enjoy the right to vote in the election of its visible head and shall be a member of the Sacred College, from which in our day that visible head is selected.

"Some eminent orators are accused of plagiarism, of borrowing from older authors; and the charge is not seldom substantiated by showing the close resemblance between passages taken from the orators and from the several authors. But if the Archbishop should be accused of borrowing from a work called the New Testament, he can easily be cleared by setting alongside of his sermon the following from the older author: 'Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister. And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant.'"

THE ART OF STATEMENT.—An acute critic once remarked of Lord Macaulay that he always stated so clearly what he intended to prove that he left his readers with the impression that he had actually proved it. What is this but a new version of the old saying, that the true statement of a case is the best argument in support of it? This fact gives their value to the able papers presented before the Evangelical Alliance and that of the Reformed Churches. The space is too narrow for argument. All that can be done is to set forth the view that is taken, and to do this with clearness and order and precision. And this is enough. But to do it is anything but easy. It requires a well-disciplined mind, a simple and perspicuous style, and complete mastery of the subject. All these are needed if a man intends to state his case in a speech or paper not more than ten or fifteen minutes long.

THE IMMIGRATION from foreign countries is becoming the object of examination and discussion. On the third page of this number will be found an extract from an important article prepared by Prof. Boyesen for the Congregationalist. He briefly outlines the gross misrepresentations made to the laboring classes of Europe by the agents of steamship lines bent on securing passengers and having no regard for the interests of this country. The fact that American railways, desiring to obtain settlers for the lands through which they pass, employ agents who are not overscrupulous in the arts they employ to induce European workingmen to emigrate, is also noticed. The agents of British and Continental steamship companies we may be unable to control in any degree, but those of our own railroads can be reached. It is very desirable that the flood of the lowest class of European laborers pouring into this city and spreading over the land, the South excepted, be stayed if possible. These immigrants threaten our institutions. They have no regard for the Sabbath, hate the Church, hate our virtues, are the enemies of all decent, industrious, thrifty people, and come here to do as they please, and they please to destroy everything tending to protect property and thereby encourage citizens in sobriety, industry, economy and honesty. They have no idea that freedom consists in obedience to just laws, in concessions and compromises to and with other citizens, is founded upon intelligence, virtue and piety. There are too many of these people here now. This land may properly be a refuge for the oppressed, but it ought not to be the cesspool into which the moral sewerage of Europe is discharged. Our labor market is already overstocked. We need our remaining public lands for our own children. We have as much bitter infidelity, godlessness, grovelling superstition, ignorance and vice, lawlessness and communism, on our hands to-day, as we can manage for the coming ten or twenty years.

Our dear friend, the Rev. Dr. Talmage of Amoy, very kindly dissents from our opinion of Chinese immigrants. Just as kindly we say, We don't want them. They do not come here to become citizens. They come only to earn money enough to afford them a comfortable living in China, to which they intend to return. There is no parallel between their case and that of Americans who go to China to engage in trade. The number of Americans who go to Asia to conduct business houses is very small; open the gates and Chinamen will come here by scores of thousands. Even the Sandwich Islanders are endeavoring to substitute Japanese for Chinese colonists, because the latter consume the substance of the country they enter.

SPURGEONISMS.—The celebrated London preacher made an address recently before an Association, in which he said some very sharp and true things. One was that no church can be strong except each individual in it be strong, whereas just now one half of the army of Christ is engaged in carrying the other half. A large number have to do ambulance work. . . . Another was the story of a little boy who, when told that Christ took His children to heaven in His chariots, said, "If I am a good boy and go to heaven, may I sit on the box and drive?" There are many little boys, almost six feet high, whose eyes twinkle with the same desire. But if we all spend our energy in contending for the front seat, the horses will not get driven at all, but run away from the noise of the jangling. . . . Again, We pray for ministers, and also kill them—some of us say, with kindness. I have never seen the cemetery where they bury such. . . . . Again, We are not a mutual admiration society; but I would rather belong to that than to a mutual detraction society. If I were to recount the faults of my brethren, would it benefit me? . . . Once more, A finely-dressed lady said to me about ten years ago, "I pray for you every day, and always the same prayer, that you may be kept humble." I said, "I will pray for you and offer the same prayer, that you be kept humble." "Oh," she said, "but I have no need of that." But I doubted that very much. If some friends would pray that we may be cheered and kept from dull moments, it would do us much more good.

HOPEFUL SIGNS.—One is, "Closed on Sunday," put up in a conspicuous place in a barber's shop. It is not likely that men would go unshaved on Sunday if there were no barber shops open on that day; they would either get shaved on Saturday or shave themselves, as many do. Why not? They wash themselves, and dress themselves on Sunday morning, why not while they are about it shave themselves, if they have not the time or the opportunity to be shaved on Saturday? Good razors, and brushes, and soap cups, and soap are plentiful and cheap, and after a little practice anyone can become dexterous enough in the use of them to shave himself in five minutes as clean as any barber can do it for him. Barber's need, and have a right to the Sabbath rest as well as their customers.

Another hopeful sign is, that the appeal for respite from labor on the Lord's day is coming from the working classes to the working classes, who feel most the strain of desecrated Sabbaths, and with whom the remedy largely lies. To these lately the retail hat and shoe and men's furnishing goods salesmen in this city appealed, convinced that if they would refrain from buying on Sunday the dealers would have no inducement to open their stores. One great advantage of the Saturday half-holiday would be to enable many of the working classes to do on Saturday afternoon what they have been accustomed and constrained to do on Sunday morning in way of replenishing their wardrobe and larder.

Another encouraging sign is the fact that railroad companies are beginning to disprove the old saying, which it seems has heretofore been left unchallenged, that "corporations have no souls." The Pennsylvania Railroad has recently taken action restricting the running of freight trains on the Sabbath day. The Sabbath Association of Philadelphia commends the example to other corporations, and says: "We believe that the company is in earnest in its purpose to curtail its Sabbath business in respect to the running of freight trains, and we hope that the next step of its advance will consist in the abolition of all Sunday excursion trains," in which hope thousands of good citizens share. That which many, through force of custom, or from sheer thoughtlessness, regard as a necessity, and therefore justifiable on the Sabbath, as, for instance, the "Sunday excursion," is really, when seriously and carefully considered, found to be a luxury which should not be indulged in on that holy day.

THE DOGMATISTS.—One of the American quarterlies, in reviewing Archdeacon Farrar's History of Interpretation, makes this very just remark on one of the author's peculiarities: "The present work affords him favorable opportunities for condemning the dogmatism of past ages, but the style in which he does this reveals quite as much of the dogmatic spirit within his own mind and goes accordingly to modify his caustic polemics against his predecessors in dogmatism." Confessionalism, as it is now called, has indeed much to answer for in fettering the scientific interpretation of the Scriptures, but it is a grievous blunder to speak of its results as altogether barren or injurious. There is no decent scholar now who does not quote Calvin with respect, and the same is true of more than one name among the lights of the Post-Reformation epoch. Unmeasured denunciation of them and their work reminds one of Baxter's shrewd saying, "It is the devil's last method to undo by over-doing."

THE ADVOCATES of the New Theology do not intend to lose anything through lack of self-assertion. They demand that their men, holding very hazy opinions upon what have been regarded as vital doctrines, shall be accepted and commissioned by the American Board as missionaries to the heathen. In other words, the American Board is to enter upon an experiment to determine whether missionaries sent out to preach probation after death and to make misty statements in regard to the atonement and inspiration and the authority of the Scriptures, and to talk a great deal of unmeaning stuff about the historic Christ, will be as efficient as those who hold the faith accepted by the overwhelming majority of evangelical Christians. Would it not be well, before making such a demand, to show that the preaching of what is called the New Theology is in this country attended with the "demonstration of the Spirit and of power." It seems to us that it is appropriate that the friends of the convictions on which the American Board has been conducted for three quarters of a century shall appoint a committee to make a careful inquiry into the spiritual life and power of the churches at home which are ministered to by believers in the old errors now boldly announced as a "new departure." Besides, what a cool request it is to ask that these men in making their experiment shall have the immense advantage of being made a part of missions already in the full tide of success, shall be given a place in the ranks of a force which has won fight after fight and is advancing steadily toward the end of a victorious campaign. In reality this is simply evading a test, is an attempt to trade upon the capital of other people. It is part and parcel of the palpable dishonesty which uses the funds and prestige of Andover to propagate opinions which the founders of Andover rejected. For there is absolutely nothing new in this new theology, except certain hazy definitions which have an appearance of truth as one glances at them, but on examination are found to be adroitly worded so as to allow an endless amount of dodging. Perhaps for the sake of peace the new theologians may be allowed to send out their men under the mighty protection and impulse of the American Board, but we hope not. If it be allowed there are many of the best friends of the Board who will sincerely deplore it, who are not only the best friends of the Board but also among the most intelligent, earnest and useful Christians of this country.

"Old Colony" Papers.

THE ANGLER.

I.

LET not any reader take up this article with the hope of gleaning anything "practical" from it. I am no angler, nor the son of an angler. Perhaps this last expression will not seem so irrelevant, when I express the conviction that the angler is born and not made. And yet the expression is not a very logical one either, since it is equally clear that the born angler is not such by heredity, for my own boy seems to have taken to it as naturally as a fish to the bait—and, so far as my own experience with fish is concerned, a great deal more readily.

Perhaps, though, the trait may descend from the latent capabilities of the maternal character. Women have not furnished, to my knowledge, any anglers of distinction, though their abilities as vendors of fish are well known. The fact is that if it be not always true, as Charles Kingsley informs us in his song of the "Three Fishers," that "men must work and women must weep," at least men must catch the fish and women boil the pot. Some might even advance the theory, that the very qualities which have rendered woman supreme and illustrious in the Billingsgate markets of the world may pari passu disqualify her for saying, with Izaak Walton's assurance of faith, "I am, sir, a brother of the angle." That, however, was before the beneficent agitation which has vindicated the right of woman to modify the Terentian postulate so as to read, "I am a woman, and therefore nothing which belongs to a man is foreign to me."

Perhaps women are less fond of solitude and silence than some men are,—probably because the former have so much of these during the hours when the men are among the thunderings and chatterings of the busy world. This may also account for the ungallant impression, nourished by the playhouse and cheap literature, that women are given to excess of talk and defective in the organ of reticence. For the man comes home tired with the sound of his own voice and the discordances of competitive humanity and flees as to a refuge from the "strife of tongues." While the poor woman welcomes the prospective chat as a relief, and an episode in the quiet monotony of her days.

The quality of patience, so requisite for the angler's occupation, it may be urged, is peculiarly a womanly grace and gift. Yes, in great matters, in moral exigencies, and in her doing for others. But are we sure that she is conspicuous for serene persistency in the minor annoyances and delays of life? In petty things, is she not apt to be pettish? At least is she not naturally more eager for results, and disposed to try other means, if not to give up? I know, that of those who through faith and patience have inherited the kingdom the women far outnumber the men; but it needs a kingdom, or the things of the kingdom, to nerve her to the full putting forth of her godlike capacity for waiting. If she were called to go to the brook each day for the subsistence of a helpless husband or little children, I am sure that she would sit "like patience on a monument" all day, if need be. But to go for "sport," to wait for "bites" for the mere sake of bites, to fish for the sake of fishing or of going a-fishing, I can hardly conceive it of her.

And I confess that I think none the worse of her on that account. We have all thrilled with Longfellow's inspired commonplace about learning "how sublime a thing it is to labor and to wait." But it is not a very thrilling virtue to idle and to wait. And it is quite likely that women are too much in earnest for that. And angling is idling, in its essential nature; though, like most idling worth doing, involving considerable exertion, especially in the preliminaries and preparations. It is curious how much effort people will make for a bit of effortless experience, like the boy who will toil and pant with his sled up a long steep hill for the sake of the momentary glide down. So my brother of the angle will busy himself for a day or two, and be up before daylight on the eventful morning, and trudge with his rod and basket over the hills and through the woods for miles, and bother with his reels and flies and what not, and perhaps go switching the stream or rowing his boat for other miles, and sit on hard rocks and in the hot sun and lose his dinner, and then trudge back again with the step and perhaps the appearance of a tramp,—all for the sake of those delicious moments of waiting on the caprices of a fish!

Let it not be supposed, that I am condemning the sport because it is an organized idleness. Idleness is one of the highest aims and most commendable occupations of life. To idle well is true science, and the handmaid of religion and philosophy. It is the prize only of the industrious, the virtuous, and the thoughtful. It stands at the head of the list of lost arts. We need in our university curricula a post-graduate course to teach men how to stop work, and to learn to do things which do not belong to the "business" of life. And if angling is the kind of idling which men like,—why, let them go a-fishing. And it might not be a bad plan to endow an Izaak Walton professorship in our colleges, and to take up some of the time given to base ball and boating to this form of "elective."

Which brings me to what I started out to write about, and for which scant space remains. For I have been reading dear old Izaak Walton, reading him to the boy aforesaid, who listened with critical attention to the minute directions of the ancient expert, while I delectated myself with the unfaded freshness of the quaint and dewy and morning style of this angler's Old Testament.

Izaak Walton (why in the world do some recent editions call him Isaac?) is an instance of the often illustrated truth, that one of the best qualifications for writing an immortal book is to be free from any such ambition, and to set down what one has found out for himself in the simplest and most straightforward speech. He was a retired haberdasher, who went into the country to live at fifty years of age. He seems to have been a special favorite of eminent clergymen, and other religious and learned men, such as Dr. Donne, George Herbert, Richard Hooker, William Chillingworth, Bishop Sanderson, Bishop Ken, and Sir Henry Wotton. And it was through writing the lives of some of these in his charmingly simple, sweet and pious way, that he got into authorship. He was sixty years old when he published his "Compleat Angler: or, the Contemplative Man's Recreation." He lived to be ninety one, owing his long life doubtless alike to his out door habits and his meek and quiet spirit. There are no writings, not even those of his friend George Herbert, which more transparently and unconsciously reveal the writer's personality, or of more childlike wisdom or heavenly-minded love of this fair world.

It is a refreshing picture of life, which we gain of this brisk, genial, mild-mannered man, released from his London shop on a modest competence, roaming the daisied fields and the wooded river banks of "Merrie England" two centuries and a half ago, till he knew every fish and worm and minnow and fly in its season in every stream and "fish pool." His book is full of delightful glimpses of an angler's life, if he be at once a master of his art, a lover of nature, a philosopher, a poet, and a friend of God. We find him sitting under the honeysuckle hedge, or the broad beech-tree on the edge of flowery meadows, while the "friendly contention" of the birds in the neighboring grove echoes from the brow of the primrose hill, "beguiling time by watching the harmless lambs," and safely sheltered from the gentle shower which distills new fragrance from the soil and grass. Or he philosophizes under a willow by the water-side, thinking of the fine estate before him, whose owner has not leisure to take the sweet content that he himself without the title deeds, can take in his fields and streams and groves; looking down the meadows at "here a boy gathering lilies and lady smocks, and there a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, all to make garlands suitable to this present month of May;" above all, thankfully remembering what the Saviour said, that the meek possess the earth.

Or he chats in a fatherly way with a pretty milk-maid, who sings like a nightingale the songs of Kit Marlow and Sir Walter Raleigh. He gives her a mess of trout, and she responds with a drink of red-cow's milk, or a syllabub of new verjuice, eaten on a new haycock. Then he hies him, with his faithful disciple in the art of angling, to Trout Hall where the hostess is ready to make a savory dish of his day's spoil, and he with a choice companion or two will wash it down with barley wine, and sing songs in praise of an angler's life till a virtuous bed-time, when they betake them to "fresh sheets that smell of lavender" and are ready to "prevent the sunrising" next morning. He meets with gypsies and the picturesque tramps of that day, and watches their blithe and butterfly existence. He avoids the inns where "lascivious or Scripture jests" are allowed, for which he counts no man witty, but an infectious nuisance—all the more if he be a gentleman, of whom the more religion will be required at the last day rather than less. When overtaken by a rainy day, he will go to some honest alehouse and play at shovel-board half the day, and after a merry supper have "a gentle touch at singing" before the crackling wood-fire.

But, my dearly beloved Piscator, I foresee that this pleasing screed cannot be compassed within a single "Old Colony Paper," and so am fain to defer the remainder till this day sen-night.

F. N. Zabriskie.

August 2d, 1886.

The Sacred Room.

OLD rooms in which the household meets,
As it has met so many years,
I look on you with eyes whose lids
Are wet with sudden tears!

The hearthstone where the red fire glows,
The books alluring, on the shelf,
The very chair on which I lean,
Each, all, a part seem of myself.

A part, too, of the household group,
Loving and tender, brave and true,
Whose every year beside this hearth
I pass in fond review.

A part, too, of the friends whose love
Has hallowed all as, year by year,
In converse sweet, in jest and song,
The hours have fleeted here.

Among the seasons I recall
Of happy festival and mirth,
Of Christmas cheer, vacation glee,
Visits of royal worth,

Some saddened days crowd on the mind,
Days of suspense and bated breath,
When sickness held the house in thrall;
And once, Oh, once, came death!

But tenderly, and as a friend,
Bearing the aged saint above,
Who long had waited for the call
In patient trust and love.

No deep despair has lingered here,
No black remorse, no deadly sin,
Only the quiet, household joys
And griefs have entered in.

No pang of bridal or of birth,
Has, with deep feeling, rent the air;
Yet deeds of moment have been planned,
And wrought with much of prayer.

Old room! your walls are consecrate
By happy, helpful, household love;
By joy, by trust, by tenderness,
Your sacredness we prove.

Long be your walls thus dedicate
Unto the household's sacred reign;
Holy the home, as shrine of saint,
As minster grand, as storied fane!

—Hattie T. Griswold, in The Advance.

Notes from Saratoga Springs.

WE ran up to Saratoga from Albany, the Friday of Albany's bi-centennial week, on a train which reminded us of the Church militant. Company A, of Albany, was escorting Company D, of Philadelphia, to the queen of American watering places, and their bands were with them. The Saratoga Greys received them with their band, and the usually pacific streets assumed for a day a martial aspect.

Mt. McGregor adds interest to Saratoga for military men, and these warriors made an excursion to our modern Mecca. That carried our thoughts back to a bright September day, last year, when we made an afternoon excursion to the memorable spot. How extensive and interesting, naturally and historically, the view from the cupola of the Hotel Balmoral, with the Adirondack wilderness, the surrender-field at Schuylerville, and the widening valley of the Hudson before our eyes! The lookouts below have less extensive vistas, but greater interest centres in the little brown "Drexel Cottage" among the trees, where our great General breathed his last; the three little rooms on the ground floor being all associated with his lingering demise. In one room are floral tributes, well preserved, in another two chairs draped, in which he lay, with a walnut, glass-doored case near by, filled with articles of the last wardrobe and of ministry during the illness. A third room contains the beautiful counterpaned couch on which the immortal hero passed away, while, most appropriately, framed engravings of Washington and Lincoln gravely surveyed the scene, bending from the wall above. There the custodian of the cottage showed us a little gilt-edged volume entitled "Words of Comfort," by the Rev. James Smith, published by the American Tract Society. Certain leaves* were turned down at the upper edges, and to these places the General's attention was especially directed. We recommend the reader to follow our example and procure a copy of this good little book, turning down these pages, and thus having an excellent and profitable souvenir of Mt. McGregor and its illustrious resident.

But to return to Saratoga. The good people of the place have been filled with sorrow and sympathy at the affliction which befell the Rev. Dr. S. V. Leech, the eloquent and popular pastor of the First Methodist Church at the Springs, in the death of his son, Mr. S. Dickinson Leech, who was a young man of great usefulness and promise. It gave us great pleasure to devote the evening of the Sabbath which we spent at the Spa in relieving Dr. Leech at his church service, preaching for him to a large and very attentive audience of nearly a thousand The summer congregations at Saratoga are national; nay, somewhat cosmopolitan in their composition. But the simple Gospel of Christ the Foundation (1 Cor. 3:11), unites and interests all Christian hearts.

The Rev. Mr. Bracq, American Secretary of the McAll Mission in Paris, spent Sunday, July 25th, in town, and addressed the Ministers' Meeting Monday morning, giving an hour's talk of excellent English and interesting information about the French Protestant work, especially that in Paris under the Rev. Mr. McAll, an English Congregational minister. One significant incident we would relate—that at one time a Romish priest took President MacMahon to task because of his nine cabinet ministers five were Protestants, whereupon the President replied: "Ah! these men always tell me the truth!"

Another pleasant feature of Saratoga for parsons is the daily union prayer-meetings at ten o'clock. These are conducted by different clergymen, residents and visitors, and are usually well attended. We had the pleasure of seeing there one morning the Rev. Dr. Demarest, one of our theological professors, who was stopping a few days in town, en route for the Adirondacks.

We stopped at Dr. Strong's house in Circular street. Dr. Cuyler has sounded its praises in these columns before, and his eulogy is not excessive. The doctor had been there, and left the memory and benediction of his presence. This time it was our fortune to meet there Bishop R. S. Foster, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a venerable yet vigorous patriarch of the ministry, whose long experience and world wide travel enhance the charms of his conversation. Professor Jenks, of Brown University, Providence, R I., was also there, and delighted us one evening with a vivid description of his visit in 85 to the volcano and lake of fire in Hawaii.

It is needless to say that the big hotels are as large as ever, with their attractive bands and brilliant company. We glanced in at the full-dress hop in the ball-room of the Grand Union one night, but we did not participate, nor did we see the races. The limits of our secular relaxation stopped at drinking the waters, seeing the fireworks at Congress Spring Park, and driving a village-cart with a horse harnessed in front and a young lady inside. Ministerial brethren, prayer-meetings, and the good people at Dr. Strong's providentially delivered us from the jaw of the lion, while Mr. Anthony Comstock has appeared on the scene to make a raid on the gamblers and beard the lion in his den. E. J. Runk.

August 2d, 1886.

Who Is Responsible for the Anarchists?

THE recent trials of anarchists in Milwaukee and in Chicago, and of boycotters in New York, have revealed the existence in our midst of a large body of unnaturalized foreigners, who labor not to build up but to destroy the Republic. The undesirable Poles whom Bismarck is expelling from Posen, because they are incapable of being Germanized, are coming here, it appears, and are justifying Bismarck's policy by demonstrating that they are also incapable of being Americanized. Bohemians and Hungarians whom Austria has for generations oppressed and taxed within an inch of their lives, and who have been reduced to a state of brutality inconceivable to those who have not seen them, are flocking in great numbers to our shores, not for the purpose of "benefiting by our free institutions," or "sharing the blessings of liberty," as we fondly imagined, but rather in order to avail themselves of the supposed laxity of our laws to prey upon an ill-protected society. I remember, some years ago, having a long conversation on an emigrant train with a German shoemaker, who stated this in so many words. The smallness of our army and navy, he said, and the weakness of our whole repressive machinery (which he was kind enough to regard as a great virtue in our institutions), removed all obstacles to the carrying out of the will of the people. And the will of the people, he was credibly informed, was "to make hash of the capitalists," to do away with all government, and to give to each man an equal share in the fruits of the earth and an equal title to happiness.

That the enormous, oppressive military system in Europe has bred sentiments of this kind in the breasts of a vast number of people, recent events in Germany, France and Belgium have sufficiently demonstrated; and as the inconveniences and dangers of their propaganda at home increase, the apostles of anarchy naturally turn their attention to this country as a more congenial field for their labors. Thus we, who have reduced our own army even below our actual necessities, reap the fruits of European repression and tyranny.

. . . . . .

I have, of recent years, endeavored, on a necessarily restricted scale, to ascertain the effect of American life upon the various immigrated nationalities; and I have incidentally obtained some curious information. The most important item, for my present purpose, is the fact that the emigration agents are responsible for more anarchists than the editors of the Freiheit and the Arbeiter-Zeitung. At least thirty recent immigrants, out of thrice the number interrogated, have told me variations of the same tale of disappointment and despair, all due to the misrepresentations of unscrupulous agents for railroad and steamboat companies. I have myself repeatedly witnessed the sensation which the arrival of these plausible Munchausens created in the quiet rural communities of Norway, Sweden and Germany. Crowds of credulous and simple-minded people stand spell-bound, listening to their daring fictions, and not only the discontented and unsuccessful, but many who make a fair living where they are, pull up stakes, sooner or later, and cross the Atlantic. Arriving as they do with exaggerated expectations, they make the most disheartening experiences, and end by cursing, not their own credulity, but the land which they hold responsible for their misfortunes. It takes very little to persuade them that everything is wrong here, and they readily lend ear to the wild vaporings of so called labor-reformers who attribute their ill luck, not to any fault of their own, but to the iniquity of capitalists and the perverse organization of society.

Thus thousands arrive annually at our shores who, if they had remained at home, would have toiled along, unaspiring and sluggishly contented; but who, on account of their unadaptability to their new environment, are here apt to recruit the ranks of the destroyers. As it is the baneful enterprise of the trans-Atlantic steamboat companies which is chiefly responsible for this, it would be advisable, if it were possible, to impose some restrictions upon their activity. But, unhappily, American law does not reach European evil-doers, even though America has to suffer the consequences of their misdeeds. Some good would undoubtedly be accomplished if our Western railroad and land companies, some of which also engage in the business of attracting immigrants by fair means or foul, could be legally debarred from sending agents to Europe. Let every honest man and woman come who, of their own accord, decide to exchange the Old World for the New; but let no one be permitted to play upon the ignorance and gullibility of tenant farmers, factory hands and day laborers, and for the sake of a few paltry dollars uproot thousands of moderately useful lives, a considerable percentage of which are thereby not only withdrawn from productive activity in Europe, but by their unfitness to hold their own in the struggle for existence, under altered conditions, become a burden to themselves and the enemies of society.—Hjalmar H. Boyesen, in The Congregationalist.

* Pages 5, 7, 9, 25, 37, 43, 45, 51, 61

Our Church.

We are thankful for items of Church News compactly stated; or for marked copies or clippings from local exchanges, which we would not otherwise see. To insure publication in next number, they must reach us by noon on Monday. A condensation of items is unavoidable

Brief History of the West Farms D. R. Church.

FROM January 18th, 1839, this church dates its organization, and at that time "West Farms" was a wholly rural community, several miles out of this city's limits, and with scarcely a foreign element in its population. Until about the beginning of the present century it formed a part of the ancient Fordham Reformed Church parish, and its here and there Presbyterian or Episcopal family found their ecclesiastical home either in New Rochelle or Westchester village.

Near that period a Scotch family by the name of Bathgate, which had settled there and became large property holders several years previous, exerted a leading influence in establishing a Presbyterian church at "The Farms," and there was built for its use shortly after a neat and commodious house of worship, which is still occupied as such and is in excellent repair. One of their early pastors was the Rev. Joseph D. Wickham, D.D., now residing in Manchester, Vt., and is in his 90th year—a graduate of Yale College in 1815 Of his large class he is now the only survivor. Dr. Wickham preached for them several years, and on alternate Sabbaths, or with half-day services, dividing his time between the West Farms and the New Rochelle Presbyterian churches. They were both financially weak, and his salary from each did not exceed three hundred dollars annually.

The producing causes of the New Reformed Church formation in 1839, it is not in our power to state, nor is it needful; but we learn from the Rev. Mr. Bolton, the present pastor, that this church was organized by a Committee of the Classis of New York, consisting of the Rev. Doctors Knox, Van Pelt, Van Vranken and Marcellus, in answer to a memorial of one hundred and fifty inhabitants of West Farms, a large majority of whom had determined to withdraw from the Presbyterian congregation there and form another ecclesiastical body. But it is important to add that a majority of the first members were received by certificate from the Reformed Church of Fordham. On this occasion a sermon was preached by the Rev. S. A. Van Vranken, and a consistory chosen, consisting of the following persons: Thomas Butler, Abijah Rodgers, George Wilson, James P. Fitch, Stephen Lely and James Ransford. Of these the only survivor is Mr. Fitch, aged eighty.

Their first and present church edifice was opened for public services in 1840. It is of good size, furnished with a tower and bell, and is apparently well preserved. The dedicatory sermon was preached by the Rev. Thomas Vermilye, D.D.

Their first pulpit supply was the Rev. George Bourne. In 1842, Nov. 14th, the Rev. Barnabas Collins was ordained and installed as pastor. In September, 1845, he was succeeded by the Rev. John Simonson, whose pastorate closed Nov. 10th, 1851. Mr. Simonson is said to be residing at present in Plainfield, N. J. In April 19th, 1852, the Rev. P. H. Burghardt was installed over this church, who leaving in 1855, it was for two years without a pastor. But in Nov., 1856, the Rev. Polhemus Van Wyck was over this charge, and continued therein until about 1867. He was succeeded by the Rev. Evert Van Slyke, now of Catskill, N. Y. From 1872 Mr. Simonson was their minister again for about eight years, and subsequently the Rev. Harlan T. Blair for a short period, beginning Sept. 1st, 1881. Their present pastor entered upon his ministrations at West Farms in May, 1884.

During the few years past local and population changes in that now extreme eastern portion of our great city have taken place which have largely depleted the churches and limited the sphere of pastoral usefulness. But it is painfully felt by respectable citizens in West Farms and its vicinity, that among all the outskirting components of New York none is suffering more from Sabbath profanation and an overflow of amusement seekers and saloon frequenters on the Lord's day than that. It is truly missionary and evangelistic ground in its moral needs, and such faithful laborers in the work of its spiritual culture as the Rev. Mr. Bolton, (whom it has been our privilege to know as a neighbor and as an occasional attendant at the church at "The Farms" for a year or two past,) may well claim the co-operativ ympathy and prayerful support of his brethren.

But a brighter side of the picture is this. When the Second Avenue Elevated Railroad shall have reached West Farms,—now in rapid progress,—it is confidently believed that many new families will take up their residence in that part of the city, still rich in rural scenery and blessed with pure air, who will appreciate the means of grace there established and do much in encouraging the ministers and churches in their work of faith and labors of love.

REV. WM. HALL.

....KINDERHOOK, N. Y.—An agreeable sensation was produced in the Kinderhook Reformed Church last Wednesday evening. The congregation had assembled in response to an invitation to attend a church sociable, as occasionally held. The audience beheld the large figures 1861 and 1886, formed of cedar sprigs, as seen conspicuously on either side of the desk. But little arithmetic was requisite to cypher a result of twenty-five, and, connected with a knowledge of the life of Dr. Colyer, the pastor, easily changed the meeting into a silver wedding. Further evidence was not long wanting, as one of the officers brought to view an attractive case of silver table furniture, and transferred the same to its proposed owners, the pastor and his worthy helpmeet, with a presentation speech which epitomized the design of the gathering. This was responded to by the pastor in an impressively felicitous manner, considering his entire preceding ignorance. Thus a third characteristic of the meeting turned it into a surprise party.

The whole congregational act, of which whispers had been heard in advance, in its spontaneity and exceptional liberality was begun, continued and completed with such a kind Christian courtesy as to show that there exists in this church a mutual confidence and love of pastor and people, promising for the future such blessings, temporal and spiritual, as they have received abundantly in the past. H.

....BROOKLYN, N. Y.—The pastor of the North Reformed Church has secured from a friend, not in our denomination, a loan of $6,000 for ten years, without interest, to be used in the purchase of a parsonage. This sum is available when a first mortgage of $10,000 on the church property can also be placed without interest. This will be the entire interest bearing debt of the church, which will agree to pay at least $500 on the principal each year and as much more as it can.

Anyone willing to forego the interest on this sum can make one dollar do the work of a larger sum, and, without incurring any risk, can assure an excellent church of a successful future. Parties interested can address Rev. William D. Perry, 95 Adelphi street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

....GOLDEN WEDDING.—The golden wedding of the Rev. Dr. B. Van Zandt and wife was celebrated at Catskill, N. Y., on the 27th of July, from 4 to 8 o'clock P.M. Congratulations were presented from a host of friends, many of whom had come long distances for this purpose. Chicago, St. Louis, California, Idaho, Wisconsin, the New England States, as well as New York and New Jersey were represented by those who came bearing good wishes and presents or by very cordial written congratulations. In the evening the residence of the family was thronged with guests. The gifts were handsome, valuable, useful and numerous, but only a few were displayed. They came from far and near. The halls and the rooms devoted to the reception were admirably and profusely adorned with flowers, in which our native flowers, such as daisies and golden rod were conspicuous, being arranged with special skill and taste in various devices. Choice garden flowers were also present in abundance to add the tribute of their beauty and fragrance to the commemoration of fifty years of honorable and useful wedded life. The chief floral design is thus described in the Catskill Examiner:

"In the parlor on the east wall was the monogram E. V. Z. in white, pink and deep red hollyhocks on a background of evergreen. Wreaths of evergreen in graceful festoons were arranged along the frieze, and a smaller wreath of ox-eyed daisies hung over the square of evergreen, forming a shield for the monogram. On either side were two smaller squares of evergreen bearing the dates 1836 and 1886 in white and yellow flowers. The entire arrangement was exceedingly effective and beautiful."

....PASSAIC, N. J.—The North Reformed Church, Rev. J. H. Whitehead, pastor, is conducting a series of evangelistic meetings in the Music Hall of the city on Sunday evenings, with the object of reaching those who do not attend any particular church. These meetings are proving a wonderful success. Last Sunday the large hall was entirely filled, more than one hundred of those present being non-church-goers. A leading feature of the meeting is the excellent singing, led by Mr. Samuel J. Freeman, of the New York Observer, cornetist, whose playing attracts many passers-by. Mr. Whitehead meets those who wish to inquire after the way of life after each service, and a grand, good work is being done. F.

....PELLA, IOWA —During the four months in which he has ministered to the Second Reformed Church, the Rev. D. N. Wyckoff has won the hearts of the people, and his departure during the first week of August was attended with frequent demonstrations of the esteem in which he was held and of the strong attachment to him which had been formed. His last sermon on the evening of Sabbath, August 1st, was received with close attention by a large audience. On Monday evening a reception was given to Mr. and Mrs. Wyckoff at the home of Mr. Bosquet, when the large house was filled with the congregation of the Second Church and the many friends Mr. Wyckoff had made in the city. A handsome album, containing photographs of those wishing to have a place in such a memento, was presented with appropriate words, and was received with a hearty and touching expression of the affection and regard felt for the church and new friends by Mr. Wyckoff and his wife. On Tuesday when they left for the East many friends were at the station to bid them good-by. It would have been strange if the consistory had not put upon the records of the church their estimate of this brief pastorate. The minute adopted says that Mr. Wyckoff's labors have been "rich in blessing to the edification of our church," "that by his genial, kind and truly fraternal disposition he has especially endeared himself to us," and "that we will ever cherish among our dearest recollections the remembrance of his brief sojourn among us, and that our prayers to the throne of grace will be for his speedy restoration to health and strength; and we earnestly cherish the hope that many years of useful labor in the vineyard of the Lord may yet be in store for him."

....WESTERN ITEMS.—The Rev. Jacob Van der Meulen celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his work as a pastor on July 25th. He has been the pastor of the Church of Muskegon for the last fourteen years ...A meeting was held a fortnight ago at Fernwood, Ill., by a Classical Committee to organize a Reformed church from among the Dutch residents....A meeting has been appointed for August 25th, at Englewood, Ill., to consider the question of organizing a Reformed church.

....THE REV. A. VENNEMA, of Kalamazoo, Mich., it is said, has declined the call of the First Reformed Church of New Brunswick, N. J.

Gleanings from our Exchanges.

....The Rev. A. A. Zabriskie a few days ago presented his resignation as pastor of the Reformed Church of Flatbush, Ulster Co., N. Y., and it was accepted.

....The Rev. George D. Lydecker, of Napanoch, N. Y., has accepted a call from the Reformed Church of Upper Red Hook, N. Y., and expects to begin his pastorate there on September 1st.

....The Rev. F. M. Kip, D.D., is expected to preach in the Reformed Church of Fishkill, N. Y., on Sabbath, August 15th. The day will be the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of his pastorate at Fishkill, which extended from the third Sunday of August, 1836, to some time in 1870.

....The Rev. P. K. Hageman, pastor of the Reformed Church of Shawangunk, N. Y., has recently for the third time declined a call from the Reformed Church of Fairfield, N. J. His relations with his present charge are so pleasant that he has had no thought of sundering them. Lately the people of his charge gave to him and his wife a very cordial reception and presented to them a purse of $110.

...."Sentinel" writes from Albany to The Seneca Falls Reveille as follows: "The city of Albany possesses two priceless and precious relics of its very old day—prior to its time of charter, and of the transition time when its government was to cease from the sway of the people of its origin, and to be of the English crown. These are the two cups or beakers of the communion service of the North Dutch Church. One of these is of the date of 1664—twenty-two years before the dignity of a city was conferred by Dongan—though even then considered, as the future Earl of Limerick expressed it, 'an ancient town.' The other has later date. Both constitute a property to which time and history would give value, even were not their uses associated with high and holy purposes. They were, when I last knew of the fact, in the custody of the late Robert H. Pruyn at the Commercial Bank, of which he was the President. In the centuries whose passage over a prosperous and advancing people Albany has commemorated with the strength and intelligence of a civic and rational manhood, the associations that blend with these venerable 'beakers' are too sacred for any other history than of that which delineates the hope of the human soul.

"Were they sentient, what picture of the city's life amidst the blended ecclesiastical and soldier and trade and savage annals, of a time when this home of civilized man was on the forest border, they might relate. But their very presence in this far advanced day is History, and not one fibre of their strength in the uses of their sanctity is weakened. To-day, as in the past age, the human heart bends over them with a joy with which 'no stranger intermeddleth.'

"Of the very earliest of Albany's territorial memories, indeed the most ancient and undoubted, is 'Church street,' because there, crouching for protection under the old-fashioned guns of Fort Orange, the successor of the island fortification of Fort Nassau, the little apartment or room, which was the pious enterprise of the feeble but adventurous beginning of our city, was built, the bud of the fair flowers of skilled architecture, in whose beauty the successors of that church to-day worship. It was small. It was a lesser type of our consistory and lecture and parish buildings of to-day, but the faith that breathed prayer there had gone through the fires."

Church Union.

THE official report of the meeting of the Classis of Schuykill, of the Reformed Church of the United States, held at Reading, Pa., in June last, appears in The Messenger of last week. Among other acts was this:

The following resolutions were offered by Rev. I. E. Graeff and adopted:

Whereas, It is now largely felt and acknowledged that the present divided state of the Church causes much weakness and is contrary to the Spirit of Christ, and

Whereas, In various quarters and by divers authorities of our branch of the Reformed family of Churches measures have been taken to overture our General Synod to make proposals of union to the Reformed Church in America and to the Presbyterian Church; and

Whereas, Similar measures have been taken by divers authorities of the Reformed Church in America asking their General Synod to consider our proposals of union kindly; and

Whereas, The broad issues of the civil, social, moral and religious world, already at hand and likely to rise and enlarge in the near future, demand the combined energies of a united Christendom; therefore,

Resolved, That we heartily approve of the unifying tendencies of the day, and of the measures looking to a closer fellowship between us and other branches of the Reformed family or type of churches, and that we pledge ourselves to co-operate to the full extent of our ability in bringing these unifying efforts to a satisfactory conclusion.

Resolved, That we respectfully suggest to Synod the propriety of taking action on this movement at its next annual meeting in the city of Philadelphia.

American Bible Society.

THE Board of Managers met at the Bible House, August 5th, 1886, Theophilus A. Brouwer, Esq., one of the Vice-Presidents, in the chair.

Upon the recommendation of the Committee on Versions, the Board authorized the printing from type of an edition of the Psalms in the Choctaw language, the version having been made by the Rev. John Edwards, missionary of the Presbyterian Church among the Indians.

Grants and consignments of books to foreign agents, colporteurs, auxiliary societies, churches, and individuals, amounting in the aggregate to over six thousand dollars, were made.

Among the letters from foreign lands were communications from Mr. Milne, at Bogota, about to begin a ride of a thousand miles on muleback to Quito; from Mr. A. B. King, of Liberia, mentioning the dispersion of a community of Mohammedans at Bopora, who in previous years have taken some interest in procuring the Scriptures in Arabic; from Dr. Bliss, mentioning a visit at the Bible House in Constantinople from Admiral Franklin of the Pensecola, and the progress of negotiations with the Turkish Government for the removal of restrictions on Bible colportage; from Dr. McGilvary, of Chiengmai, Laos; Dr. Chester, of Dindigul; Dr. Blodget, of Peking, and numerous other correspondents.

The receipts in July were $48,101.21; issues from the Bible House in July, 65,345 volumes.

Total receipts since April 1st, $157,330.06; issues since April 1st, 362,148 volumes.

The General Outlook.

....The Baltimore Baptist of July 15th says: "Dr. C. C. Meador, pastor of the Fifth Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., deserves a chaplet of unfading green for his long and successful war against a giant corporation. Shortly after the completion of the house of worship of the Fifth Church, the Baltimore & Potomac R. R. Company located its repair shop and round-house immediately in the rear of the church. The annoyance was such as frequently to compel the suspension of worship on Sabbath as well as in the week. The plucky pastor, after exhausting every other means, entered suit to recover heavy damages. By years of persistent endeavor he succeeded in bringing the suit to trial, then to higher courts, but at last was rewarded by a decree giving the church $5,000, with the right to renew the suit every three years until the nuisance was abated. Dr. Meador has not failed to renew the suit at each period, and thus secured damages three times. The B. & P. R. R. Company have now decided to give up the contest and remove the round-house and shop to another location, and thus give the Fifth Church peace. We feel like ringing out a wild hurrah for Meador."

....The new Mayor of Shanghai, China, is a native Christian.

....The Government of Japan has forbidden lecturing against Christianity.

...A number of Christian Chinese at Foo Chow have volunteered to go to Corea as missionaries.

....The Baptist Weekly reports: The First German Baptist Church of New York this week is celebrating its fortieth anniversary. On Sunday morning the pastor, Rev. George A. Schulte, preached a historical sermon in which he gave some very interesting details. Among other things he said: 'In 1845 a young man from Germany named John Eschmann arrived in New York and united with the South Baptist Church, and was appointed by the Home Mission Board missionary among the Germans of this city. Among the fruits of his first year's labor was the organization of the First German Baptist Church of New York city, with twelve members. What was then a small, weak body is now an active, strong church, and has given to the denomination twenty-two German Baptist ministers, among whom are most of the prominent German pastors of the United States, the three professors of the Rochester Theological Seminary, and the editor of the German Baptist papers. During these forty years 940 have been baptized and 670 received by letter and experience; 645 have been dismissed by letter, 389 excluded and dropped, and 155 have died. The present membership is 352. The church has had but three pastors, the first pastorate lasting twenty years, the second six and the present pastor being in his fourteenth year." In the evening a general meeting for reminiscences was held, at which addresses were delivered by the Rev. J. C. Haselhuhn, of Cleveland, Ohio; the Rev. H. M. Schaffer, of Rochester, N. Y., and others. During the week there have been interesting meetings in which former and present members have participated.

....A very unusual compliment was paid to Dr. Lathrop by his brother ministers of Stamford, in sending him a "respectful and affectionate protest" against his resignation of the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of that village. In their letter they say:

"Your presence among us has added dignity and lustre to the profession of which we are members, and has greatly strengthened the ministry of Christ in this place. Through your able teachings and exemplary life as a minister, your sound judgment, faithful labor, and catholic sympathy as a Christian, the affection and confidence with which all the churches regard you, and the high esteem in which you are held by all classes in the town, you have become a moral power for good in the community which Stamford cannot afford to lose.

"Permit us, in a brotherly way, to express the hope that you will be led to recall the resignation which you have placed in the hands of your people; and that, under God's blessing, you may be permitted to continue your pastoral work in Stamford yet many years."

To this are affixed the names of every pastor of Stamford, including those of the two Episcopal rectors and that of the priest of St. John's Roman Catholic Church.

....The exodus of Jews from Russian Poland has attained extraordinary figures—no less than 20,150 have left the country for America alone during 1885.

....The following appears in the Jewish Messenger of last week:

"The situation in American Judaism has become as peculiar and perplexing of late years as the situation in American politics. Old points of demarcation are obliterated, and principles are held with so loose a grip that it is difficult to define precisely the platforms upon which all of us are grouped. The lines, in fact, are so perpetually shifting that there seems to be no platform out of whole timber upon which American Israel may confidently stand. The best suffer from foreign fungi and dry rot, whose influence has apparently permeated our entire community."

....The Rev. Dr. Llewellyn D. Bevan, who is remembered here as the pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church on Fifth avenue, has resigned his charge at Highbury Quadrant, North London, and accepted the call of the Collins Street Congregational Church in Melbourne, Australia. He has been constrained to make this change by the advice of his physician, who maintains that the delicate health of Mrs. Bevan and the children demands a milder climate than that of England.

....The Advance tells its readers, An interesting and profitable Sunday-school Convention closed in Portland, Oregon, July 13th. There was a large representation of Sunday-school workers from various parts of the State, as well as visitors from a distance. Among them Dr. J. A. Worden, of Philadelphia, Dr. J. E. Gilbert, W. B. Jacob, Esq., of Chicago, and Henry Plant, Esq, of Minneapolis. Practical steps were taken toward a more complete organization of county and State Sunday-school work, and a reorganization of State conventions, which a few years ago were so admirably sustained, but had been given up for some time. The above named brethren were sent out by the International Committee at the request of some active Sunday-school workers in this State. Their words of counsel and encouragement will, it is believed insure more than a temporary enthusiasm and bear fruit in permanent results, in increased activity and wiser efforts for the salvation of the children.

....The North China Daily News makes the following interesting statement: "Recently a very remarkable development of Christian activity is said to have taken place. A number of native converts have, of their own accord, volunteered to go as Christian missionaries to Corea. A very wealthy old Fukien gentleman, himself a recent convert, has given generous support to the undertaking; and in a few days the little band of devoted men intend to start to their field of labor under the tutelage of Rev. Mr. Wolfe. ....The high estimation in which the Chinese appear to be held in Corea will no doubt do something to pave the way for the missionaries from Fukien; and it is to be hoped that the apparently receptive nature of the Corean disposition will help to facilitate the work. As far as we know this is the first instance of any Chinese Christians leaving their own country to spread Christianity among other nations. We think the fact sufficiently interesting and unique to merit a passing notice; for it shows that even the apathetic Chinamen can be aroused to unselfish enthusiasm under certain influences, and gives good promise of energy in mission work on the part of the Chinese, as a nation, when they shall have been brought more extensively under the dominion of Christianity than is the case at present."

...In Utah the Congregationalists have 4 churches, 9 ministers and 210 members; the Baptists 2 churches, 2 ministers and 170 members; Catholics 4 churches, 6 priests and 850 members; Episcopalians 4 churches, 7 ministers and 465 members; Methodists 7 churches, 13 ministers and 381 members; Presbyterians 12 churches, 14 ministers and 382 members; Lutherans 1 church, 1 minister and 40 members. Total, 34 churches, 53 ministers and 2,498 members.

News of the Week.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 4.—A remarkable demonstration in Dublin over Lord and Lady Aberdeen's departure. Business was suspended, and it took two hours and a half for the procession to pass a given point. Every trade in Dublin was represented. Lord and Lady Aberdeen seemed deeply affected. For the first time in very many years both the government and people united in doing honor to the viceroy....The cotton crop of West India is reported to be the largest ever gathered....It is reported that the Queen will open Parliament in person... It is stated that the police have been informed of the existence of extensive intrigues by Irish and Russian dynamiters against the English Government....The celebration of the 500th anniversary of the foundation of Heidelberg University took place on the 2d. Five thousand persons were present and the celebration was opened by a speech from the Crown Prince, Frederick William ...One and a half inches of snow fell yesterday on Mount Washington. Snow fell also in Rome, N. Y ...The burial of four of the victims of the "Sarah Craig" took place yesterday. The procession was followed by a great crowd and the cemetery was so thronged that the gates had to be closed.... In a boiler explosion at the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company's machine shops at Lansford, one man was killed, four fatally injured, fourteen seriously, and as many more slightly injured. A rough estimate places the loss of property at $10,000.

THURSDAY, 5.—The completion of the Cabinet ended with Lord Randolph Churchill's triumph on every material issue. He was anxious to get rid of Sir Richard Cross and Mr. Stanley, and this he accomplished after he had secured for himself the leadership of the House....It is thought by some that Mr. Gladstone intends to retire from public life....It is reported that an attempt has been made to assassinate the Grand Vizier of Turkey by a Tartar. ....Riots renewed in Belfast. Two magistrates were wounded while reading the Riot Act to the mob....Merchants are dissatisfied with the mail service between New York and Panama. The mails are from fourteen to twenty days going from New York to Panama, thus causing heavy expenses to merchants, who prefer buying in Europe until a satisfactory service can be secured with the United States....Samuel J. Tilden died yesterday morning at his home at Greystone, Yonkers, New York, in his 73d year. His estate is estimated at $10,000,000. ....A boat containing an aged couple and five children was upset in the harbor at Portland, Me., and all the occupants were drowned ...The warfare begun against gamblers at Saratoga has done some good. Five have been arrested, and gamblers are closing their doors and putting away their paraphernalia.

FRIDAY, 6.—There is a great deal of opposition in England to Mr. Mathews, the new Home Secretary. Alderman William Cook has decided to re-contest East Birmingham against Mr. Mathews. Mr. Cook is opposed to the Irish Land bill and favors continued representation of Ireland at Westminster....The French Government has intimated to the Vatican that France will maintain her right of exercising a protectorate over French missions in China, leaving the Holy See responsible for the results of the appointment of an apostolic delegate at Pekin. The Pope is ready to undertake the responsibility....A meeting of all the Bonaparte family, except Prince Victor, will be held at Prangings, August 15th. The object is to unite the royalist party, and Prince Victor declines to attend because he alone represents the empire....The new Extradition Treaty with Japan was signed April 29th, 1886, and sent to the Senate by the President on June 9th ...Second trial of Alford Packer was concluded yesterday at Gunnison City, Col., and the prisoner sentenced to forty years' imprisonment or eight years for each man he killed and ate.... The defence of the anarchists in Chicago are introducing their witnesses.

(Continued on page thirteen.)

Our Contributors.

A Sonnet.

BY H. E. G.

WITH deep, oppressive sadness oft I read
Of those intrepid men who nobly fought
Life's battles, doing always what they ought,
Not seeking how they might from toil be freed;
And then I ask why it has been decreed
That I, who would do much, accomplish nought,
Although I long and earnestly have sought
Volition to translate to forceful deed.
It was of old most true and is so still,
There's little is our life to call our own;
Unseen and nameless forces bend the will;
Each morn we step into a world unknown,
And yet we feel though sad, alone and ill,
The everlasting arms around us thrown.

NEW YORK, August 3d, 1886.

The Stranger that Is Within Thy Gates.

BY KATE S. GATES.

"OH, girls, isn't that just too lovely for anything!" and, as she spoke, Nell Reynolds held a baby doll out at arm's length for inspection.

The Young Ladies' Mission Band of the Elm Street Church met with Margaret Archer this afternoon to sew for a box they were filling for a poor Sunday-school in the West. There were various admiring exclamations from most of the girls, but Margaret's face looked perplexed and troubled.

"What is it, Margaret?" asked Nell, laughingly. "There's something on your mind; out with it; what's wrong?'

"Nothing really wrong," replied Margaret, hesitatingly, "only girls, it seems to me that we stop too soon."

"Well, I should just like to know what you mean by that! Why, everybody says that we do a world of good. Dr. Huntley is as proud of us as he can be!" exclaimed Susie Barrows indignantly.

"I know, girls; but, yet after all, it does seem to me that we aren't quite all that we ought to be. You see we do a great deal of good for folks way off, and for the real poor in our midst, but—don't you believe, girls, that there are ever so many right by our sides, strangers within our gates, whose lives are needy and destitute, who need heart and soul help; do you understand what I mean? Somehow it seems to me that we have only thought of those who are hungry for food or in need of bodily clothing, and have forgotten those whose hearts are pining for cheering words, and whose lives are full of hunger and longings for bits of beauty and dainty comfort. I have been thinking of it a long time, and this morning when I read that verse: 'These ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone,' it seemed like a message right to us."

"Margaret," said Nell Reynolds, whimsically, "you are too provoking! Here I was really feeling quite satisfied with myself, and thinking that for once in my life I was doing something for others, and now you must needs go and make me feel that I've been a selfish, thoughtless creature. What would you have me do that I haven't done?"

"Oh, Nellie, I saw that Edna Wheeler look so wistfully at your white shawl the other night at the sociable. I know she just admires pretty, dainty things, but she hasn't the money to buy them with, nor time to make them; so she has to go without. And, girls, you remember that plaque that I painted for Mrs. Huntley? Well, I saw Mrs. Grey looking at it with tears, actually tears, in her eyes. 'I know that I'm foolish,' she said, 'but I do love beautiful things so?' They are not really poor, but then I guess they cannot afford to spend much for such things, and I tell you I made up my mind then and there that she should have the very prettiest plaque that I could paint. And there are ever so many, I've no doubt, that we could make happy in some such way, if only we have our eyes open and see them."

"But, Margaret," objected Nell, "do you think Mrs. Grey or Miss Wheeler would accept charity? I am afraid that there would be more resentment than pleasure on their part."

"No there won't," replied Margaret; "I shall look out for that. And couldn't we each of us do something quietly to make some lonely heart happy or satisfy some wistful longing, even if we had to give up some little pleasure of our own to do it?

There was never such a happy day in Wellboro before; good cheer seemed in all hearts. Mrs. Grey's simple little parlor was glorified by a lovely plaque, and Mrs. Grey herself was radiant. "It does me good, Tom, through and through," she said. "I cannot tell you how just the thought of it rests me and helps me about my work. People who have so many such things don't half appreciate them."

"I presume not," replied her husband. "They only who go without know truly what it is to have."

Edna Wheeler touched lovingly a beautiful white fleecy wrap. "When I get my work done I am going to change my dress and put it on a few minutes," she said to her mother. "I can't believe that it really is mine, though. I've always wondered how Nell Reynolds could toss hers round so carelessly and not seem to care any more for it."

Will Norcross, Mr. Chaffee's bookkeeper, took his pocketbook out at least half a dozen times during the day to see if there really was a receipt for a year's subscription to Harper's in it, or if, after all, it was only a dream he had had. He had wanted to subscribe for it himself, but how could he, for there was mother and Mamie, Will and Joe to feed, clothe and care for. Oh, no, of course he could not, and yet here it was.

Dick Allen failed in every lesson at school just for thinking of his Youth's Companion. Miss Judy Perkins, who took in sewing, just broke down and cried the first evening that she tried to sew by the light of her new student lamp. And these were not all; there were many others.

"I'll tell you, girls," said Nell Reynolds the first time that the Mission Band met after this, "I can't begin to tell you anything about it, but I never was so happy in all my life before. I don't believe that anyone I remembered was half so happy."

"'It is more blessed to give than to receive,' Nellie," said Margaret, softly.

"Well, I thank you a thousand times over dear Meg for your lesson. I really was feeling quite satisfied with myself; everybody said that the Band was doing so much good that I felt quite conceited. Somehow I never thought of this sort of doing and giving; but I am going to try to remember now. I do want to be a useful, helpful woman, and, God helping me, the hearts about me every day of my life shall be lighter, happier and better for my being in the world. All that I can do will not amount to much, I suppose, but then I'll do it."

"And with God's blessing, Nellie, it will amount to more than you think, perhaps."

A Letter from China.

The Instruction of the Native Helpers —The Exclusion of Chinese Immigrants from the United States. —The INTELLIGENCER Courteously Criticized.

AMOY, May 29th, 1886.

DEAR DR. FERRIS: On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week was held one of the yearly examinations of unordained helpers and theological students. In these examinations the three Protestant missions at Amoy unite. The examiners are the missionaries and ordained native pastors, all who are able to attend. Learning from the experience of many years, we have gradually changed, and, we think, greatly improved the system. As means and opportunity afforded we have enlarged the circle of studies. The present arrangement is for a course of study extending over ten years. The examination this week was of the three lower classes, or candidates for the first, second and third degrees or grades. The examination was well sustained. The examination for the higher grades takes place some months hence.

Now, a few words on a very different subject. More than twenty years ago some Christian families, (with other Chinese,) emigrated from Amoy to British Honduras. One of the families was of the surname Peh. The man's name was Tek. He took with him his wife and three little children. His surname and name, Peh Tek, became the English surname of his family. In Honduras it was spelled Pettick. One of the children died. The other two were called respectively George and Paul. Year before last Mr. and Mrs. Pettick and their two sons returned to Amoy. They brought with them from several ministers and some of the British officials testimonials as to their excellent character. The eldest son, George, brought with him a wife, (a native of the British possessions,) and two children. The old people will doubtless spend the rest of their days here, and Paul, if spared, will remain with them till they die. George has decided to return with his wife and children to their former home in South America. He was expecting to take passage in a tea steamer from Amoy to New York, and thence to take steamer to Central America. He came to us for letters of introduction to anyone who would give him good advice in New York. Then we remembered the animus of Americans towards the Chinese. After consulting with the American Consul we have concluded to advise him not to risk a trip by the way of the United States.

I feel shame all over me to be compelled to write such things concerning my native country. I know very well that, by solemn treaty and by the whole spirit of American institutions, as they used to be, he would be safe enough, but by the law of Congress he may not land in the United States. Would a law of Congress be allowed to override a treaty with Great Britain? From a child George Pettick has resided in British territory, dresses like a European or American, speaks the English language, and has a wife who cannot speak Chinese. Yet he is guilty of the grave crime of being a Chinaman!

When we last came from the United States we had, as you know, a Chinese lad under our care. He had been a number of years in the United States attending school. He spoke English well, in fact, had forgotten much of his own tongue, and dressed like an American. He had become a member of the Methodist Church and was thoroughly American in his feelings. We spent a few days at a private hotel and boarding house in San Francisco. At the table in the dining room to which some of our party were allotted places, we placed the Chinese lad between us, to protect him from insult. On Sunday morning one of the gentlemen at our table discovered the lad to be a Chinaman. He arose, and with profane language left the table. The lad, showing his more gentlemanly training, as well as ready wit, pleasantly remarked, "That man is not hungry this morning." At the request of our landlady, who was in danger of losing her boarders—of being "boycotted"—if she permitted a Chinese Christian lad to sit at a public table in her house, my wife and I took the lad with us and dined by ourselves at a small side table, in a corner of the room, partly behind a door.

In the early part of this crusade against the Chinese, when it was carried on mostly by the hoodlums of California, the sand-lot people and their cousins-german throughout the country, we were not much troubled concerning it. We supposed there was enough genuine American feeling and Christian sentiment in the land to restrain it. We supposed that the result might even be beneficial to the Chinese, for they would see that the Christian Church was on their side. When we found politicians coming forward with the cry, "The Chinese must go," we probably felt a little more indignant, yet were not very greatly surprised. But, oh, how disheartening it is to find so many members of Christian churches, ministers of the Gospel and editors of religious papers, practically joining in the cry! Anti-Chinese riots ending in pillage, arson and wholesale murder are the result, and worse still, so far as we have yet learned, there is little or no redress.

Perhaps we feel more deeply at present, because our good old CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER does not, as we think, have the right and clear ring on this subject. The first (or nearly the first) INTELLIGENCER that I opened on our return last autumn from Australia, (paper of Oct. 7th, 1885,) contained an article designed in words to give "unqualified condemnation" to anti-Chinese riots, but which seemed to us to approximate towards an apology for them. Two weeks later, in answer to an excellent paper, signed by H. P. A., taking exception to said article, the INTELLIGENCER defended itself in a larger article, manifesting similar anti-Chinese animus. Its doctrine is that Chinese labor is something of great degradation, (whatever that may mean,) and if allowed in the country will "drag American labor down to a degradation equal to its own." "The main point is: Shall American workingmen be forced to live like heathen, or shall they have opportunity to live like Christians?"

When the leaders of public opinion in the community, and especially in the Church, make the workingmen believe that the presence of the Chinese in the land is as injurious and unjust to them as is taught in that and similar articles, and especially in a paper published in a number of the INTELLIGENCER, (April 14th, 1886,) received by last mail, you may be sure there will be Chinese riots, however much you may exhort against them.

A few words in reference to the article just alluded to in the INTELLIGENCER of April last. It is a report of an Anti Chinese Convention recently held at Sacramento, Cal. The preamble and resolutions appear to us as anti-truthful and anti-Christian as they are anti-Chinese; yet THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER published them without one word of comdemnation. It seems to approve of the whole "action of the convention," except, perhaps, the "boycotting" resolution. I say "perhaps," for, after reading a good many times the remarks introducing the "action of the convention," I am not yet sure on this point; and it seems to me that anyone who can swallow all that precedes the "boycotting" resolution, might as well swallow that also.

So much for the attitude taken by the INTELLIGENCER on this subject, as it seems to us. I am sure the senior editor will not for one moment suspect me of harboring the least "animus" against him, or against the good old paper. He knows me and I know him too well for that. If I have now been sinning he has the opportunity of administering a proper castigation.

Do you wonder that we feel warmly on this subject—we who once were so proud of our country, and were wont so hold up it and its institutions before this people as so worthy of imitation, but who now are often called on to make to them explanations and apologies, and who are afraid to advise George Pettick to return to Honduras by the way of New York, because a law of Congress, in violation of treaty obligations, forbids his landing on United States soil? In the treaty with China of 1868 it is said, "The United States of America and the Empire of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from the one country to the other for the purposes of curiosity, trade, or as permanent residents." That sounds like the old doctrine that man as man had certain inherent and inalienable rights. Has our country now changed that doctrine? or is not the Chinaman a man? But it was with the Chinese that this solemn covenant was made.

But let us look at the matter from a higher standpoint still, that is the Christian standpoint. The Church in America acknowledges her obligation to Christianize China. She sends a few missionaries to be scattered abroad in small companies throughout this vast empire. But God in His Providence sends tens of thousands of this people right into the midst of Christian America. What a glorious opportunity for the Church there! She ought to thank God for it with all her heart, and with all her might enter on the work of evangelizing these multitudes, both for their own salvation and that they may take back the Gospel to their countrymen. Instead of this, Christians in America attempt to close the door which God would open before them. They are afraid that instead of Christianizing the Chinese, the Chinese will heathenize them! Shame on such Christianity! If your millions of Christians in America are too few and too weak to contend with a few tens of thousands of Chinese brought to your very doors, how do you expect a few hundreds of missionaries to cope with the hundreds of millions here?

J. V. N. TALMAGE.

Sabbath Day Point, Lake George.

MR. EDITOR: Here we are by the shore of one of the most beautiful lakes in America. Its loveliness is appreciated far more at the close of a week than at the end of the first day's sojourn. Enchanting views present themselves continually to the visitor. I have seen no landscapes that surpass these in beauty.

These waters were discovered by a Romish priest named Jacques, in 1646, as he was on his way to the Iroquois nation, by which people he was burned. This lake, around whose green islands Indian legends cluster, and at whose northern extremity are the ruins of Fort Ticonderoga, is thirty-six miles in length and from one to three in width. Great mountains rise all along the shores; the highest, Black Mountain, is 2,878 feet above the sea.

Our boarding-house is packed full. A dozen cottages are near this place.

Last Sabbath I preached in Grace Memorial Union Chapel, which is a substantial stone church built mainly by the cottagers at a cost of $6,000. On the Sabbath previous Rev. Wm. H. Vroom preached. The memorial window to the rear of the pulpit reminds one of the late Rev. Dr. Gillette, a well-known Baptist minister of New York, and another window calls to mind the Rev. Selah Woodhull Strong, of our Reformed Church.

The Lake Champlain Steamboat Company run two finely-built steamers on this lake, viz., the "Horicon" and "Ticonderoga." Each boat makes a tour of the lake in both directions daily. As the flow is toward the North, they who live here speak of going down to Ticonderoga.

Some of the hotels are large. The Sagamore and Fort William Henry will accommodate four hundred and one thousand guests respectively.

Great changes and marked improvement are manifest in the villages bordering on this romantic lake since our first visit twelve years ago.

D. B. WYCKOFF.

The Wanderer's Inquiry.

SONG 1:7.

BY REV. C. H. POLHEMUS.

TELL me where Thy flocks are feeding;
Where they rest their wayworn feet;
Where they never fail of shelter
From the noonday's withering heat.

Tell me, whom my soul adoreth,
Where those fragrant pastures grow;
I shall ever pant and wander,
Till from Thee the way I know.

I am weary of the desert
Where my feet so long have strayed;
I have chased its brightest phantoms
But to see their beauty fade.

Burdens, trials, tribulations,
Make me faint, as do the rays
Hot and scorching, of the midday
Sun, these glowing summer days.

But I know in Thy green pastures,
Gentle Shepherd, Heavenly Friend,
That Thine own find rest and comfort,
Thou dost shield them to the end.

Glances Across the Sea.

BY REV. HENRY E. DOSKER.

IV.

AT last the inevitable has come, in the course of ecclesiastical events in the Netherlands; the Rubicon has been passed; peace has well nigh become an impossibility and, humanly speaking, nothing can prevent the upheaval of which I spoke in a previous article.

The Provincial Synod has, under date of July 1st, 1886, deposed, and that for an unlimited time, the 80 suspended members of the Consistory of Amsterdam. This number includes the names of Dr. A. Kuyper, the leader of the party, Dr. F. L. Rutgers, Dr. I. Woltjer, Mr. D. P. D. Fabius, LL.D., Dr. A. H. de Hartog—all of them professors of the Free University of Amsterdam; and Messrs. W. Hovy and S. I. Seefat, who are closely connected with it. It would seem, therefore, as if the avowed aim was—the destruction, at one blow, of the centre of life of the orthodox party. An aim which appears all the more clearly, when it is considered that this deposition "disqualifies all the parties for holding any ecclesiastical office for an unlimited time." Now it can clearly be seen that under this sentence the hope of the orthodox to gain ecclesiastical recognition for the Free University, its professors and students, becomes an utter impossibility.

It seems to me that there is some connection between this outrage (for the accused have at no time since their suspension, Jan. 4th, had a chance of defense by trial or hearing,) and a sentiment expressed at a meeting of the Moderns at Amsterdam some weeks ago. Prof. Knappeth, of the State University of Amsterdam, on that occasion made the remarkable statement, "that the unity of the Church must be maintained, but that the orthodox must be driven out at all hazards."

And who were the judges in this case, who, "mirabile dictu," were trying the accused among other things, for "far-reaching heterodoxy?" "Seven men," Dr. Kuyper says, under date of July 11th, "who one by one and head for head, long since should have been deposed from the ministry, because they reject at once the Scriptures and the Christ and our confession."

It may be easily imagined what attitude the orthodox will assume. The more pitiable that there is no perfect understanding even between the leaders of the party. At no time since the great revolution under William the Silent, was the ancient national motto more vitally true than now. "Een dracht maakt macht" should be written in every loyal heart, should if necessary be prayed and fasted into every soul.

It was very difficult to forecast what has happened. Even the most ardent opponents, except those immediately interested in the matter, did not consider that the Provincial Synod of North Holland would dare to go to such desperate lengths.

Meanwhile, the Classis of Amsterdam continued in its course of folly and was fast becoming the laughing-stock of the Netherlands. Assuming once again "Consistorial authority," it asked on May 13th, that within a week all buildings held by the old trustees, some of whom, as stated before, belonged to the deposed elders and deacons, should be vacated for its own use, as acting Consistory of the churches of Amsterdam. The trustees, of course, declined to obey, on the ground that according to the charter they were responsible only to the consistory, and were bound to deny and ignore all foreign interference.

Two representatives of the Classis, accompanied by two sheriffs, appeared before the "Westerkerk" at the set time; but found it closed and deserted, except by the watchmen, which, ever since Jan. 4th, were placed in the building by the trustees for its safe keeping. A mob gathered immediately, and when the party drove off again it was greeted with taunts and groans and cat-calls.

Moreover, the trustees refused to admit members who had been elected by the Classis, March 22d, in its assumed, abnormal, consistorial capacity, on account of manifest irregularities in their election.

The constant altercations raised the ire of the Classical dignitaries to the highest point. As an instance of their irritability, I may mention that they sharply reprimanded Revs. J. G. Klomp, of Graveland, and A. D. Klerck, of Weesp, for preaching in the halls where the suspended ministers generally held forth, and significantly warned them not to repeat the offense.

Moreover, they addressed every Classis in the country on the matter, and begged that ministers from abroad might be prohibited, by Classical interdicts, from giving the moral support of their presence to the belligerent pastors and church members at Amsterdam. But, as ever before, every act of oppression strengthens the opposition. The most of the people attend upon the ministrations of the now deposed pastors and professors.

In this connection a meaningful financial test may be applied as to the strength of the orthodox party in Amsterdam. In all the churches of the capital, during the month of April, one of the best on account of its holiday services, the collections amounted to not quite 800 florins. In the halls, four or five, they yielded the respectable sum of 2,200 florins, nearly thrice the amount of the church collections.

The open advice of Dr. Kuyper to all orthodox members of Classes is: Not to attend the meetings, at least to abstain from voting; better yet, to meet with like minded brethren on the same day of the Classical sessions, in a separate place, in the capacity of Classical conferences.

I have no doubt but an appeal will be taken from the action of the Provincial Synod. Will the Synod of the Hague dare to follow in the footsteps of the lower court? Will the Moderns, in that final court, be as audacious as were the others? If so, we stand at the threshold of momentous occurrences; for, if I have read the man's character well, Dr. K. is not to be thus easily set aside. He and his followers will fight their battles to the bitter end.

Mt. Meenahga Letter.

SITTING near my window, in a quiet, pleasant room, and looking out upon the mountains which are to be seen on every side, it seems as if I must write to the INTELLIGENCER, hoping that the letter may reach some who, wishing to leave the noise and bustle of city life, do not know of any summer resort where they may be sure of not meeting those dragons in even more aggravated form than at home.

Mt. Meenahga is a delightfully quiet place, 1,500 feet above sea level, about two miles from Ellenville, N. Y., and within fifteen miles of Lakes Minnewaska and Mohonk. The scenery, although lacking the grandeur of that of higher mountains, is beautiful, and there are caves and falls to which the ambitious and vigorous pedestrian may walk.

For the little ones, too, very few more pleasant places could be found, while for the use of the "older children" two tennis courts have been prepared.

On the whole, it is one of the most delightful places to be found anywhere for those who wish to escape from the usual noise and excitement of hotel life, and we sincerely hope that many of those who read the INTELLIGENCER may be able to come here and share the advantages.

E. M. C.

A REMARKABLE EVENT was celebrated at the residence of Dr. James R. Speer, of Pittsburg, Pa., on the 19th of last month (July), it being Dr. and Mrs. Speer's sixty-fifth marriage anniversary. Dr. Speer has been a resident of Pittsburg for over sixty years, and for fifty years was a leading physician and surgeon of that city and of Western Pennsylvania. As an oculist he was known from New York to California, and had patients from every State in the Union. Dr. Speer has been a frequent contributor to medical literature, and to the religious and secular press, and retains his brightness of intellect and sprightliness in conversation to a surprising degree. The celebration of the sixty fifth wedding-day—the husband ninety and the wife eighty-four, and in the happy possession of their faculties—is a very remarkable event.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Reading Room.

Our Book-Shelves.

....“PSYCHOLOGY: The Cognitive Powers,” is the title of President McCosh’s latest publication. It is the first part of what is intended to be a complete course of psychological instruction, to be followed by another on the Motive Powers of the Mind, including the Conscience, Emotions, and Will. This work will be the crowning literary labor of the learned author, as it will be the ripened fruit of a life-long study and of thirty-four years of teaching in this branch of science.

In the volume before us, the cognitive powers are inductively investigated, beginning with a physiological examination of the senses. Thence the writer passes to the retentive, associative, recognitive, compositive, and other powers, which he classes as reproductive. And thirdly he treats of the comparative powers, or those which discover the primary relations of things. He here emphasizes his theory of the direct perception of objective relations, as opposed to the Kantian theory which refers these to subjective principles of the mind. He closes with a discussion of the origin of ideas. It would be impossible here to even indicate the scope of such a work. We need only say that this psychology is kept singularly clear from a priori metaphysics, and is a strictly scientific exposition; that it has all the author’s charms of lucidity in thought and style, and of freedom from needless technicalities; and that it is illustrated by experiment and observation so as to be always interesting, and even at times racy and refreshing reading, and is so practically put as to be an incomparable text book on the subject. (Charles Scribner’s Sons.)

....The Lutheran Publication Society have just issued two volumes of popular discourses upon some of the living issues of the times. The first is entitled, “VITAL QUESTIONS PERTAINING TO CHRISTIAN BELIEF,” by M. Rhodes, D.D., of St. Louis, and treats of the folly of atheism, inspiration, probation after death, causes and weaknesses of infidelity, and the power and excellence of Christianity in contrast with the weakness of infidelity.

The author’s style is lucid and vivid, earnest and direct, and he purposely avoids the technical and abstruse forms of argument, so as to bring his treatment within the range of thought of a mixed audience and with special reference to young people whom he addressed.

The second volume is, “THE SIX DAYS OF CREATION: The Fall and The Deluge.” By J. B. Reimensnyder, D.D. It consists of a series of fifteen lectures designed to defend the Mosaic record from the assaults of skeptics, both upon scientific and moral grounds. The author holds that the creative days were natural days of twenty-four hours each, although he carefully states the opposite view held by many Christian scientists of the indefinite, prolonged demiurgic periods. He argues with power against the theory of atheistic evolution, and uses the facts of modern science with skill and force for his own interpretation of the Mosaic record. The chapter on the Institution and Obligation of the Sabbath, and its vindication of the modern and American Christian Sunday, is one of the best in the book. The practical reflections of each discussion are well timed, and the style of argument and illustration is remarkably clear and often eloquent.

It is a good sign of the pulpit in our times that it is putting forth practical works like these in the interests of science and religion, and against the efforts of those who are ever trying to put asunder these two great revelations of Himself which God has put together.

....“ECONOMICS FOR THE PEOPLE.” By R. R. Bowker. There is, perhaps, no subject on which “the average man” is so much in the dark, or has such crude and confused ideas as that of which this little book treats. To such persons, if they really wish for light, this book will be both welcome and useful. In simple style, plain and business-like methods, such as might be expected from a business man with clear ideas, and with simple, sometimes homely, but always effective illustrations, it sets forth both the principles involved and their application to the present condition of the country. Some of its chapters require a little harder thinking than others. But any man of ordinary intelligence can grasp the meaning of every page, and cannot fail by means of it to obtain “a fair knowledge of the economic history and condition of our country.” Such knowledge every intelligent voter ought to have, and every-one ought to be—would that all were—intelligent enough to seek it. (Harpers.)

....“THE STORY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS FOR YOUNG READERS.” By Lucy C. Lillie. The author of this unique little book is one of the best of living writers for children. Her stories, appearing first in Harper’s Young People and afterward in book form, have had a wonderful but deserved popularity. In the same favorite periodical have been given the series of papers which make up this present volume. The plan of the book Mrs. Lillie presents in these words:

“All that I hope to do in these pages is to tell you the story of music, as it were, to offer some simple suggestions for piano practice and study, to give the mere rudiments of what is called theory, and to tell you something of the lives of the great composers, the musical influences of their times, and to introduce you to certain of their works.”

In the execution of this plan she has been remarkably successful. “The Story of Music and Musicians” is both fascinating and instructive. A well arranged index increases its value, and the illustrations with which the publishers have embellished it add to its attractions. Altogether it is quite the thing to put into the hands of the young student of music. (Harper & Brothers.)

....“BALDWIN: Being Dialogues on Views and Aspirations.” By Vernon Lee. Several of the dialogues in this volume have appeared before in British periodicals, but their merit entitles them to a place in book form. It is true no conclusions are formulated or even arrived at, but the discussion brings up nearly all the views current in educated circles concerning belief, doubt, ideals, etc., and often the points at issue are presented in a very vigorous way and with unusual facility of diction. The value of the volume lies in the stimulus it gives to thought, and in the freshness with which it puts forward certain views which are by no means new. It is not intended for those who read only for amusement, but readers of a better class will find it very suggestive and sometimes instructive. (Roberts Brothers.)

....“THE CRUISE OF THE ALABAMA,” by one of the crew, is written with animation and a vividness inspired by personal participation in the stirring events described. It is not remarkable for literary finish and often tends to garrulity, but, nevertheless, it is interesting as furnishing an inside view of life on the famous Confederate cruiser and a fair account of her career. The work is issued in the handy “Riverside Paper Series.” (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

....“Cassell’s National Library” continues its excellent issue of books worthy to be read by all. The last three numbers give us “EGYPT AND SCYTHIA,” from Herodotus, “HAMLET,” and “VOYAGES AND TALES,” from Richard Hakluyt’s interesting Elizabethan chronicles. Those who wish the best reading at a very low price cannot do better than buy such books as these. (Cassell & Co.)

....“ALDEN’S CYCLOPEDIA OF UNIVERSAL LITERATURE” has reached its third volume. The opening word is “Boileau,” and the closing “Byron.” It gives biographical and critical notices of about ninety authors, with extracts from the works of the more noted. The sketches of American writers supply a need in our cyclopedic literature, and the work is very well done. The handy size of the volumes and their remarkable cheapness commend them to a very large class of readers. (John B. Alden.)

....“OLD SALEM,” by Eleanor Putnam, to which Arlo Bates, her husband, adds a charming introduction, is one of the most delightful books which has come into our hands for the enjoyment of those who by these days of vacation are set free from the cares and distractions of ordinary life and can surrender themselves to the sway of a refined and genial description of a life that is rapidly passing away. With great delicacy and grace, but with the truthfulness of a photograph, the Dames’ Schools, the Confections, the Shops, the Cupboards, and the people concerned in them, and a typical Captain of Old Salem, are presented to our captivated attention. The book is too small. As we finish the last page, we deplore the untimely death of the author, which put an end to a literary career when it had been only fairly begun. A cheaper edition seems desirable. There are no doubt many who will gladly pay a dollar for these few pages and give them a place of honor in their libraries; but the multitude ought to have an opportunity to enjoy these descriptions of the old honest, simple, strong and true life, so picturesque and of such marked individuality, which the complications and rush of the life of these days is ruthlessly sweeping away. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

Our Library Table.

Periodicals, Serials and Notes.

...The Forum for August opens with a weak, rambling talk called The Revolt of the Majority, but abundantly compensates for this by other articles of great excellence and timeliness. Mr. Bishop lashes properly Newspaper Espionage (’tis a pity the sinners could not in person receive a literal scourging), and Mr. Carnegie gives a truthful and encouraging account of the Results of the Labor Struggle. Prof. Harris tells us “How I was Educated,” and gives no small help to all interested in educational work. Prof. Beecher, of Auburn, in an article called The New Total Abstinence Creed, sets forth with cogent logic and in a very fair spirit the error of those who now pose before the public as the only true friends of temperance. Himself a total abstainer in principle and practice, he is able to speak on this subject without danger of being misunderstood. His paper is worthy of very wide circulation. The same is true of Dr. Edson’s incisive account of Poisons in Food and Drink.

....The Lutheran Church Review for July contains two very valuable papers. One treats of Luther’s Small Catechism, giving a catalogue raisonnè of the various explanations of it prepared for use in America. We hope this and a previous article on the translations of this admirable symbol will be issued in a volume. Such a work would be acceptable to all Lutherans and to very many besides. The other is a succinct, clear and good-tempered account of the Causes Leading to the Organization of the General Council. This is a delicate matter in which outsiders have no right to interfere. But will our brethren allow us to ask if the General Synods and the General Council, indeed all the Lutheran bodies, i. e., all who hold in any degree to the Augsburg Confession, could not form a federative union, to act together, say in the cause of Foreign Missions? Some such arrangement would enable our Lutheran brethren to exert an influence proportioned to their numbers, character and enterprize, which we think is hardly the case now. Organic union must proceed from within outwardly and must rest upon agreement as to fundamental verities, but coöperation ad res externas does not require such an exact accordance, and may be maintained along with a considerable diversity as to tenets and usages.

....The Baptist Quarterly for July is as usual well filled. Dr. Weston on the Four Gospels dissents from the common views of their mutual relation, and furnishes another, which, however, does not seem to us better sustained than those he sets aside. Is it certain that their relationship is a soluble problem? Dr. Clarke contributes a good exposition of Born of Water and the Spirit, making the former equivalent to repentance, which is more plausible than sound. Dr McArthur continues his articles on the Pastor’s Work, writing with good sense, save when he advises discipline for covetousness. The Rev. Mr. Simons makes a clever argument for the late date of the Apocalypse. The Editorial Department is well sustained. The dig at our Church for “hushing up” the defalcation of its Domestic Missionary Treasurer is undeserved. The Homiletic Department contains some good outlines, and a most excellent essay on Concentration in the Pulpit. The reviews of current literature are very good. Nowhere has there appeared a more skilful characterization of Von Holst’s work on our Constitutional History than is here given by William C. Morey, and Martineau’s Types of Ethical Theory is treated with equal insight and discrimination by S. L. Caldwell.

....The dainty new cover which enwraps the August Wide Awake is a pleasure to the eye. Within it is a most attractive table of contents. “The Royal Girls of England,” by M. E W. Sherwood, and “Sir Walter’s Honor,” a ballad by Margaret J. Preston, deserve special notice. The frontispiece, representing children gathering dandelions, is very pretty.

....Three particularly good serials are now being published in St. Nicholas. These are Horace Scudder’s “Biography of Washington;” Henry Eckford’s “Wonders of the Alphabet,” and Mrs. Burnett’s “Little Lord Fauntleroy.” The August number is full of interesting reading, the value of which is enhanced by many fine illustrations.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Harper & Bros.: Love and Luck: The Story of a Summer’s Loitering on the Great South Bay. By Robert Barnwell Roosevelt. 16mo, pp. 350; also,

Jo’s Opportunity. By Lucy C. Lillie. Illustrated. 16mo, pp. 175; also,

The Children of Old Park’s Tavern: A Story of the South Shore. By Frances A. Humphrey. 16mo, pp. 284.

UNBOUND BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Minutes of the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in North America Session 63. Held in New York city, May, 1886.

Forty-third Annual Report of the Managers of the State Lunatic Asylum for the Year 1885.

Essays. By Abraham Cowley. (No. 27, Cassell’s National Library.) 32mo, pp. 192. 10 cents; also,

Who Took It? and Other Stories. (Cassell’s Select Library.) 16mo, pp. 142. 15 cents; also,

Snowed Up, and Other Stories. (Same Series.) Pp. 142. 15 cents; also,

Sir Roger de Coverly and The Spectator’s Club. By Richard Steele and Joseph Addison. (Cassell’s National Library, Vol. I., No. 23.) 18mo, pp. 192. 10 cents.

Bad to Beat. A Novel. By Hawley Smart. (Harper’ Handy Series, No. 58.) 18mo, pp. 150. 25 cents; also,

The Chilcotes; or, Two Widows. A Novel. By Leslie Keith. (Harper’s Franklin Square Library, No. 537.) 4to, pp. 63. 20 cents.

PERIODICALS.

July.—The Monthly Interpreter, The Heretic

August.—Babyhood, Words and Weapons, Christian Thought, The English Illustrated Magazine, The Musical Herald.

A Dying College.

THERE is a deal of pathos in the spectacle presented by the ancient College of William and Mary in Virginia as it sits awaiting the final extinction that must soon come to it. Founded in 1693, it is the oldest college in America with the single exception of Harvard, and its history has been noble. Its establishment marked the first serious effort made to recognize the humanity of the Indian and to substitute education for the blunderbuss as an implement for his management. In its halls were educated many of the most illustrious men of America, among them Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe and Winfield Scott.

Its first buildings were designed by Sir Christopher Wren, and its first president was the Rev. James Blair. The college building was burned in 1705 and speedily rebuilt. When the revolution broke out William and Mary was the best endowed institution in America, but the greater part of its wealth lay in England and was lost by the rebellion of the colonies. We have before us the yellow, time stained letters of a student, written from the college during 1775 and 1776, which seem to show that the consciousness of the financial risks in which the institution must be involved caused its governors a great deal of anxiety as the shadow of coming war approached; but the student who wrote the letters was serving a little later as an officer under Light Horse Harry Lee, and the college was fully committed to the patriot cause.

When the revolution ended the college wealth consisted of $2,500 in money and some unproductive lands. In the years that followed the endowment funds were increased, new departments were added, and the college took rank as a university, with law and medical departments and a full complement of undergraduates. The establishment of the University of Virginia crippled William and Mary seriously. The new university was more favorably located, better endowed and better supported by the people. Its purely elective, German university system found peculiar favor in the South, and so the institution at Charlottesville little by little sapped the strength of the older one at Williamsburg.

The war of secession wrought something like ruin at William and Mary. Its buildings, its libraries and its apparatus were destroyed by fire; its students were scattered, and those to whose patronage it looked for support were impoverished. Worst of all, its funds were recklessly invested in confederate bonds.

After the war efforts were made to re establish the college. An endowment fund was raised and new buildings were put up. Again fire destroyed them and there was no insurance. Year by year the necessary expenses exceeded the income, and little by little the endowment fund decreased. When it was reduced to about $40,000 all the professors were dismissed and the president remained the sole member of the faculty. During one year he had a single student, who constituted the total undergraduate strength of the institution, precisely as young Clinton, with the professor hired to teach him, once constituted the whole of Columbia College in this city, except that Clinton's solitary studentship was the beginning, while this was the end, of a great institution's career. Now there is a president and no student at all at William and Mary, and within a few years the last dollar of the endowment will have been spent and the old college will be dead.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

China and the Evangelical Alliance.

A FEW weeks ago the United States Evangelical Alliance received from the Evangelical Alliance of China an earnest appeal in relation to outrages committed upon residents of China in the United States. The following extract contains the substance of the appeal:

PEKIN, April 6th, 1886.

To the Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance in the United States of America:

DEAR BROTHER: In view of the outrages recently committed upon the Chinese on the Pacific coast, and also in some of the interior States and Territories of the United States, wherein from many towns all the Chinese residents, without distinction of age, sex, occupation, or character, have been driven from their homes by threats and violence, with loss of property and life; and learning that continued threats of further violence and expulsion of the Chinese are openly made, we feel called upon in behalf of the China branch of the Evangelical Alliance to lift up our protest against such shameful and flagrant crimes, committed against a quiet and orderly people, who had as much right to the possessions they occupied and protection in their lawful callings as had those who have so unjustly and cruelly driven them away or taken their lives.

1. We protest against such treatment of the Chinese as in contravention of law and treaty stipulation. The Burlingame treaty provides that the Chinese shall have the same privileges, as to residence and trade, as are granted to the citizens of the most favored nations. Shall a people who boast of a conscientious regard for their word and for justice between man and man, and of their hatred of oppression, remain silent while violent men disregard and break the plighted faith of the nation, and thus tarnish the fair name of their country, in heathen as well as in all Christian lands?

2. We protest against such treatment of the Chinese as inconsistent with those principles of kindness, hospitality, and justice which belong to all mankind, and which are exalted and enforced by the law of Christian charity.

3. We protest against such treatment as deleterious to the interests of Christianity in China. Several hundred citizens of the United States, representatives of the Christian churches in America, are engaged as missionaries, seeking the conversion of the Chinese to the Christian faith. But how can the Chinese look with any favor upon a religion which fails to restrain the people professing it from such inhumanity? If the Chinese do not read our Bible, they read our conduct, and mark it carefully. After all they have suffered at home from Christian nations through war and the opium traffic, if they now learn that their countrymen abroad are chased out of Christian lands as if they defiled the very soil by their presence, what hope can there be of their conversion to Christianity? Although we ourselves know well it is the want of Christianity that opens the way for such wrongs, the Chinese people cannot be expected to make this distinction. The natural course for them will be to look upon the treatment they receive in Christian lands as the proper fruit of Christianity.

4. We protest against such violence and wrong as endangering the persons and property of American and European residents in China. How can we expect Americans and Europeans to enjoy their present liberties, kind treatment, and official protection in China while the Chinese in America are hunted down as wild beasts? Already in Canton the names of Chinese who have been maltreated or killed in the United States are placarded day by day, and threats of reprisals have been made. The ill-feeling will increase and spread to other places unless the outrages are stopped.

We beg you, therefore, in such ways as shall seem most effective, to bring these things before the people of the United States, using your influence also with the Government if necessary, and urge them by every motive of justice, honor, and right, and by their regard for the property and lives of their fellow countrymen, and the citizens of other western nations resident in China, to put a stop to such wrongs. We beg you to use every effort to secure just and equal treatment for the Chinese in America. Let those who trample on their rights or destroy their lives be punished according to law and justice. Let ample indemnities be promptly paid. The United States and European Governments have demanded and received indemnities from China for wrongs committed by her citizens. If she holds the United States Government responsible for the violence committed within her jurisdiction is it not just what England or France or Germany would do?

Whatever course the laws concerning Chinese immigration may take, let such Chinese as are permitted by law and treaty to live in the United States at least be treated with the fairness and humanity which becomes an enlightened people to exhibit. We most earnestly desire that those who go to Christian lands should see the light and feel the warmth of Chistian love.

HENRY BLODGET,
Pres. China Branch Evangelical Alliance.
JOSEPH EDKINS,
J. L WHITING,
Secretaries.

Happy Children
IN MUSICAL HOMES.

A sweet voice, and a good repertoire of songs are valuable aids where juvenile humanity must be entertained. How convenient and useful, then, are such collections as the following:

MERRY-MAKING MELODIES.
BY WADE WHIPPLE.
Price in Boards 80 cts., in Paper 65 cts.
By a child-lover, who, in his choice of subjects and his genial treatment of them, displays a happy talent for making home cheerful. "Chubby little Chatterbox," "Grandpa," "Three little Loafers," "Jollity Jack," "Teeter-Tauter," "Pink-a-pank," are songs full of kindliest humor, and there are others of higher grade. Sheet Music size; Piano or Organ accompaniment; 20 Songs; 9 Pictures.

RHYMES AND TUNES.
BY MARGARET PEARMAIN OSGOOD.
Price $1.50 in Cloth; $1.00 in Boards.
A larger book than the other, and has, in many cases German and English words. A true Home book, with such songs as "Snick Snack," "Toorelitoo," for nonsense; "London Bridge," "Perri Meri Dixi," "Lavender's Blue," &c., for Mother Goose wisdom; "Sandman," "Sleep, Darling," and other nursery songs, romantic songs, Star, May, Flower, Morning, Bird and all other varieties of song that children love. Full Piano and Organ accompaniments.

Mailed for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

Church Decoration.
Church Furnishing.

DESIGNS AND ESTIMATES SUBMITTED.

J. & R. LAMB,
59 CARMINE ST., N. Y.

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers, 805 Broadway, New York

CHEAPEST BIBLES Ever furnished Agents. Extra Terms and Large CASH PREMIUMS
FORSHEE & McMAKIN, CINCINNATI, O.

Presbyterian Board of Publication's
LATE BOOKS.

GRIFFEN ALLEY FOLK.
Showing that even those sorely degraded by intemperance may be raised from the gutter to new lives.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

FROM ACCADIA TO MACHPELAH.
In which the life of Abraham is made interesting by being made real.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.15

MABEL'S SUMMER.
A tale of Child life in Northern India.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, 85 cents.

RALPH WESTON'S SECRET.
Showing how the appetite fo strong drink may descend from father to daughter, and again from mother to son.
16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

THE WEDDED LIFE.
By REV. J. R. MILLER, D.D
A little volume intended for presentation to the newly-wedded, and containing a marriage certificate.
16mo. Price, 60 cents.

Address orders to
JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't,
1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St., New York, N. Y.

THE CAROL
—A BOOK OF—
Religious Songs
—FOR THE—
Sunday School and the Home,
—BY—
CHARLES W. WENDTE,
With poetical contributions by
Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Miss Louisa M. Alcott, Hezekiah Butterworth, and many others.
The Music, original and selected, by Geo. F. Root, J. R. Murray, J. B. Sharland, P. P. Bliss and J. B. Dykes, Stainer, Barnby, Handel, Mendelssohn and other eminent composers, old and new.
This work, long in preparation by an experienced Sunday School worker, contains over 200 separate musical selections, together with a number of musical and responsive services for the festival and ordinary occasions of the Sunday School and the Home Altar.
Price 35 cents each by mail, postpaid; $3.60 a dozen by express, charges not prepaid.
☞ Specimen Pages Free.
PUBLISHED BY
THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O.
The J. CHURCH CO., 19 E. 16th St., New York City.

BARNES' NATIONAL INK.

HAY FEVER — $1 by mail
WARD'S REMEDY FOR
Hay Fever, Rose Cold, &c
Handy to carry. Easy to take.
Prepared solely by
I. W. FERRIS, M.D., Schenectady, N.Y.
J. Milhaus' Son, 183 B'way, New York, Agent.

THE
Christian Intelligencer
IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT
48 Church St., cor. Fulton, N. Y.,
BY THE
CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOC.
Editors:
REV. J. M. FERRIS, D.D.,
REV. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
Associate Editor:
MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

TERMS,
$2.65 per annum.
Ministers and Theological Students, $2.
SINGLE COPIES, 8 CENTS.
☞ Read these Instructions carefully. ☜

ALL COMMUNICATIONS pertaining to the literary columns of the paper must be addressed to the Editors; and those inclosing manuscripts to be returned must be accompanied with envelopes stamped and addressed. No attention will be paid to anonymous communications.

THOSE relating to the business department, to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION, Box 2117, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIBERS, NOTICE.—The date following your name on the direction label informs you to what month and year your subscription is paid. If this date is not changed within two weeks after payment is made, drop us a postal card and we will investigate and reply. Please examine the date, and if in arrears, remit the amount due.

REMITTANCES ARE AT THE RISK OF THE SENDER, unless made by Draft, Check, or P. O. Money Order. These, if lost, can be readily replaced.

Checks, etc., to order of CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION.

IN CHANGING AN ADDRESS, it is necessary to send the OLD as well as NEW address. The change cannot be made unless this is done. And in order to prevent the loss of papers, it will be well to notify the office at least ten days before the contemplated change, as the mail lists are prepared that much in advance of each issue.

ALWAYS GIVE THE NAME OF THE P. O. where the paper is received.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

The Home.

AUNT MARJORIE'S CORNER.

Sea-Voices.

I REST beside the many-voicéd sea;
Its mighty music throbs along the shore.
Strong, stormy winds that through pine forests pour,
Alone strike harmonies so grandly free.
This age-long anthem rises, Lord, to Thee.
Thee, Thee alone, these sounding waves adore.
Thy way is in the sea, and evermore
They chant Thy glory's praise in changeless key;
Like Thy deep mystery, this mysterious deep;
Like Thine, this voice of vast majestic tone;
Like thoughts of Thine these billows shoreward leap.
Thy waves of loving thought that never cease,
From far sea-spaces, and from depths unknown,
To us-ward borne from Thy great central Peace.

Mary C. Gates.

A Custom of the Tyrol.

ON the day of the bridal the Tyrolese maid,
In scarlet and gold for the altar arrayed,
A flower in her bosom, a veil on her hair,
In the garden of girlhood is fairest of fair.
To meet her and greet come through dark mountain passes,
In troops gaily stepping the lads and the lasses,
And sweet chime the bells as o'er highland and hollow
They call the procession to gather and follow.

The priest in the chapel is waiting to give
His blessing to those who in wedlock would live;
Her father has breathed, with his hand on her head,
A prayer to the Lord who His people hath led.
And yet, ere the ring shall be placed on her finger,
A moment the maid on the threshold must linger;—
The home hath been sweet. Shall there aye be another
Safe sheltered as this 'neath the wing of the mother?

There's a mist o'er her sight, and the mother comes near
With the softest of kerchiefs to dry the hot tear;
'Tis a white bit of lawn, like the new fallen snow,
And she smiles through her tears and no longer they flow.
For the fledgling must fly when its wing has grown daring,
For a nest of her own must the song-bird be caring,
And what is this life, though the loving are parted,
But hope and delight for the brave and leal-hearted?

And now in the home of her husband the wife
Lays by the memento, of mother-thought rife,
The kerchief of tears is safe folded away
In the old oaken chest for how many a day,
Till the roses of youth have grown withered and faded,
The strong limbs have tottered, the bright eyes been shaded,
Through birth-pangs and bridals, through death and through sorrow,
The kerchief of tears waits its own coming morrow.

At last, when the work of the good wife is done,
The crown of her toils when the aged hath won,
When the thin, hardened hands find the long, peaceful rest,
They fold the tear-kerchief above the pale breast.
For now she hath gone through God's infinite pity
To dwell with the saved in the beautiful city,
Where love is supreme and where trouble comes never,
And they who once enter are happy forever.

Margaret E. Sangster.

Songs for the Little Ones.

DEAR AUNT MARJORIE: The two articles that have recently appeared in the INTELLIGENCER on "Nursery Rhymes" have brought to my mind an incident that occurred more than a score of years ago. A young mother, desirous of meeting the dawning intelligence of her infant child with something that would interest and at the same time instruct and elevate him, procured a copy of "Songs for the Little Ones at Home," published by the American Tract Society in 1852. The little fellow never wearied of listening to the bits of beautiful, simple poetry, or rather rhymes, and to the mother they soon became as familiar as "Old Mother Goose's Melodies," learned in her early childhood. When this mother would ask her boy, then between two and three years of age, what she should read to him first, his answer invariably was, "The best use of a penny," and "about the mother who threw her poor little baby in the river." A picture of an infant struggling in the jaws of an alligator while the inhuman mother stood indifferently surveying the scene, seemed particularly to touch his baby heart. I should like to copy these simple verses, hoping that they may impress some other child as they did this baby boy.

"See that heathen mother stand
Where the sacred current flows;
With her own maternal hand
'Mid the waves her babe she throws.
Hark! I hear the piteous scream;
Frightful monsters seize their prey,
O'er the dark and bloody stream
Bear the struggling child away.
Fainter now, and fainter still,
Breaks the cry upon the ear;
But the mother's heart is steel,
She unmoved that cry can hear.
Send, oh send the Bible there,
Let its precepts reach the heart;
She may then her children spare—
Act the mother's tender part."

"Should you wish to be told the best use of a penny?
I'll tell you a way that is better than any;
Not on apples, or cakes, or playthings to spend it,
But over the seas to the heathen to send it.
Come, listen to me, and I'll tell, if you please,
Of some poor little children far over the seas.
Their color is dark, for our God made them thus,
But He made them with bodies and feelings like us.

"A soul, too, that never will die has been given,
And there is room for these children with Jesus in heaven.
But who will now tell of such good things as these
To the poor little heathen far over the seas?

"Little boys in this land are well off indeed;
They have schools every day, where they sing, write and read;
To church they may go, and have pastors to teach
How the true way to heaven through Jesus to reach.
Yet, sad to remember, there are so few of these
For the poor little heathen far over the seas.
Oh! think of this when a penny is given,
'I can help a poor child on his way home to heaven;'
Then give it to Jesus, and He will approve,
Nor scorn e'en the mite if 'tis offered in love.
And oh! when in prayer you to Him bend your knees,
Remember the children far over the seas."

Early in life the subject of my sketch embraced that religion which could so change the cruel, wicked heathen, making them the loving and lovely children of thedear Jesus who died to save them. As the years rolled on the boy entered upon the busy scenes of commercial life. Still believing "the best use of a penny" is to consecrate it to the Master's service, he appropriated a tenth of his income to His cause, feeling that he is doing but very little for one who has done so much for him. Oh, that all mothers would embrace the precious moments when their eager, questioning children are clustering around their knees, to impress upon their susceptible minds not only the old, old story of Jesus and His love, but the spirit of the Saviour's parting injunction, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature!"

If we would have a generation of missionaries, the missionary spirit must be inculcated in the nursery. The character of a person depends almost entirely upon the aliment administered to the hungry, assimilating mind of the child during the first four or five years of its life.

H. F. N.

New Brunswick, N. J.

[With special grace of propriety we follow our friend's letter with this report of a pleasant gathering one evening lately.]

A Pink Festival.

THE Mission Band, "Willing Workers," of Upper Red Hook, New York, met with pleasing success at a "Pink Festival" which they gave several weeks ago. Everything possible was of that color—the young ladies wore turbans of it, the children frills, and many were the roses, ribbons and fancy aprons of that shade. The young men who assisted were presented with pink buttonhole bouquets and neckties, and the drinking-cups were of white china with bands of the ruling color. The refreshments consisted of cake, strawberries, candy and ice cream.

Notwithstanding the unpleasantness of both evenings, the net proceeds were thirty-four dollars. The Band have pledged themselves to raise thirty-six dollars to support a Bible reader in China for a year. The Children's Mission Society at Upper Red Hook was organized by the beloved wife of the former pastor, Rev. E. C. Scudder, and for about seven years has contributed twenty or thirty dollars annually to work in India. Rev. Mr. Randle, a missionary from China who studied at a medical college in New York last winter, supplied the pulpit for some time at Red Hook, and his interesting talks about China awakened a desire to work for that country. All those present at the festival can affirm that they did work willingly.

Washing Dishes.

"THIS is comfort!" sighed Margaret, as she lay in the hammock, languidly watching the airy movements of a butterfly flitting in and out of the vines that clambered about the cool, shady porch. "Thank goodness, Eliza is back at last! I wonder a week of dish-washing did not bring on a nervous fever or some other dreadful thing. I detest washing dishes, and hope I shall never have to do it again."

"Useless wishing, my dear. You cannot avoid it. You must wash dishes all your life."

Margaret turned a startled face in the direction of the voice. Gentle, even loving, were the tones, but she had imagined herself alone. The speaker was a small, sweet-faced elderly woman, neatly attired in a gray gown, large white apron and dainty white cap. She stood by a table on which, beside the towels and pan of steaming suds was a seemingly endless supply of unwashed cups and platters, while arranged on the shelves of a china-closet near by were other dishes which had been washed and put away.

"How did she bring all these things here?" thought Margaret.

"Who are you? Where did you come from?"

The little woman looked earnestly into Margaret's eyes, and seemed to be considering, but made no spoken answer.

"Well," said Margaret, after a rather trying pause, "What is it?"

"Cleanse first that which is within the cup and the platter, that the outside of them may be clean also."

"That is in the Bible," thought Margaret, but she only said, with an expression of puzzled inquiry,

"Well?"

"I will show you, my dear. I put this dish into the water, and pay but little attention to its outside. With this cloth and soap I thoroughly rub and wash the inside of the dish, and when that is clean, the whole is clean, every whit. There, in that closet, are the dishes you have been washing during the past week; and here, on this table, are those you will wash this week."

"This week? I am not going to wash one. Eliza is back."

"Eliza is back. Nevertheless, you must go on washing dishes this week, and next, and every week of your life."

Margaret groaned, then glancing at the china closet, cried: "There is some mistake. I never did those, I know. Why, some of these cups have not been touched. It is disgraceful to put them away in that condition."

"Those, Margy, are the ones you washed on the outside only. Here is one which would be very pretty with its dainty decoration of sweet briar, if it were not so covered with dirt. Yet its outside was carefully washed. You do not remember?

"A new pupil entered your school last fall. A loving, sensitive, timid child, whose great, brown, pleading eyes and gentle speech made her the pet of many of the older girls in school; but to none was she quite so dear as to you; and she returned your kindness with a love and confidence whose intensity almost frightened you at times.

"Mary Parsons, also, was friendly with the little Louise, and sometimes Louise would carry Mary flowers or grapes, when she had none for you. That was rather hard. Then came Mary's birthday party, to which Louise was the only one of the younger girls invited. Did the little girl's unfeigned delight give pleasure to you, her 'best friend?' You pretended to be pleased, but, in you heart, you said, 'I will get ahead of Mary Parsons yet. It is mean for her to take Louise away from me!' Last Monday you asked Louise to spend the day with you, and you made her have a 'glorious time.' To please her you gave up your favorite ramble on the beach for a stupid game of checkers; you played croquet instead of tennis, which you much preferred; and rode in the carriage instead of on horseback. When, at parting, she said, 'Margaret, you are the dearest girl I know!' were you really happy? Why did not the many little acts of self-denial bring their usual reward? My dear, you had cleansed only the outside of the cup and the platter."

"But some of the dishes are clean," said Margaret, "tell me of some of them."

"Yes. Here is one with bright, gold bands. How they shine! Its story is not long, but pleasant. How your poor head did ache last Tuesday. The very thought of food was disagreeable. You thought you would stay in your own room and read the new magazine. You were not fit for work that day. But when you saw your mother's tired face a new determination came. 'Mother feels as badly as I do. She is all worn out from doing Eliza's work.' Then you persuaded her to go into the cool sitting-room to rest while you cooked the dinner. There was no thought of self in that. Neither was there yesterday when you asked, not one of your young companions to accompany you to the concert, but that quiet little Miss Smithers who is so fond of music, but too poor to afford many concerts or operas. A very pleasant companion you found her, though you had asked her to go simply for the enjoyment it would afford her.

"We cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, when we are like the poet's friend who "Forgot his own soul for others,

Himself to his neighbor lending;
He saw the Lord in his suffering brothers,
And not in the clouds descending.'

"Perhaps, my dear, I shall come back in a few months and show you your china-closet again."

The little woman waved her hand over the table; the pan of soap suds became a willow basket. All the other articles assumed tiny proportions, and were neatly packed in the basket, which the stranger took upon her arm, and, nodding pleasantly, walked away.

Margaret is still expecting her return.

Her friends have noted her growing unselfishness, but when they have spoken of this to her, her odd reply (it seems odd to them) has been:

"Washing dishes is the most beautiful work one can do." But she does not tell of the little woman's visit, for, as she says, "Who would believe it?"—Frances M. Carey, in The Interior.

For the Sake of Reward.

THERE are hundreds of young men and women qualified for business, who will take nothing if they cannot have the first place, and the highest wages. Apprenticeship is always unremunerative. Hard work, long hours and other requirements which are exacted from men who are liberally paid, are also exacted from beginners. But their case is not an exceptional one. Everybody who succeeds does a vast amount of work for which he is never paid at all, or for which he is not paid until late in life. Literary men spend years in writing what may be their best work, but which passes unnoticed because they are unknown, and for which they receive nothing. It is not chance that finally wins, but the use of talent laboriously and slowly developed. The teacher pays for instead of being paid for the work that enables him to enter the profession he has chosen, in the school, the college and the training school. The machinist is required to serve an apprenticeship of three years in many shops, before he can live upon what he earns. But what may be attained, finally, makes the effort worth while; for the sake of the certain reward, poverty, fatigue and self-denial can be easily borne. It is this hope that has made the weak strong, inspired the fainting with courage, and helped the faltering over obstacles that were seemingly unsurmountable, to triumph gloriously in the end.

CHILDREN'S PORTFOLIO.

The Fairy Queen's Siesta.

HARK! Harebells are chiming in soft tones and low,
To hush the queen sleeping on couch pure as snow;
It is made of the daisy, and lily so fair,
Whose faint perfumed breath pervades all the air.

Fairies have decked it with a veil from the loom
Of a hoary old spider who works in the gloom
Of a dim dark forest, and on banks of the stream
Gather down from the thistle on which she may dream.

The maidens of honor who stand by the side
Of the queen lest she murmur, or aught ill betide,
Are violet sisters, with heads drooping low,
Blue eyes full of tears—queens are tyrants ye know.

The knight of her slumber, who waits by the door,
Is Sir Grand Magnolia, with hosts of names more;
He's received many titles from over the sea,
While on his escutcheon is the famed "fleur-de-lis."

And the Golden Rod stands in almost regal state,
For hosts his commands in silence await;
I ween he is proud of his bright uniform,
To the brave "Royal Guard" does he surely belong!

But time would not serve me to tell you of all,
Each sweet and fair lady, each squire of the hall,
For e'en now a whisper is murmured about,
The "Fairy's Siesta" is ended no doubt.

Now no longer a hush, as if nature stood still,
But a sweet woodland gush of brooklet and rill;
The merry birds sing, so bright and so gay,
All join in the greeting to this "Queen of May."

The Fairy Queen wakes from her dream and her rest;
Every maiden of honor awaits her behest;
They gather the dew from the nooks of the dell,
And crown her with gems which become her right well.

Her robe is of rose leaves—of Eden they hint—
Her wrap olive moss, of a faint golden tint;
A butterfly's wing fans away, when she speaks,
The too ardent sunbeam that kisseth her cheeks.

Her velvety mantle is clasped with care
By many a jewel, not costly, but rare;
And to carry her train a gay little sprite
From far Elfin-land comes to be her true knight.

The wand of Fay's power she holds in her hand,
She leaves her gay bower, all wait her command;
And loudly and blithesome, as ye may suppose,
Go forth shouts of welcome to fairy Queen Rose!

SCHENECTADY, N. Y. J. S. K.

Arthur Haskins' New Hat.

IT was his first derby, fleckiessly black, faultlessly curved as to brim, and lined with spotless white satin.

Arthur had become the happy possessor of it one Friday afternoon in early summer, and on the very next day was to attend the picnic given by a new school friend of his, Baldwin Geer.

"And I shall make use of this opportunity, Arthur," his mother had said when she gave him the desired permission, "to take Meta with me out to Larkspur and see to putting the cottage in order."

Larkspur was the name of Mrs. Haskins' country place, and Meta was the housemaid, who straightway informed Maria, the cook, of the proposed trip, who in turn suddenly recollected that she had an invalid nephew with whom she had promised to spend the first day she could get off, which she now succeeded in making this very Saturday, as there would be none of the family home to lunch. Therefore it was arranged that from quarter past eleven, when Arthur was to leave for the Geers', until Maria returned at three to begin preparing dinner, the house should be locked up.

"Now, Arthur," said his mother as she and Meta set out for their train at ten o'clock, "I have given Maria the latch-key, as she is to be back first. Remember, if the picnic grounds are near a pond, don't venture out in a boat by yourself; and if it should rain, be sure to change your shoes and stockings as soon as you get home. And don't forget that I think you had much better wear your polo cap."

Arthur promised to keep these facts in mind, and between Mrs. Haskins' departure and the time he had set for starting for the Geers' occupied himself in brushing and putting on his new spring suit and wishing his mother hadn't said anything on the hat question.

"My polo's so terribly old, though it does look well enough, I s'pose," he kept repeating to himself. "And I won't play in any games that will be likely to knock my derby off. Besides, it seems a shame I can't wear something different from regular school-days."

So at eleven o'clock down came the grand-looking hat-box from the shelf in the closet, and when fifteen minutes later Arthur issued from the house the black derby was on his head.

"Crickey, though," he muttered the next moment, with a quick clutch at the brim, "I didn't know it was so windy out."

It was some half dozen blocks to the Geers', from which meeting-place the wagonette was to start promptly at half past eleven. On his way thither Arthur was obliged to cross Primrose Square, and here it was that the treacherous May breeze suddenly swooped down upon him again with a puff that lifted the derby out of reach of his eagerly outstretched fingers and sent it whirling through the air faster and farther, until it finally landed in the very centre of the little park.

Instantly Arthur started off in pursuit, but in two seconds was brought to a standstill against the high iron railing. And alas, he now remembered that the one gate was always kept locked, with its key in possession of the gardener, who had several other of the city lawns under his care and was therefore a person not easily to be found.

"I must climb the fence," Arthur hastily decided.

He was not much given to athletics, but in such a case of urgency he felt that he could manage somehow to scale a railing that was only a foot or two higher than his head, even though it was sharp-pointed at the top and lacked any convenient cross bars near the bottom on which a foothold for a good start might be obtained.

He accordingly put out his hands, and at the same instant elevated his nose with a nervous sniff.

Yes, it was too true. The fence had just been painted. His fingers bore an unmistakable greenish tinge, and as Arthur glanced from them down at his neat black stockings and the new knickerbockers all the awful consequences of the incident flashed across his mind. He might as well go to the Geers' without his hat as with a suit stained with green paint, and as he was very certain that he was not willing to do either, he saw his picnic fun disappearing from before him with the speed of an express train.

Desperately he gazed around the square. There was scarcely a person to be seen anywhere within its limits, still less the longed-for gardener with his key or some small street arab who might be willing to risk ruining his clothes for the bribe of thirty cents or a pen-knife.

And now, to add to his troubles, Arthur recollected that he had not definitely accepted Baldwin's invitation, but had said he would come if his mother would let him.

"So they will not wait for me," he murmured sadly.

Then the happy idea of running home for his polo cap struck him, and trusting that others would find it as hard to get at his derby as he had, he sped off down the street and never slackened in his speed until he stood on his own front stoop and had given the door-bell two vigorous pulls. But not till he had given it a couple more did he remember about Maria's visit to her nephew, and that consequently there was nobody in the house to let him in. And just then the cathedral clock chimed out half-past eleven.

"It's too late now for the picnic, hat or no hat," muttered Arthur dismally, and in his disappointment, which was all the deeper as he realized how it was all owing to his self-willed pride, he sank down on the doorstep and covered his face with his hands. And in this position he remained till he heard the factory whistles blowing for dinner, which set him to wondering where his own was to come from, for any friends of the family to whom he might have applied had already moved into the country.

However, he had thirty cents in pocket-money, and he now resolved to invest this in a pie at the nearest bakery. To reach the latter he retraced his way through Primrose Square, and there was his derby still resting on its crown in the middle of the little park, and there, too, peering through the railing at it, was the very forlorn little ragamuffin he had hoped to find an hour ago.

"I'll give you ten cents if you'll get that hat for me," began Arthur eagerly.

"Is that all you've got?" as promptly responded the other boy, adding instantly, "I'll do it for a quarter."

"All right," recklessly answered Arthur, forgetful of everything save his desire to regain possession of the cherished derby.

The bargain being struck at this figure, the barefooted street urchin nimbly swung himself over the fence, not appearing to mind the few green blotches his tattered garments received in the process, and as he returned the hat to its owner with one hand held out the other for his pay, with which he darted off like an arrow.

It was then that Arthur first realized the fact that the recovery of his derby must answer in place of the pie he had meant to purchase, and after having taken the sharp edge only off his appetite by a five cent cream cake, he spent the rest of the day till Maria came back sitting on the front-stoop thinking out the moral of his adventure, which I will now leave my readers to do.—Matthew White, Jr., in The Illustrated Christian Weekly.

Symptoms.

A STORY is told of the late Archbishop Trench, the well-known writer, which shows how active a part the imagination plays in determining the state of our health. After the eminent prelate suffered from breaking health he was always accompanied, whether in his rural rambles, on the train, or even at formal dinner parties, by his daughter, who was constantly by his side. The story here quoted was originally told in Dublin society.

The last course had been served at a certain grand banquet when his Grace is stated to have said to his daughter, with some slight agitation:

"My daughter."

"Well?"

"I fear that I am threatened with one of my bad attacks."

"Why?"

"I have been pinching my knee for the last five minutes, and I cannot feel the slightest sensation."

"Make your mind easy, your Grace," rejoined a person on the other side.

"Why so?"

"It was my knee you were pinching all the time!"

Little Heads Together.

BIBLE QUESTIONS.

Can the "Little Heads" find these words in the Old Testament?

1. Ladies. 2. Mantle. 3. Butter. 4. Coals 5. Hay. 6. Bonnets. 7 Knives. 8. Brick. 9. Foreigner. 10. Congregation.

"ITTALIE."

Answers to Questions of July 21st.

1. Elim Ex. 15: 27.
2. Jericho. Deut. 34: 3.
3. Deborah. Judges 4: 5.
4. The feast of tabernacles. Lev. 23: 40.
5. On the doors of the temple. 1 Kings 6: 32.
6. Jeremiah 10: 4.
7. Psalms 92: 12.
8. Joel 1: 12.
9. Bethany.
10. "Much people." John 12: 12, 13.
11. St. John. Rev. 7: 9.

Correct answers from "Prague," Rappie Bowne, Lewis D. and Jennie Labagh.

The June-July prize for the best puzzle is awarded to Nellie Lefferts, New Brunswick, N. J. That for the best list of answers to "Prague," who will please send name and address to COUSIN LOIS, at this office.

Boston Letter.

August 6th, 1886.

In all questions of a religious nature, naturally the interest is very absorbing, and it is not surprising that among the Congregationalists such attention to the question of a probation after death has been aroused. In Dr. Wm. M. Baker's reverent work on the Ten Theophanies I find this forcible paragraph: "'Struggling as I am,' exclaims every soul that God has made, 'in the roaring tide, sweeping me stunned and blinded toward the precipice of my grave, I must grasp God, though it be but in a splinter or a straw; I drown otherwise, in the abysmal depths of my hopeless ignorance.'" The grave is here charac terized as a precipice, and a resistless tide is sweeping us toward it. What lies beyond is an intensely interesting question. The discussion of after-death probation has been extensive among the Congregationalists, and where there has been no outward agitation of the subject, in quiet nooks there has been profound thinking. The attitude of Andover toward this subject is a matter of open history and needs no restatement.

What would be the ultimate issue of this movement, has been a theme of magnetic interest. At first it was thought that the dissentients would be eliminated from the denomination, but they elected to stay, and the denomination that retained them made room for their views also. At one time Andover was threatened with a law suit, but the threat passed away like one of the gusts sweeping over the Seminary-heights, and all the privileges and resources of Andover were left in the hands of their present occupants.

Neander, in his fascinating church history, has shown that any doctrinal movement has its laws of growth, will and must go on. It cannot be formally, superficially treated. It will live and develop and bear its appropriate fruit in spite of decrees forbidding it, and will not develop on the other hand simply because decrees command it. Any formal, outside treatment of doctrine w ll not affect its real life. Thought is seed. It comes to stay during its ap pointed normal growth, and as men plant, so they will surely reap. Harvests are as certain as seed sowings. The Andover movement has been no exception to this law. Backed by acute thinkers in the denomination at large, propped by an influential S minary, voiced in an able Review, the movement has received a most energetic impulse, and was sure to reach every denominational interest sooner or later.

It is not surprising, then, that it has been felt inside the councils of the American Board. There is an outside demand that the Board should not exclude from its service men whose views have the Andover tinge, and there is a rumor that within the council chamber there is a measure of sympathy for that demand. It is thought the subject will come before the annual meeting of the Board in October. If there be any utterance by the Board upon this topic, it will be likely to be conservative; but that will not stop the agitation of the subject any more than a shout from the deck of a steamer to a wave going by will arrest the turmoil of the Atlantic. To any student of doctrine the history of this "Andover movement," whether he agree with it or disagree, is one of exceeding interest as a matter of development. Accumulate upon that the practical issues involved, and there has been no movement of the century in ecclesiastical spheres more momentous.

The Chautauqua wave is rolling over New England and making a very healthy commotion. The Assembly at South Framingham, in this State, during its July meetings attracted a larger interest than ever. It had on its lecture platform such notables as Phillips Brooks, Edward Everett Hale, Mary Livermore, J. P. Newman and J. H. Vincent. A class well up to three hundred graduated in the Chautauqua course. The New Hampshire Chautauquans are now celebrating at Epping, and the Maine brethren and sisters are stirring profoundly peaceful, picturesque little Fryeburg, at the foot of the White Hills, with their lectures and Bible classes. The Chautauquan idea is to be encouraged, granting that some of its features seem sensational for staid brethren. It means the education of Sunday-school people up to the level of better work, and the education of everybody into a fuller intellectual life. Give the movement a helping hand.

The Concord School of Philosophy this summer has been classed as a success. Outwardly considered it is a pretentious little thing in a small barn-like building. This season Dante and Plato have been favored with a notice. Things wise and things foolish have been said. I take great interest in the school. I admire the attempt to keep up the study of subjects that are out of the way and above the materialism of the daily life. To encourage the school in its efforts, not far from it on the other side of the sleepy, dusty country road, is the old home of Emerson, and if anybody ever dared assail the unassailable, it was Ralph Waldo Emerson.

There has been an anti-saloon convention in the city. It was managed by the temperance wing of the Republican party. Its platform is broad. It does not specify methods but emphasizes the heart of the thing at issue, death to the dram shop. There is no doubt about it; all over the country is a rising temperance sentiment, a healthy flood that will some time drown out old bibulous Bacchus.

The August hegira toward seashore and mountain has set in. The crowds are big that are constantly going. Our beaches, Martha's Vineyard, Mount Desert, the White Mountains, Saratoga, the British provinces, attract many. It is good to get away and see a big mountain, or watch the sun come up over the sea. Can I ever forget one sunrise seen from a New Hampshire beach? The east was cloudy. A soft, rosy flame burned along the horizon. Was it a courier of some monarch, throwing out a flag to herald the royal retinue? All nature seemed to be asking the question, "The sun, is he there?" Then it waited in the gray, shadowy stillness of the morning for an answer. Meanwhile, the gates of the east kept on brightening. The sea, though, was still cold and morose. A ship away off on the horizon lifted its dusky wings. The Isles of Shoals were unromantic lumps of lead. Still, the heavens kept on brightening as if they would set on fire the frowning cloud above, and even kindle into flame that sullen sea. Suddenly there was a point of light, the tip of a candle's flame on the edge of the sea! Did the first torch-runner of the king lift this? The bit of light grew. In the midst of those surroundings of flame it became a bubble rising out of golden foam. It swelled, then flattened, till it lay on the sea like a Scotch cap! Was the king of day a ubiquitous Scotchman just over the seas, and to field and forest was he lifting his cap? Steadily it kept rising. Soon there was a semi-sphere of light on the eastern waters, some buried dome that came floating up to tell us how fair were Neptune's places down in the golden summer sea. That dome kept rising, changing, till the whole of the sun's huge round orb rolled clear of the water and blazed in all the magnificence of its solitary glory. Its rays swept across the sea like elves sent out to touch the water with feet of gold, thousands of wavelets retaining the shining impress. Two birds darted in jubilant flight between us and the sun. Who could but rejoice? Over land and sea, shore and marsh, swept the light of the new day. So much for the sunrise.

We may criticize the August exodus and say it interferes too seriously with matters at home. No human movement is properly adjusted. Unevenness is to be found everywhere. Still, for those who get away, August is a grand institution. For those who stay at home this year, there is Memory to keep them company, and the recalling of sun-pictures at sea, forest scenes, mountain views, last year, will help us live all the more restfully this year. Neponset.

Astronomical Notes.

Have not the almanacs, the famous and trustworthy Nautical included, made an error in saying that the first quarter of the moon this month fell on the 6th? Did it not rather occur on the 7th?

Jupiter attains its aphelion, or greatest distance from the sun, on the 23d. It was at perihelion in September, 1880, when it was 457 millions of miles from the sun. Since then it has been receding from the sun nearly 8 millions of miles a year and will this month be about 503 millions of miles from that orb. After this month it will begin to increase in brightness and for nearly six years to come will become more and more lustrous. On the 16th Jupiter approaches very near to Uranus. We here will not have the pleasure of contrasting the golden hue of the one with the greenish tinge of the other planet, but those on more elevated positions north of us will enjoy the spectacle.

Saturn at present rises nearly three hours before the sun, and Venus precedes Saturn by about half an hour. They add brilliancy to the early morning sky.

An eclipse of the sun takes place on the 28th and 29th. The line of totality begins at sunset in the southern part of Madagascar, passes on a curved line across Africa and the Atlantic until it reaches the northern part of South America at sunrise on the 29th. Here, soon after six o'clock of the morning of the 29th, a very small eclipse will be visible.

It is rather late in the day to speak of the August meteors, which radiate from Perseus and follow the orbit of Temple's comet, and are visible from the 9th to the 11th; but as meteors have been pretty abundant recently this stream may be extended for a day or two.

As has been the case for six or eight years past the earth has been journeying alone on its orbit, attended only by its satellite, for some months. From April to July all of our system was behind us; now it is before us. F.

Financial.

Tuesday, Aug. 10th.

The report of the Associated Banks of the city is the chief topic in financial circles. It seems to indicate an increase of trade. It shows loans increased $3,841,600, specie increased $812,800, legal tenders reduced $5,268,500 and deposits declined $896,900. The surplus of reserve was reduced $4,231,475, bringing it down to $8,647,250. This surplus is held by a small minority of the banks, indeed the most of it is in the vaults of one. The large majority had in possession less than the legal reserve. This is a much more healthful condition of affairs than that of a year ago, when the surplus of reserve amounted to upwards of 61 1-2 millions. Some money was sent to the West last week to move the new crop, but not enough to account for the reduction of the reserve. The demand for money seems to have been general. Consequently, yesterday the rate on call ranged from 3 to 6 per cent, the majority of loans being made at 3 1-2 to 4 per cent. A steady market at even 4 per cent would be likely to draw money from Europe. There, though the Bank of England has lost bullion, holding now 4 millions of pounds less than a year, money is so abundant outside that the Bank cannot raise its rate of discount, which remains at 2 1-2 per cent. The rate here on the best commercial paper has also hardened and ranges from 4 to 6 1-2 per cent. Thirty of the chief business centres report clearances last week increased 41 per cent over those of the corresponding week of last year.

At the Stock Exchange both stocks and bonds have risen in value, largely through continued buying on European account. The railroad reports of earnings also show a gratifying increase. Yesterday prices yielded somewhat, but the average d cline was only 3-8 to 5-8 per cent. No one can tell, however, what European dealers may do. They may sell on the rise to realize profits and break the market for a time. But the market shows a great deal of strength. The rise in the value of money may interfere in the reorganization of railroads, by substituting bonds at 4 to 6 per cent for those bearing 7 and 8 per cent interest, where the negotiations have not yet been completed.

The imports of merchandise at this port for the week were valued at $9,017,011, and the exports at $7,734,671. The export of specie amounted to $169,301. Foreign exchange yesterday was quoted at $4 84 for 60 day bills and $4.85 1-2 for demand drafts for sterling. There is some talk of a probability of imports of gold in the approaching autumn. If the European buying of American securities and the increased value of money continue such expectations may be fulfilled.

The European grain markets yesterday were reported steady for wheat and a turn dearer for corn. The receipts of wheat in the West are not as large as they were a few days ago. The visible supply shows an increase for the week of 2,095,910 bushels, but it is nearly 5 millions of bushels less than it was at this time last year. The market here yesterday was affected by the fact that the stock held here showed an increase of 546,351 bushels, but it is only 2,113,475 bushels against 5,248,249 bushels held here on Aug. 8th, 1885. The reports say that the new winter wheat is turning out well, the grain being plump and well hardened; but there will be a considerable deficiency in spring wheat, while corn in many sections has suffered beyond recovery from heat and drought. Quotations yesterday were: Wheat here 84 5-8, at Chicago 74 3-4; corn here 50 1-4, at Chicago 42 1-4; oats here 33 5-8, at Chicago 27 1-8. Cotton closed yesterday as follows: Aug. 9.35 36; Sept. 9.29-30; Oct. 9 22-23; Nov. 9 22-23; Dec. 9.24 25; Jan. 9 32 33; Feb. 9.41-42. New hay and straw are coming in freely, but the demand is good and prices are maintained. New hay of a fair to good quality brings from 50 to 70 cents, and new straw 60 to 70. Old timothy No. 1 is quoted at 80 to 85 cents, clover mixed 50 to 65, old long rye straw 70 to 75 cents, oat 45 to 55, wheat 40 to 45.

There is a good promise of a brisk fall trade.

The public debt was reduced last month, by redemption of bonds and payment of interest, by $9,049.103. The bonded debt on August 1st was $1,206,604,112. The Director of the Mint reports the production of gold in the United States in 1885 at $31,800,000, of silver, reckoned at the coining rate of the silver dollar, at $51,600,000. The result of the imports and exports of silver during the calendar year was that the United States gained $12,228,104 in gold and lost $15,507,824 in silver. The amount of gold coin in the United States on January 1st, 1886, was $533,485,458; of silver dollars, $218,259,761; subsidiary silver, $75,034,111; total stock of coin, $826,770,395.

A VERY valuable consignment to the Louvre Museum reached Paris recently. It consists of 215 packing cases, containing the fragments of the decorations of the palaces of Artaxerxes and of Darius at Susa, in Persia, and the objects of ancient art discovered by the mission sent to Susa, under the direction of M. Dieulafoy. A vast salle, situated on the first floor of the Louvre, has been prepared for the reception of these precious vestiges of antiquity.

EVERY ship of war that floats costs more than a well-endowed college; every sloop of war costs more than the largest public library in our country.

News of the Week.

(Continued from page five.)

The funeral of Samuel J. Tilden will take place to-morrow morning at Greystone at 9.45. It will be as quiet and as devoid of display as possible. Only twenty carriages were ordered. It is stated that his wealth has been greatly over-estimated.

SATURDAY, 7.—One hundred and fifty thousand new subscribers in Paris have applied for the new bonds issued by the Panama Canal Company....Riots still going on in Belfast....A pleasure yacht with six young men was caught in a gale on Lake Huron and all the occupants of the boat were drowned ...It is stated that if the Government declines to deal with evictions, Mr. Parnell will ask permission to introduce a bill dealing with the subject....Interesting testimony in the Squire case has been given by Aqueduct Commissioner Spencer, ex-Mayor Edson, John O'Brien and others. ....The President, Secretary Endicott and Colonel Lamont left Washington yesterday to attend the funeral of Mr. Tilden.... Asiatic cholera reported in Wisconsin.... Great anxiety is felt about the overdue steamer "Werra," of the North German Lloyd Steamship Line, which was due here last Tuesday....A dispatch from Fort Keogh, Montana, says a cloud burst occurred there, drowning 800 head of sheep. Near Merrill there were drifts of hail fourteen inches deep in some places.

MONDAY, 9.—The Pope is dangerously ill....The Canadian Pacific Telegraph Company has laid a cable across the deep water channel of the St. Lawrence river to St. Helen's Island and from thence, by means of wires strung on four or five large poles on the South shore of the river, obtained connection with New York....The Pope in a letter to President Grévy expresses the belief that the good relations between France and the Vatican will be maintained.... Cholera is now raging in the cities of Yokohama and Tokio. It is feared that the disease will spread further....William Potts and George Hazlett, two coopers from Buffalo, went through Niagara Rapids yesterday in a torpedo-shaped barrel and came out all right. The craft weighed 1,000 pounds, with 300 pounds of sand ballast. They occupied one hour in going a distance of seven miles. The two men were wet through, but unhurt... A diamond, said to be worth $100,000, found in Cincinnati by a laborer. The conjecture is raised that it was the diamond lost at Blennerhassett Island in 1806 by Mrs. Clark, who visited there with Aaron Burr, as described by Burr in a published letter to his daughter; the stone becoming imbedded in a boulder which afterwards was brought to Cincinnati for paving ...Forest fires are raging in Wisconsin. The loss is $200,000.

TUESDAY, 10.—Vigorous attempts are made by irresponsible people to foment a war between the United States and Mexico over the conviction of Cutting by the latter. ....City Chamberlain Ivins of this city testified yesterday that Squire wrote the letter to Flynn, promising to do whatever Flynn might wish if he would have him elected Commissioner of Public Works. Ivins' testimony very damaging to himself and Mayor Grace ..The "Puritan" won yesterday on the run from Newport to New Bedford, making the 28 miles in 2 hours and 38 minutes....Pennsylvania road refuses to haul through freight from New York to Baltimore for the Baltimore & Ohio road....Six firms in lumber and furniture trade in Boston failed yesterday; liabilities over $750,000....Forest fires in Michigan and Wisconsin threatening towns. ..Mr. Tilden leaves his near relations an income of about $10,000 each, and large sums to found public libraries in New Lebanon, Yonkers, and New York. Estate valued at $5,500,000. ....Riots continue in Belfast, Ireland, and volcanic eruptions in New Zealand.... Emperors of Germany and Austria had an interview yesterday at Gastein.

Subscribers Notice.

WE wish to return our thanks to those subscribers who so kindly sent us copies of our issue of July 7th, '86. We now have all we need of that number.

We would call special attention to the advertisement of the Medical School of Boston University. No medical school is offering more favorable facilities for thorough practical instruction; and the institution is enjoying deserved prosperity under its present able and skillful management. The Fall term opens October 14th. For particulars, address I. F. Talbott, M.D., Dean.

INDIGESTION, DYSPEPSIA, nervous prostration, and all forms of general debility relieved by taking Mensman's Peptonized Beef Tonic, the only preparation of beef containing its entire nutritious properties. It is not a mere stimulant like the extracts of beef, but contains blood-making, force-generating, and life-sustaining properties; is invaluable in all enfeebled conditions, whether the result of exhaustion, nervous prostration, over work, or acute disease; particularly when resulting from pulmonary complaints. Caswell, Hazard & Co., Proprietors, New York. Sold by druggists.

Market Report.

Review of the New York Market for Butter, Cheese, etc. Reported by DAVID W. LEWIS & Co., Produce Commission Merchants, 49 Pearl St., New York.

Commission on Butter, Eggs, Poultry, etc., is five per cent; Flour, Grain, etc., 2½ per cent.

Marking-plates furnished when desired.

NEW YORK, August 7, 1886.

BUTTER.—Receipts for the week, 36, 78 pks.; exports 6,293 pks.

During the present week there were some special creameries sold up to 21a21½c., and positive, pronounced, fine flavored fresh butter still sells at these prices. Such style is easier sold at 21a21½c. than an average early make State butter at 15a17c., but it comprises only the finest creamery make fresh from the churn, and while the top price for such is quotably higher, the bulk of business was done at lower rates than last week. Finest fresh dairy make was scarce and sold readily on arrival. We note sales of fancy fresh Western creameries at 19a20c., good ones at 16a17c., and some lines of fair creameries at 14a15½c. Also sales of Northern New York butter in Welsh tubs at 13½a14a15c., and considerable lots of low grades Western at 9a11c. We quote:

Fancy creamery	21	@ 1½
do dairy (selections)	18	@19
Good to fine	14	@17
Poor to common	9	@12½

CHEESE.—Receipts for the week, 71,177 boxes; exports 49,241 boxes.

The market ruled steady all the week, and at the close a trifle more price was made. Fancy factories sold at 8a8½c., and good useful fall creams sold at 7a7¾c. Night milk skims sold at 5½a7c., and full skimmed were hardly salable at any price. We quote:

Factory, white, full cream, finest	8	@ 8½
" colored, " "	8	@ 8½
" good to fine "	7	@ 7¾
" night milk skims	5	@ 7
" skims	1	@ 3

EGGS.—Receipts for the week were 15,189 bbls.

The market is dull and languid, and old eggs, even if well kept, are not wanted only at very low prices. A good many of State eggs arriving this week are too long held and are poor and show big loss. Strictly fresh laid eggs have plenty of friends and sell readily at our extreme quotations. We quote:

Near-by marks, strictly fresh laid, per doz.	15½@16
Western and Canada	13 @14

Publisher's Department.

A SOFT, VELVET TEXTURE is imparted to the skin by the use of Glenn's Sulphur Soap. For skin diseases it should be used freely. Never take a bath without it. It is also especially useful as a means of bleaching and purifying woolen, cotton and linen fabrics.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap heals and beautifies, 25c.
German Corn Remover kills Corns, Bunions, 25c
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye—Black & Brown, 50c.
Pike's Toothache Drops cure in 1 Minute, 25c.

CLAVERACK COLLEGE, Claverack, N. Y., on the Hudson river, is well and favorably known in this and other States. It not only continues to maintain its place in the front rank of educational institutions, but is pushing ahead for the first place. As an evidence of this, the result of the June examination prescribed by the Regents of the University of the State of New York, shows an increase of fifty per cent over the same time last year. We refer our readers to the announcement in the advertising columns.

Better than Vacation.

This is pre-eminently the vacation month, when thousands seek rest and recreation. But to those who suffer the depressing effects of summer debility, the disagreeable symptoms of scrofula, the tortures of biliousness, dyspepsia or sick headache, there is more pain than pleasure in leaving home. To such we say, give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. It will purify your blood, tone up and strengthen your body, expel every trace of scrofula, correct biliousness, and positively cure dyspepsia or sick headache. Take it before you go, and you will enjoy your vacation a thousand fold.

Ayer's Hair Vigor is cleanly, agreeable, beneficial and safe. It is the most elegant and the most economical of toilet preparations. By its use ladies can produce an abundant growth of hair, causing it to become natural in color, lustre and texture.

Best, easiest to use and cheapest. Piso's Remedy for Catarrh. By druggists. 50c.

The claims as to the curative powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla are based entirely on what the people say it has done for them. Send to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass., for a book containing statements of many remarkable cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

MARRIAGES.

ROGERS—PRATT.—By Rev. Giles H. Mandeville, D.D., August 4, Charles H. Rogers and Henrietta A. Pratt, at the residence of the bride's father, in Brooklyn, N. Y.

STATESIR—EMMONS.—At the home of the bride's parents, August 3, by Rev. Geo. W. Labaw, Mr. John Statesir to Miss Hattie B., daughter of Mr. John B. Emmons, all of Colt's Neck, N. J.

DEATHS.

Obituary notices five cents per line (nine word to the line.) For subscribers we will insert fifteen lines free; all lines in excess of that number will be charged same as non-subscribers.

DUSINBERRE.—At Warwick, N. Y., August 3, Peter Dusinberre, in the 85th year of his age. Interred at Warwick.

He was widely known and universally esteemed by the residents of the lower end of Orange county, where his life of over 84 years has been spent, his career illustrating an integrity that never faltered, a gentleness of life that never tired, and in the service of the Master a faithfulness above all temptation that brought him to his grave "in a full age like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season." Mr. Dusinberre never would accept public position from his fellow citizens, but for a long series of years was a member of the consistory of his church, only retiring when the weight of increasing years made it necessary. He leaves behind him a widow and eight children, among the latter the Rev. Thos. S. Dusinberre, of Livingston, Columbia county.

TEN EYCK.—At Fairview, Fulton Co., Ill., July 5, Peter Ten Eyck, in the 78th year of his age.

Mr. Ten Eyck was born in North Branch, Somerset Co., N. J., Aug. 28, 1808, and was one of Fairview's earliest settlers, having moved here in 1836.

VAN NEST.—Entered into rest, July 28, Jerome Van Nest, of Bedminster, N. J.

Mr. Van Nest was born, reared and died in the same home. In his life he was quiet and unobtrusive; belonging not to that class who push themselves to the front, but rather to those who wait to be consulted. In his home he was generous and sympathetic, being a friend indeed, because a friend in need. God gave him a thoughtful and well-balanced mind. He read much and had decided opinions.

As a Christian his life was thoroughly consistent. His language was chaste, his conduct holy, and his whole life a living example of "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ." One test of his deep spirituality was the gladness of his soul manifested in the glow of his countenance when deeply interested in the worship of God's house. For forty-four years he was a member of the Reformed Church of Bedminster, N. J., and five times was chosen as an office-bearer. The widow who survives him is no stranger to Him "who is able to make all grace abound toward her," and therefore she sorrows not even as others who have no hope. Farewell, brother! We shall meet again. M.

Notices and Acknowledgments

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—Evangelical but not denominational. Prints in 147 languages in aid of foreign missions; grants religious reading to the needy; sends colporters to millions in our highways and hedges, and to the immigrants in Castle Garden and elsewhere. This work depends wholly on charitable gifts. Donations and legacies are earnestly solicited. A summary of the sixtieth year mailed free. O. R. Kingsbury, Treasurer, 150 Nassau street, New York.

FULTON STREET DAILY NOON PRAYER-MEETING, 113 Fulton Street, and 58 Ann Street, Just east of Broadway, near William Street. COME IN, REST, AND PRAY. Stop 5, 10 15 or 20 minutes, or the hour, as your time permits.

Our readers will confer a favor upon the publishers of this paper and, perhaps, find it to their own advantage if, when answering an advertisement found in these columns, mention is made that it was seen in THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall-st., N. Y.

NATURE'S CURE FOR CONSTIPATION,

Sick-Headache, AND DYSPEPSIA.

A RELIABLE REMEDY For Sick Stomach, Torpid Liver, Bilious Headache, Costiveness,

TARRANT'S Effervescent Seltzer APERIENT.

It is certain in its effects. It is gentle in its action. It is palatable to the taste. It can be relied upon to cure, and it cures by assisting, not by outraging, nature. Do not take violent purgatives yourselves, or allow your children to take them, always use this elegant pharmaceutical preparation, which has been for more than forty years a public favorite. Sold by druggists everywhere.

AYER'S PILLS. Sugar-Coated Cathartic

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia. —G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Regulate

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured. —Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored. —Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

The Church.

Hymn.

[This hymn was sung by the children at the laying of the corner-stone of the New Infirmary of the Five Points House of Industry, Saturday, July 31st, 1886.]

THE Church's one foundation
Is Jesus Christ her Lord;
She is His new creation
By water and the Word:
From heaven He came and sought her
To be His holy bride;
With His own blood He bought her,
And for her life He died.

Elect from every nation,
Yet one o'er all the earth,
Her charter of salvation
One Lord, one faith, one birth;
One Holy Name she blesses,
Partakes one holy food,
And to one hope she presses,
With every grace endued.

Though with a scornful wonder
Men see her sore opprest,
By schisms rent asunder,
By heresies distrest;
Yet saints their watch are keeping,
Their cry goes up, "How long?"
And soon the night of weeping
Shall be the morn of song.

Yet she on earth hath union
With God the Three in One,
And mystic sweet communion
With those whose rest is won:
O happy ones and holy!
Lord, give us grace that we
Like them, the meek and lowly,
On high may dwell with Thee.

The Kingdom of God.

THE kingdom of God is not a despotism. Its law is love. Its citizens are those who accept and try to obey that law. They realize that it is the law of freedom and of life. Just so far as we love God and love each other we are emancipated from the tyranny of lust and passion, from the enslaving power of envy, selfishness and pride. Love makes God our reconciled Father in Christ, and all men our brethren. It binds us together in a holy, happy family, as attraction binds the sun and its planets. No discord, no friction, no fear where love prevails.

The object of setting up this kingdom is not only to redeem the world from sin and sorrow, but by its redemption to glorify God. Over this great battle-field angels bend. They see here the progress of the grandest experiment since time began. They see here a new illustration of the power and the wisdom of God. They see the Maker of worlds dying to save an apostate race. They see love in the forms of humiliation and sacrifice. They watch and wonder. And when the cross wins its strange triumphs, triumphs with all the odds against it—triumphs simply because God is in it, they strike golden harps and ascribe glory, honor, dominion and power unto Him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb.

This New Testament conception of the Gospel as the kingdom of God unifies our work. That work is the enthroning of Christ. It is doing what we can to give Him His rights in the world. When we pray, Thy kingdom come, we think first of our own rebellious hearts; then of our unsanctified homes; then of the church so cold and barren; then of society around us so selfish and worldly; then of the State with its imperfect laws and their more imperfect administration; then of the far frontier with its drift backward to barbarism; and finally of the nations that sit in darkness and the shadow of death. It matters little where I begin since the work is one. Any true effort of loyalty to Christ is like a stone thrown into a still lakelet—the ripples roll out in all directions and to every shore. Let us be better Christians for the sake of Christ and the world. Let us pray more; let us teach more; let us give more; let us strengthen the church in our own house, and in our own town or city; let us try to promote harmony and co-operation among the different churches; let us raise up more ministers; let us print more Bibles; let us sustain more and better religious papers; let us endow more Christian institutions; let us work harder for temperance and social purity—for the sake of Christ and the world.

It is well to study the degradation of the heathen, and to realize their need of the Gospel. We cannot feel too deeply their misery and their peril. But we have a higher, holier motive than that of human sympathy. It is loyalty to Christ. It is the duty of obeying His last command. It is the privilege and the glory of working with Him in the noblest enterprise of the ages—the redemption of a lost world. O, when that enterprise is accomplished; when the final victory is won; when the shout of triumph goes up from all lands and is echoed from every star in the sky; when the principalities and powers in heavenly places see in the new earth a crowning demonstration of the manifold wisdom of God, then we will know that every consecrated effort and gift and thought and prayer in this work is an investment that will be repaid a thousand fold!

He who taught us to pray "Thy kingdom come," will not fail to answer the prayer. He has promised that Jesus shall reign on the earth. How foolish then are faintheartedness and unbelief! Not surer is the promise in which we trust for our personal salvation than the promise that the Gospel shall triumph. Its progress may seem slow, but it is real. Go back to the time of Judah's captivity in Babylon. Nay, go back only 400 years to those dark days when the Roman apostacy sold indulgences, burned Bibles and persecuted the saints. How hopeless then seemed the prospects of the kingdom of God. But how wonderful its progress since, in spite of prelates and kings. And though the work yet before us is great and often discouraging, we should never for a moment doubt that, in God's appointed time, it will be fully accomplished and the voices in heaven will proclaim, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ." (Rev. 11: 15.) We should stimulate our faith and our zeal in every department of Christian fidelity and enterprise by the assurance that

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run."

—The Interior.

Shoe Pegs and Ships.

IN a ship yard, the other day, I saw several men working carefully under the bottom of a vessel which was nearly ready to be launched. I was surprised to find that they were driving shoe pegs into the planks. What was this for? On looking more closely it was easy to find the reason. In the hard wood planks were many small worm holes, which will not swell up in the water and there are so many that they would combine to make a serious leak in the ship if not filled up.

Well, well, I thought, here is this great vessel that cannot be launched until these tiny holes are filled with shoe pegs! What a lesson this teaches of little words, little acts, little sins. But all such comparisons are wrong. There is no little word, or little act. We have no power to measure the far-reaching results which may turn upon a deed or word seemingly insignificant, but in reality big with the issues of eternity.

When we launch our life barque, we are careful as to the set of the sails and the finish of the cabin woodwork; but we will do well to remember that perhaps there are worm holes in the planks that must be filled before the ship is seaworthy, even though only little shoe pegs are required to fill them.
—Rev. Joel S. Ives, in The Congregationalist.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Home Readings.

LESSON 8, THIRD QUARTER.

M. Warning to Judas and Peter.....John 13: 17-38.
T. Betrayal Foretold.....Matt. 26: 14-29.
W. The Lord's Supper.....1 Cor. 11: 23-28.
T. Peter Forewarned.....Luke 22: 31-38.
F. "Mine Acquaintance."....Ps. 55: 1-16.
S. "Mine Own Familiar Friend."....Ps. 41: 1-13.
S. One Bread and one Body.....1 Cor. 10: 12-24.

—From the Westminster Question Book.

International Sunday-School Lesson.

BY REV. JOHN C. VAN DEVENTER.

August 22d.—"Warning to Judas and Peter."—John 13: 21–38.

Golden Text.—"Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."—1 COR. 10: 12.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—"Without me ye can do nothing."—JOHN 15: 5.

INTRODUCTION.

THE three verses omitted between the last lesson and this one serve to indicate the progress of thought in the mind of Jesus. Having given a slight intimation of His knowledge of the treachery of Judas in verse 10, He makes a fuller declaration in verse 18, for the purpose of proving to His disciples His perfect knowledge of coming events. In verse 20 He gives them a promise which they could not have understood at the time, but which referred to their future work in His name, and doubtless often served to encourage them after they had undertaken the evangelization of the world. The thought of the treachery of Judas clouds all other thoughts, and is ever uppermost, so that He feels compelled to relieve His feelings by a fuller declaration concerning this great sorrow.

THE LESSON.

I. THE TRAITOR EXPOSED.—VS. 21–30.

V. 21.—"He was troubled in spirit." Not because of any personal apprehension, but by reason of His knowledge of the unworthiness of His followers, all of whom would soon yield to temptation, and for a season prefer safety to loyalty. "One of you shall betray me." The emphasis is probably on the "you." One of the little company that had already risked and lost much for Him! One of those who had enjoyed privileges beyond those of the most learned rabbi for being taught of God! One of His personal, intimate, trusted friends!

V. 22.—"Then the disciples looked upon one another." A clap of thunder from a clear sky could not have been more startling. It seemed as if Jesus had by this single sentence unveiled all the terrible possibilities of their sinful hearts. Matthew tells us that each one, trembling at the thought, asked, "Is it I?"

V. 23.—"There was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved." Edersheim, in his life of Christ, supposes the arrangement of the principal persons in this scene to have been as follows: Jesus reclining near the head of the table, with John on the one hand and Judas upon the other, while Peter occupied the seat opposite. This arrangement explains many things which are hard to understand without its help. The expression in this verse is not as strong as that in verse 25, and probably only means that John was occupying the place nearest to Jesus and directly in front of Him. John here designates himself by the title which has become immortal, which he assumed in modesty, but which is of the greatest honor to him as the most Christlike of all that company.

V. 24.—"Simon Peter beckoned to him." Probably this sign was unnoticed by the rest of the disciples, which might easily have been the case if Peter were directly opposite to John.

V. 25.—"He then lying on Jesus' breast." Leaning back so that his head would now actually rest on the breast of Jesus, while his face would be upturned toward His, he asked the question, "Lord, who is it?"

V. 26.—Jesus replies to the question by giving John a sign whereby the traitor might be known by him. It seems probable that no one besides John knew of this answer until afterwards. It was customary at the Passover for the Master to take a bunch of the bitter herbs, and, dipping it into the sauce or gravy of the lamb, hand it to the members of His family. It seems that Jesus in doing this gave the first morsel to Judas, thus answering John's question, and making a final appeal to Judas not to sin against a friendship so sacred.

V. 27.—"After the sop Satan entered into him." His determination was now made irrevocably. He gave himself up from that moment to do the work of Satan. "That thou doest do quickly." This was Judas' sentence of expulsion from the company of disciples. This probably took place before the instituting of the Lord's Supper.

Vs. 28, 29.—"No man at the table knew for what intent he spake this unto him." Probably John was the only one that knew that Judas was the traitor, and he had no idea that his work of treason was so far advanced. They all thought that Jesus had sent him upon some simple errand of necessity or mercy in behalf of the company.

V. 30.—"He then having received the sop, went immediately out." He had the effrontery to maintain the appearance of friendship to the last and received the sop which was an emblem of the family tie uniting those who partook together the Passover meal. "It was night." The darkest hour of earth's night of sin.

II. THE DISCIPLES EXHORTED.—VS. 31–35.

V. 31.—"Now is the Son of man glorified." Jesus seemed to be continually speaking in paradoxes. When popular enthusiasm was at its height and the people determined to make Him their king, He talked of the Cross and death and the triumph of His enemies: now under the very shadow of the Cross itself, in the face of agony unspeakable, He talks about being glorified. It is not strange that the disciples failed to understand Him. The Cross of Jesus we know to be the climax of all the wonderful works of God, and we can see the Divine glory streaming from its outstretched arms as from no other spot except the throne of glory in the highest heavens.

V. 32.—The first clause of this verse is omitted by the Revision. We notice the frequent use of the word "glorify," and the intimate association of God and the Son of Man in this glory.

V. 33.—"Little children, yet a little while I am with you." He would impress upon them the importance of giving careful heed to the instructions which were to follow. "Whither I go ye cannot come." In their loneliness and sorrow they would vainly seek to find their absent Lord; they might wish for death in order to follow Him, but their hour was not yet come, they were to glorify Him on the earth in faithful service.

V. 34.—"A new commandment I give unto you." He leaves them with a solemn charge. Individuals in that company will be exposed to dangers and temptations, will need all the loving sympathy and help that their brethren can render. "As I have loved you, that ye also love one another." "As I have loved you." What a commandment is this! "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you;" "as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." "Lord increase our faith."

V. 35.—"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples." There is nothing that can effectually root selfishness out of the human heart but the love of Jesus. In proportion to our love for Him will we love His people, and in proportion to that love will be our impress upon the world of unbelievers. Jealousies and strifes among Christians fritter away the God-given opportunities for winning the world.

III. THE SELF-CONFIDENT WARNED.—VS. 36–38.

V. 36.—"Simon Peter said unto him, Lord, whither goest thou?" This question was doubtless asked with the thought in Peter's mind, "I will find out where He is going and I will follow Him. Jesus answers the unexpressed thought and takes no notice of the question itself, "Whither I go, thou canst not follow me" He had a better service for Peter than that which Peter imagined himself ready to offer. "Thou shalt follow me afterwards." When the service in the Gospel was finished Peter should follow his Lord out of the world and into heaven by the same gate of martyrdom through which He was about to pass.

V. 37.—"Lord, why cannot I follow thee now?" There is a somewhat petulant tone in this query. Peter is unwilling to submit himself wholly and heartily to the will of his Master. "I will lay down my life for thy sake." But this is just what Peter was not yet ready to do, and therefore it would not be asked of him. He had not received dying grace as yet, and was unconscious of his need of grace for lesser trials.

V. 38.—"Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake?" With what mingled tenderness and reproach these words must have fallen from His lips. "How little dost thou know thine own heart, Peter. Left to yourself Satan would have you to sift as wheat, but I have prayed for thee." Peter needed to be undeceived concerning himself. "The cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice." So soon was the weakness of this leader among the disciples to be self-revealed. In all the dialogue that follows Peter maintains unbroken silence. He is overwhelmed by his Lord's want of confidence.

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

1. "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked."

2. It pains Jesus to see a soul drifting away from Him.

3. We may cultivate an intimate relation to Jesus by striving to be like Him.

4. Those who are refusing the love of Jesus are taking their daily bread from His hands.

5. In order to follow Jesus "afterwards" we must obey Him now.

6. We need a more evident love for our fellow believers.

7. Those who think that they know more than Jesus are sure to find themselves mistaken.

8. Ardent impulses need to be strengthened by Divine grace.

9. The exposure of our frailty should drive us to Jesus for help.

"Whosoever."

THERE were children on the floor
Conning Bible verses o'er.

"Which word all the Bible through
Do you love best?" queried Sue.

"I like Faith the best," said one,
"Jesus is my word alone;"

"I like Hope;" "and I like Love;"
"I like Heaven, our home above."

One more, smaller than the rest—
"I like Whosoever best;

'Whosoever, that means all—
Even me, who am so small.

Whosoever! Ah? I see;
That's the word for you and me.

"Whosoever will," may come—
Find a pardon and a home.

—Gleanings for the Young.

RETRIBUTION is one of the grand principles in the Divine administration of human affairs; a requital is imperceptible only to the wilfully unobservant. There is everywhere the working of the everlasting law of requital; man always gets what he gives.—J. Foster.

A True Story About a Bible.

THERE was a little boy who wanted a Bible very much indeed—wanted it more than anything else he could think of. But he was a poor boy, and could not afford to buy one; for he lived a good many years ago, when Bibles cost more than they do now.

One day two strange gentlemen came to his house and asked his mother for something to eat.. Although she had only plain food, she gave them a welcome to what she had. As they ate, they saw the little boy looked sad. They asked him what he wanted, and he told them a Bible.

His mother said: "Never mind. Don't fret about that. I'll take you to see General Washington next week."

"But I'd rather have a Bible than go to see General Washington," the boy said.

One of the gentlemen seemed much pleased with this, and told him he hoped he would always be as fond of the Bible.

The next day the little boy received a beautiful Bible, and on the fly-leaf was written, "From George Washington."

The little boy did not know it, but he had been talking to General Washington himself the day before.—Our Little People.

Who Built the House?

THE house was in a pond. People passed along the road in full sight of it, but never saw it. Boys came and caught frogs and chased turtles and captured bloodsuckers, but did not notice it. In plain sight it was, not twenty feet from the shore. The roof was covered with a thatch of rushes to keep out the rain. Within there was one room, a cosy bed room, with a bed of dried grass as soft as down. The walls were of mud. There were no pictures hanging on them, nor were there stove, chair, table or dish in the mansion. There were no windows; there was no chimney; and the door, the only door, was under water.

This house had a very wet cellar; in fact, it was always full of water.

The ducks often swam close to the house, plunging their broad bills deep into the mud, and sometimes diving out of sight, but they never tried to enter. The frogs sat on the large lily leaves near by and croaked long and loud, but not one went in. The turtles sometimes climbed to the roof to sun themselves, but they never went inside. The meadow mice had little houses of their own, and laid no claim to this. No one of these pond people claimed it. Who then was the owner? Who built the house?

One day one of the boys discovered the house. At first he thought it was an old bushel basket upside down, but as he looked more carefully, he saw that somebody or something must have built it right where it was. He wondered when it was done and who did it. He lived close to the pond and could see the whole of it from his chamber window, but he had never seen this building before. Almost every day after school he played in the old field near the pond, and yet he had never noticed the builder. He made up his mind to examine it carefully, and if possible, solve the mystery that surrounded it.

The mud and water were so deep that he dared not wade out, and he had no boat. How should he reach the little mud island on the edge of which it stood? After thinking some time he went to the lumber pile and took several boards and brought them to the shore. These he laid across the tussocks of pond grass, till he had a bridge leading right up to the curious building. It was a very narrow, and exceedingly shaky bridge. It bent and tipped as the boy stepped upon it. In his hand he held a long stick, which he thrust down into the mud to steady himself. In this way he sidled along, carefully balancing, step by step, till he was almost there. Once he stuck the stick so far down that he had to give quite a hard pull in drawing it out, and when it did come, he almost tipped over backward.

Step by step he moved slowly on, and at last reached the house. Once there, he examined it with a great deal of wonder. It was so strongly made, so nicely thatched, so perfectly rounded. With his stick he rapped gently on the roof. There was a rustle, a plunge, and something darted through the water and was gone. So quick and unexpected were the motions that the boy could not decide whether it was a fish or an animal. As he examined the dwelling, he saw leading from the under-water door, a pathway in the soft mud on the bottom of the pond. Following it with his eyes he noticed that it led far out into the deep water. He resolved to watch the path, hoping to have a longer look at the stranger.

For several days he watched, but saw nothing unusual. At last, one evening just at twilight, he saw swimming slowly up the pathway, its nose barely showing above water, a brown animal. Hardly daring to move, for fear of frightening it, he stole forward to get a good long look. Nearer and nearer swam the animal to the water-cottage, till, diving through the doorway, it disappeared.

This, then, was the owner, the builder, of the queer little mud house, with its roof of rushes, and its cellar full of water. So it was not the ducks, the mice, the turtles, nor the frogs, that built the house, but the big brown muskrat.

As the boy went home he said to himself: "I am glad I watched and waited till I found what it was. It pays to keep one's eyes open."—Little Christian.

THE colored sunsets and the starry heavens, the beautiful mountains and the shining seas, the fragrant woods and the painted flowers, they are not half so beautiful as a soul that is serving Jesus out of love, in the wear and tear of common, unpoetic life.—Faber.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate
For Sick Headache.

Dr. N. S. READ, Chicago, says: "I think it is a remedy of the highest value in many forms of mental and nervous exhaustion, attended by sick headache, dyspepsia and diminished vitality."

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Combines, in a manner peculiar to itself, the best blood-purifying and strengthening remedies of the vegetable kingdom. You will find this wonderful remedy effective where other medicines have failed. Try it now. It will purify your blood, regulate the digestion, and give new life and vigor to the entire body.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla did me great good. I was tired out from overwork, and it toned me up." MRS. G. E. SIMMONS, Cohoes, N. Y.

"I suffered three years from blood poison. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and think I am cured." MRS. M. J. DAVIS, Brockport, N. Y.

Purifies the Blood

Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarities: 1st, the combination of remedial agents; 2d, the proportion; 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, effecting cures hitherto unknown. Send for book containing additional evidence.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over." J. P. THOMPSON, Register of Deeds, Lowell, Mass.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla beats all others, and is worth its weight in gold." I. BARRINGTON, 130 Bank Street, New York City.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

7% NET Security 3 to 6 times loan. INTEREST semi-annual and paid at your home. 29th year of residence, and 10th of business. No investor ever had to pay taxes, costs of foreclosure, wait for interest, or take land. BEST of References all around you. Write if you have money to loan.
D. S. B. JOHNSTON & SON,
Negotiators of Mortgage Loans.
MENTION THIS PAPER. St. Paul, Minn

POPULAR LECTURES.

1.—The Romance of the Revolution.
2.—An Evening with Longfellow
3.—The Tudors
4.—Monologue—National Poems and Events

Address MRS. E. T. BARRETT,
SING SING, N. Y

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for
PLATFORM ECHOES
or LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART,
By John B. Gough.

His last and crowning life work, brim full of thrilling interest, humor and pathos. Bright, pure, and good, full of "laughter and tears," it sells at sight to all. To it is added the Life and Death of Mr. Gough, by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT. 1000 Agents Wanted.—Men and Women. $100 to $200 a month made. ☞ Distance no hindrance as we give Extra Terms and Pay Freights. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Lactated Food

The Most Successful PREPARED FOOD
FOR NEW-BORN INFANTS.

It may be used with confidence when the mother is unable, wholly or in part, to nurse the child, as safe substitute for mother's milk.

No other food answers so perfectly in such cases. It causes no disturbance of digestion, and will be relished by the child.

In CHOLERA INFANTUM,

This prediyested and easily assimilated Food will surely prevent fatal results.

FOR INVALIDS, it is a Perfect Nutrient in either Chronic or Acute Cases.

Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value. It will be retained when even lime water and milk is rejected by the stomach. In dyspepsia, and in all wasting diseases it has proved the most nutritious and palatable, and at the same time the most economical of Foods. There can be made for an infant

150 MEALS for $1.00.

Sold by Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.00.

☞A valuable pamphlet on "The Nutrition of Infants and Invalids," free on application
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

7% FARM LOANS!
SECURED BY
FIRST MORTGAGES ON IMPROVED FARMS.

TWELVE YEARS in the business. Over $1,000 000 invested during this time. References: My old customers in all sections of the United States. If you have money in savings bank or lying idle, send to me for circular containing full information, letters from my old customers, references, a NEW MAP OF DAKOTA, all sent free on application. Address
E. P. GATES,
PRESIDENT MERCHANTS' BANK,
Grand Forks, Dakota.

6%, 7%, 8%

The American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, incorporated, with a paid-up capital of $500,000, with branches at Huron and Mitchell, Dakota, offer First Mortgage Farm Loans in Iowa, Minn., Dakota, and Neb., both Principal and Interest Guaranteed. Also 6 per cent. Debenture Bonds (obligations of the Company), running 10 years, secured by Mortgage loans deposited with the Mercantile Trust Co., N. Y. It also issues Demand Certificates of Deposit at 5 per cent. interest. Write for pamphlet and references.
Home Office, Emmetsburg, Iowa.
E. S. Ormsby, Pres., 150 Nassau St., N. Y.

INVEST Through the Sound and Reliable
WESTERN FARM MORTGAGE CO.
F. M. PERKINS, President. LAWRENCE, KAN. L. H. PERKINS, Secretary.
CAPITAL AND SURPLUS, $250,000.
Carefully selected 1st Mortgage Farm Loans payable in N. Y. Unrivalled facilities. Absolute satisfaction. 10 years' experience. No losses. Refer to 3d Nat'l Bank, N. Y. City; Nat'l Bank, Lawrence, Kan.; and Hundreds of Investors. Send for pamphlet, forms and full information. Branch Offices in N. Y. City, Albany & Phila. N. Y. Office, 137 B'way, C. C. Hine & Son, Agts.

BELLS.

McShane Bell Foundry
Finest Grade of Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS for CHURCHES, &c.
Send for Price and Catalogue. Address
H. McSHANE & CO.,
Mention this paper. Baltimore, Md

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Fire Alarms, Farms, etc. FULLY WARRANTED. Catalogue sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

MENEELY & COMPANY
West Troy, N. Y. Bells,
For Churches, Schools, etc., also Chimes and Peals. For more than half a century noted for superiority over all others

BARLOW'S INDICO BLUE.
Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and endorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it. A. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 253 N. Second St., Phil.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S
STEEL PENS
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

GEO. MATHER'S SONS,
PRINTING INK

Manufacturers. Superior Black and Colored Ink Lithographic and Plate Ink. Varnishes, etc. 60 John street, New York.
The Intelligencer is printed with our ink.

CURE for the DEAF by PECK'S PAT. IMPROVED CUSHIONED EAR DRUMS. Whispers heard distinctly. Comfortable, invisible. Illustrated book & proofs, FREE. Address or call on F. HISCOX 353 Broadway, N. Y. Name this paper.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.
CATARRH
Also good for Cold in the Head, Headache, Hay Fever, &c. 50 cents.

CONSUMPTION

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong in my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address. DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., N. Y.

R. H. MACY & CO.,

14TH STREET, SIXTH AVE., AND 13TH STREET NEW YORK.

GRAND CENTRAL FANCY AND DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT.

We Call Attention to Our Large and Varied Stock of Goods Adapted to the Summer Season.

Our Customers Residing in the

COUNTRY,

Or Those Visiting the

MOUNTAINS

OR

SEA-SHORE,

Can Rely on Having Their

ORDERS BY MAIL

Carefully Executed and Promptly Shipped.

OUR PRICES

Are Always the Lowest.

R. H. MACY & CO.

James M'Creery & Co.

HAVE OPENED THEIR EARLY IMPORTATIONS OF SILKS, VELVETS AND PLUSHES, AND ARE NOW EXHIBITING COMPLETE ASSORTMENTS IN RICH AND EXCLUSIVE DESIGNS. AN EXAMINATION IS INVITED.

Broadway & 11th St.,

NEW YORK

Whenever the weather is warm enough or dry enough, paint, being careful to let two weeks elapse between the two coats. The first coat if not perfectly dry will rupture the second coat, and this six months after the job is done. The F. J. Nash M'f'g Co., manufacturers of $1.35 Ready Mixed Paint, Nyack, Rockland Co., New York. Interesting Circulars Free. If your dealer refuses you these goods apply to us direct.

LE PAGE'S LIQUID GLUE

Is used by thousands of first class Manufacturers and Mechanics on their best work. Received GOLD MEDAL, London, '83. Pronounced strongest glue known. Send card of dealer who does not keep it, with five 2c stamps for SAMPLE CAN

Russia Cement Co., Gloucester, Mass. FREE

TESTED TO OVER 1600 LBS. TO SQ. INCH

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 Days. No Pay until Cured. J. L. STEPHENS, M. D., Lebanon, Ohio.

EDUCATIONAL.

CLAVERACK COLLEGE

AND HUDSON RIVER INSTITUTE,
Claverack, New York.
Rev. A. H. FLACK, A.B., President.

Affords superior advantages for thorough and systematic education to young men and women.

Unsurpassed for healthfulness and beauty of location.

Large and commodious buildings, recently improved and refitted.

A strong faculty of experienced professors and teachers.

Careful attention given to social, moral and physical culture. Ten graduating courses.

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC AND ART

Courses in Piano, Voice Culture, Organ, and Harmony.

Normal Course for Music Teachers. Weekly Lectures and Musicales.

Recitals by distinguished artists.

Individual lessons only. All practice under supervision.

Classes in Chorus Drill and Vocal Sight Reading.

Painting, Modeling in Clay, Cravoning, and Drawing are thoroughly developed by the most modern theories of teaching. Thirty-third Year Opens Sept. 13.

Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Please mention this paper.

Deckertown, Sussex Co., N.J.

A SELECT ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes School year begins September 8. For Circular, address,
W. H. SEELEY, A.M., Prin.

EDUCATIONAL.

BEST TEACHERS AMERICAN and FOREIGN,

promptly provided for Families, Schools, Colleges Skilled Teachers supplied with Positions. Circulars of Good Schools free to Parents. School Property rented and sold. School and Kindergarten Material, etc.
J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO.,
AMERICAN SCHOOL INSTITUTE, 7 East 14th St., N. Y.

RUTGERS COLLEGE
Grammar School,

New Brunswick, N. J.

PREPARES BOYS AND YOUNG MEN FOR COLLEGE OR BUSINESS.

Additional buildings were last year required, erected and filled.

This year additional teachers engaged to meet the increased number of students.

Rooms carpeted and cared for. Some arranged in suites—a study-room 14x14 with two single sleeping-rooms adjoining. A few single rooms to be had if desired.

Last year at the opening of the school every room was engaged, and many applicants were refused admission because of the lack of room. This year rooms will be reserved as applied for.

For catalogues and further information, address E. T. TOMLINSON, HEADMASTER.

The Misses Anable's
English, French and German Boarding and Day-School

WILL REOPEN SEPTEMBER 22D.
40 BAYARD ST., New Brunswick, N. J.

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE, BOSTON UNIVERSITY, Opens Oct. 14, '86

Fourteenth Year. Furnishes superior facilities for thorough scientific and practical instruction in three and four years' courses. Entrance examinations, Oct, 11, 12 and 13. Send for announcements to
I. T. TALBOT, M.D., Dean.

SIGLAR'S PREPARATORY SCHOOL,

NEWBURG-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.,
Gives the best preparation for the best colleges. Two Yale valedictorians in three years. Entrance examinations held at the school by member of Yale Faculty. Daily gymnastics under teacher compulsory. For circulars, etc., address
HENRY W. SIGLAR, M.A., (Yale) Prin.

ALEXANDER INSTITUTE

White Plains, N.Y.
23 miles from New York City by rail. Fits boys for College or business pursuits. 30 to 40 pupils 5 Teachers. Board and Tuition per annum $400. For circulars, apply to the Principal, O. R. WILLIS, Ph.D.

SEYMOUR SMITH INSTITUTE

Pine Plains, N. Y., prepares for College. Healthful, homelike, select, thorough. Address Rev. A. MATTICE, A.M., Principal.

PEEKSKILL (N. Y.) MILITARY Academy.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
1 hour from New York on the Penna. R. R.
Year begins (examinations for admission) Sept 21, 1886.

SLOAN PRIZES FOR BEST (CLASSICAL) ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS; 1st, $400 ($100 CASH); 2d, $350 ($50 CASH).

Sixteen Professors; no Tutors. Classical course full and thorough. Increased facilities for the study of French and German, with a view to practical use. Laboratory work for all students in Chemistry. Well-equipped Astronomical Observatory for students' use. Full Geological Cabinet. 50 000 well chosen books in Libraries.

Ample provision for Electives, Junior and Senior years, in Natural Science, History, etc

The SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT is the New Jersey State College. Constant field-practice in Surveying. Full course in Draughting.

THE AIM OF THE COLLEGE—THOROUGHNESS IN ALL WORK.

Best facilities and personal attention for every student. For full information, address Librarian Rutgers College.

Merrill Edwards Gates, Ph.D., LL.D., Pres't

VASSAR COLLEGE,

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

FOR WOMEN, with a complete College Course, School of Painting and Music, Astronomical Observatory, Laboratory of Chemistry and Physics, Cabinets of Natural History, a Museum of Art, a Library of 15,000 Volumes, ten Professors, twenty-three Teachers. Catalogues sent on application.
REV. JAMES M. TAYLOR, D.D., President.

Rutgers Female College,

58 West 55th street, commences 49th year September 23d. Rev. John Hall, D.D., President of the Board of Trustees. Boarding and Kindergarten Departments. Address the College.

HEMPSTEAD INSTITUTE.

Hempstead, Long Island, N. Y.
A Thorough English Boarding School for Boys. Primary, Intermediate, Higher English and Commercial Courses. Twenty-seventh year begins September 15. Catalogues sent on Application.

Riverview Academy,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
Prepares for College and the Government Academies, for Business and Social Relations. Thorough Military Instruction. Springfield Cadet Rifles.
BISBEE & AMEN, Principals.

38TH YEAR. LYNDON HALL.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—A High-Class School for Young Ladies. Music, Drawing, Painting, Languages, and English branches thoroughly taught, with full regard to the equally important matters of home care and training. Address
SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Principal.

YOUNG LADIES SEMINARY,

43d YEAR Begins Sept. 22.
Address
F. CHANDLER, D. D., Prest. Freehold, N. J.

Auburn Theological Seminary.

The term opens September 1st, 1886. For catalogue address WILLIS J. BEECHER, Clerk of Faculty, Auburn, N. Y.

Betts' Academy, Stamford, Conn.

A Boys' Boarding School of the highest grade. 49th year begins Sept. 15th. WM. J. BETTS, M.A., (Yale), Principal.

RYE SEMINARY, Rye, NEW YORK.
For particulars address Mrs. S. J. LIFE.

ATLANTIC
Mutual Insurance Co.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 51 WALL STREET
ORGANIZED 1842.

Insures against Marine and Inland Navigation Risks.
And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest in accordance with its Charter.

J. D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice President
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice Pres't.
A. A. RAVEN 3d Vice Pres't.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

CONTINENTAL
Insurance Co.

Continental Buildings
100 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.
Cor. COURT and MONTAGUE STS., BROOKLYN
106 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, E.D.

Insures against loss by Fire at reasonable rates.

Reserve for re-insurance	$2,265,427 8
of which for Inland Marine, $55,969 52
Reserve ample for all other claims	553,171 2.
Capital paid in cash	1,000,000 00
Net surplus	1,358,879 85
Total Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886.	$5,177,478 99

This Company conducts its business under the restrictions of the New York Safety Fund Law. The two Safety Funds together equal $1,200,000.

H. H. LAMPORT, President.
CYRUS PECK, Secretary.

HOME
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK.
OFFICE, No. 119 BROADWAY.

Sixty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the Condition of the Company on the first day of July, 1886.

CASH CAPITAL	$3,000,000 00
Reserve Premium Fund	2,938,020 00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	301,040 10
Net Surplus	1,389,341 71
Cash Assets	$7,628,401 81

SUMMARY OF ASSETS

Cash in Banks	$126,678 99
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	743,300 01
United States Stocks (market value)	2,9 2,697 50
Bank and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	1,783,649 00
State and City Bonds (market value)	256,000 00
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	130,000 00
Interest due on 1st July, 1886	10,394 74
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	299,646 97
Real Estate	1,364,113 61
Total	$7,628,401 81

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
D. A. HEALD, Vice-President.
J. H. WASHBURN, V. P. & Sec'y
T. B. GREENE, W. L. BIGELOW, E. G. SNOW, JR., } Ass't Sec's.

EQUITABLE
Mortgage Company,

SIX AND SEVEN PER CENT
FARM Mortgages & Municipal in Kansas, Missouri & Nebraska BONDS
PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST
GUARANTEED.
Capital, $600,000.00.

A pamphlet containing information concerning the history of Farm Mortgages for the past twenty-five years sent free on application.

OFFICES:

NEW YORK, 208 B'way, Evening Post Bl'dg.
CHARLES N. FOWLER, V.
BOSTON, 23 Court Street.
H. H. FITCH, Manager.
PHILADELPHIA, 112 South Fourth Street.
CHAS. BENJ. WILKINSON, Manag
KANSAS CITY, Mo.
JOHN AVERY, General Manager.

N. W. HARRIS & CO.,

115-117 Monroe St., CHICAGO.
BONDS Of Counties, Cities, &c of high grade a specialty Send for descriptive lists.

A MILLION
BOOKS

RARE, CURIOUS, CURRENT. IN STOCK.
ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.
Libraries Supplied Cheaper than at any Book Store in the World.
LIBRARIES AND BOOKS BOUGHT.
MAMMOTH CATALOGUE FREE

LEGGAT BROTHERS,

81 CHAMBERS STREET,
3d door West of City Hall Park. NEW YORK.

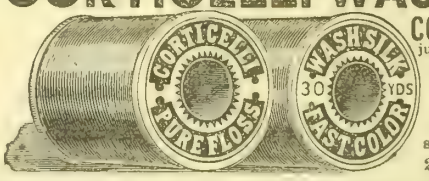
----FLORIDA.----

—ACADEMY AND COLLEGE AT DeLAND, FLORIDA.—

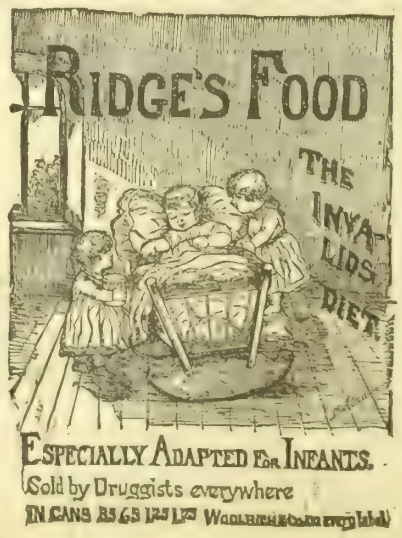
A first-class Academy for both sexes. Five Courses—College Preparatory, Higher English, Normal, Business, Industrial Drawing. First-class Art and Music Departments. Fine New Dormitory Buildings, enabling us to furnish board and tuition at reasonable rates. The purpose of this Institution is to give, in the delightful climate of FLORIDA, as thorough and liberal an education as can be secured in the best New England schools. DeLand College will also receive students of both sexes prepared to enter the Freshman Class. Send for Catalogue to
J. F. FORBES, President, DeLand, Florida, or H. A. DeLAND, Fairport, N. Y.

CORTICELLI WASH SILK

SOLD ON SPOOLS ONLY.



COLOR WARRANTED Not to "run," or to injure in any way the most delicate material in washing. For heavy Outline Embroidery use two threads; for lighter work use the thread singly. The convenience of having this reliable brand on spools rather than doubtful goods in skeins which tangle and become quickly shop worn, will be apparent to traders and consumers. Sold by enterprising dealers, who will be supplied by NONOTUCK SILK CO.
25 Green Street, NEW YORK.



ESPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR INFANTS.
Sold by Druggists everywhere
IN CANS 25 65 125 175 WOOLRICH & CO. PALMER, MASS.

These are Solid Facts:

BROOKFIELD, MASS., Feb. 12, 1884.

My little grand-daughter, now about ten months old, weighed at birth but

Three Pounds.

Neither doctor nor nurse had any expectation of her living to be a month old. She was fed on cow's milk about a month, and the gain was hardly perceptible. Then, by the advice of the physician, she was fed on Ridge's Food, prepared according to directions, and gained five ounces the first week. She has used no other food since, and now we are proud to tell you she is as hearty and as fine a child of her age as can be seen anywhere.

Yours truly,
H. H. PHETTEPLACE.

BOSTON, MASS., July 2, 1883.

Nine years ago, a puny, infant neice of mine was taken from the arms of its consumptive mother to be cared for temporarily in my family. My wife put it immediately upon a diet of Ridge's Food exclusively. The healthful growth of the child was very remarkable. At the end of three months, when returned to its home, it had become such a plump, rosy-cheeked child as to be hardly recognizable even to its mother. The child has ever since enjoyed perfect health. I have known of several other cases of the use of Ridge's Food among my neighbors and friends, and always with the same satisfactory results.

DAN'L L. MILLIKEN.

Send to Woolrich & Co., Palmer, Mass., for pamphlet entitled, "Healthful Hints."

The Christian Intelligencer

Een-dracht maakt macht.

VOL. LVII.—No. 33. WHOLE No. 2925. | NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 18, 1886. | $2.65 A YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 48 CHURCH STREET.

EDITORS: Rev. JOHN M. FERRIS, D.D. Rev. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR: MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

SQUIRE AND FLYNN deserve punishment. This city is to be ruled by the will of the people and not by bargains made between three or four political bosses. But the action of these men has not been singular. For years nearly every one of Squire's predecessors has pledged himself, before receiving a nomination, to make such appointments as might be desired by the party leadere. There is narrow ground for a hope that his successor will not be definitely pledged to the same course.

DON'T dwell upon your troubles and discouragements; look for and at your opportunities and advantages that you may improve them. The night is not all dark; there are stars still shining. Many a man fails because he so fastens his thoughts on his hardships that he fails to discern his opportunities and the means he has to make good use of them.

Don't vex the ears of your friends with your trials until you have made the Lord Jesus your confidant. Tell them first to Him and seek wisdom, strength, comfort and relief from Him. If He shuts you up to seeking help from friends, then do so; but tell Him first of your perplexities, difficulties and wants.

REV. DR. JOHN MACLEAN, a man confided in by those who knew him as few men are and greatly beloved, entered into the rest that remaineth for the children of God, last Wednesday morning. He was eighty six years old. In 1816 he became a tutor in Princeton College and continued in its service until 1868—over half a century of work as tutor, professor and president! In that period he had occupied almost every chair in the faculty. Thousands of men, scattered over the world, cherish his memory and thank God for his instructions, but especially for the privilege of having witnessed the beauty of his life.

THE CHURCH should be "the pillar and ground of the truth." One of the chief reasons for its existence is that it may maintain and declare the truth. The truth to be declared is that contained in the Word of God and nothing else. The Church which declares human conjectures or what some men wish the truth to be and not what the evident meaning of the word of God is, is unfaithful to its trust, is not a true Christian church, and will in due time decline and decay, will be without the blessing of God and become despised by men. Unfaithful churches do apparently thrive sometimes for a while, but afterward gradually lose their attractions and their influence. The missions of a Church should especially declare the truth of God and nothing else. In its missions the Church makes its characteristic declaration of belief more than anywhere else. Indeed missions are the declaration of the truth held in trust by the Church. A missionary of all preachers should be sound in the faith, for he is above all other men the herald of the Church, the voice of the Church, speaking to men. When the Church or any member of the Church, especially when a minister, begins to substitute speculations, conjectures, the suggestions of consciousness, inferences from what may be called the general tenor of revelation, for the explicit statements of the Bible, no one can tell to what length this unfaithfulness will go. A missionary making such substitutions cannot command the confidence of the Church, for the history of the Church shows that ministers begin often with an aberration from the truth that may be tolerated and advance to the denial of vital truths. What is commonly meant by an evangelical church will watch with constant anxiety a missionary known to hold opinions varying from those held by the mass of the communicants. There will be constantly a fear that he will wander farther and farther away from the faith of the church. A missionary needs the hearty support of the Church, to have it he must have the entire confidence of the Church. These things are writ ten because certain men who will not claim that they have the entire confidence of the Congregational Church, who know that a large portion of that Church regards their belief with regret and anxiety, are insisting that young men of the same belief and lacking to the same degree the confidence of the Church, shall be sent forth as missionaries.

THE EVANGELIST, after quoting nearly all the INTELLIGENCER said about the union meetings and the employment of evangelists last winter, makes the following modifications:

It may be quite true, as these good brethren represent, that a mistake was made at Cincinnati in calling in the Rev. Sam. Jones; but that any mistake was made, for instance, by pastors in Ithaca, Elmira, Rochester, and elsewhere in Western New York, in calling in the aid of the Rev. E. E. Davidson just about the same time, the pastors and congregations concerned (unless we are greatly misinformed) would by no means concede.

Our contemporary's inference from the Cincinnati incident is very sweeping. There are evangelists and evangelists, and a mistake as to the man or the need of him at a particular juncture is not to be used against the employment of proper men at opportune times. The office or function has warrant in both Scripture and history. A large percentage of our most consistent and active church-members have been brought in in time of revival, and not a few of them ascribe their conversion instrumentally to some one or another of our evangelists. The Church is to use all available instruments and resources—as her pastors and wise ones bent on the reclamation and conversion of the community may deem best—seeking in all things to be guided by a wisdom above their own.

We acknowledge very cheerfully the judgment, the genuine evangelical spirit and the efficiency of the Rev. E. E. Davidson in Western New York last winter and are ready also to admit the value of the services of some other evangelists, especially of Mr. Moody, and we have a remembrance of the accounts, listened to in boyhood, of the inestimably precious work of Nettleton. Perhaps our words were too "sweeping;" but we wrote under the very definite impressions made by what we heard from the lips of intelligent and earnest Christians who had themselves, without hesitation and cheerfully, taken part in the union meetings and the employment of evangelists. Without bitterness, they regretfully expressed their disappointment and their conviction that the religious interest manifested early in last winter in a number of localities was dissipated by the union meetings and the employment of an evangelist, and that the churches lost the hold they had at the outset upon the evident willingness to listen to the truth and to come under the influences of grace, and endeavored in vain to regain it when the general meetings were over. We had also in mind the hesitating, doubtful words we have heard repeatedly and for some time from Episcopalians, as to the value of the services of the missioners in this city last winter. Yet there is no doubt about the high Christian character and the excellence of the sermons and addresses of the missioners.

We have no critical spirit to indulge in this matter. We are thankful to the Evangelist for the exception it takes and so kindly expresses. We have felt for some time that the way has been prepared for a large ingathering, and desire to aid in finding the best means to improve the opportunity. The course pursued by the Presbyterian churches of this city last winter was a wise one and yielded good fruit, and something like the same method adopted in other places resulted in substantial gains, not only in additions to the number of believers, but also in a decided elevation of spiritual life in the churches themselves. What is also very important is the fact that by this method nothing was lost, whereas in some localities a great deal apparently was lost by the union meetings, addressed by evangelists. The Presbyterian churches of this city increased their hold upon the people by their improvement last winter upon our Dutch method of Classical visitation. It was a decided improvement.

We stop here for to day, but have something more to say hereafter.

Arrogant Romanism.

IT is well to know just what we have to deal with. Romanism seems to be acquiring a new lease of political power in the United States. Not a few think that it is more liberal than in Europe, that it has learned something from the free discussion to which it has been subjected, that it has learned the necessity of recognizing somewhat the equality of other Christian organizations and of practising a decent amount of courtesy. But the arrogant Papistical body has not changed, has learned nothing, and still flaunts in our faces the insolent and baseless claims which, when it had the power to enforce them, were at the foundation of the Inquisition and the other atrocities of which it has been guilty.

The Catholic Standard in a recent number takes up "Christian Missions," and delivers itself on this wise:

"We use the qualifying word 'Christian' instead of Catholic, in the title to our intended remarks with deliberate intention. For Christianity is identical with Catholicity and none but those who are Catholics can be truly Christian in belief and practice. And so, too, the only real Christian missions are the missions established under the authority and in union with the Catholic Church. For missionary means one who is sent—a messenger sent by a higher authority and clothed with power to deliver, explain and teach the meaning of the message he is deputed and authorized to deliver. And custom and universal usage have now confined the meaning of the word missionary to one who is sent to deliver the message of Christ to fallen humanity, to teach His Gospel, and to teach it with the authority which He possessed, and delegated to His Apostles and their successors in all ages."

This is followed by quotations from the words of Christ and the Apostle Paul to prove that missionaries are "those only whom Christ expressly and exclusively appointed, authorized, empowered and enjoined to teach His Gospel, and to their successors in all ages."

The article proceeds:

"'Lo I am with you,' are His express words. Not with others, who might call themselves by His name, and pretend to be His teachers and preachers. For He expressly warns His followers that false 'teachers' would rise up and undertake to preach in His name, but that His followers and believers should 'beware' of them. And it is only necessary to turn over the leaves of St. Peter's and St. Paul's Epistles and those of other Apostles, Sts. James and John and Jude, to see how quickly, while the Apostles were still living, the warnings of our Divine Lord against these self-constituted preachers and teachers, or teachers and preachers chosen by sects and schisms, which fell away from the Church, were verified.

"Christian missions and missionaries are the Catholic missions and missionaries. None other can truthfully claim to be Christian. They may imagine themselves Christian, and we will not charge them with conscious insincerity. For, however glaring may be their inconsistency to one whose eyes have been opened to the unchangeable truth and unity of the Catholic faith, we are sure that thousands of them are unconscious of their inconsistency and delusions. Still, errors are errors, whether consciously or unconsciously held. And those who promulgate them, honestly believing in them, are simply blind leaders of the blind; and those who assume the right and power of authoritatively teaching and preaching the Gospel of Christ, unless they have been invested with that authority by those to whom Christ delegated it, are mere pretenders. They are intruders into an office they have no right to enter upon, even though their so-called preaching be true, so far as it goes, which very seldom it is."

What blindness and what insolence! This in the presence of the blessed and glorious record of the genuine Christian missions of this century! The Judsons, and Winslows, and Scudders, and Abeels, and Calhouns, and Goodells, are, forsooth, self constituted and false teachers. They are the sort of people our Lord and His Apostles warned the Church and the world to beware of. With such calumnies this servant of an alien hierarchy which withholds the Word of God from those under its influence; which notoriously and constantly and everywhere disobeys our Lord's command, "Go, preach My Gospel;" which "teaches for doctrines the commandments of men," assails the noble band of men who are representing the true Christianity of America in all the world, and faithfully and with much self-dedial proclaiming the whole counsel of God.

Such is the political hierarchy which draws the support of its charitable institutions from the public treasury—a treasury supplied from the industry and thrift promoted by Protestant Christianity; which fills the poorhouses and jails of the land with the men and women degraded by its teachings and practices, and for whose favor both of the great political parties are to-day making their bids.

Y M. C. A.—The statement made by a pastor of this city at a meeting in Philadelphia, in regard to the effect of membership in a Young Men's Christian Association, as it was reported in the newspapers, and what had been said to us at various times by other pastors, were printed in these columns on June 9th with the expectation that they would call out other statements confirming or disproving them. Such has been the result. This week we are able to present a very satisfactory paper from Mr. Wm. S. Sloan, who has entered upon a thorough investigation at a considerable outlay of time and work and money. Such a record as he presents is very gratifying, and proves that the Association in this city is a valuable assistant to the work of the churches. Perhaps a like careful examination in other localities would reach a similar result. Mr. Sloan has performed an important service both to the Associations and the churches, and it should at least lead to greater caution in what may be publicly said in relation to the influence of the Associations. It is urged in favor of another organization of young people that it works in and through the Church, with a suggestion that this characteristic distinguishes it from other societies and entitles it to the special approbation of the churches. We have no disposition to enter upon a comparison of characteristics or claims; we only mention what is known to exist. The work before the churches, even here in the older portion of our country, is enormous, and every association which calls out the ability of the membership, which trains the young members for useful endeavors in leading men to God and to obedience to Him through Jesus Christ, is to be welcomed and encouraged. One of the chief needs of the Church to-day is the active efforts of every member in the kind of work for which he or she is qualified, and the high probability is that the young members will be brought into the service in larger numbers through organizations of their own than by those in which they may be associated with their seniors. At the same time it is worth while to consider that the Church, constituted as it is, is one of the most effective, perhaps the most effective organization the world has ever known. Compare, for example, the councils, synods, assemblies, or conferences of the various Christian denominations with the last American Congress, or the last British Parliament, or any national legislature. What a scoring a Church synod or convention would get which should be in session from December to August and accomplish as little as the last Congress or its predecessor! The young men and women of the Church would do well to consider the eminent efficiency of the Church as it is now organized, and decide whether it does not deserve their most hearty coöperation.

"Old Colony" Papers.

THE ANGLER.

II.

IT is not my province to detail, much less to criticize, good Izaak Walton's minute and "compleat" instructions to anglers. I suppose they must sound highly crude and obsolete to "scientific" sportsmen armed with the modern improvements, but I defy them to give his picturesqueness to their red tape, or to make their fish live in their books as his do. He almost personifies fishes. He certainly loves them, and we can imagine him weeping, like Hortensius, at the death of a favorite lamprey.

He abounds in curious bits of fish-lore about times and seasons and baits. The dear old man has a wide swallow for "fish stories," though they do not seem to affect his personal practice, which is a walking by sight, and not by faith in anyone. But as to open-mouthed reception of Munchausen tales of other people's fishing, or the fish of other lands and ages, he takes the bait with a readiness to be commended to his finny friends. He specially pins his faith upon one Gesner, who seems always ready to outbid every body else in his miracles and measurements. At other times he will quote a "Polonian gentleman" or some one in "Swedeland," or Du Bartas, a sort of ancient Walt Whitman of the poetic-catalogue variety. He accepts such statements as that certain weeds breed fishes, that frogs turn to mud and back again to frogs, and that the Jew's prescription of applying tench to a sick man's feet, or of live swallowed alive to cure the jaundice, might have been imparted by revelation.

He takes Gesner and Co.'s word for it, that carps have lived a hundred years and pike two hundred; that trout have been found three cubits long, and eels thirty feet; that breams will live all winter frozen up in solid ice, and come out all right in the spring; and that hares change sexes, and there are a people who turn wolves once a year. He has Venerable Bede's authority for the curious statement that the Island of Ely was named from the eels which abounded there. The tench is the fishes' physician, carrying a natural balsam for the cure of himself and others, and that "the tyrant pike will not be a wolf to his physician, though he be never so hungry." He tells gravely of rivers which put out a lighted torch and kindle one unlighted, that turn a stick into a stone, that dye the wool of sheep which drink of them into vermilion; and finally gives Aristotle for authority in telling of a river that dances to music, and Josephus of a river in India which runs all the week and rests on the Sabbath!

Izaak handles the Scripture—we will not say deceitfully, but with a very deft hand—and constructs his special plea for the divinity of the angler's art as learnedly and ingeniously as the most hard-shell theologian for the niceties of his creed. The water itself is proved from Genesis to be the oldest element, and that on which the Spirit of God did first move. The Almighty is said to have spoken to a fish, but never to a beast, and it was a great fish which He chartered to carry Jonah. The antiquity of angling is proved by the fact that both Job and Amos make mention of fish-hooks; nay, it is said to have been taught by Seth to his sons. He more than half suspects that David alluded to fishing when he said, "They that occupy themselves in deep waters see the wonderful works of God."

He makes a great deal of the fact that the first and chief of the Apostles were fishermen, whom our Lord "never reproved for their employment as He did scribes and money-changers." In fact, He considers that all the other Apostles, after they betook themselves to follow Christ, betook themselves to be fishermen too, as the greater part of them were found fishing by Jesus after His resurrection. Our Lord also sent Peter to angle for his tax money. And in the "holy amorous love song" of Solomon, God's beloved is said to have eyes like the fish-pools of Heshbon. One of the most beautiful passages in the book is that wherein he eulogizes the sea as bringing us into visiting distance of classical and holy places, —"the beauty of Florence" and "the monuments, urns and rarities" of Rome, and the consecrated localities of Palestine. I may as well give it as a specimen of his style:

"It is not to be wondered at that so learned and devout a father as St. Jerome, after his wish to have seen Christ in the flesh and to have heard St. Paul preach, makes his third wish—to have seen Rome in her glory. And that glory is not yet all lost, for what pleasure is it to see the monuments of Livy, the choicest of the historians; of Tully, the best of orators; and to see the bay-trees that now grow out of the very tomb of Virgil. But what pleasure is it to a devout Christian to see there the humble house in which St. Paul was content to dwell, and to view the many rich statues that are made in honor of his memory,—nay, to see the very place in which St. Peter and he lie buried together! And how much more doth it please the pious curiosity of a Christian, to see that place on which the blessed Saviour of the world was pleased to humble Himself, and to take our nature upon Him, and to converse with men; to see Mount Sion, Jerusalem, and the very sepulchre of our Lord Jesus.... Gentlemen, lest I forget myself I will stop here and remember you, that but for my element of water the inhabitants of this poor island must remain ignorant that such things ever were, or that any of them have yet a being!"

He defends angling with equal ingenuity on grounds of reason as of Scripture. To some of us the defence is not unneeded,—I refer to angling as a mere "sport." I do not profess to be a Henry Bergh, but I have often questioned whether the aggregate of torture in this business does not surpass that of any other occupation except butchering, which of course is not practised as a sport except in bull-baiting and cock-fights. I confess that some of Walton's own descriptions have made my blood run cold,—such as the vivisection of live-bait; the keeping of the hook in the frog's mouth so that it shall close up, and the frog "continue six months without eating, but is sustained—none but He whose name is Wonderful knows how!"; and the impalement of worms in various ways, among others that of sewing as many to a turf as will cover it, and letting it down into the water "for the fish to feed upon without disturbance for two or three days."

The angler is in Izaak's estimation the model man. Our Lord chose fishermen for His best friends, because they were the best of men. He gives winning portraits of Apostolic men of his own time, who have been "ornaments to the art." Dr. Nowell, who wrote catechism, used to spend a tenth part of his time in angling, and "at his return to his house would praise God he had spent that day both harmlessly and in a recreation that became a Churchman." In his picture at Brazenose College he preferred to be drawn "with his Bible before him, and on one hand his lines, hooks and other tackling lying in a round, and on the other hand his angle-rods of several sorts." Another friend, Sir Henry Wotton, a poet and the Provost of Eton College, used to testify that angling was "a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness."

"Anglers and meek-spirited men" are synonyms to our author. The fisherman is patience personified. "I have known a very good fisher angle diligently four or six hours in a day for three or four days together and not have a bite." It is preëminently the reflective art, in which he would fain

"There meditate my time away,
And angle on, and beg to have
A quiet passage to a welcome grave."

He adds: "Indeed, my good scholar, we may say of angling as Dr. Boteler said of strawberries, 'Doubtless God could have made a better berry, but doubtless God never did;' and so, if I might be judge, God never did make a more calm, quiet, innocent recreation than angling." And again: "I envy not him that eats better meat than I do, nor him that is richer or that wears better clothes than I do; I envy nobody but him, and him only, that catches more fish than I do." Mixing a certain drink for a comrade, while taking refuge from the heat under a "sweet shady arbour which Nature herself has woven with her own fine finger, a contexture of woodbines, sweetbriar, jessamine and myrtle," he commends it as "like nectar—indeed, too good for any but us anglers."

He is a genuine lover of fishes, dwelling on their beauty of shape and color as a lover on the charms of his mistress. And if you would appreciate what an epicure of this kind of food he is, let me refer you to his recipe, a page long, for the cleaning, stuffing, seasoning, buttering, spitting, roasting, basting, dishing, saucing, flavoring and eating of a pike,—all of which he winds up with the remark: "This dish of meat is too good for any but anglers, or very honest men."

Old Izaak's piety is a perennial stream, though sometimes charmingly irrelevant, as in his rather long discourse at the close, in which he recounts to his disciple "some of the thoughts and joys that had possest" his soul while they two had been together. He is thankful to have been free from stone, gout and toothache, broken limbs or being blasted or thunderstruck, for "every misery I miss is a new mercy." With small expense they had "eat and drank and laughed, and angled, and sung, and slept securely; and rose next day and cast away care, and sung and laughed, and angled again." He tells how Diogenes went to a country fair, and, observing "the ribbons and looking glasses and nut-crackers and fiddles and hobby-horses and other gimcracks and finnimbrums," he said, "Lord, how many things there are in this world of which Diogenes has no need!" He asks: "What would a blind man give to see the pleasant rivers and meadows and flowers and fountains that we have met with?" And adds: "There let us praise Him that made that sun and us, and gives us flowers and showers, and stomachs and meat, and content, and leisure to go a fishing."

This last is to him the grand climacteric of sublunary bliss. And his closing benediction, in response to his disciple's ascription: "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord, and let the blessing of St. Peter's Master be with mine," is—

"And upon all that are lovers of virtue, and dare trust in His providence, and be quiet, and go a-angling!"

F. N. ZABRISKIE.

PRINCETON, August, 1886.

The Village Sexton.

Of all remembrances of boyhood's days,
Mixed with school memories of book and birch,
No kindlier object greets my backward gaze
Than the old sexton of our village church;
The rare old man, so reverent and so wise,
Who had so long his solemn office held,
He seemed half-ghostly to our youthful eyes,
And something more than mere respect compelled.

How softly passed his step along the aisles!
How quaint his form, which ne'er its stoop could lose,
As, leading on, with meek, obsequious smile,
He oped the noiseless portals of the pews!
And when the flock was gathered in the fold,
The good old sexton would not smile nor stir,
But sit, with folded arms and eyes uprolled,
Wrapt in the sermon of the minister.

He beamed at bridals and at christ'nings fair,
On the church poor it was his place to wait;
He rang the bell for service and for prayer,
He played the organ, and he passed the plate;
And when the death-bell from the church tower tolled,
And down the road the sad procession swept,
Even more than mortal seemed the sexton old
To the pale mourners, as they moaned and wept.

As wide he held the creaking churchyard gate,
And access gave to the fresh-opened grave,
He seemed a servant of remorseless fate—
To wield a power we had no hope to brave.
But lips ne'er wore a smile of holier worth
Than his, when, the last service being read,
"Ashes to ashes, dust to dust," the earth
Was slowly heaped upon the coffined dead.

But he, too, paid the forfeit with the rest,
And went the journey which we all must go;
The grass grows green o'er the old sexton's breast,
In the sweet, quiet churchyard that I know.
But, in the gossip of the little town,
His gentle goodness cannot fail to last;
And half of memory's sweetness would be gone
Without that gray old image of the past.

—Nathan D. Urner, in The Congregationalist

The Andover Theology.

THE Rev. Dr. Robert West, the editor of the Advance, is in the habit of printing every week in that journal from a column and a half to two columns of paragraphs, to which he adds R. W., by which he intends probably to indicate that he is to be held personally responsible for what may be said in them. They form one of the most attractive and profitable portions of one of the best religious weeklies published anywhere. In the last number of July he says:

One other thing while I am about it. The "New Theology," or the Andover view, is well known to most of us. I have always been tolerant toward these brethren, willing to give them a hearing, but I have never had the slightest sympathy with their hobby. Indeed, I believe the tendency of it in many cases leads directly to Universalism, and always to a letting down of the standard of Christ. I am not a Calvinist, nor do I hold any hardshell doctrines, but I stand squarely, and always have stood, on the common evangelical faith. I do not know what plans God has for men in the other world, but I know that my business is with men here. I do not believe there will be any revivals or conversions only as the common old truths are preached with earnestness and heart power. "The secret things belong to God, the things that are revealed to us, and to our children.' To me, the older I get, and I am now forty years of age, the future life is more and more of an enigma. I would not for my eyes, or to save my tongue or hand, dare to hold out the least hope to one who is incorrigible in this world. As for the heathen, children and idiots, I am content to leave them where God has placed them. It is always dangerous to attempt to be wise beyond revelation.

As we read these sentences we cannot forget that they are the words not only of a Christian man who has passed through a varied experience, but of one who, about a year ago, lingered on the border of eternity for weeks and subjected his faith and opinions to the supreme test which is applied when a man, still sound and active in mind, looks death in the face day after day or contemplates the probability that recovery may be to nothing better than life-long physical disability. Happily for the Church he is neither dead nor disabled, but lives to write words in season fitly spoken.

Gladstone versus Huxley.

THE following appears in the Nineteenth Century of this month:

HAWARDEN CASTLE, Chester, July 11th, 1886.

Mr. Gladstone presents his compliments to the Editor of the Nineteenth Century and requests, with reference to an observation by Professor Huxley on Mr. Gladstone's neglect duly to consult the works of Professor Dana, whom he had cited, that the Editor will have the kindness to print in his next number the accompanying letter, which has this morning been sent to him from America.

"REV. DR. SUTHERLAND—My dear Sir: I do not know that in my letter of yesterday, in which I referred you to the Bibliotheca Sacra I answered directly your question, and hence I add a word to say that I agree in all essential points with Mr. Gladstone, and believe that the first chapters of Genesis and Science are in accord. Yours very truly,

"JAMES D. DANA.

"NEW HAVEN, April 16th, 1886."

Dr. Bluster's Reputation.

BY AN OLD FOGY.

"MY dear," remarked I, looking up from the column of church news in my favorite religious newspaper, "Dr. Bluster must be not only a very good, but a very great man." Now my better half, not unlike myself, has some very decided opinions of her own. She certainly possesses in a high degree that characteristic so much talked of recently—the courage of her convictions. But with all my knowledge of this fact, it was rather a rude shock to my nervous system when she replied to my observation in the manner following: "Mr. Fogy, have I not often told you that you must not believe all that you read in the newspapers?" To have not only the reputation of Dr. Bluster, but the credibility of the Elevator, one of our chief denominational organs, thus called in question, took away my breath, as it were; and I sat reflective for some minutes before I could regain my usual composure. But I consoled myself at length with the fond hope that in some way or other I should yet succeed in disabusing the mind of my spouse of one, at least, of her unaccountable prejudices.

Only a few days had elapsed thereafter when a neighbor, coming in just as supper was over, informed us that a certain Dr. Bluster was announced to preach that very night in the Hickory Street Church. Much to my gratification, Mrs. Fogy made no objection to accompanying me thither. Her bonnet and cloak were on in a remarkably short time, and we proceeded on our way. The Doctor was just in the introduction of his sermon as we entered the church. He indulged at some length in personal reminiscences, with allusions to his family and church experiences, before proceeding with the discussion of his subject proper. Of course I enjoyed the preaching; that I always do; and yet the preacher did not seem to be quite himself as compared with my previous conceptions of him. Indeed, I found myself querying whether this were the same Dr. Bluster of whom I had read so much in the Elevator, and was not quite prepared for this question as we left the church: "Well, Mr. Fogy, what did you think of the great Dr. Bluster?" "My dear," I answered, "he blew the Gospel trumpet, did he not?" "Yes," said Mrs. Fogy, "and tooted a little private horn of his own beside." "My dear," said I, somewhat sternly, "no preacher should be judged by one effort; we will go and hear him again." "We will,' cheerfully responded Mrs. Fogy. We went, for the great man was to preach for several nights. But whether it was that he was depressed by the meagre congregations, no great crowds being attracted after the first night or two, or whatever it might have been that prevented, the Doctor did not equal his reputation, and soon returned to the city. His congregation there, he informed us, would not be satisfied if he should prolong his stay. Before taking his departure, however, he afforded us a good deal of his company at our home, and gave us glowing descriptions of the great meetings he had conducted, the distinguished personages with whose approbation he had been honored, etc., etc. My old opinions of his powers began to reassert themselves, and even Mrs. Fogy did not combat my assertion, "Dr. Bluster is certainly an unusual man." I noticed, however, a certain twinkle in her eye, which might have indicated that she attached to the adjective I had employed a meaning of her own.

Business not long after called me to Echoville, which is the metropolis of our region of country and the home of Dr. Bluster. It was my first visit there, and I was glad to be able to gratify a long-felt wish to see its grand avenues and parks, its great hotels and business blocks, and especially its magnificent churches. It had been my expectation to see Dr. Bluster's church, the crowded congregations which had been described so often, towering above all the rest. Imagine my disappointment in finding it no more commodious than our own humble sanctuary in Fogyville. Again I fell into a meditative mood, and I could but repeat to myself, "What would Mrs. Fogy say, if she were only here?" Returning to my hotel, I went into the reading room to look over the city papers. Each of them contained a glowing account, headed "Dr. Bluster's Visit to Fogyville," with allusions to the "profound impressions made on the public mind by his powerful sermons." My impressions became profound, too, as I read, and particularly so when I picked up my favorite Elevator and found a report in it corresponding remarkably with those of the secular press. Echoville, thought I, is a place rightly named.

Just at this moment the resounding gong reminded me that I was very hungry. A good dinner is often a wonderful sedative to an overwrought brain. That part of the human organism certainly has close connection with the stomach. Refreshed in mind and body, at once I set out for the Elevator office—the editor, Dr. Placid, being one of my oldest and most valued friends. After our first greetings, my mind being full of the matter, I burst out at once thus: "Brother Placid, what is the secret of Dr. Bluster's popularity?" My old friend smiled faintly, and gently shook his head at my abrupt question. I was a trifle annoyed at this. "Dr. Bluster," continued I, "seems to have a great many admirers among the newspaper men." "Brother Fogy,' spoke out my friend at last, "Dr. Bluster's greatest admirer walks in Dr. Bluster's own boots." "Brother Placid I retorted somewhat indignantly, "how is it that you insert so many puffs of Dr. Bluster in your own paper?" "How can I refuse to do it," mildly suggested Brother Placid, "when Dr. Bluster writes all those puffs himself? I would do the same thing for any of the brethren if they should ask me." "Brother Placid, said I, "you will never be asked to do it for me,' and took my departure.

I returned to Fogyville by the next train, and when I arrived, Mrs. Fogy and myself had a long and confidential conversation. Mrs. Fogy is a woman of excellent judgment. She has that instinctive insight into character which is common with her sex. I must consult her more fully hereafter, and take her advice more frequently.—Herald and Presbyter.

Our Church.

We are thankful for items of Church News compactly stated; or for marked copies or clippings from local exchanges, which we would not otherwise see. To insure publication in next number, they must reach us by noon on Monday. A condensation of items is unavoidable

....Philadelphia Third Reformed Church — This historic church, formed by the Rev. Dr. Geo. W. Bethune, having passed through fires and having been sustained in its trials by the grace of God and by the unanimous vote of the Particular Synod of New Brunswick, and also by the General Synod, at its last session, now seeks a pastor to build again her broken walls. Any minister who thinks he can do more good in a great city like Philadelphia, can obtain all information relative to the Third Church by addressing George F. Gordon, 857 North Broad street, Philadelphia, Pa.

....Personal.—Rev. I. P. Brokaw, of Freehold, N. J., has declined the call of the Church of Nyack, N. Y....Rev. J. Van Houten, of Cleveland, Ohio, has accepted the call of the Church of South Holland, Ill.; Rev. M. Kolyn, of Marion, N. Y., that of Spring Lake, Mich., and Rev. K. B. Weiland, of Sheldon, Iowa, that of the Presbyterian church at Hospers....The Rev. Talbot W. Chambers, D.D., is to deliver one of the addresses at the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Carlisle Presbytery, which is to occur in the First Presbyterian Church of Carlisle, Pa., during the coming autumn. W. C. Chambers, M.D., in life an esteemed elder in the Presbtery, was the father of Dr. T. W. Chambers....The Rev. W. D. Buckalew has been received by the Presbytery of Central Dakota from the Classis of Schoharie, and put in charge of the churches of Blunt and Canning, Dakota.

....The Churches of the Northwest part very reluctantly with the Rev. J. W. Warnshuis. The young Classis of Iowa, when agreeing at Orange City, on August 4th, to the sundering of his pastoral relation to the Church of Alton, Iowa, expressed its sorrow in losing him in these terms:

Whereas, He has so zealously and successfully been laboring in our midst for the term of more than eight years, greatly upbuilding his church and vigorously pushing forward our Church and educational work in the West, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we express our regret at his departure, submitting ourselves, however, to the will of our Master and thanking the Lord that it has pleased Him to have the brother labor so long and well among us; also hoping and praying that the Lord may greatly bless his labor in his new field.

The Trustees of the Northwestern Classical Academy, on receiving the resignation of Mr. Warnshuis, adopted the following minute:

Resolved, That while we hereby accept said resignation, we express our regret in the removal of our brother from our midst and from the meetings and labor of our Board;

Resolved, That we hereby tender him our cordial thanks for all his hearty and incessant work as member of our Board in the establishment of the Academy and the furtherance of its interests, and that whilst we pray that the choicest blessings of heaven may attend him wherever he may be called to labor for the soul and the cause of our Lord, we trust that the interests of our Academy, remaining dear to him, will be profited by his influence wherever it can be used.

Rev. Mr. Warnshuis comes to Passaic, N. J.

Rev. Rufus W. Clark, D.D.

BY J. W. C.

IT was with greatest surprise that the friends of Doctor Clark in Albany learned of his death, which occurred at Siasconset, Mass., on Monday morning, August 9th. But three weeks ago he preached to them and had expected to be present at the bi-centennial celebration of the city of Albany.

He died triumphantly, fully trusting in Christ, and his last words were the beginning of a prayer, embracing only the Saviour's name, "Lord Jesus," when he closed his eyes for this world and opened them to behold his Master face to face.

So fruitful was his life in good works, so faithfully did he preach the Gospel, so beloved was he by all who really knew him, that too much could hardly be said in his memory.

In 1841 he began his ministry in the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington, D. C., ten years he labored in Portsmouth, N. H., five years in East Boston, five years in Brooklyn; but his life work was in Albany as pastor of the old First Church for twenty years; he here ministered unto the people in spiritual things, and in the 200 years of the history of the church but three men occupied the pulpit for a longer time.

His was a consecrated ministry, bearing its fruit in additions to the church at every communion while he was pastor, and likewise in the four sons following in his footsteps as "laborers for Christ."

His death, occurring at a time when very many people were absent from the city, most of whom were his friends, prevented them from showing, by their presence, their interest in him whom they had known as friend. Nevertheless, the First Church was filled with sorrowing people at his funeral. The service was conducted by the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, assisted by the Rev. Wm. Bailey. The pulpit was heavily draped, and at the right of it stood a large floral cross, the offering of the ladies of the church. Two hymns dear to him were sung by the choir, and the exercises throughout were most impressive.

Husbands and wives were present whom he had united for life, whose children he had baptized, whose dead he had buried. Many whom he had led to Christ, others who had grown in grace under his preaching, and all to thank God that he had ever raised up this good man to tell the story of the Cross. Individuals were present to mourn the loss of a friend; citizens to remember kindly him whose voice was ever raised in behalf of the right and against the wrong; members of the church to "weep with those who wept," because he had been so long a time their pastor beloved.

Few men have ever preached in Albany in the possession of more friends in all churches and sects, among rich or poor, than Doctor Clark. He was a faithful pastor, a genial, kindly, loving friend; he wore the sunshine of the Gospel in his face. He was a friend to the friendless. The poor had in him a helper, while the widow and the fatherless found one who could sympathize with them in their sore distress.

He was an earnest, faithful preacher of the Gospel, his preaching ever beating with the love of God, his story ever burning with the power of Christ.

Such was his belief that he would not have been surprised if at any time he had seen the Saviour revealed unto him, in like manner as the disciples at Bethany beheld Him as he disappeared. Thus did he live and work and die.

Heaven's music is sweeter because of his life; angels' songs more triumphant because of his word; our faith is stronger because of his death.

"Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

[Dr. Clark was born in Newburyport, Mass., on Dec. 17th, 1813. His father was Thomas March Clark, for 40 years an elder in the Federal Church, at the time the only Presbyterian church in Massachusetts. Nathaniel Clark, from whom he was descended, left Wiltshire, England, in 1663, and sailed in the ship "Hector" for New England. Bishop Clark, of Rhode Island, was his older brother, and two younger brothers are also ministers. He graduated at Yale College in 1838 and studied theology at New Haven. His four sons are ministers, and he had the gratification of having them around him during his last brief illness. Dr. Clark for many years was a frequent contributor to The Christian Intelligencer, he was the author of eleven books for the use of Sabbath-schools, published by the Massachusetts Sunday-School Society. His career as an author began in 1842, when his Lectures to Young Men were published in Washington, D. C. His other volumes were a Memoir of Rev. John E. Emerson, Heaven and its Scriptural Emblems, Lectures to Young Men in 1853, Life Scenes of the Messiah, Romanism in America, The African Slave Trade, Heroes of Albany who fell in Defence of our Nation, The Bible and the School Fund, The Work of God in Great Britain under Messrs. Moody and Sankey, which passed through two editions in this country and was republished in London, Notes on the S. S. International Lessons in 1876. He published also nearly twenty pamphlets, and prepared the sketches of Rev. Messrs. Wheelwright and Langdon for Sprague's Annals of the American Pulpit. One who knew him long and intimately says of him, "He was one of the most thankful and sunny Christians I have ever known." He met death with a cheerful, hopeful Christian spirit. When it became evident that his sickness was unto death, to one who asked whether he had "any accounts to be settled," he replied, "I have repented of all my sins. I have made my peace with God through my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. I have no other account to settle."

....Nyack, N. Y.—The ladies of the Reformed church conducted a remarkably successful fair in the first week of August. The net result was $1,250, which local authority says, was "more than the most sanguine had anticipated." Especial credit is given to Mrs. James H. Blauvelt, who was at the head of the committee, for her untiring and well-directed efforts.

....Tarrytown, N. Y.—Notice is given that services, to begin last Sabbath, will be held in the old Sleepy Hollow Church on Sunday afternoons at 4 o'clock, for a few Sabbaths. Very few as venerable church buildings are to be found anywhere, and this one is worthy of a visit, and Tarrytown is a very pleasant place to spend a Sabbath in.

....Ghent, N. Y.—The Rev. Dr. Drury preached about "The Model Church" as described in Acts 2:42-47, on the 8th inst., the twenty-second anniversary of his installation as pastor of the First Church of Ghent.

....Rochester, N. Y.—A new church, to be called the Second Reformed Church of Rochester, N. Y., was organized on the 10th by a committee of the Classis of Geneva. Twenty-eight members were received from the existing church of Hollanders. The services of the new organization are to be in English to meet the growing wants of the young people of the Dutch families. The need of such a church has been felt for some time and has been carefully considered. A petition was sent to the Classis last spring, and a committee was appointed to form a church. Action has been delayed in order to secure a cordial union of various interests and this being accomplished the committee has now organized the petitioners.

Interesting Facts.

THE Second Reformed Church of Kalamazoo, Mich., organized June 30th, 1885, with thirty-four, now numbers ninety-five members.

There is a prospect of continuous growth and of soon becoming numerically one of the leading churches of the city. One of the trustees of the Unitarian church, which we rent, remarked: "You are bound to succeed and we as bound to fail. You have lots of people to rally, a creed to rally around, a hell to shun and a heaven to gain. We haven't any of these."

The church we occupy seats 300. We pack the building every Sabbath and hold overflow meetings in all the other American churches. Dr. West writes: "It is a joy to my soul that God has opened the windows of heaven and poured you out a blessing that there is no room to receive it."

Now, who will help to house the blessing? This is our situation. We must vacate our church next February. Then we will have all out-of-doors—room enough—but it will be difficult to heat it. Cheaper to enclose a part; and in order to make that habitable by February we must begin to build at once. A suitable and commodious church will cost no less than $5,000.

"Our finances?" As follows:

Assets—
Church site	$2,500 00
Promises, payable in one, two and three years	700 00
Contributions of churches	76 64
Total	$3,276 64
Liabilities—
Debt on church site	$1,600 00

We might include under "assets" a mortgage on the heart, brain and brawn of our membership sufficient to offset the debt which we will incur by building.

Our embarrassment is only for the present. We have no money wherewith to build. We have learned self-help and prefer to help ourselves if we have a chance. Therefore, if any individual or church, willing, on such security as we can give, to make us a loan of $5,000, bearing interest at four or five per cent, payable annually, will address the writer within two weeks of the appearance of this appeal, the glad tidings will be published in these columns, and no further contributions will be asked for. Is the Reformed Church in America interested in her perpetuity and growth?

A Vennema.

Kalamazoo, Mich., August 14th, 1886.

The General Outlook.

The following European items have been gleaned fro the correspondence of Evangelical Christendom:

France.—France atheist? No; she is not. The very language she is nursed with, and uses in speech and pen, is imbued with Christianity, more so than that of other countries who may justly boast of superior light. Go where you will, from the capital to the remotest village, old-time Christianity faces you, and in the most natural and unsuspected manner; try as you will, you cannot avoid it; it crops up irresistibly, and the revolution is yet to come which shall root out Christianity from the habits, the head, and the heart of France. Cloaked, garbled, distorted, it has been; railed at, mocked, ridiculed, it is; but this is but the outcome of disappointment; the lives of those who have been called forward to manifest the truth have denied it. Who can wonder when the salt which has lost its savor is trodden under the feet of men? Powerless Christianity is no Christianity at all; and the glimmering tradition of what Christianity was at its origin—full of sap and of mighty growth—only helps to show the falling off with more vividness. France is not atheist, but atheism is crawling over her. An effort is being made to shake off the noisome infliction, and a National League against it is now formed. The seat of the society is at No. 31 Rue Richelieu. Men of all shades of opinion, political and religious, priests of Rome, Protestant pastors, senators, deputies men of learning and standing, have joined to merge all other differences in the one effort to bring strongly before the mind of French men the existence of God and the immortality of man's soul. This is to be attempted by a weekly review, by lectures, free courses of instruction, pamphlets and tracts widely distributed, especially to children coming from school; also by prizes offered to authors, and the publishing of works on the subject. The founders are optimists in the extreme, and all believers will wish them Godspeed. Yet we should regret were those Christians who are endued with power from on high to stop short even for an hour from giving the full, free, glad, joyful tidings of complete Christianity.

Germany.—The first coffee-cart, built after an English model, is now circulating in our city. The German Society against the abuse of intoxicating liquors strongly advocated coffee-rooms at their last annual meeting in Hamburg. The distribution of sermons on Sundays to people who cannot go to church increases continually. Now the number in weekly circulation has reached 110,000.

Italy—The Sabbath question continues to make way in Italy. In the city of Catania all the tradespeople have come to an agreement to close their premises on the Sabbath, excepting those dealing in the necessaries of life. The Religious Tract Society (Italian) has been able, through the generosity of a friend, to offer two prizes for essays on the Lord's day. The first is to be 750 lire (about £27), the second 500 lire (about £17) Besides any other matter, the treatise must touch on the following points: "The original institution of the Sabbath. The weekly day of rest a Christian institution, because it was ordained by the Word, who created the world, and who in the flesh founded the Christian Church. Rest demanded by God as a duty, and also by the Saviour during His sojourn on earth. How should the Sabbath be kept? Strong reasons why unbelievers even should keep the Sabbath day as a day of rest." The competition is to be open to all Evangelicals throughout the peninsula.

In Naples, the work among ragged children goes on steadily. Sig. Ruggiero (Methodist) is very earnest in his efforts to get these outcasts of society under training at his night school. He visited, a very short time since, the quarter where they are to be found, perhaps one of the most deplorable in Naples. Turning his steps from the lovely bay upon which the silver moon looked down so peacefully, and leaving the odors of a hundred flowers, and the balmy air of that southern clime, he bent his steps to the haunts of his beloved children. Through winding streets of strange name, and amidst pestiferous exhalations, just upon half-past ten o'clock, he came into their midst. The spectacle was starling, the scene terrible. Five, six, eight, ten, twenty, were lying asleep, all huddled together. It seemed as though a mound of seething humanity was before him, ready to be taken away, like rotting refuse. And yet these were God's children, whose souls the Saviour died to save. What a contrast! Some in the city were sleeping in the lap of luxury; these were soundly slumbering in their rags, in the midst of dirt and squalor. Signor Ruggiero says: "Whilst absorbed in my reflections these young creatures awoke, and lifted up their heads. They recognized me, and, springing to their feet, came round me. Then the grown-up people approached, and listened attentively to a few words which I addressed to them, speaking of the love of Jesus. I had scarcely hoped for such a respectful hearing, for they were evidently not very favorably disposed at first. When I had done, several came and shook me warmly by the hand, begging me to come again."

....The Rev. A. J. Lyman, of Brooklyn, who is now abroad, writes from Edinburgh, July 22d: "I find the sentiment of Mid-Lothian, especially that of the Free Church here, not at all disheartened or dismayed at the recent defeat of Mr. Gladstone. On the contrary, the best men of the Free Church of Scotland, like Prof. Rainey, Prof. Lindsay, of Glasgow, Prof. Salmond, of Aberdeen, Dr. Whyte, of the George Street Church here (in Edinburgh), the successor of Dr. Candlish—these gentlmen I have had the pleasure to meet—believe that the cause of Home Rule, at least the principle of it, has recorded a great advance. Smarting under the sense of immediate defeat, they are yet lifted up with a kind of solemn confidence for the future."—The Evangelist.

...The Rev. George C. Haddock, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Sioux City, Iowa, was assassinated while returning to his home by persons unknown. Mr. Haddock was a prominent Prohibitionist, and particularly active in enforcing the liquor laws. There is no doubt but that his murder was accomplished by the liquor dealers, and the most intense excitement prevails among all classes. Mass meetings have been held, and a reward of $5,000 offered by the Governor for the arrest and conviction of the murderers. His funeral took place August 4th, and was attended by a large number of people. His body was taken to Racine, Wis., for burial.—Christian Advocate.

...In the State Church of Prussia there are about 6 600 parishes. In the year 1885, 4,108 students were preparing for the mintry, of whom 205 were ordained. Forty churches were consecrated, of which twenty-eight were entirely new. From the Roman Catholic Church more than 2,500 converts were received; 1,035 were dismissed to other churches.

....Emperor William of Germany has given $35,000 towards the erection of an evangelical church in the town of Eydtkuhnen.

....The following statistics of the Northern Presbyterian Church have been just supplied to the journals of that denomination by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly:

	1882.	1886.
Synods	23	26
Presbyteries	150	199
Candidates	626	906
Licentiates	301	337
Ministers	5,143	5,516
Licensures	159	184
Ordinations	158	154
Installations	306	361
Pastoral dissolutions	265	305
Ministers received	54	69
Ministers dismissed	28	29
Ministers deceased	98	101
Elders	18,584	21,212
Deacons	5 643	6,676
Churches	5,744	6,281
Churches organized	182	165
Churches dissolved	50	76
Churches received	8	3
Churches dismissed	1	1
Added on examination	29 289	51,177
Added on certificate	24 651	28,490
Communicants	592,128	661,809
Baptism—adults	9 678	18,474
Baptism—infants	19,026	21,916
Sunday-school members	654,451	743,518
CONTRIBUTIONS.
Home Missions	$467,625	$760 947
Foreign Missions	465 219	651,160
Education	142,970	17,984
Publication	43 609	34,7 9
Church Erection	139, 20	243 016
Relief Fund	66,022	99 479
Freedmen	70,832	91,2 3
Aid for Colleges		119,730
Sustentation	2 ,697	21, 0
General Assembly	41,253	60,312
Congregational	6,862,640	7,640 85 5
Miscellaneous	929 9 0	7 1,116
Total	$9,253 397	$10,592,331

....The death of the Rev. George Muller was reported last month in this country as having occurred in Australia in June. It was doubted, and those doubts were confirmed by the silence of English journals which give prominence to intelligence of that character. The Belfast Witness received last week, has the following: "A telegram from Australia, dated May 4th, announces that this servant of God has entered into his rest. He was born September 27th, 1805, in Kroppenstadt, Saxony, and went to England as a preacher of the Gospel in 1829. In April 1836, he opened his first orphan house in Bristol, and devoted himself with unexampled success to this cause for 43 years. From the year 1875 he felt the duty laid upon him to testify in all lands of his living God and Saviour, who hears everywhere the prayer of faith. Accordingly, he visited the various countries of Europe, and afterwards Palestine, India, and Asia Minor, and in last autumn, notwithstanding the burden of his eighty years of age, he journeyed also to Australia; and there, in the midst of his labors, suddenly he was not, for God took him. He said once, 'As a ship, laden with a rich cargo, hastens to its haven, so would I ever see the gates of heaven open before me, and enter in.' To the fulfillment of this wish he has now attained. How many, to whom he was a blessing in body and soul in this world, will thank him in eternity! His orphan houses, in Ashley Downs, near Bristol, in which more than 2,000 orphans have been cared for, remain a noble monument of his spirit of faith and prayer. His son-in-law, James Wright, has for some years carried forward his work, on the principle of the founder."

....Rev. Dr. Craig, at the May meetings in London, gave the following interesting statistics as to what is now doing for Syria, a little land with a population of only two millions—one half Mohammedan and the other half nominal Christians—instead of the probably twenty millions in the days of Solomon. There are thirty different missionary societies at work among them, represented by 800 laborers, 200 being European and American, and 600 native. There are 140 preaching stations, with 7,000 regular attendants at the churches, 30,000 occasional attendants, and 1,000 church members; 300 schools, with 15,000 children, and 14 medical missions, where upward of 80,000 patients were treated, who were sent away, when cured, with a small selection of tracts in their own language; and thus the Gospel was carried where the missionary could not go. The religious press was doing a grand work. A great change is taking place among the Moslems. An intelligent Turkish Pasha had told him that, though not many Mohammedans were converted to Christianity, he scarcely knew of an educated family that had not the beautiful illustrated books of the Religious Tract Society open upon their tables.

....The Queen is building a private chapel at Balmoral, and there is now no doubt that Her Majesty intends the chapel to be used for Presbyterian services only. The chapel will adjoin the Castle, and is to be ready for the autumn, and here the Queen will worship when it is inconvenient for her to attend Crathie Church.

....The Board of the American Baptist Publication Society have employed in the business department at the home office three bookkeepers. The head bookkeeper acted also as cashier. For the last four years the Board, at the suggestion of the secretary, directed the auditors, appointed at the close of each fiscal year, to employ a competent accountant, not connected with the society, to audit the books. On the report of these special accountants, the officers and Board confidently relied for security. But unfortunately this reliance has proved vain. On the examination of the books in the business department for the year ending March 31st, 1886, the accountant discovered that the bookkeeper and his first assistant had stolen money, not only during the last year, but also for the three years preceding, the accounts of which had been audited by special experts, and pronounced correct. These two bookkeepers who have thus conspired together to rob the Society, are men of families and professors of religion. The head bookkeeper had been with the Society for fifteen years.

The total amount abstracted is $30 421.42. Of this $4 015 15 has been recovered; leaving the shortage at this date $26 406.27. The Board have obtained other securities which, when converted into money, will reduce the net loss, as nearly as we can now estimate, to $22,000, possibly to $20,000.

No trust fund has been touched, nor a dollar taken from the money given by the churches, Sunday-schools, or individuals for Bible or missionary work. The defalcation comes upon the business alone, lessening its profits and, thereby, its capital to the extent of the defalcation.

....A full bench of judges at Concord, N. H., gave an opinion on the case of the Salvation Army indicted for beating drums in the street at Somersworth, viz., that it was in violation of the statutes, and that their doing it as an act of religious worship was no defence They must worship—so far as drum-beating is concerned—outside of a compact village.

News of the Week.

Wednesday, August 11.—James Baillie Hamilton, well known in Boston and New York, was married yesterday in Westminster Abbey to Lady Evelyn, fourth daughter of the Duke of Argyll. There were ten bridesmaids, and the group was one of the prettiest pictures ever beheld in the Abbey.. Five thousand troops and 2,500 constables occupy the disturbed districts in Belfast....The "Mayflower" beat the "Puritan" in the race of the yachts from New Bedford to Vineyard Haven.... President Cleveland yesterday appointed Daniel Magone of Ogdensburg to be Collector of the Port of New York, Hedden having resigned....Commissioner Squire and Maurice B. Flynn arrested and released on bail. Squire says the notorious letter he signed was dictated to him by H. O. Thompson. ....Forest fires still raging in Northern Michigan and Wisconsin. Fields of grain have been destroyed and there are pine forests ablaze for miles. Showers have stopped the fire in some places....Three little children, aged twelve, ten and eight, of Henry Wyman, of Far Rockaway, were drowned off Breeze Point yesterday. It was thought for hours after the accident that the mother would lose her reason....The steam yacht "Yosemite," next in size to Jay Gould's "Atalanta," is now owned by the Canadian Government. The consideration is said to be $50,000.

Thursday, 12.—Six men were killed by the collapse of a railway tunnel in process of construction at New Ross, Ireland ... A heavy defalcation in the Briton Medical and General Assurance Association in London, to the amount of over $500,000....A deficit of about $1 500,000 in the funds in charge of the Public Debt Board has been discovered at Havana. The Governor-General is doing all he can to find the guilty persons....Belfast, under military rule, is quiet again....Mr. Mathews, Home Secretary, was re-elected to the House of Commons for East Birmingham without opposition. The Liberals at the last moment withdrew their candidate, Alderman Cook. ....Congressman Lewis Beach died at Cornwall-on-Hudson last night of typhoid fever....Several cases of sunstroke in New York city reported yesterday....Dr. Frank Hastings Hamilton, the distinguished surgeon who treated President Garfield, died at his home in New York city yesterday ... The public sentiment in Mexico regarding the Cutting case is still aroused, owing largely to the threats of war from the State of Texas, and there is general uneasiness lest international troubles may arise from an unauthorized invasion of Mexican soil.

Friday, 13—An attack was made on Orangemen yesterday while they were parading through Londonderry. Two bottles filled with gunpowder packed around a lighted fuse were thrown into their ranks, but the bottles were smashed before the lights could reach the powder. Five hundred extra police are in readiness in Belfast for August 15th, the day of the Feast of the Assumption ...It is stated that Lord Randolph Churchill is engaged in drafting a bill intended to solve the Irish problem. It provides for universal local self government throughout Great Britain and Ireland, giving Ireland, Scotland and Wales control each of its own immediate affairs, leaving the supreme power of the Imperial Parliament undiminished....Earthquake shock felt on Wednesday in Canada, at St. Marguerite. Buildings were slightly damaged and it lasted six minutes. Soon after there was a violent wind and hail storm....Squire and Flynn plead not guilty....It is stated that Mexico is getting in readiness should war be declared by the United States....A yacht and a schooner were upset by a squall in Boston Harbor, and five persons were drowned....A man in Massachusetts swallowed a set of teeth about a year ago. An operation was performed in the left side of the abdomen, the stomach drawn out and cut open and the teeth removed. The patient is doing well and his recovery is considered certain. The operation took forty-five minutes.

(Continued on page thirteen.)

Our Contributors.

A Hymn of Hope.

Version of Psalms 42, 43.

BY THE REV. EDWARD J. RUNK, A.M.

I.

AS pants the hart for mountain race,
So pants my soul for Thee, O God!
For God it thirsts—my life is God—
When shall I come and see Thy face?

My tears my food by day, by night:
All day, "Where is thy God?" they say.
Thus memory pours my soul outright;
For with the crowd I led the way
Godward, with joyous shout and lay.

II.

Why art cast down? Why tempest raise?
Hope thou in God; yet shall I praise
My God, help of my face and ways.

III.

My God, my soul is tossed on me;
So will I think from Jordan's lea
And Hermon's peaks, Mizar, of Thee.
Deep calls to deep. Thy torrents' voice,
Thy breakers waves, o'er me rejoice.

By day Thy mercy, Lord, command.
By night Thy song shall be at hand.
To God, my life, my prayer shall be,
My Rock, why hast forgotten me?
Why go I mournful 'mid the throng,
With broken bones, while scornfully
"Where is thy God?" they hurl their song?

IV.

Why art cast down? Why tempest raise?
Hope thou in God; yet shall I praise
My God, help of my face and ways.

V.

Judge me, O God; my cause defend,
From lawless folk Thy succor send,
From sinful, lying man set free!
My fortress, God! why loath'st Thou me?
Why go I mournful 'mid the enemy?
Send out Thy light and faith to bring
Me to Thy sacred courts and hill;
There at God's altar, with harp I will
Exult in God, my joy I'll sing.

VI.

Why art cast down? Why tempest raise?
Hope thou in God; yet shall I praise
My God, help of my face and ways.

A New Jersey City.

BY A. DeW. M.

THE visitor to an unfamiliar place is usually attracted, first by its natural beauties and then by the historical interest, if any, which centres in it. The city of Morristown, N. J., gives ample opportunity for the gratification of both eye and memory, since it is at once the home of refinement, wealth and good taste, and the scene of historical incidents of no little interest and importance.

Nestled in the close embrace of the verdure clad hills of Northern New Jersey, its leafy avenues and smoothly undulating roads are bordered now by the country seats of the rich merchants, and again by the broad acres of the prosperous farmer.

Fertile fields, yellow with the coming harvest; orchards of the apple, pear or peach, laden with ripening fruit; meadows filled with workmen busily engaged in fulfilling the time honored injunction to "make hay while the sun shines," greet the eye on every side; while the ear is soothed rather than aroused by the distant click of the reaper as it cuts down the golden grain, or the tinkle of the mountain brook as it rushes on to its ocean source. Lakes gleam here and there among the hills; farmhouses peep from amid shadowing trees, some of modern type, others with unmistakable signs of well-preserved antiquity in their mossy shingles and double-hipped roofs, or presenting, perhaps, the still more indubitable testimony of the date of their erection, in wrought with quaint iron figures or curious black bricks upon the gable end, while the glowing hues of the poppy, the tiger-lily, and the tall, plumed hollyhock, or the milder colors of the pink, the harebell and the hydrangea betoken the attachment of the inmates to the flowers as well as to the homes of a by-gone generation. As we re-enter the town, evidences of the present age appear. Houses fresh from the hands of the builder, in all the vast variety of form and color that now distinguishes the skill of the architect, set in lawns of emerald velvet, abound. The geranium and the coleus take the place of the box and the poppy. The white nets of lawn-tennis, so ancient in origin, though so modern in mode of practice, shine through the shrubs. Bicycles, propelled by vigorous lads, and now and again a tricycle bearing its fair rider, dart through the avenues. Church edifices of every style, from the plain, white "meeting-house," which has guarded the village green for almost a century, to the beautiful and complete stone building of recent date, stores of every description, banks, libraries and lyceums, continually remind you that the life and manners of the nineteenth century are ebbing and flowing through this ancient town. And so the old and the new combine to form a picture of rare attractiveness. Nor has history failed to add her charms to this lovely spot among the hills of Morris. Here in 1700 came Englishmen from "East Jersey," Dutchmen from Long Island and New York, Germans from Pennsylvania, and later, men "from every nation under heaven" to dispute with the Indian these fertile valleys and treasure-filled hills.

Morris County soon became famous for two products—strong drink and strong metal, or distilleries and iron forges and foundries. Fortunately, the latter industry has exceeded in importance the former. At the iron-furnaces of Hibernia and Mount Hope were cast many of the cannon used by the Continental troops during the Revolution. When the keynote of strife sounded from Concord and Bunker Hill, its echoes reverberated from the hills of Morris County. She had her representatives at the Provincial Congress which assembled at Trenton in May, 1775. Her minute-men were ever on the alert to detect and repel the threatened invasion of the foe. Her sons sprang to arms and fought with gallantry and distinction in the cause of liberty, and through their watchfulness and bravery became possible her boast that, though they often made the attempt, no numerous body of armed enemies ever invaded her territory.

But she was not exempt from the trials and responsibilities of the conflict. Though no armed encounter took place on her soil, it was her no less honorable task to protect and refresh those who went forth from her confines to the battle, and returned to the shelter afforded by her strong, natural defences. And though no hostile shot and shell thundered and shrieked through her woods, yet the patriots whom she received had to fight on the soil of Morristown as hard a battle with cold, hunger and disease, as ever they had waged on more bloody fields. About four miles southeast of the town rises a considerable elevation, called Mount Kemble, on whose slopes, scattered here and there over nearly one thousand acres, may yet be seen the now almost obliterated traces of the encampment of the Continental army during the winter of 1779–80. Lines and piles of stones faintly mark the places where stood the rude huts that sheltered several thousand troops during a winter whose hardships are memorable.

When the army reached Morristown in December, winter had already set in, but no suitable provision for the comfort of the soldiers could at once be made. A few tents, brush-shelters and camp-fires were for awhile their only protection. Had they been well clothed the case would not have been so trying, but in the rank and file many was the one whose ragged garments and rent shoes were scarcely sufficient for decency, much less for the defiance of a winter so severe. For it was of this season that many were ready to declare with General Greene, "such weather as we have had I never did feel." The cold was piercing. Rivers, lakes and harbors were bridged with heavy ice. Sleighs went from Trenton to Philadelphia on the Delaware river. Lord Sterling, leading an expedition from Morristown against the British on Staten Island, marched his troops from Elizabethtown Point across "the Kills." New Yorkers freely crossed the Hudson river on foot from the city to Hoboken. In the camp on Kemble Hill the snow lay from four to six feet deep on the level. Fences were so covered that teams drove over them without any inconvenience. The roads were all so blocked that no provisions could be gotten to the frost-beleagured troops. At one time for seven or eight days they had only fresh beef without bread, salt or vegetables. At another, the army was so entirely deprived of food that, as one of their number wrote, "by constraint we fasted more sincerely and truly for three days than ever we did for all the resolutions of Congress put together." And amid the cold and want, and the disease and death which sternly followed in their track, the snow and ice around Mount Kemble was often reddened by the blood which flowed from the cut and frost-bitten feet of the shoeless soldiers. Truly, the oft-quoted camp at Valley Forge was not the only witness to heroic sacrifice for the cause of freedom. The soil of Morris County bears the impress of as sincere devotion and as heroic action as any part of the land that our fathers redeemed from tyranny. It is hard, indeed, to fight for freedom, but it is surely no less difficult to freeze and starve and perish by the slow torture of disease for the cause dear to the heart.

Near the camp still stands the "old Wicks' house," with which the following romantic story is connected:

When the army was about leaving camp in the spring of 1780, there was much difficulty in procuring transportation for the baggage and stores, and all the horses that could be found in the surrounding country were seized and impressed into this service. Miss Tempe Wicks, the daughter of the owner of the old house, had a fine young horse to which she was greatly attached, and which she rode and managed with much skill. Riding out one morning to visit a friend, she was stopped on the road by a party of soldiers who seized her bridle-rein and demanded the horse for the use of the army. The young lady simply appealed to them to treat the animal kindly, and, if possible, to restore it to her when the purposes for which it had been taken were accomplished. Disarmed by her apparently ready yielding to their demand, and supposing she was about to dismount, the soldier who held the rein loosened his grasp. In an instant the whip descended on the flank of the spirited steed, and, like an arrow from the bow, the horse and his rider sped from the midst of the astonished men. A few musket shots, probably intended to alarm rather than injure her, failed to stop her swift career, and the girl and her horse gained their home in safety. To secrete the horse from the search that would at once be instituted for it was her next concern, and here the ready wit of Miss Tempe served her as much as had her previous boldness. A spare bed-room opened from the main sitting room of the house, and had but one small window, furnished with a close, board shutter. Hastily leading her horse to this inner room, she kept him there three weeks, until the army had moved away and it was safe to restore her pet to more appropriate quarters.

One other location on Kemble Hill is worthy of notice. The hill stops with an abrupt descent at the rear of the old County Court-House, about a half-mile's distance from which, shaded and hidden by the large trees that now surround and sometimes grow from their summits, are low mounds of earth and stone, regularly disposed and bearing the evidences of the fortifications of which they are the traces. During that winter of 1780, when idleness and hardship combined to predispose the army to discontent and discouragement, it became apparent to Gen. Washington that something must be done to occupy the hands and minds of his troops. So sending them to this part of the mountain, whose elevation completely commanded the town and its approaches, as they then existed, he caused them to erect these earthworks whose almost obliterated lines yet lie amid the shadows of the woods. When the winter quarters of the army were broken up and the true intention of the labor began to be understood, some of his officers asked the Commander what the unfinished fortification should be called. "What would you name it?" was the answer of the Chief, and on some one's jokingly responding, "Call it Fort Nonsense," Fort Nonsense it has been to this day. Though never of any value as a military work, its erection, however, was not wholly useless, since its historical attractions are to this day sufficient to draw many to its site, whence a most extensive view of the lovely city and its surrounding hills and valleys is attainable.

Leaving Fort Nonsense Hill, our historical researches next lead us to the old "Ford Mansion," or "Washington's Headquarters," at the entrance to whose historic grounds we now pause, awaiting the reader's pleasure to enter.

Restless Discontent.

BY GERTRUDE L. VANDERBILT.

"POLLY wants a cracker! Polly wants a cracker!" That is what our parrot calls out all day long. Now Polly doesn't want a cracker. She has not only crackers, but all things else that would be good for her to have. Notwithstanding this, her unmeaning reiteration is the call for a cracker.

Poor bird, you are not alone in this folly! Men, women and children take up the cry, and the want is as varied as the voices that utter it. "Give me this! Give me that!" There is always something just beyond us that is more desirable than the things we have.

Peggy has a cheap doll and she wants one handsomer. Miss Florence has a wax doll but she wants a trunk full of fashionable clothes for it. Florence's mamma wants to go to Europe like Mrs. Goldey, and Mrs. Goldey wishes she had money enough to build an elegant house like—well, like William H. Vanderbilt, and what William H. Vanderbilt wanted I do not know, never having been similarly situated. But that is the way with all of us; we are never satisfied, never content.

Old Dinah used to tell us a story of the little girl who wanted to be a queen. Straightway the king heard of it and sent for her to come and sit on the throne beside him. So they took off her check apron and washed her little bare feet and put gold shoes on and a dress so stiff with gold lace that she could not bend in it, and put a crown of gold on her head, and all day long she sat on the throne. But the rim of the crown hurt her forehead and made a red crease all around her head. And the shoes were so stiff that they hurt her poor little toes, and her arms ached with holding the heavy gold sceptre straight up in front of her all day long. So she began to cry, and the king said she could go home if she wanted to. Then she took off all the beautiful things and was glad to stretch out her limbs and feel easy and comfortable once more. She put on her check apron and her sun-bonnet and went out to play in the sand, and was glad not to be the queen any longer.

There was a golden moral in Dinah's unconscious caricature of royalty. Unfortunately, our experience cannot teach us with so little pain, nor can we return so readily to our playing in the sand.

It is almost a truism to say that the things we long for are not always those that would bring us pleasure, and yet we are none the less content without them. Whether with bird or man, it is always—"Polly wants a cracker!" Much of the sweetness of life is lost in longing for that which we cannot get, instead of enjoying that which we already have. Polly, look into your seed cup; there you will find as much cracker as you need.

A dear sister in a prayer meeting once said that Scripture corrected that grasping desire for riches in the verse, "Let your conversation be without covetousness and be content with such things as ye have," and therefore that it was wrong, even when wishing to help on some good cause, to say, as we frequently do, "Oh, that we were rich!"

It was the story of Polly which had just come to my notice, that suggested these thoughts. Not Polly, the parrot, but a young woman whose novel-reading mother gave her the fanciful name of Pauline Cecilia, which rapidly was shortened into plain Polly. Having that much of beauty which accompanies fair skin and tolerably regular features, her mother, a weak woman, was deluded into thinking that Polly ought to marry rich and set up for a lady. That was the cracker for which she called. As preparation for this Polly was forbidden to spoil her complexion by working over the fire, and her hands knew no manual labor.

She knew nothing of how to make a household what it ought to be—the comfortable home of parents and children. As she did not marry rich, her home was utterly devoid of comforts. After years of misery her husband left her. It was the old story—a broken up household, children cared for by charity, no home, a life of sin and shame. All this because the mother wanted something better (?) for the girl than simple home life. She wanted higher social rank; she was not content with the daily routine of work in the family home. It was for the glitter beyond the home circle that she cried. But the gold crown was not even placed on her head to hurt her forehead, or the gold shoes put on to pinch her feet. That which she found she could not innocently put aside and return to the check apron and the bare feet.

When I look out upon the hundreds of girls for whom there comes no sort of preparation for home life, my heart goes out toward them in pity. We know that so many earn a living as shop girls and factory girls. How are these to gain a knowledge of housekeeping and of those economies and little arts which serve to make a home comfortable and happy? When they marry and settle in life, as they all expect to do, how will they order their homes? Of the art of housekeeping and the best arrangement of work, which is to a great extent a matter of experience, they know nothing. The culinary department is below their notice; it certainly has no share in their attention; and yet how can the meals of husband and children be properly prepared without any knowledge of cooking and without practical experience?

So many of these shop girls feel themselves above sharing the household work which their mothers are doing for them that, with my old-fashioned ideas, I cannot see how they are to learn the management of their own homes when they have such.

Is it absolutely necessary that so many girls should earn a living in ways that give no knowledge of home life and its requirements Can we afford to forego the home and household training which might fit so many for quiet home life? The duties (I can call them by no other name) of bread making and cooking, darning and mending, sweeping and dusting, and all the little cares that go to beautify and make the home comfortable; how are they to be taught those girls who are away from home from morning until night?

Let the daily papers testify to the result of this public life to which so many girls are exposed. We shudder at the temptations to which they may be subjected. Even those who are good and virtuous deserve our pity, for their daily tasks do not fit them for the life which is before them. There is nothing in the routine of the day's work which will give them any knowledge of the household or will benefit them in the least when they are married and settled.

Many of these shop girls might earn, perhaps, a little less in domestic service, but would it not be safer for them? Surely the knowledge they would gain would be of greater service to them. But too many spurn household work. They feel above it. This is true even among those whose parents formerly held such a position. They aspire to what they call more respectable work. It is the parrot's call, "Polly wants a cracker!" Polly doesn't know what she wants; nay, she has already all that she is crying for. The poor girl wants the leisure which she thinks the shop or the factory will afford her, rather than the place of a domestic; she wants the respectability which she thinks it will give; she wants the dollar more per week. But even if she gets these she is at the loss of all preparation for her home life, and especially is unfitted for that home of her own which she is hoping some day to have.

Should we not all as Christian women feel concern for this multitude of bright young girls left throughout their girlhood without training to fit them for the responsibilities of a life upon which they all hope to enter, for I think we must all feel this to be one of the causes of the wretched and unhappy homes of which the newspapers tell us so constantly.

There is a pervading restlessness among all classes of our American people. So many have risen from poverty to riches, from a lowly condition in life to high estate, that there is the powerful leaven of unsatisfied ambition constantly at work among the masses. Everyone is striving to become something higher than he is. Every man, woman and child expects to rise in the world. I am not prepared to say that this is not as it should be. On the contrary, I admit that to a certain extent it is laudable; but I am very sure, notwithstanding, that this restlessness takes away much of the enjoyment of life. We fail to enjoy the sweetness that comes to us, because of a longing for that which is beyond us. Jealousy of the neighbor who has risen to sudden wealth, discontent with the lot in which our fathers found happiness, the restless desire to reach that which seems only just out of present reach, all deprive the humble home of placid content. Thus it constantly happens that in the search for something better, we waste that which we have. So the cry is constantly heard, "Polly wants a cracker," even when Polly has exactly what she needs and her cup is running over.

The Young Men's Christian Associations.

EDITORS CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER: Referring to recent statements in your columns, permit me to state a few facts based on the experience of the Young Men's Christian Association of New York city.

The aim of the Association is to bring young men to Christ. The Association rooms are meant to be a Christian home for the many young men alone in this city and exposed to peculiar temptations. The secular side, if I may so style it, gymnasium, library, classes, lectures, monthly entertainments, etc., attract many young men who would not enter a church door. About sixty-three per cent of our present membership is associate, "young men of good moral character," not necessarily church members, though undoubtedly some of them are. Less than fourteen per cent are active members, that is, communicant members of Protestant Evangelical Churches, who, after election to active membership, are eligible for office in the Association. To every young man who has felt the need of a personal Saviour, it is most clearly and emphatically shown that every true Christian should acknowledge his Master before men by joining some church and trying to bring others to accept Christ as their Saviour. Not less clearly and emphatically is the principle laid down that their duty is to their church first, and that resignation from Association work is an imperative necessity if this should at all conflict with their church duties. In addition, there is a Church Committee whose sole duty it is to endeavor to persuade each associate member to regularly attend some particular church.

Believing that statistics would show that our Association workers had made "their plans and labors subsidiary to the strengthening and enlargement of the Church of God," as Dr. Williamson says in your issue of June 23d, that the Associations in the West "have succeeded in doing in multitudes of cases," a letter of inquiry to the Committee members of our Association was sent out July 1st, simply asking the following questions in order to show "the relations which the members of our committees sustain to the work in their own churches":

1. What office do you hold, if any, in your church?
2. Are you a Sunday-school teacher?
3. If not a teacher, do you hold any office in the Sunday-school? If so, what?
4. Do you belong to any young people's association in your own church?
5. If a member of any such association, do you hold an office in the same, and if so, what?
6. Do you attend the week evening service in your church?
7. Have you entered upon any of the above duties since you became connected with this Association, and if so, what?
8. Have you given up any of the above or any other duty in your church as a result of your connection with the Association, and if so, what?

To date 334 replies have been received. Of this number 204 regularly attend the week evening service in their churches. Many of these voluntarily state that they belong to churches which do not hold week evening services, or their church is so far distant from their residences, or their working hours are so late, or they have recently come to the city and have not as yet attached themselves to any church, or other similar reasons have interfered with their attendance and church work. Sixty-five are church officers, of whom 18 are deacons, 11 elders, 8 trustees, 6 vestrymen, 6 stewards, 1 treasurer and 15 ushers; 107 are Sunday-school teachers and 54 Sunday-school officers; 112 belong to young people's associations in their own churches and 32 hold offices in the same.

Of all this number 115 state that they have entered upon their church work and duties given above since their connection with the Association. Only seven state that they have given up any single church duty owing to its conflict with Association work. One has temporarily given up the young people's meeting at his church, while continuing his Sunday-school work and regularly attending the Wednesday evening prayer-meeting, "in order to be present at our worker's training class on Tuesday evenings;" another has resigned from the young people's association of his church, although always present at the church services, Sundays and throughout the week; a third, who has recently come to New York city, spends Sunday afternoons at Charity Hospital as a member of the Committee on Visitation of the Sick, instead of taking a Sunday school class in his church; the fourth, who is Secretary of his Sunday-school, an usher, active in the Band of Hope and young people's prayer-meeting, and regular attendant at the Thursday evening prayer-meeting, gives Sunday mornings to his church and Sunday evenings to the Gospel meeting at our Young Men's Institute; the fifth, occupying a prominent position in one of our branches, finding his church and Association duties conflicting, resigned all the latter and is now giving himself entirely up to his church work. The remaining two, as far as we know, have no satisfactory excuse for allowing the Association to interfere with their church.

Many of the 327 who said "No" to number eight, expressed surprise at the question and did not content themselves with a simple negative. One adds, "My experience of five years in the Association convinces me that the most loyal and active workers in the Association are the most loyal and active in the various branches of work in the churches to which they belong;" another writes, "None. If I did, I should be disloyal to the fundamental principles of the Association." If all the Committee-men of the past ten years could have been reached by this circular, it would have been found that many were first roused to Christian work and trained by the Association, and would have replied as one did, "On the contrary, have practically given up Association work from lack of time to do both, and feeling that my church has the first claim upon me, though I am as heartily in sympathy with Association work as ever."

WM. S. SLOAN.

NEW YORK, August 7th, 1886.

The Reading Room.

Our Book-Shelves.

....“Gospel Faith Commended to Common Sense.” By John Leighton, D.D. This useful little volume exhibits with great plainness the nature of faith, as equivalent to trust in a person, illustrates it by showing its necessity in all secular affairs, vindicates it as a rational medium of information, and shows how it is a moving power in the religious life. Then the author answers the question, Why its object is the person of Christ? and further sets it forth as a free responsible act and as sovereign in its own domain. The book is written in a direct and simple style, and is level to the comprehension of all. Occasionally there is a point or a sentence which would bear criticism, but as a whole the book is adapted to be very useful and may be commended to all inquirers as a fresh, earnest and readable presentation of the great subject of which it treats. (Funk & Wagnalls.)

....“The Labor Problem: Plain Questions and Practical Answers.” Edited by William E. Barns. American citizens need all the information and all the good counsel they can get from trustworthy sources to enable them to decide the urgent questions in regard to the relations of capital and labor, of the employer and the employed. Mr. Barns has gathered in this little book the knowledge gained by the experience of many persons, opinions which have been tested, facts that are luminous and a compact history with which every citizen ought to be familiar. Dr. Richard T. Ely, in the opening essay, discusses with ability the functions of the State in settling the relations between capital and labor. His criticism of the course usually followed by our legislation is just. Mr. James A Waterworth follows with a history of the long conflict, beginning with the time when the laborer was a serf. One of the facts brought out is that eight hours constituted the ancient day of mechanical labor. The history abounds in terse and wise sentences. A Symposium follows on Several Phases on the Labor Question. The editor sent a line of questions to a number of gentlemen, with a request for concise answers. The questions were: Are strikes necessary; Is arbitration the missing coupling; Can there be a more equitable division of profits; Is industrial partnership the remedy; Is co-operation practicable? Replies were received from Political Economists, Manufacturers, Workingmen, Ministers, Labor Commissioners, Journalists. A chapter is given to the answers of each of these classes of men. Two chapters are devoted to A Plea for Profit-Sharing and the discussion of Trades Unions and Arbitration, and in these the testimony of a number of well-informed men is quoted. Mr. Fred Woodrow, a workingman, a philanthropist, a student, who has written tracts, poetry and books which have been read with pleasure by thousands in Great Britain and the United States, contributes the concluding chapter, entitled Side-Lights on the Labor Problem —a comprehensive, clear, sensible, humane and Christian view of the whole vexed subject. The book is eminently helpful, is Christian in spirit and has for its keynote the Golden Rule. It is mainly a plea for the recognition of the rights of the workingman, while it deals fairly with the errors and faults of organizations composed of workingmen. The history told is more creditable to labor than to capital, as every true history must be. A very helpful, interesting and timely book; one that ought to have great influence in the formation of public opinion. (Harper & Bros.)

....“Actors and Actresses: The Kembles and their Contemporaries.” Edited by Brander Matthews and Laurence Hutton. This last volume issued, with biography and criticism combined of the famous performers on the English stage, is of the most interesting character. It presents Cooke, Munden, Charles Mathews, Liston and others, in conjunction with Sarah Siddons and her famous brothers John and Charles. The life sketches are complete, and the critical notices of the day, with anecdotes showing the character, bring each person very vividly before the reader. To those fond of the drama and its interpreters the books will give special pleasure, while they must attract all students of literature. (Cassell & Co.)

....“The Death of Hewfik Pasha: A Confession.” This purports to give the truth as to the assassination of Hewfik Pasha, ex-Prime Minister of the Sultan, and weaves about that mysterious event a most interesting romance. As a novel, its intricacy of plot and wondrous coincidences leading to a happy conclusion, remind one of Jules Verne. Incidentally it touches the Irish, the Egyptian, and Eastern questions, making clear as to each the exceeding difficulty of a practical and permanent solution. (Funk & Wagnalls.)

....“Ashes of Hopes,” by Julia A. Flisch, gives a rather striking picture of fashionable society and depicts with considerable minuteness its false aims, its jealousies, bickerings, intrigues, and especially its disappointments. It is not a pleasant story and presents views of life which are—to state it as mildly as possible—not stimulating. In our judgment, it is altogether too sensational to be entirely wholesome, especially for immature readers. (Funk & Wagnalls.)

....Oliver Ditson & Co. have issued a revised edition of “College Songs,” compiled by Henry Randall Waite. It is described as a “Collection of New and Popular Songs of the American Colleges.” Of their popularity we have no doubt. But some of them can hardly be called New, since we distinctly remember singing them in our own college days—we are afraid to say how many years ago. They are none the worse for being old, however.

....“Childe Harold” has just been added by William J. Rolfe to the excellent series of selections from English literature for the use of students. The notes and explanations are full and complete, and the book is so well printed, so handy in size, and so cheap, that it will be welcomed, we doubt not, by many lovers of Byron's noble poem. (Harper & Bros.)

....“Who Is Guilty?” By Philip Woolf, M.D. This is a clever and well written novel, abounding with dramatic incidents and retaining its interest to the end. The characters are well drawn and the dialogue is sprightly; but the plot is hardly natural and there is scarce a particle of local color in any of the descriptions. (Cassell & Co.)

....“The Midnight Cry.” A Novel. By Jane Marsh Parker. Its incidents and characters centre in Western New York during the Millerite excitement of 1844, when the end of the world was predicted and did not come to pass. The story is graphically told and the interest well sustained throughout. (Dodd, Mead & Co.)

....“Cecil's Cousins,” by E. B. Hollis, is a bright and entertaining story containing several important suggestions for the young ladies under whose eyes it may fall. (Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.)

....“Dave Marquand,” by Annette L. Noble, is the story of a poor, ill-treated Jewish lad who became a worthy Christian lawyer. It is entertainingly written and will find many readers whom it will both interest and help. (The National Temperance Society and Publication House.)

....“The Man with the White Hat,” by C. R. Parsons, is an interesting account of the work of a self-appointed city missionary. The hero of the story was in youth devoted to the ministry, but yielded to the temptation to enter the legal profession. Years afterward, having been led to regret his choice, he consecrated himself entirely to the winning of souls. How he succeeded the narrative briefly tells. The book is agreeably illustrated. (Phillips & Hunt.)

....“Cherie's Answered Prayer,” by Margaret E. Winslow, is a very charming book which will please and benefit the members of the home circle. The scene of the story is laid in Southern France, among the descendants of the Waldenses. Real incidents and reform movements occurring there have been skilfully woven into a tale which cannot fail to draw forth the interest and sympathy of its readers. (Presbyterian Board of Publication.)

Our Library Table.

Periodicals, Serials and Notes.

....Lippincott's Magazine for August is pleasant reading,—albeit “Taken by Siege” grows increasingly tragical. Gilbert White's “Natural History of Selborne” is one of the most delightful of books, and John Burroughs is just the man to write delightfully about it, as he does in this number,—somewhat autobiographically, in fact. “Lolita” is a story in Miss Tincker's best style. A. S. Bolles gives a chapter of the history of our Civil War, second to none in importance,—namely, the patriotic part taken by the Banks of our great cities in 1861. “Our Experience Meetings” give reminiscences of experts in Canoeing, Baseball, and Athletics, and constitute a really valuable department this month. “Our Monthly Gossip” has some pleasant chat about the firm of Howells & James, about Andrew Lang's “Letters to Dead Authors,” “Our Immigrants,” etc. The poetry is not particularly brilliant, and Ella Wheeler Wilcox sings of some “West” we never happen to have heard of before

....The Art Journal for August is a double number, and contains a full report of the Colonial and Indian exhibition. The illustrations are many of them full page and furnish a lively proof of progress. The frontispiece is a line engraving of a soldier in full armor. An Actor's Holiday is continued with its customary vivacity, and a paper on Lady Students at Munich gives information of great use to such as think of going abroad to study. Niagara is not particularly well illustrated, but the Bungalows of Birchington are. The Journal keeps its old high standard.

....In the Popular Science Monthly for August, Prof. N. M. Butler, of Columbia College, treating of the Progress of Psychical Research, reviews the membership, the methods, the experiments of the Society for Psychical Research and the results. A brief account of the work of the Society was given in these columns a few months ago. Prof. Butler gives a more comprehensive view of the investigations. What the Society has done is valuable as accounting for the tricks of spiritualists and other deceivers, and is also important in its bearing upon the inspiration of men by God. Hon. David A. Wells concludes his very instructive series of papers entitled An Economic Study of Mexico. Prof. Huxley argues in behalf of The Extension of Scientific Teaching. The Causes of the Present Commercial Crisis, as discussed by Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes, is translated for this number. Titus Munson Coan, M.D., describes the Mineral Springs of Eastern France and their efficacy in healing various diseases. Dr. Arnold Schafft weighs with fairness the grounds on which The Prediction of Natural Phenomena are popularly founded. The portrait of the number is that of Oswald Heer, the botanist, and a sketch of his life follows in the usual place. The editor opposes the introduction of the study of theology in our colleges, and enlarges upon an article to be found on the preceding pages, written by Mr. P. H. Dudley, on Woods and their Destructive Fungi—a matter of a great deal of importance to many persons.

....E. Marguerite Lindley contributes a graceful and pleasing description of the Home of Major General Henry Knox, at Montpelier, Vt., including a genial account of the character and ways of the General and his wife, to the current number of the Magazine of American History. The article is illustrated. A condensed history of the Northwest Territory: Its Ordinance and its Settlement, by Israel Ward Andrews, LL.D., is not only a preparation for an intelligent observance of the centennial of the first settlement in the territory, to occur in 1888, but affords valuable information for those to whom that vast region has been known only as organized States, full of vigorous life. New Yorkers especially will be interested by the summary, made by Mr. A. W. Clason, of the debate in the Convention of New York in 1788, on the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. The War papers are a continuation of the account of the battle of Cedar Mountain, by Alfred E. Lee; a consideration of the position of the Negro Slaves During the Civil War, and a graphic description of the “Death Angle” at Spottsylvania, in the fight of May 12th, 1864, by Col. Charles Jones, LL.D. Mrs. Lamb very happily portrays Louis XVI. of France and Marie Antoinette and their friendship for America. The Minor Topics, Original Documents, Notes and Queries are interesting and profitable, as they always are.

....The Monthly Interpreter for July continues Prof. Milligan's able exposition of Paul's Doctrine of the Resurrection, in which he vindicates the important truth that Christ is the head of a new humanity, not to all men, but to those only who are brought by “spirit” into that line of descent which springs from him as not only incarnate but risen and glorified. All others refuse the only bond by which the new humanity can be made theirs. Dr. Whitelaw discusses with learning the table of Nations in Genesis 10. Prof. Reynolds admirably sums up the Teaching of the Fourth Gospel, and Prof. Johnson shows the esoteric teaching of the Ancient Mysteries. Prof. Bruce concludes his articles on the Kingdom of God with one on the Death of Jesus and its Significance. He minimizes the doctrine of sacrifice, and in a note refers to Isaiah 53, “where the sufferer is in the first place, the ideal Israel, the faithful portion of the nation bearing the sins of the unfaithful.” But of what portion of Israel could it be said that they did no violence, or that they suffered anything that was not the just recompense of their own wrong-doing?

BOOKS RECEIVED.

G. P. Putnam's Sons: The Story of Spain. By Edward Everett Hale and Susan Hale. Illustrated. 8vo, pp. 407. (The Story of the Nations Series.) $1.50; also, Reymond: A Drama of the American Revolution. By Henry M. Cronkhite. 8vo, pp. 100. $1.25.

Cassell & Co.: The New Man at Rossmere. By Mrs. J. H. Walworth. 12mo, pp. 359. $1.25.

UNBOUND BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Our Country: Its Possible Future and its Present Crisis. By Rev. Josiah Strong. Introduction by Prof. Austin Phelps, D.D. 12mo, pp. 229. Baker & Taylor, Bond St., N. Y.

Thirty-Second Annual Catalogue of Claverack College and Hudson River Institute. 1886.

Pictures and Legends from Normandy and Brittany. By Thomas and Katharine Macquoid. Illustrated. (The Traveller's Series. Sketches of People and Places.) 1omo, pp. 330. 50 cents; also, Whims and Oddities: Pictures of People and Places. By Thomas Hood. Illustrated. (Same Series.) 16mo, pp. 270. 50 cents. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Præterita. By John Ruskin, LL.D. Chap. XI. Christ Church Choir. 8vo, pp. 345 to 390. John Wiley & Sons.

A Playwright's Daughter. A Novel. By Mrs. Annie Edwardes. (Harper's Handy Series, No. 19.) 16mo, pp. 133. 25 cents; also,

The One Thing Needful. A Novel. By Miss M. E. Braddon. (Harper's Franklin Square Library, No. 538.) 4to, pp. 54. 20 cents.

Voyages and Travels of Marco Polo. (Cassell's National Library, Vol. I., No. 29.) 18mo, pp. 192. 10 cents.

PERIODICALS.

July and August.—The Church Review.
August.—The English Pulpit of To-Day.
September.—Frank Leslie's Illustrated Sunday Magazine, The Quiver, The Magazine of Art.

An American Danger.

FROM 1852 to 1868, Chicago's population increased 5.1 times what it was in the first period. The death rate increased 3.7 times. The deaths from nervous disorders increased 20 4 times. These figures are significant of the wear of city life on the nervous system. Is not this strain of the nervous system a peculiarly American danger? To be sure, all brain-workers in all countries are liable to it, but in our country climatic influences increase the tendency. Under these influences we have developed national characteristics, showing in form and feature. We do things in a hurry. We are in haste to get rich. We are in haste to be wise We have no time for exercise. We have no time for play. Both exercise and play are by serious people often looked upon as a waste of time for adults, however good they may be for children and young people. A boy must be a man before his time, and a girl must be prim and staid, and must not romp like her more fortunate brothers, but must be a sober woman after she has entered her teens. It seems as if the battle of modern life (at least of modern city life) was a battle of the nerves. "From nursery to school, from school to college, or to work, the strain of brain goes on, and strain of nerve—scholarships, examinations, speculations, promotions, excitements, stimulations, long hours of work, late hours of rest, jaded frames, weary brains, jarring nerves all intensified by the exigences of our school and city life." The worst of the mischief is that this strain falls most of all upon those from nature and circumstance least able to bear it—upon our women. Public opinion frowns upon their exercising like men. Yet with a nervous system more sensitive than man's, they need the very exercises (out-of-doors) which by a mistaken public sentiment, they are often forbidden to take. The healthy house work is often deputed to a servant, either because too hard for our American girls, or too much beneath them.—E. L. Richards, in Popular Science Monthly.

American Daily Newspapers.

NOT long ago Mr. Joseph Howard published the following deserved reproof:

"A few weeks ago about 1,500 people assembled in one of the largest halls we have to listen to addresses by Bishop Potter, by Red Cloud, by General Armstrong, principal of the Hampden Institute, and by several well-educated Indians. The hall was packed, the meeting was spirited, the addresses were entertainingly instructive, and a movement in the direction of Indian rights was initiated which bids fair to have great, widespread national results. The same evening a little foul mouthed tailor addressed perhaps a hundred socialistic agitators—men who were not citizens, a majority of whom are not engaged in any occupation whatever except that of agitation—in a hall back of a lager beer saloon on Third avenue. In the papers of the city the following morning appeared from one-half a column to a column of this tirade, and in one or two papers appeared a paragraphic allusion to the meeting addressed by the bishop and his associates. That is a fair illustration, not a strained one—a perfectly fair illustration of the way in which the newspapers of the city treat the two classes of thought and action. Anything that is dirty, mean, wrong, contrary to the public good, is written up, described at full length, made piquant and interesting; but matters which tend toward the elevation of the race, which look to the cleansing of our city, which take hold of the solid substantialities of the people, are passed by, either in absolute silence or with paragraphic attention.

"I remember many years ago, when I was city editor of the New York Times and lived in Brooklyn, my mother wrote me from the country, where she was spending a few months, that a stranger who judged of Brooklyn by what appeared under the head of Brooklyn news, would imagine that there was nothing in the City of Churches except a city hall, a few criminal courts, police stations, and a morgue. In other words, crime has the call. No city in the world surpasses New York in intelligence, in a love of all that is good and pure and noble and decent and humane, but with the exception of a few idiotic reports of sermons, with now and then a record of some English lecturer or Irish orator, all the upper realm is left untouched. Our reporters are instructed to scent the carrion. They never bring the rose with its perfume, or the lily with its grace, or the pansy with its drooping beauty before the public attention—but the dead dogs of agitation and the swollen carcasses of crime, and the offal of dirt and squalor, these are thrust before the disgusted eyes and under the offended nostrils of an amazed and outraged people."

NATURE'S CURE FOR CONSTIPATION,

A RELIABLE REMEDY For Sick Stomach, Torpid Liver, Bilious Headache, Costiveness,

TARRANT'S Effervescent Seltzer APERIENT.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT TRADE MARK REGISTERED

It is certain in its effects. It is gentle in its action. It is palatable to the taste. It can be relied upon to cure, and it cures by assisting, not by outraging, nature. Do not take violent purgatives yourselves, or allow your children to take them. always use this elegant pharmaceutical preparation, which has been for more than forty years a public favorite. Sold by druggists everywhere.

Sick-Headache, AND DYSPEPSIA.

Useful for Everybody.

MANY MISTAKES MENDED

IN READING, WRITING and SPEAKING.

12mo. 320 pages. $1 by mail.

N. TIBBALS & SONS, New York

The Carol

—A BOOK OF—

Religious Songs

—FOR THE—

Sunday School and the Home,

—BY—

CHARLES W. WENDTE,

With poetical contributions by

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Miss Louisa M. Alcott, Hezekiah Butterworth, and many others.

The Music, original and selected, by Geo. F. Root, J. R. Murray, J. B. Sharland, P. P. Bliss and J. B. Dykes, Stainer, Barnby, Handel, Mendelssohn and other eminent composers, old and new.

This work, long in preparation by an experienced Sunday School worker, contains over 200 separate musical selections, together with a number of musical and responsive services for the festival and ordinary occasions of the Sunday School and the Home Altar.

Price 35 cents each by mail, postpaid; $3.60 a dozen by express, charges not prepaid. ☞ Specimen Pages Free.

PUBLISHED BY

THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O.

The J. CHURCH CO., 19 E. 16th St., New York City.

Church Decoration.

Church Furnishing.

DESIGNS AND ESTIMATES SUBMITTED.

J. & R. LAMB,

59 CARMINE ST., N. Y.

Three Notable Novels.

The New Man at Rossmere.

By MRS. J. H. WALWORTH,

Author of "The Bar Sinister," "Without Blemish," "Old Fulkerson's Clerk," "Scruples," etc., etc.

1 VOL., 16mo, EXTRA CLOTH. PRICE, $1.25.

"The cordial welcome given to this writer's previous works, argues well for the reception of her new volume, which far exceeds her preceding books in interest."

As Common Mortals.

A NOVEL.

1 VOL., 16mo, EXTRA CLOTH. PRICE, $1.25.

"Written with great power."—Journal of Commerce, N. Y.

"A strong story, the interest of which deepens with every chapter."—Home Journal, Boston.

"In many respects a remarkable book, in all respects a most readable one."—Buffalo Express.

The Magic of a Voice.

By MARGARET RUSSELL MACFARLANE.

1 VOL., 16mo, CLOTH. PRICE, $1.00.

"The work is so completely Germanesque that it reads almost like a translation of Mrs. Wister; but it is so far better than any translation that it reveals the very heart of aristocratic life in Germany, through the personal experience of one—a young American lady—who has been at home by marriage in the schloss so graphically described in her pages. The scene is laid in the north country of Mecklenburg, among several families of distinction, and though the story is pre-eminently of quiet movement, it is interfused with so many pathetic and dramatic situations that the attention of the reader is closely held, while the author continues to portray actual life with the detail and accuracy of a Meissonier. The style is crisp and unaffected."—MARY E. DODGE, in Literary Life.

Cassell & Company, Limited,

739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

Presbyterian Board of Publication's LATE BOOKS.

GRIFFEN ALLEY FOLK.

Showing that even those sorely degraded by intemperance may be raised from the gutter to new lives.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

FROM ACCADIA TO MACHPELAH.

In which the life of Abraham is made interesting by being made real.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.15

MABEL'S SUMMER.

A tale of Child life in Northern India.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, 85 cents.

RALPH WESTON'S SECRET.

Showing how the appetite for strong drink may descend from father to daughter, and again from mother to son.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

THE WEDDED LIFE.

By REV. J. R. MILLER, D.D

A little volume intended for presentation to the newly-wedded, and containing a marriage certificate.

16mo. Price, 60 cents.

Address orders to

JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't,

1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,

Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St., New York, N. Y.

The Royal Singer!

New Singing Class Book by L. O. Emerson.

THE BEST OF ALL!

Teachers of Singing Schools who examine this, the last of Mr. Emerson's series of successful class-books, will generally concede that it is, in some degree, superior to any of its predecessors. The elementary exercises, the graded easy tunes for practice, the part songs or glees, and the church tunes, anthems and chants, all excel in their selection or arrangement.

With its happily chosen title, good and interesting music and generally attractive character, there is good ground for hope that it will be the "favorite of the season."

READY SEPTEMBER 1ST.

Price, 60 cts., $5.00 per dozen.

Parlor Organ Galaxy.

A good and large collection of Reed Organ Music, selected and arranged by W. F. SUDDS. 40 good Marches, Galops, Waltzes, Rondos, schottisches, etc., and 17 popular songs, covering 96 sheet music size pages, yet sold for the very low price of 50 cts.

Remember our superior new Sunday School Song Book, Songs of Promise, (35 cts.) and our High School Song Book, Song Greeting, (60 cts.)

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y.

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers, 805 Broadway, New York.

ATLANTIC

Mutual Insurance Co.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 51 WALL STREET

ORGANIZED 1842.

Insures against Marine and Inland Navigation Risks.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest in accordance with its Charter.

J. D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice President
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice Pres't.
A. A. RAVEN 3d Vice Pres't.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

CONTINENTAL Insurance Co.

Continental Buildings
100 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Cor. COURT and MONTAGUE STS., BROOKLYN

106 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, E.D.

Insures against loss by Fire at reasonable rates.

Reserve for re-insurance	$2,265,427 8
of which for Inland Marine, $55,969 52
Reserve ample for all other claims	553,171 2[illegible]
Capital paid in cash	1,[illegible]00,000 00
Net surplus	1,358,879 85

Total Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886. $5,177,478 99

This Company conducts its business under the restrictions of the New York Safety Fund Law. The two Safety Funds together equal $1,200,000.

H. H. LAMPORT, President.

CYRUS PECK, Secretary.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK.

OFFICE, No. 119 BROADWAY.

Sixty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the Condition of the Company on the 1st day of July, 1886.

CASH CAPITAL	$3,000,000 00
Reserve Premium Fund	2,938,020 00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	[illegible]0,040 10
Net Surplus	1,8[illegible]9,241 71
Cash Assets	$7,628,401 81

SUMMARY OF ASSETS

Cash in Banks	$126,[illegible]08 99
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	743,300 00
United States Stocks (market value)	2,9[illegible] 2,697 50
Bank and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	1,733,640 00
State and City Bonds (market value)	2[illegible]6 000 00
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	180,000 00
Interest due on 1st July, 1886	10,[illegible]94 74
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	299,646 97
Real Estate	1,364,113 61
Total	$7,628,401 81

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
D. A. HEALD, Vice-President.
J. H. WASHBURN, V. P. & Sec'y
T. B. GREENE, W. L. BIGELOW, E. G. SNOW, JR., } Ass't Sec's.

CHEAPEST BIBLES Ever furnished Agents. Extra Terms and Large CASH PREMIUMS

FORSHEE & McMAKIN, CINCINNATI, O.

AGENTS coin money with our Amateur Photo outfit, and collecting family pictures to enlarge. Special 30 day offer. Empire Copying Co., 881 Canal St., New York.

THE

Christian Intelligencer

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT

48 Church St., cor. Fulton, N. Y.,

BY THE

CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOC.

Editors:

REV. J. M. FERRIS, D.D.,
REV. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.

Associate Editor:

MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

TERMS,

$2.65 per annum.

Ministers and Theological Students, $2.

SINGLE COPIES, 8 CENTS.

☞ Read these Instructions carefully. ☜

ALL COMMUNICATIONS pertaining to the literary columns of the paper must be addressed to the Editors; and those inclosing manuscripts to be returned must be accompanied with envelopes stamped and addressed. No attention will be paid to anonymous communications.

THOSE relating to the business department, to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION, Box 2117, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIBERS, NOTICE.—The date following your name on the direction label informs you to what month and year your subscription is paid. If this date is not changed within two weeks after payment is made, drop us a postal card and we will investigate and reply. Please examine the date, and if in arrears, remit the amount due.

REMITTANCES ARE AT THE RISK OF THE SENDER, unless made by Draft, Check, or P. O. Money Order. These, if lost, can be readily replaced.

Checks, etc., to order of CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION.

IN CHANGING AN ADDRESS, it is necessary to send the OLD as well as NEW address. The change cannot be made unless this is done. And in order to prevent the loss of papers, it will be well to notify the office at least ten days before the contemplated change, as the mail lists are prepared that much in advance of each issue.

ALWAYS GIVE THE NAME OF THE P. O. where the paper is received.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

The Home.

AUNT MARJORIE'S CORNER

Lucy Anthon.

A Story for Girls.

BY ELLEN AINSLIE.

PART I.

"GOOD night, mother!"

"Good night! You are not to sit up reading in your room, Lucy. And, for goodness' sake, carry that candle straight! I found three grease spots on the stairs this morning."

"I'll be careful. Won't you kiss me for good night, mother?"

Mrs. Anthon's thin lips curled into a chilly smile. Something was evidently wrong between mother and daughter. She made no sign of acquiescence, though Lucy, holding the candle in one hand and her book in the other, drew a step nearer the low chair where she sat. In perfect silence both, each occupied with her own pretty work, had spent the last hour, one on either side the lamp. Certainly two people who love and comprehend each other may spend hours together in absolute silence, yet with the sort of sympathetic recognition of their mutual presence which is above the need of speech. In this case these two were uncomfortably conscious that there was on the one hand disapproval, and on the other resentment, and from time to time Lucy's glances sought the clock with an almost eager anticipation of the earliest moment at which she might retire to her own chamber. The farthest thing from her thought the whole evening was that she, considering herself the person aggrieved, for her mother had reproached her bitterly in the morning in the hearing of two listeners, should make the first overture toward reconciliation. Yet, when the moment came, she melted and felt that she could not go to sleep unpardoned for her hasty speech and sharp tone.

But Mrs. Anton was never easily won when offended. Though the blue eyes seeking her face pleadingly were brimming with tears, which only a brave effort kept back from falling, the maternal head was hardly lifted, and the white fingers did not pause in their flitting to and fro over the fleecy mass which lay, a frosty heap of glitter and whiteness, on the shining satin lap. Yet when Lucy's touch arrested her work, she put it down with an air of mute resignation, saying icily:

"If you have any explanation of your habitual disregard of my wishes other than the one to which I have grown accustomed, I shall be pleased to hear it. But tears and regrets have lost the charm of novelty, unfortunately, and it is growing late."

"Mother," Lucy's voice trembled a little, and a blush deepened on the delicate skin, "I have wanted to tell you that I was sorry—was wrong to speak as I did to you this morning, but you have given me no opportunity. Say that you'll forgive me, and let us begin over again."

Mrs. Anthon looked bored.

"All I require, as I have told you before, is the self restraint which should be natural and easy to a lady, and to see you taking the interest a girl should in her own home. The trouble is, that you never were and never will be like other girls. You are half a boy in your tastes and you distress me unutterably. The fact is, Lucy, you are your father's own child, and that sums up the whole matter."

"Oh, please don't hint anything against father!" exclaimed Lucy with vehemence. "I will bear my own sins, if you please, mother!"

"This is the young lady," observed Mrs. Anthon with cutting indifference, "who was so penitent a moment ago; so anxious to be forgiven. Your tone, Lucy, is so disrespectful that I shall be relieved if you will drop the subject."

"I am sorry, but you exasperate me so, mamma," said Lucy, offering the kiss, and as her mother did not turn her lips toward her, leaving it on her cheek. She walked to the door, opened it, closed it with a little bang, only to open it the next moment and shut it with careful noiselessness. As her footsteps died away her mother, never relaxing the swiftness with which she knitted, thought over the day, and felt an agreeable glow of satisfaction.

"The fact is," she said to herself, "Lucy must be trained to content herself with womanly occupations. Judge Anthon's only daughter has no right to a sphere outside her home, and I will never give my consent to any hair-brained plan which she may propose. As for her father, he is wax in Lucy's hands, and aids her in her folly; but she will do nothing without my consent. I wonder why I am selected," her thought ran on, "to suffer from precisely the sort of thing in my house that I most hate. Possibly it is for discipline, and yet," at this stage her face expressed a very marked degree of complacency, "I think I fill my position in life and society very creditably, upon the whole. If Lucy were only like Katharine McKnight, what a happy woman I would be; but she is so like the Anthons."

Here the entrance of a servant interrupted the tenor of Mrs. Anthon's reflections. Lucy, meanwhile, in her room had been soliloquizing, part of the time aloud, as was often her custom.

"Mother is so hard! Hard as granite! I'll never ask her pardon again for what she provokes me to, and she would provoke a saint. Goodness knows, I am not that!"

Her eye fell on the illuminated calendar which hung beside her dressing-table. The verse for the day, cast into relief, happened by an odd coincidence to be simply this: "Called to be saints!" And it hushed Lucy in the midst of her tumult of opposition, for, imperfect as she was, she was one of those who had "heard the voice of Jesus say, Come unto me and rest," and like many another, the contrast between her theory and her practice gave her daily pain.

"I'll go and see father," she concluded after a long gaze at the verse, which seemed to look back at her as if in dumb protest. "It's a dreadful thing, Lucy Anthon, to feel that you are called to be a saint, and, after all, to be such a miserable sinner, growing worse instead of better, and getting into a passion with your mother. Poor mater, to be plagued with such a child. Why couldn't she have had Katharine McKnight instead of Lucy Anthon?' unwittingly stumbling on her mother's own line of meditation. "It would have been such smooth sailing if that had been the way of it.

"I ought not to trouble my father, but I can not help myself," and so deciding, Lucy stepped softly along the wide hall to a large room at the end, from the half open door of which issued a stream of light.

At a table in the centre of this apartment, from floor to ceiling lined with books, sat Judge Anthon, absorbed in a bulky volume, occasionally adding a note to the pile which already lay before him, while the table was strewn with closely written sheets.

Lucy did not speak to her father, but, awaiting his leisure, curled herself at his feet, one hand lying on his knee, the bear-skin rug affording a pleasant resting-place. The merest touch on her soft hand, the slightest change of position, acknowledged her presence and gave Lucy the assurance she craved that she was not unwelcome nor in the way, and she gave herself up to a delicious waking dream until the Judge closed his book, placing a mark between the pages, and drawing her from her seat on the floor to one in his lap, said tenderly:

"Well, my darling, and how has the day gone? Tell papa about it, pet."

People who knew Judge Anthon in his official capacity only, inflexible, stern, clothed upon with dignity as with a garment; other people who met him in society, the gracious, genial gentleman, in whose cordiality there was also always the little protecting barrier which a reserved nature throws up between itself and undue familiarity, would never have imagined the man whom his daughter knew and adored. In a woman gentleness and tenderness seem natural, and are what we expect and count upon. Given a man whose name is a synonym for integrity, whose knowledge of affairs is as complete as his wife's inventory of her kitchen furniture, and as serviceable at need, and let that man take you in to the secret of his great loving heart, and you have a chance to measure heights and depths to which the feminine nature does not always attain. So at least Lucy Anthon would have told you had she ever spoken to anyone outside her home of the differing love of her father and mother.

"Tell papa, darling." The keen blue eyes, accustomed to charging juries and penetrating the secrets of criminals, were resting on the dear young face, and the eyes, so like his own, responded confidently.

"Papa, I'm a failure; a downright disgrace to you Everything's been awry as usual. As for mamma, she's ready to give me up in despair, and I'm sure she ought to have my sympathy, for I'm such a disappointment."

The Judge looked grave. "Don't think I'm scolding you, pet, but are you trying to please mamma, truly trying? I didn't know."

"You didn't know? Why, father!" reproachfully.

"The course of a long life, Lucy, has convinced me that for most of our troubles in this world we are either directly or indirectly responsible. And you must pardon me, darling, but I do think you leave undone some things you ought to do, in a way which cannot help annoying mamma with her fastidious taste."

"There isn't time for everything, papa, and I try to do the more important things."

"Granted, dear, but who is to decide which things are the most important? Are we not all apt to fancy that what we prefer should take precedence of what somebody else prefers? If we cannot have just what we want, dear child, is it not best to be satisfied with the best that we can get, rather than to go starving?"

"There I join issue with you, papa," exclaimed Lucy, her eyes lighting and her color kindling. "It isn't like you to say that, for it was you who taught me years ago to be dissatisfied with mediocrity and to try to make my life worth something to the world."

"Yes, dear, but a life which is to be worth something to the larger world of humanity must begin by being faithful to the little tasks in the smaller microcosm at home. It may even be worth while, dear, as a preparation for the larger work, to look to such trifles as the substitution of fresh flowers for faded ones, and the replying to notes of invitation promptly instead of at the eleventh hour, the last being no trifle either. Look out, dear child, for the sins of omission."

"I must if I belong to the 'called to be saints,'" said Lucy, musingly. "Now, papa dear, I've had my chat, and I'm going to sleep and turn over a new leaf to-morrow."

Standing with her arm around his neck, and smoothing the thick waves of hair from his forehead, Lucy started almost in alarm, and a shade of concern expressed itself on Judge Anthon's face as the door slowly turned on its hinges and Mrs. Anthon surveyed them majestically. Both culprits looked deprecatingly at the disapproving face.

"What a baby you are, Lucy! At nineteen a girl should be ashamed to sit on her father's knee as you have been doing the last half hour. (How did mother know, wondered Lucy.) If you have left your candle burning all this time you need not complain if you are obliged to go to bed in the dark to-morrow night. Such waste is wicked!"

As Lucy disappeared, Mrs. Anthon turned to her husband.

"I had the impression, Maxwell, that you had work to do this evening. If you had time to waste you might have given me your company in the drawing-room."

"Which would not have been wasting time, certainly," said the Judge. "I have been very busy, dear, but I thought it due to Lucy to devote a little while to her. She has her problems. Emily, I wish you would tell me what you think of our little girl's difficulties."

"You would much better think of mine, Maxwell. I am discouraged with Lucy, and you, my dear, simply spoil her; you treat her as if she were ten years old."

"I fear, dear, that you do not understand her. It looks—"

But Mrs. Anthon was not in the mood to speak of Lucy, even to her husband.

"Have you much more to do?" she said.

"An hour's work, perhaps."

"Then I will leave you to do it without interruption." And as she left the library she said to herself scornfully: "Not understand Lucy, indeed! A mother not understand her own daughter! A likely story that!"

The Land Where It Was Always Afternoon.

HAVE we not seemed to find it, over and over, as these bright summer days we have gone driving over the hills, with all their soft, shifting lights and shadows, the purple color draping their tops, the green velvet carpeting their slopes? And through the trees steal tenderly the haunting notes of the shy, sweet vesper singer, the hermit thrush; and ever and anon, over sharp rocks, foam crested, as the water falls in a sheet of silver we hear the sound of music, which from the distance so lulls us that it "gentlier on the spirit lies than tired eyelids upon tired eyes." How beautiful is summer!

....."Taras Bulba," by Nikolai Vasilievitch Gogol, translated from the Russian by Isabel F. Hapgood, is the first of a series of translations from "the great masters of Russian literature in the nineteenth century." Gogol, who leads the list in this new literary venture, was born in 1810 and died in 1852. The scenes of this historical romance are laid in the fifteenth century among the wild Cossacks of the Dnieper. Old Bulba, a Cossack colonel, is the hero of the strange story, which is told with considerable power and in a vividly picturesque style of description and characterization. The novelty of the subject is attractive. (Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.)

CHILDREN'S PORTFOLIO.

A Girl of Girls.

HERE'S a girl of girls,
Teeth as white as pearls,
Breath of balm and rose
When her lips unclose.

Look, how straight she walks,
List, how sweet she talks;
Beauty, grace, and youth
Crown her for a truth;

And along her way
Friends flock day by day,
Dropping at her feet
Showers of praises sweet.

"Beauty, grace, and youth—
Easy 'tis, forsooth,
With such gifts as these,
Friends to gain and please."

Dark-eyed Envy cries,
Looking sadly wise
As she walks apart,
With a burning heart.

Beauty, grace, and youth—
All these gifts, in truth,
Once were Envy's own,
Yet she walks alone,

Walks in sullen pride
On the other side,
Brooding as she goes
Over petty woes,

Little hates and spites,
Fancied wrongs and slights,
Which have made her life
Dark with daily strife.

Who would care, indeed,
Follow such a lead,
Though 't were Beauty's own,
Beckoned from her throne?

Sweet words match the pearls,
When my girl of girls
Doth her lips unclose,
Breathing balm and rose.

Sweet words set to deeds
Sweeter still, are seeds
Flowering day by day
All along her way,

Till to follow where
She doth lightly fare,
Is to set one's feet
In a garden sweet

Of all dear delights,
Where from heavenly heights
Friendly breezes bring
Rest and pleasuring. —Youth's Companion.

The Swallow.

"The turtle and the crane and the swallow observe the time of their coming."—JEREMIAH 8:7.

RETURNING from a drive this lovely summer morning, I found a chimney swallow in my room. I carried it out on the piazza and there released it from my clasp. Swiftly and gracefully it flew upward, and then onward o'er our hills.

Last evening, while sitting beside the open fireplace in our library, I heard a whirring sound as if some swallows might be using the chimney for their home. I now suppose that in a nest of twigs, without soft lining, built a few feet from the top, my little visitor was reared. Having found its wings were strong enough for flight, it may have ventured forth this morning and found a ready entrance through an open window to my room.

Our chimney-swallows, or swifts, come to us from the South about the first of May, and leave us in September. We often hear them in our chimneys, but they are said to also make their nests in hollow trees.

Our barn-swallows (resembling the house or chimney-swallows of Great Britain), reach us in May, and leave us at the end of August. Their nests are made of grasses and moist earth, are lined with feathers, and are built on the beams and rafters of our barns and out-buildings. We love to hear their twitterings on summer days.

There are many birds of the swallow kind, and they are all called by their family name, Hirundines. These include the swallows, the martins and the swifts. Several kinds of swallows are known in Palestine.

The Hebrew name for the swallow is so beautiful and so appropriate that you will like to know it. It is derôr, meaning liberty. The derôr is the bird of freedom, because it is at liberty to come and go.

King David uses this name, derôr, in one of his Psalms. "The sparrow hath found an house, and the swallow a nest for herself, where she may lay her young, even thine altars, O Lord God of hosts, my King and my God." This swallow was probably the black martin, which had also the name of Hadji, the pilgrim, among Oriental nations. It is the largest swallow in Palestine, and builds its nest in towers, minarets and ruins.

King Solomon refers in one of his Proverbs to the flight of this derôr, or swallow.

The turtle and the crane, as our little Bible sentence tells us, with the swallow, "observe the time of their coming." They are all "birds of return." When Jeremiah spoke of these birds, of course he called them by their Hebrew names: "The tôr," (turtle—a short name for the tôr-yônah—turtle dove), "the agur," (crane), and the "sis," (that swallow which we call the swift), "observe the time of their coming." King Solomon wrote in his Song: "The flowers appear on the earth, the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle (tôr) is heard in our land." It is a very plaintive voice. King Hezekiah compared his voice, while he was ill, to that of the dove: "I did mourn as a dove." He said it also sounded like that of a crane or swift (sis). "Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter."

I wish you could have seen my chimney-swift or swallow fly away. A mile a minute our swallows usually allow. Their flight is wonderful. They take their food (the insects) while on the wing, and drink while sweeping along the surface of a stream.

An English writer tells us that the swallows always come in pairs.

"It's surely summer, for there's a swallow,
Come one swallow, his mate will follow;
The bird race quicken, and wheel and thicken."

The English house-swallows (the best known species) commence their nests soon after their arrival. These they prefer to place inside or outside of houses or out-buildings, as they are social birds. It is said they never leave land in their annual flights unless compelled. When found far from it they have probably been blown from their course, and are much exhausted. Their coming to England "has been marked at various stations along the Mediterranean, and on through Northern into Central and Southern Africa. It is here among the palm groves that they take their annual rest, moult and return in perfect plumage."

I would like to tell you about our little sand-martins and their nests, about our American house-martins, our cliff swallows, and many others, but I have not space. I will copy instead for you a pretty little legend, or story, handed down from early times:

"When Jesus hung upon the cross
The birds, 'tis said, bewailed His loss;
. . . . . .
But as old Swedish legends say,
Of all the birds upon that day,
The swallow felt the deepest grief,
And longed to give her Lord relief.
And chirped when any near would come,
'Hugswala swala swa! honom!'
Meaning, as they who tell it deem,
'Oh, cool; oh, cool; and comfort Him!'" E. S. C.

At the Queen's Table.

FREDERICK THE GREAT, King of Prussia, had a palace at Schonhausen. One day Queen Elizabeth, the wife of Frederick, was walking in the garden connected with this palace. Her gardener had a niece named Gretchen with him in the garden. She was on a visit to her uncle. Gretchen lived in the city of Berlin. Her father was a gardener, too.

The queen talked with little Gretchen, and was so pleased with her simplicity and her bright and intelligent answers to the questions she asked her that she told her uncle to let her come to the palace and make her a visit. So Gretchen dressed herself very neatly and went to the palace at the time appointed.

One of the court ladies who knew about it saw her coming, and told the queen, who was then at dinner. The good queen was much pleased to hear that her little visitor had come. She ordered her to be brought in at once. Gretchen ran up to her kind friend, courtesied to her very respectfully and kissed her dress. At the request of the queen she was placed on a chair by her side, where she could see at once all the splendid sights which the table presented. There was a large company dining with the queen. Lords and princes and officers of the army and ladies were there, sparkling with gold and jewels. It was the first time this innocent girl had ever seen such a sight, and the queen felt curious to know what effect it would have upon her.

Gretchen looked quietly upon the costly dresses of the company, and at the beautiful dishes of china and gold that covered the table, and was silent for a while. Then, while all the persons at the table were looking at her, she closed her eyes and repeated in a simple, touching way, this verse of a hymn her father had taught her:

"Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are—my glorious dress,
'Midst flaming worlds, in these arrayed,
With joy shall I lift up my head."

The company was greatly surprised and deeply moved. One of the ladies said to the queen with tears in her eyes, "Happy child! We thought she would envy us, but we have much more reason to envy her."—The Fountain.

"Stand Firm."

IT is recorded that at a critical moment in the battle of Waterloo, when everything depended upon the steadiness of the troops, courier after courier came dashing into the presence of the Duke of Wellington, announcing that unless the army at an important point was immediately reinforced or withdrawn, they must soon yield before the impetuous onsets of the French. By all of these the Iron Duke sent back the same spirit-stirring message, "Stand firm." "But we shall perish," remonstrated an officer. "Stand firm," again answered the inflexible commander. "You'll find us there," rejoined the other as he fiercely galloped away. The result proved the truth of his reply, for every man of that gallant brigade fell bravely fighting at his post, but their firmness won the day.—N. Y. Observer.

A Difference of Opinion.

"CHERRY ripe!" cries Robin, singing merrily,
Round and red and rosy, hanging from the tree.
"Cherry ripe!" cries Baby—"ripened there for me:
For, you see, my papa owns the cherry tree."

"No, no!" cries Sir Robin; "that can never be.
Wherefor were my winglets given, then, to me?
Baby's feet are clumsy, cannot climb the tree.
The cherries for the birdies must surely, surely be."

—Harper's Young People.

"Do Nots" for the Driver.

LORD HAMPDEN, who presided at a recent dinner of the London Cab-Drivers' Benevolent Association, commended to the members the following lines relating to the proper care of the horse, which, he said, he had hung up in his own stables:

Up hill—whip me not.
Down hill—hurry me not.
On level road—spare me not.
Loose in stable—forget me not.
Of hay and corn—rob me not.
Of clean water—stint me not.
With sponge and brush—neglect me not.
Of soft, dry bed—deprive me not.
Tired or hot—leave me not.
Sick or cold—chill me not.
With bit and reins—oh, jerk me not.
When you are angry—strike me not.

Little Heads Together.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of 29 letters, and am often referred to in American history.
My 1, 20, 29, 8, is to sharpen.
My 22, 5, 17, 29 is to eat.
My 11, 24, 2, 15, 20, is to strike noisily.
My 25, 1, 21, is reverential fear.
My 4, 29, 2, 22, is to lead, to direct.
My 14, 19, 9, 6, 23, is a mass of mineral matter.
My 3, 16, 10, 7, is to utter musical or melodious sounds.
My 26, 27, 18, 9, 17, is a vehicle on four wheels.
My 13, 28, 21, is a natural compound of metal.
My 12, 27, 16, 24, is to inclose. F. L. SPRING.

SQUARE WORD.

1. A part of the year. 2. A division of the United States. 3. Pertaining to the nose. 4. An Anglo Saxon dignitary. 5. Hauled. V.

PI.

Rcaieg sesir thiw a glith
Ni reh arice cfea klie het nus,
Klei hte lgaer rcwnode uns
Tath ta nromngi teems rhe tsgih;
Thrimluf, rryem ttllei noe,
Pypah, phoeluf tiltel eno;
Thaw sah dmae reh yad os rgbhti?

Answers to Puzzles of July 28th.

Hidden Proverb.—It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good.

Beheadings.—1. S-ail. 2. T-ripper. 3. P-recession.

Diamond.—

P
B O B
S A R A H
B A R T R A M
P O R T F O L I O
B A R O N E T
H A L E D
M I T
O

The Chinese Question.

WE published last week the appeal of the Evangelical Alliance of China to the Alliance of the United States. The Alliance referred it to a committee, consisting of the Hon. John Jay, Wm. E. Dodge, E-q , and the Rev. Merritt Hulburd. This committee brought in the following report, which was unanimously adopted, and the memorial it contains was presented to both Houses of Congress on Tuesday, July 21st.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

The committee to which was referred the communication from the China Branch of the Alliance on the late outrages perpetrated upon the Chinese in Oregon and Wyoming Territories, reports as follows:

1. We heartily endorse the indignant protest of the China Branch, and declare that these outrages were without justification, and in the last degree not only un Christian, but un-American, barbarous and brutal.

2. We gladly accept the sworn statements of eye-witnesses to the effect that the persons composing the mobs who perpetrated them, were exclusively foreigners in law and in fact.

3. While we admit that these acts of violence receive no sympathy from our Government or from any of the better elements of our civilization, we are constrained to believe that they are chargeable in a great degree to the anti-Chinese legislation of State and National Governments, which legislation we deplore as being out of harmony with the age, and out of place on the statute books of a professedly Christian nation.

4. We justify the claim which is set up for compensation for damages inflicted, and regret that action thereon should have been so long delayed by the National Legislature.

5. We recommend that the Committee on Programme for the projected Conference at Washington next winter provide that the subject shall be properly discussed and the influence of the Alliance brought to bear upon the general government to secure to the Chinese now resident in this country the rights which the existing treaties guarantee them.

6. We assure our brethren of the China Branch of the Alliance of our sympathy with them in the increased difficulties, and even perils of their work, and of our entire readiness to co operate with them in every possible way to secure proper treatment of the Chinese in America and protection to our faithful and laborious missionaries in China.

7. We recommend that the Secretary be instructed to prepare and forward to the China Branch of the Alliance a paper embodying the substance of this report, and assuring its officers and members of our distinguished regard and our prayers for the removal of all hindrances and the success of their work in that great empire.

8. The committee further recommend the adoption of the following memorial to Congress, and also the action necessary to effect the proper presentation of said memorial.

MEMORIAL.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The Evangelical Alliance of the United States respectfully shows to your honorable bodies that it embraces Christians of every name who rest their faith upon the Bible; that its chief objects are the promotion of religious liberty and co-operation in Christian work; that it is in harmonious correspondence with similar alliances in Great Britain, France, Germany and various other countries, including China; that from the Chinese branch this body has received the letter hereto appended, protesting against the outrages and massacres which have been perpetrated upon the Chinese resident upon our Pacific coast and in some of the interior States.

The American Alliance is asked to call the attention of our Government and people to the wrongs thus done, to the scandal caused thereby to the American character, and to the tendency of the said wrongs, if not duly rebuked and atoned for by the National or State Governments, to prevent or impair, especially in the Chinese Empire, confidence in the truths of Christianity, in the justice of the American Republic, and in the fidelity of the Government to its international obligations.

This Alliance, responding to that appeal, submits to the favorable atttention of Congress the views of the Chinese branch, expressed in its own words and on its own responsibility.

In further fulfilment of its own duties and responsibilities as representing millions of loyal American citizens who hold to the truths of Christianity as revealed in the open Bible, who believe those truths to be the historic basis and only true bulwark of our civil and religious freedom, this Alliance protests against the said wrongs (the repetition of which is threatened), as crimes which the National Government should treat as violations alike of humanity, Christianity, and national faith, as tending to retard throughout the world the progress of Christianity and to endanger the reciprocal international rights and safety of American citizens in the Chinese Empire.

Rejecting the vain attempt to justify or extenuate these crimes on the ground of jealousy of race, difference of religion, or rivalry in the labor market, and looking beyond the reciprocal obligations of treaties and the provocation to retaliate which these crimes offer to the Chinese at home, to the whole duty of Congress in the premises, we respectfully ask your honorable bodies to view this matter in the light of the fact engraven in our history and recorded in judicial decisions that this is a Christian country, and that its Constitution and laws were made by a Christian people. By the venerable custom of Congress inherited by the fathers of the Republic from their colonial ancestors and reverently continued by their descendants, your honorable bodies, the Senators and Representatives of the American people, are daily reminded that you are legislating for a Christian people; and the prayers offered in the two Chambers are responded to throughout the length and breadth of the Republic, that by your endeavors peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us for all generations.

In accord with the spirit of that petition, we respectfully ask your honorable bodies to take such prompt and efficient action as to your wisdom shall seem meet, providing for the reparation for the past and the security for the future which under similar circumstances we should demand, and which shall befit our character as a Christian people, enhance the dignity of republican institutions, and advance the beneficent progress of Christian civilization.

The Alliance is encouraged to believe that these wrongs will receive the attention which is due, in view of the ground taken by the Executive in his proclamation on the subject and in his message to Congress bearing upon the same, and also from the favorable consideration which the indemnity bill has already secured from both your honorable Houses. But the Alliance is constrained to urge that the influence of such action as Congress may take will be greatly enhanced by its early consummation.

All of which is respectfully submitted on the part of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States.

JOHN JAY,
W. E. DODGE,
MERRITT HULBURD,
Committee of U. S. Evangelical Alliance.

NEW YORK, June 28th, 1886.

Financial.

TUESDAY, Aug. 17th.

THE reduction of the currency of the country is a matter of investigation. The following on that point, by the financial editor of the Evening Post, published a week ago, is so clear and full that we copy it:

The statement of the Director of the Mint just published will be of much value in reassuring the public mind in regard to the amount of gold and silver in the country available for currency. The report shows that the total production of gold in the United States in the calendar year 1885 was $31,800,000, and to this we may add $16,000,000 for the product in the first half of 1886, making a total of say $48,000,000 in the eighteen months to July 1st, 1886. The net imports of gold over exports in 1885, were $12,228,104. In the six months to July 1st, 1886, the net exports of gold were $26,000,000. This leaves a net increase of gold in the United States in the eighteen months to July 1st of, say, $34,000,000. In the calendar year 1885 the product of silver in the United States was $51,600,000, to which we may add, say, $20,000,000 in the six months to July 1st, 1886, the product having been diminished by the closing of mines on account of the low price. The net exports of silver over imports in 1885 were $15,507,824, and the net exports in the six months to July 1st, 1886, say $6 000 000, thus leaving a net increase of silver in the United States in the eighteen months to July 1st, of say, $50,000,000; the aggregate net increase of gold and silver being $74,000,000 in the eighteen months to July 1st, 1886. While the whole of this has not gone into use as currency it is available as such. Against this there has been a decrease of $10,394,810 in the amount of national bank currency in circulation in the year to August 1st, 1886, the total amount outstanding at that date being $306,516,338, against $316,911,148 on August 1st, 1885. The "legal tender redemption fund" (being the legal tenders deposited with the United States Treasury for the redemption of national bank notes) was $61,841 327 on August 1st, against $39,084 373 on the same date in 1885, thus showing an increase of $21,756,954 In the same time the amount of gold certificates outstanding have decreased $13 700,000, and the silver certificates $23 920 000, the total of all these contractions of the paper currency being say $94,000,000 in the year to August 1st against an increase of say $74 000 000 of metallic currency in the year and a half to July 1st.

A contraction of the currency has been in progress for three years. The call of last week for ten millions of bonds to be redeemed on Sept. 1st, will cause probably a further contraction, as the banks hold a large part of the called bonds. It is said that the year at its close will show an addition of 6,000 miles to the railroads of the country, and that the construction now in progress absorbs over a million of dollars a week. The rise in the value of money suggests inquiry as to what has become of the $533,000,000 of gold in the country. It is not in circulation, not in the U. S. Treasury, and not in the banks. A considerable amount must be hoarded. The coinage of silver dollars and their steady depreciation in real value has perhaps led to this. A rise in the value of stocks and bonds also increased the demand for money. In all this, except in the hoarding of gold, there is nothing as yet to awaken alarm or weaken confidence. On the contrary, the main facts are encouraging as an indication of a return of prosperity. The demand is for money to use; more is needed because there is use for more. The bank clearances a week ago, as we reported, showed an increase of 40 per cent on those of last year. For the week just closed they show an increase of over 20 per cent. The crops, although less than those of 1885, may put more money in the pockets of the farmers. It is not improbable. That means a more active trade. The farmers have been compelled for a few years to deny themselves many things they used to buy. With more money they will supply their wants and gratify their taste. Money in brisk demand at 4 per cent is a much better condition of affairs than that of a year ago, when Trust Companies paid one per cent on deposits as a favor and refused to pay that on large sums, when the banks held a surplus of reserve of 70 millions, and the savings banks and insurance companies did not know what to with their money. The amount of speculation is not excessive, is very much below that of many past years. The demand for money which has increased loans and reduced deposits and absorbed nearly the whole of the surplus of reserve in the banks has been a steadily increasing one since last winter, for legitimate uses. The situation seems rather hopeful than otherwise.

It is well to consider also that the average holding of gold by the Bank of England is about 25 millions of pounds sterling or 125 millions of dollars. That is not by any means the sum of the gold coin and bullion held in the United Kingdom. Our British cousins have the good sense to carry more or less gold in their purses and to use gold in their daily purchases—a habit we may learn to imitate. But the gold in the Bank of England is the basis of British financial operations. Our National Treasury and the banks hold $250 000 000, perhaps somewhat more, in gold. The specie basis, therefore, here to-day is ample, even measured by the demands of a cautious conservative policy. Space is taken to-day to present these opinions, because there seems to be a need of them.

The Associated Banks reported on Saturday: Loans reduced $3,093,400, an increase of specie of $285,100, a decrease in legal tenders of $3,605,700, in deposits of $7,542,300, and in circulation of $111,700. They reported: Loans $355 075,100, specie $65 369,100, legal tenders $34 159,100, deposits $369 263,900, and circulation $7,905,000. The circulation a year ago was $9,649,000. Money was bid up to 40 per cent on one day, but immediately fell to 8. The average rate was 6 per cent. Some large loans were made on first-rate security to Jan. 1st at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. Yesterday the rates were: On call 5 to 6 per cent, on best business paper, double named, 5 to 6, single named 6 to 6 1-2 per cent. The silver dollar is worth 71 1-2 cents as bullion.

The imports of merchandise last week at this port were valued at $7,972,090, and the exports at $6,511,151. The value of foreign exchange has fluctuated somewhat, but the tendency has been toward a decline. Yesterday exchange sold at $4.82 1-2 for 60 day bills and $4 84 1-2 for sterling; pretty near the gold importing point.

At the Stock Market caution has prevailed and, under the higher rates of money, securities have declined, but the decline has generally been only fractional. The railroads still show increased earnings,

The market shows a great deal of strength and bears up well under persistent and heavy hammering. But if money in the open market remains steadfast at 6 per cent, some decline in the price of securities is to be expected.

Grain in the foreign markets generally was higher yesterday. The visible supply of wheat in this country and Canada increased for the week 1,714,120, but the amount of wheat in the two countries is considerably less than it was at this date last year, and the amount in Europe has diminished in a larger proportion. Corn has risen in value since it has become certain that the yield on the great corn belt has been seriously and hopelessly reduced by the drought. Rain has fallen, but too late to save the crop. Quotations yesterday were: Wheat here 88, in Chicago 78 1-8; corn here 51 for August and 51 5-8 for Sept., in Chicago 44 for Sept.; Oats here 33, in Chicago 28 1-8. Provisions were more active yesterday at advancing prices. The rise in wool has ceased for the present, but quotations are well maintained. The recent advance here was equalled in Europe, and the prospect is that, as the bulk of the yield is in the hands of dealers, there will be no important decline. The closing quotations for cotton were: Aug. 9.29-30, Sept., Oct., and Nov. 9.32-33, Dec. 9.36-37, Jan. 9 45-46. New hay is coming moderately into market and the demand is good. Old hay is becoming scarce and held firmly. The best new hay is worth nearly as much as the old. Lower grades are supplied more abundantly and the prices are a little lower. Rye straw is more abundant and is quoted at 65 to 70 cents for long, 50 to 55 for short, and wheat and oat straw sell less readily at 50 cents.

The promise of a good fall trade continues.

News of the Week.

(Continued from page five.)

Damage from rain storms reported yesterday from Fort Keogh, Mont., and Bloomington, Ill....Taxable property in Philadelphia appraised at $628,679,312.

SATURDAY, 14.—It is stated that no less than 50,000 workmen will attend the Socialist meeting next Sunday in Brussels, on condition that the parade will avoid the king's palace....Rioters quiet in Belfast ...Christine Nilsson was married yesterday to Count de Casa Miranda of Spain. The ceremony was private....Terrible explosion occurred yesterday morning at Leigh, Lancashire, and many miners were terribly burned, and 40 reported dead....Terrific wind and rain storms reported in Southwestern Iowa and Southern Illinois yesterday. A number of deaths from lightning reported....Fires still burning in Wisconsin, but the danger is growing less and fires are subsiding for want of fuel....There is fresh evidence against Mrs. Robinson, the alleged poisoner of Somerville, Mass. It is thought that she has caused the death of seven persons beginning with that of her husband who died in 1882....Charles Chase, of Tenth street, Brooklyn, shot his wife and then killed himself yesterday. Financial troubles said to be the cause....It is thought that the grand jury will indict others than Squire and Flynn in connection with the appointment and confirmation of Squire....The law passed in 1885 provides that the State shall collect a tax of 5 per cent upon all public bequests to objects not free from taxation. The State will therefore, some claim, receive a tax of $200,000 from the estate of Mr. Tilden, provided the public bequests amount to $4,000,000, as estimated. The country treasurer receives a fee of 5 per cent for collecting the tax which will amount to $10,000. ..It is reported that General Butler will run for Governor of Massachusetts....The Third Avenue surface road passes a dividend. Cost of resisting strike reckoned at $250,000....Two hundred and forty-eight new cases of cholera reported in Italy yesterday.

MONDAY, 16.—Rioting has been resumed in Belfast. One Orangeman killed and several Catholics said to have been killed and wounded. Many houses were riddled by bullets....The better class of Mexicans in the frontier States want war, for they think the result would be the annexation of the Northern States of the Republic of Mexico to the United States. Cutting, during his trial, was told that the charge against him was not for what he had done in Paso del Norte, but solely for the publication of libel in El Paso, Texas....It is reported that there is a Chinese army of 40,000 men in Manchooria, near the Russian boundary.... At the Baldwin Locomotive Works locomotives are being constructed to run by soda which takes the place of fire. They are to be shipped to Minneapolis, Minn., and run in the streets where engines are forbidden. ...General C C. Augur, retired U. S. A., was shot four times yesterday by a negro who was standing in front of the General's house using profane language, and when ordered away shot the General....Three men have been arrested at Washington Park, Chicago, for poisoning race horses. ....Three earthquakes have been felt in Malta at intervals of eight hours. The people were frantic with fear....A family stricken down by disease were found drifting down the Ohio river in a helpless condition.

TUESDAY, 17 —William Gray, Treasurer of the Indian Orchard Mills and Atlantic Cotton Mills, with headquarters in Boston, is a defaulter to the amount of nearly or quite $1,000,000. He has lived luxuriously, has been regarded as very wealthy, but has now disappeared....The east side station of the Brush Electric Light Company was burned last evening. The electricity was turned off and streets and buildings for a time were in darkness. Loss on buildings about $15 000, on stock and machinery $75,000....A heavy rain on Sunday put out the forest fires in Northern Wisconsin. In Minnesota the storm was very severe. Chicago yesterday morning experienced a high wind, with rain and lightning, which wrought great havoc....Three delegates from the Irish National League to a convention at Chicago arrived yesterday and were warmly welcomed by Irishmen ... The President journeyed yesterday from Washington to the Adirondacks....The conflict continues between the Unions and the Knights of Labor....Belfast comparatively quiet. ..Near Paris an imbecile widow, sixty years old, was burned at the stake a day or two ago by her sons.... Petroleum spring found in Anvergne, France....The Yankee mackerel fleet are evading the Canadian cruisers and getting all the fish they can carry. The fish are plentiful.

A Florida College.

It is no longer necessary for those who find it desirable to pass the winter in a warm climate to hesitate about going because of the poor educational facilities heretofore existing in many of the Southern States. Parents can now take their children to DeLand, Florida, with the comforting assurance that no break need occur in their course of studies, for there is established at this delightful and flourishing village an academy and college that is first class in every particular, affording every opportunity offered in the best schools here in the North for securing a thorough and liberal education. Board and tuition are supplied at reasonable rates, and students sent there will receive the same kindly care as at home. For full particulars write to either J. F. Forbes, President, DeLand, Florida, or to H. A. DeLand, Esq., Fairport, N. Y.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, Depression of Spirits and General Debility, in the various forms; also as a preventive against Fever and Ague, and other Intermittent Fevers, the "Ferro Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from Fever or other sickness has no equal.

Market Report.

Review of the New York Market for Butter, Cheese, etc. Reported by DAVID W. LEWIS & Co., Produce Commission Merchants, 49 Pearl St., New York.

Commission on Butter, Eggs, Poultry, etc., is five per cent; Flour, Grain, etc., 2½ per cent.

Marking-plates furnished when desired.

NEW YORK, August 14, 1886.

BUTTER.—Receipts for the week, 35,395 pks.; exports 2,721 pks.

With lighter arrivals and prices ruling steady and reasonable there was fair business, and the daily receipts of fresh make butter were about all taken for the first time this season. Exporters, however, are out of the market, and the trading in cold storage stock was light. There were selections of finest State creamery to home trade at 22a22½c., good ones at 21a21½c. Fine, fresh half-firkin tubs State dairy were in light supply and sold quick at 19a20c., and the small lots of Northern Welsh butter sold at 14a18c. Finest fresh Western creamery sold at 20a 2 ½c., and good to fine had good enquiry at 15a18c., and we note sales of about 1,000 pks. low grade for German account at 8a10c. We quote:

Fancy creamery	22	@ 2½
do dairy (selections)	—	@20
Good to fine	14	@19
Poor to common	9	@12½

CHEESE.—Receipts for the week, 70,426 boxes; exports 60 843 boxes.

The market has been "booming" all the week, opening at 8½c., and closing at 8⅞c., with 9c. asked for some specials. Night milk skims if clean flavored and perfect were quickly sold at 7¼a7¾c., while lots off in flavor sold hard at 4a6c. Full skims were in light receipt and had little enquiry. Market closes strong with prices in sellers' favor. We quote:

Factory, white, full cream, finest	8¾	@ 8⅞
" colored, " "	8¾	@ 8⅞
" good to fine "	7½	@ 8½
" night milk skims	6	@ 7¾
" skims	2½	@ 5

EGGS.—Receipts for the week were 12,128 bbls.

The receipts of fresh laid near-by marks were all taken at outside prices, while stale, long held stock was hard to sell at much lower prices, and only actual count of good eggs paid for. We quote:

Near-by marks, strictly fresh laid, per doz.	16	@16½
Western and Canada, loss off	12½	@14

Publisher's Department.

A SOFT, VELVET TEXTURE is imparted to the skin by the use of Glenn's Sulphur Soap. For skin diseases it should be used freely. Never take a bath without it. It is also especially useful as a means of bleaching and purifying woolen, cotton and linen fabrics.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap heals and beautifies, 25c.
German Corn Remover kills Corns, Bunions, 25c
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye—Black & Brown, 50c.
Pike's Toothache Drops cure in 1 Minute, 25c.

Ayer's Ague Cure is an antidote for malaria and all malarial diseases, whether generated by swamp or sewer. Neither quinine, arsenic, nor any other injurious drug enters into the composition of this remedy. Warranted to cure fever and ague.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarites: 1st, the combination of remedial agents. 2d, the proportion. 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, effecting cures hitherto unknown.

No Opium in Piso's Cure for Consumption. Cures where other remedies fail. 25c.

MARRIAGES.

KILSBY—COAD.—At South Bend, Ind., Aug. 10, by Rev. N. D. Williamson, Mr. Harry D. Kilsby and Miss Maud Coad.

MILLER—PATTERSON.—By Rev. N. D. Williamson, Aug. 11, at South Bend, Ind., Mr. Horace M. Miller and Miss Nellie Patterson.

DEATHS.

Obituary notices five cents per line (nine word to the line.) For subscribers we will insert fifteen lines free; all lines in excess of that number will be charged same as non-subscribers.

MEAD.—At Keyport, Monmouth Co., N. J., Aug. 12, after an illness of about four months, Sarah L. Hulse, wife of the Rev. Elias Mead, of the Reformed Church.

Mrs. Mead was the daughter of Mr. John Hulse and Elizabeth J. Calyer, of Long Island, and was born July 7, 1862 She was left an orphan at an early age, and passed her childhood and youth in the home of her grandfather, Mr. Peter Hulse, of Keyport. She was the joy and the light of the household, and the richest treasure of her grandparent's heart. When seventeen years of age she consecrated herself to the service of Christ and rapidly developed a strong Christian character. She was married May 16, 1881, and although but nineteen years of age bore the burdens which rest upon a minister's wife with such becoming sweetness and grace as to win the respect and the esteem of all.

Her disposition was genial and amiable, her manner winning and pleasing, her charities abundant. Ever ready to do good as she had opportunity, she endeared herself to many by her thoughtful and timely generosity.

A faithful wife and a devoted mother, she was bound to earth by the tenderest ties, but in the exercise of a sublime faith cheerfully acquiesced with the will of God and faced the future without a fear, committing her loved ones to the guardian care of the Father in heaven.

Her funeral was very largely attended, the infant class of the Sabbath-school testifying their love both by their presence and a memorial offering of a floral cross bearing the words "Our Teacher." It was a touching sight to see the little ones gathered about the encoffined form of their teacher, but a voice from heaven bade us write, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Notices and Acknowledgments

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—Evangelical but not denominational. Prints in 147 languages in aid of foreign missions; grants religious reading to the needy; sends colporters to millions in our highways and hedges, and to the immigrants in Castle Garden and elsewhere. This work depends wholly on charitable gifts. Donations and legacies are earnestly solicited. A summary of the sixtieth year mailed free. O. R. Kingsbury, Treasurer, 150 Nassau street, New York.

FULTON STREET DAILY NOON PRAYER-MEETING, 113 Fulton Street, and 58 Ann Street, Just east of Broadway, near William Street. COME IN, REST, AND PRAY. Stop 5, 10 15 or 20 minutes, or the hour, as your time permits.

CORRESPONDENTS will please address Rev. J. W. Warnshuis at Passaic, N. J.

CORRESPONDENTS will please address Rev. Henry E. Dosker at Holland, Mich.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall-st., N. Y.

JAMES PYLE'S

PEARLINE

The Great Invention,

For EASY WASHING,

IN HARD OR SOFT, HOT OR COLD WATER. Without Harm to FABRIC or HANDS and particularly adapted to Warm Climates. No family, rich or poor, should be without it.

Sold by all Grocers, but beware of vile imitations. PEARLINE is manufactured only by

JAMES PYLE, NEW YORK.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

The Church.

Prayer.

PRAYER goeth up as goes the mist,
And swift is its ascent,
Far, far beyond the heights sun-kissed
Or cloudy battlement;
It travels not on wings of air,
Nor seen upon its flight,
And faileth not till it shall dare
Make entrance in the temple where
It loving audience hath.

No message sent is lost, we know,
Nor hath it disregard;
The answer may be swift or slow,
It cometh with reward;
If slow the waiting will be best,
As long the mists remain
Safe garnered in their azure rest,
Till into cloudy folds compressed
They fall in showers of rain.

Because the heavens are full of prayer
The earth is full of hope,
Thus through the void of our despair
With promise we look up;
Presented in His name alone
Who came for us to die,
We leave our plea at His dear throne,
Who loves His answer to make known
As rain sent from on high.

—Rev. Dwight Williams, in The Christian Advocate.

A Boston Outrage.

THE following summary of the facts in the case is taken from The Western Christian Advocate. It should be added that the committee refusing a permit to the Rev. Mr. Hastings is controlled by one who is not only a liquor seller, but also a Romanist.

The Rev. H. L. Hastings held religious services on Boston Common. He gives an account of the case and its consequences as follows, with some other interesting facts. It makes one flame with indignant wrath to think that such things can be anywhere in the United States. Read what Mr. Hastings says, and lend it to your neighbors to read: "For the offence of preaching the Gospel on Boston Common, on May 17th, 1885, he was placed in the dock with twenty-three common drunkards, and fined $10, while the drunkards were fined $1 each. Being told by the judge that it was easy to get a permit to preach, he applied for the permit at once, but it has never been granted, and the committee, whose chairman is a rumseller, voted to grant no permit for this purpose. The next Sunday he read three chapters from the Bible to an orderly assembly on the Common, but delivered no sermon, for which offence he was again summoned to court and fined $30. He appealed to the Superior Court, where on trial the jury was directed to bring in a verdict of guilty. The case was then taken to the Supreme Court, and March 20th, 1886, he was sentenced to pay $40 fine and to stand committed until paid Mr. Hastings brings out in addition the stinging facts, that during sixty-three days in 1885 the city government of Boston issued 2 579 permits to sell liquor, and only two to preach the Gospel, and that in four years only nineteen out of 971 rumsellers convicted of selling liquor illegally were sentenced to punishment, while for preaching the Gospel of Christ without a permit 'conviction is certain, sentence inevitable, and punishment sure.'" The letter of Mr. Hastings is dated in jail, and concludes as follows:

In the year 1886 Boston fines ministers for preaching the Gospel and reading the Bible to orderly crowds on Boston Common because they are unable first to obtain the permission of a foreign-born "wholesale and retail rumseller" to do so, while at the same time the city authorities license Buffalo Bill to exhibit Indian pow-wows, Pawnee war dances, and the like for money on the Lord's day, in defiance of good order and State law; and I, a tax payer of Boston, am not only taxed to pay for Sunday band concerts, where sixty couples have been seen dancing at once on Boston Common on Sunday afternoon, but am also fined for reading the Bible there to crowds of those who are eager to hear it.

Influence of Scepticism.

IT is frequently said that the theories hostile to evangelical religion of which there is so much current talk are but poorly understood, and that therefore they are doing little harm. The members of the churches know such things are talked of, but they have only a vague idea of what they are, and believing they are bad, turn away from them and give them but slight attention. Even the ministers, as a class, are only carelessly informed respecting them, and do not trouble themselves, either through pain because of their influence, or in efforts to combat them. All this may be true, and they may still be doing much harm. Such things get into the air, diffuse themselves through the mental and spiritual realms in which Christians have their residences, and though they are not thought of as discussions or arguments, they work upon the dispositions of those among whom they circulate. Without knowing it, many a one is religiously infected by them. His piety is weakened. He has a less steady faith. His love is diluted. The earnestness has left him. The great, serious reality of the Gospel, especially as it relates to the coming life, has passed away, and in its place is something more accordant to human judgments and accommodating to sinful wishes. The supernaturalism of the Bible has shrunken itself up until it is almost measurable by tests of philosophy and experience. This kind of influence Christians need to guard themselves against as well as against the direct assaults that are made on their faith by open enemies. Malaria may weaken an army even more than defeat under an attack by those who are opposed to it.—United Presbyterian.

The Pastor's Example.

"HE'S awful close, and his wife is awful close with money," fell upon my ears not long since, as I heard a certain pastor discussed. Yes, it was added, "and his church never meets its small apportionment." My heart said, that solves the mystery. There is money in that church, and there are good people there, but the pastor does not make himself a pattern in giving. Judgment, now as ever, must begin at the house of God, and sometimes with those who minister at the altar. As a class, no men give to the cause of God so liberally as the men who preach the Gospel; and no families practice so much self-denial and so cheerfully that they may give, as do the families of pastors, nor are any families so abundantly blessed of God as theirs. But there are exceptions in living, in giving, and in blessing. Under God, we pastors, by "patient continuance in well doing," can make our people and our churches gardens of God, fragrant and fruitful. Our present joy—for there is cause of rejoicing among us—is only the joy of the first fruits. The abundant harvest will come in due time, if we weary not in well-doing. —Dr. Butler, in Lutheran Observer.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Home Readings.

LESSON 9, THIRD QUARTER.

M. Jesus Comforting His Disciples.....John 14: 1-14.
T. Another Comforter Promised.....John 14: 15-31.
W. The Second Coming Foretold.....Acts 1: 1-11.
T. The Better Country.....Heb. 11: 1-16.
F. A House not Made with Hands.....2 Cor. 5: 1-10.
S. The Everlasting Rest.....Heb. 4: 1-16.
S. The Unseen Things.....2 Cor. 4: 1-18.

—From the Westminster Question Book.

International Sunday-School Lesson.

BY REV. JOHN C. VAN DEVENTER.

August 29th.—"Jesus Comforting His Disciples."—John 14: 1-14.

Golden Text.—"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me."—JOHN 14: 1.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—"I am the way, the truth, and the life."—JOHN 14: 6.

INTRODUCTION.

THESE parting words of Jesus have been preserved for us by John alone. They are exactly in accord with the general aim and scope of his Gospel, and the fact that the Holy Spirit intended to have them thus fully recorded in this book is sufficient explanation of the omission from the rest of the narratives. At the close of the preceding chapter, Jesus had revealed the weakness of His disciples when left to themselves; He now unfolds their strength in God. It seems probable that this and the following addresses were spoken after the celebration of the Lord's Supper, and immediately before the walk to Gethsemane. These truths, therefore, have a peculiar tenderness of association for the Christian. The declaration of the Master's approaching death, of the treason of one disciple, and the cowardice of another, had been sufficient to overwhelm the little company with gloomy forebodings. Jesus proceeds to let the light in upon their hearts, and to prepare them for coming trial and more remote responsibilities.

THE LESSON.

I. FAITH AND HOPE.—VS. 1-6.

V. 1.—"Let not your heart be troubled." But a few days before, His heart had been troubled, and He had found relief in prayer to His Father, who had graciously answered Him. The remedy for His disciples' trouble was the same in substance as that which He had found sufficient for Himself. "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." The words are evidently of the same mood and tense, and should be translated alike, either both declarative, or both imperative. Jesus evidently intended to urge upon them a more simple faith both in His Father and in Himself.

V. 2.—"In my Father's house are many mansions." This expression has been applied to the entire universe, as if Jesus meant to say, You are in one room of the Father's house, and I am only going to another part of it. This does not seem to give as satisfactory an idea as that which refers the sentence to the heavenly house—the place of God's abode, and the mansions to the resting places of the saints. "Mansions" implies permanence more than magnificence, and the word might be rendered "homes." "I go to prepare a place for you." Although absent from them Jesus would still be engaged in their behalf.

V. 3.—"I will come again and receive you unto myself." The separation should not be long or trying. The thought of the absent Lord preparing their homes, and about to call them to Himself would nerve them for duty or danger. "That where I am, there ye may be also" As the saint's heaven would not be complete without the presence of his Saviour, so Jesus' glory will not be complete without the participation of His people in it.

V. 4.—"Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know." The entire line of instruction which they had received ought to have prepared them for these final revealings. Jesus had certainly been explicit enough in declaring His Divine nature and the character of His work. The logical consequent upon these truths was that He must at some time return to the bosom of the Father. The way He had repeatedly declared to be by Himself, as the lamb to be slain in sacrifice, or as intercessor opening the doors of the fold for their entrance.

V. 5.—"Thomas saith unto him, Lord we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way?" He thought, perhaps, that Jesus referred to some earthly journey which He was about to take, making the same mistake as the Jews, when He said to them, whither I go ye cannot come.

V. 6.—"I am the way the truth, and the life." Once more Jesus declares the all-important truth that He alone can bring men back to God. He is the way because He is the truth and the life. We walk that way when we receive that truth and enter into that life. "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me." No other sacrifices, no other priest can avail to reconcile the sinner with his offended God.

II. FAITH AND KNOWLEDGE.—VS. 7-11.

V. 7.—"If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also." This access to the Father was not something to be realized in the future only, but was a privilege which they already enjoyed. In proportion as their faith had apprehended Jesus, so that they knew Him, had they learned to know the Father also, who is revealed to human knowledge only through His Son.

V. 8.—"Philip saith unto him, Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us" Philip seems to have been carried away from the thought of Jesus by the suggestion in his own mind, that it would be a great thing for them if Jesus would grant them to see a vision of Jehovah. His wish was like that of Moses at Sinai.

V. 9.—"Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip?" If Jesus had not had Divine insight into the heart He must often have been completely discouraged by the persisent dullness of His disciples. Philip had been among the first to attach himself to Jesus, had witnessed miracle after miracle, and listened to the wonderful words that He had spoken, yet without learning the oft repeated truth, "I and my Father are one."

V. 10.—"Believest thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in me?" This may be regarded as the first article of the disciples' creed. To enemies and to friends Jesus had said, "I do nothing of myself." My words are not mine alone, I speak in the name of My Father, and by His authority and instruction; My works are not mine, God works through Me as His servant Son.

V. 11.—"Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me." Believe this upon My simple and repeated assertion, "or else believe me for the work's sake." If my word is not sufficient to silence all cavil, let the memory of the wonderful works of creative power that you have witnessed persuade your heart to understand and accept the truth.

III. FAITH AND POWER.—VS. 12-14.

V. 12.—"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." The disciples had already had an intimation of this power to be bestowed upon them, when they went two by two through the villages of Galilee. Jesus teaches them that by faith they shall be so far made partakers of the Divine nature, that they, as His representatives, shall perform wonderful miracles for the confirmation of the truth which they were to preach. "Greater works than these shall he do." More in number, and more marvellous in the eyes of men. The steadfastness of the early disciples in the face of persecution; the successful evangelization of the world by such a feeble company,—these are wonders which show a Divine power that is even more marvellous than that Jesus Himself should have brought Lazarus from his tomb. "Because I go unto my Father." The ascended Lord was to prove more mighty than the man of sorrows. Jesus upon the throne will enable His servants to do His work.

V. 13.—"Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do." He does not here speak of interceding for an answer to His people's prayers, but declares that He will give the answer. "That the Father may be glorified in the Son" The heavenly reign is looked right on to the earthly service as one in purpose, viz., the glory of the Father, through the work of the Son.

V. 14.—"If ye ask any thing in my name, I will do it." This broad grant is limited only by explicit conditions taught in Scripture. Jesus binds Himself to make our interests His own so far as we enter into sympathy with Him and make His work our life. Let us ask Him for more faith and more perfect consecration to Him

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

1. Trust cures care.
2. While Jesus is preparing our home let us seek to be made meet for the inheritance.
3. For the Christian to be with Christ is far better than to remain in the body.
4. We can reach heaven only by faith in Christ.
5. We are ever too slow and dull of heart to learn the lessons which Jesus is teaching us.
6. "We are workers together with God."
7. Jesus teaches us how to pray, prays for us, and then answers our prayers.
8. "Pray without ceasing."

Work and Worry.

WHAT though the world seem harsh and cold,
Keep on, and never mind it!
There is a realm by love controlled,
Press on, and aim to find it!

Discouragements may block the way
And mar one's best endeavor;
But, like a star undimmed for aye,
Let Hope shine on forever.

Beyond dull lines of toil and care
A vista fair is glowing,
Where avenues dreamed of as bare
Perennial bloom are showing.

Amid Despair's exhausting rack
'Tis cheering to remember:
The sky is oftener blue than black—
Yea, even in bleak December.

Avail not always efforts rife
With ceaseless agitating;
Sometimes the greatest boon of life
Is gained—by patient waiting.

Whom peace invests and girds about
Knows never fuss nor flurry;
It is not work that wears one out,
But everlasting worry.

—Hattie Howard, in Christian Secretary.

No Light in the Window.

AS the train sped along in the night, with drowsy passengers outstretched upon the seats, the conducter was observed frequently peering out of the frosty window into the darkness. The night was black, and nothing could be seen but a sheen of snow over the shadowy landscape, and yet the conductor shaded his eyes with his two hands, and held his face—a weary-looking face it was, too—close to the window pane.

"Looking to see if your girl is awake yet?" inquired the inquisitive passenger, with a coarse laugh.

The conductor looked around and shuddered, as with a husky voice he replied simply, "Yes"

And then the inquisitive passenger became garrulous and familiar. He sat down beside the conducter, and poked him in the ribs as he lightly said: "Ah, I see. Going to get married and quit the road. Going to marry a farmer's daughter. Worth much?"

"She's worth a million to me."

Further remarks in a similar vein did the passenger make, but the conductor deigned no more replies. Suddenly the whistle of the locomotive gave a long, low moan, the conductor stuck his eyes still closer to the window, seemed to fasten his gaze upon some object in the darkness, and then fell back in his seat with a cry of despair upon his lips.

The passengers gather around to inquire the nature of the trouble, when the brakeman assisted his chief to rise, and led him into the baggage car. The conductor's face was as white as the snow-banks which fringed the iron roadway, and in his eye was a look of tearless grief.

"Poor Sam!" said the brakeman upon his return; "it's a bad night for him. Four weeks his little girl had been ill. Night after night he had been at her bed, but then she got better, and he came back to his train. He arranged with his wife that if all was well with the little one she'd display a lighted lamp right in the window of the sick-room. The boys all knew it, and every night we all looked for the light almost as eagerly as Sam himself. He lives by the side of the track back here a few miles, and to-night there was no light in the window for Sam."—Chicago Herald.

Miss Fleming's Graduation.

IT was a cosy little room into which I was ushered, full of sunshine, pots of flowers, and singing birds; yet its only occupant was a helpless invalid. Friends, one after another, had been removed from Martha Fleming, until her white-haired father alone was left her. After the usual salutations, I said: "Do you not sometimes almost long to pass over the river, too?"

"Oh! I am attending school," she said sweetly; "when my lessons are all perfect, I have not the least doubt the great Teacher will kindly allow me to graduate. Would it be right for me to slight my lessons, or strive to turn the pages faster than He designs? How should I know what the Father has planned for me to do, or enjoy on the other side? Here, teachers have to be years fitting themselves for their work; and yet we sometimes desire to leave when the first hard lesson is given us, that would the better prepare us for the other life. No, my dear friend, I do not wish to go until the Teacher says, 'Child, it is enough. Come up higher.' I wish to keep right on until I graduate, take my degree as a baccalaureate in the blessed kingdom above. You see, on earth I was always an invalid, and never had the privilege of schools, so I have thought, perhaps, the Lord meant to send me clear through the school of sorrow, and give me my first degree up there."

"And do you think there will be prizes awarded there for the best scholarship?" I asked.

"Oh, yes, yes! What better prize could one ask than this, 'He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son?' You see it's in the overcoming. Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness. At first, yes, and for a long time I rebelled, but I have been led to see that the Master only wanted to perfect me. If I am brought home at last, I shall have been saved only so as by fire. Oh, the largeness, the blessedness of redeeming love!"

I looked around upon the humble belongings; upon the old father hoeing in the little garden; then back once more upon the white face of Martha Fleming, which had always reminded me of a water lily when the moon looked down into its heart, and verily I thought the Lord held something precious in store for Martha's graduation.

Tired scholars, taking your lessons, resist not the perfecting process, though at times the heart strings may quiver. Keep your minds upon the Master's graduation days; knowing that "these light afflictions shall work for you a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."—S. R. S., in The Advocate and Guardian.

THE KOH-I-NOOR is the name of the largest diamond belonging to the crown jewels of England. Before reaching its present destination in the Tower of London it met with many mishaps, but never came so near being lost as at one time when in the keeping of Lord Lawrence, one of Her Majesty's most faithful officers in India, whose motto was, "Be ready." He carelessly put the precious stone, wrapped in some rags and inclosed in a tin box, in his waistcoat pocket. One day he threw off the waistcoat in a hurry, and forgot all about the priceless jewel, until, some six weeks later, the queen desired to have it forwarded to her. Horrified at his heedlessness, Lawrence called his servant and asked the man if he had found a small box lately in his master's pocket. "Yes, sahib" (sir), the man replied, "I found it and put it in one of your boxes." "Bring it here and see what is inside," said Lord Lawrence. He watched the man anxiously enough as fold after fold of rags were taken off, and great was his relief when the precious gem appeared. The servant seemed wholly unconscious of its value and said, "There is nothing here, sahib, but a bit of glass!"—Congregationalist.

SCHUMACHER the "oatmeal king" of Akron, Ohio, came to this country very poor and got into the liquor business. He didn't like that, and began to grind oatmeal by hand and peddled it from a hand cart. In thirty years he built up the largest factory of the kind in the world. He is now a strong temperance man, and won't have an employé about him that drinks even beer. Most of his hundreds of workmen are Germans. He once brought a master workman from Germany at a big salary on a two years' contract. The second day after he began work Schumacher discovered that he drank beer. In two hours the man quit work and went back home with a check for $5,000.—United Presbyterian.

A PROMINENT Episcopal bishop tells this story: "I was preparing for an episcopal visitation, and put six or seven sermons in the bag I was packing. My little daughter watched me, and finally asked: 'Papa, are you going to preach all those sermons while you are gone?' 'Yes, my child.' 'Well, I'm glad I don't belong to the church where you're going.'"—Evangelist.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate
In Night Sweats and Prostration.
Dr. R. STUDHALTER, St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have used it in dyspepsia, nervous prostration, and in night sweats, with very good results."

DYSPEPSIA
Causes its victims to be miserable, hopeless, confused, and depressed in mind, very irritable, languid, and drowsy. It is a disease which does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy to throw off the causes and tone up the digestive organs till they perform their duties willingly. Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven just the required remedy in hundreds of cases.
"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, from which I have suffered two years. I tried many other medicines, but none proved so satisfactory as Hood's Sarsaparilla." THOMAS COOK, Brush Electric Light Co., New York City.

Sick Headache
"For the past two years I have been afflicted with severe headaches and dyspepsia. I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and have found great relief. I cheerfully recommend it to all." MRS. E. F. ANNABLE, New Haven, Conn.
Mrs. Mary C. Smith, Cambridgeport, Mass., was a sufferer from dyspepsia and sick headache. She took Hood's Sarsaparilla and found it the best remedy she ever used.
Hood's Sarsaparilla
Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.
100 Doses One Dollar.

7% NET Security 3 to 6 times loan. INTEREST semi-annual and paid at your home. 29th year of residence, and 10th of business. No investor ever had to pay taxes, costs of foreclosure, wait for interest, or take land. BEST of References all around you. Write if you have money to loan.
D. S. B. JOHNSTON & SON,
Negotiators of Mortgage Loans.
[illegible] St. Paul, Minn.

POPULAR LECTURES.
1.—The Romance of the Revolution.
2.—An Evening with Longfellow
3.—The Tudors
4.—Monologue—National Poems and Events
Address MRS. E. T. BARRETT,
SING SING, N. Y

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for
PLATFORM ECHOES
OR LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART,
By John B. Gough.
His last and crowning life work, brim full of thrilling interest, humor and pathos. Bright, pure, and good, full of "laughter and tears," it sells at sight to all. To it is added the Life and Death of Mr. Gough, by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT. 1000 Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $100 to $200 a month made. Distance no hindrance as we give Extra Terms and Pay Freights. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa
FOR OIL.

7% FARM LOANS!
SECURED BY
FIRST MORTGAGES ON IMPROVED FARMS.
TWELVE YEARS in the business. Over $1,000,000 invested during this time. References: My old customers in all sections of the United States. If you have money in savings bank or lying idle, send to me for circular containing full information, letters from my old customers, references, a NEW MAP OF DAKOTA, all sent free on application. Address
E. P. GATES,
PRESIDENT MERCHANTS' BANK,
Grand Forks, Dakota.

Lactated Food
The Most Successful PREPARED FOOD
FOR NEW-BORN INFANTS.
It may be used with confidence when the mother is unable, wholly or in part, to nurse the child, as safe substitute for mother's milk.
No other food answers so perfectly in such cases. It causes no disturbance of digestion, and will be relished by the child.
In CHOLERA INFANTUM,
This predigested and easily assimilated Food will surely prevent fatal results.
FOR INVALIDS, it is a Perfect Nutrient in either Chronic or Acute Cases.
Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value. It will be retained when even lime water and milk is rejected by the stomach. In dyspepsia, and in all wasting diseases it has proved the most nutritious and palatable, and at the same time the most economical of Foods. There can be made for an infant
150 MEALS for $1.00.
Sold by Druggists—25c., 50c., $1. 00.
A valuable pamphlet on "The Nutrition of Infants and Invalids" free on application
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

6% 7% 8%
The American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, incorporated, with a paid-up capital of $600,000, with branches at Huron and Mitchell, Dakota, offer First Mortgage Farm Loans in Iowa, Minn., Dakota, and Neb., both Principal and Interest Guaranteed. Also 6 per cent Debenture Bonds (obligations of the Company), running 10 years secured by Mortgage loans deposited with the Mercantile Trust Co., N. Y. It also issues Demand Certificates of Deposit at 5 per cent. interest. Write for pamphlet and references.
Home Office, Emmetsburg, Iowa.
E. S. Ormsby, Pres., 150 Nassau St., N. Y.

INVEST Through the Sound and Reliable
WESTERN FARM MORTGAGE CO.
F. M. PERKINS, President. LAWRENCE, KAN. L. H. PERKINS, Secretary.
CAPITAL AND SURPLUS, $250,000.
Carefully selected 1st Mortgage Farm Loans payable in N. Y. Unrivalled facilities. Absolute satisfaction. 10 years' experience. No losses. Refer to 3d Nat'l Bank, N.Y. City; Nat'l Bank, Lawrence, Kan.; and Hundreds of Investors. Send for pamphlet, forms and full information. Branch Offices in N.Y. City, Albany & Phila. N.Y. Office, 137 B'way, C.C. Bine & Son, Agts.

BELLS.

McShane Bell Foundry
Finest Grade of Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS for CHURCHES, &c.
Send for Price and Catalogue. Address
H. McSHANE & CO.,
Mention this paper. Baltimore, Md.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Fire Alarms, Farms, etc. FULLY WARRANTED. Catalogue sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

MENEELY & COMPANY
West Troy, N. Y. Bells,
For Churches, Schools, etc., also Chimes and Peals. For more than half a century noted for superiority over all others

BARLOW'S INDICO BLUE.
Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and endorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it. J. G. WUTTERGER Pres. 239 S Second St Phila. Pa.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

GEO. MATHER'S SONS, PRINTING INK
Manufacturers. Superior Black and Colored Ink Lithographic and Plate Ink. Varnishes, etc. 60 John street, New York.
The Intelligencer is printed with our ink.

PISO'S CURE FOR 25 CTS. CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

CURE FOR THE DEAF
PECK'S PATENT IMPROVED CUSHIONED EAR DRUMS Perfectly Restore the Hearing, and perform the work of the natural drum. Invisible, comfortable and always in position. All conversation and even whispers heard distinctly. Send for illustrated book with testimonials, FREE. Address or call on F. HISCOX, 853 Broadway, New York. Mention this paper.

R. H. MACY & CO.,

14TH STREET, SIXTH AVE., AND 13TH STREET NEW YORK.

GRAND CENTRAL FANCY AND DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT.

We Call Attention to Our Large and Varied Stock Goods Adapted to the Summer Season.

Our Customers Residing in the

COUNTRY,

Or Those Visiting the

MOUNTAINS

OR

SEA-SHORE,

Can Rely on Having Their

ORDERS BY MAIL

Carefully Executed and Promptly Shipped.

OUR PRICES

Are Always the Lowest.

R. H. MACY & CO.

James M'Creery & Co.

HAVE OPENED THEIR EARLY IMPORTATIONS OF SILKS, VELVETS AND PLUSHES, AND ARE NOW EXHIBITING COMPLETE ASSORTMENTS IN RICH AND EXCLUSIVE DESIGNS. AN EXAMINATION IS INVITED.

Broadway & 11th St.,

NEW YORK.

A pamphlet containing information concerning the history of Farm Mortgages for the past twenty-five years will be sent free on application to the

Equitable Mortgage Co., 208 B'way, N.Y.

EDUCATIONAL.

The Misses Anable's

English, French and German Boarding and Day-School

WILL REOPEN SEPTEMBER 22D.

40 BAYARD ST., New Brunswick, N. J.

Elmira College. FOR WOMEN.

Under Care of Synod of New York.

Course of study equal to that of the best Colleges; also Elective and Special Courses. Best advantages in Music and Art. Building with best modern improvements; heated by steam, and furnished with elevator. Astronomical Observatory --Museum and Art Gallery. Terms moderate. Address REV. A. W. COWLES, D.D., Pres't, Elmira, N. Y.

Somerville Seminary, Somerville, N. J.

A Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies and Children re-opens September 15th. Thorough instruction in English branches, Music, Languages and Painting. MISSES PARSONS & LE FEVRE.

Deckertown Sussex Co., N.J.

A SELECT ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes School year begins September 8. For Circular, address,

W. H. SEELEY, A.M., Prin.

Auburn Theological Seminary.

The term opens September 1st, 1886. For catalogue address WILLIS J. BEECHER, Clerk of Faculty, Auburn, N. Y

OSSINING INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG SING SING, N.Y. Ladies & Misses.

High Grounds. Best advantages in Music, Art, Elocution. English and Modern Languages. Full or partial courses. 30 miles from N. Y. City. Charges moderate Opens Sept. 21st. REV. C. D. RICE, Principal.

Betts' Academy, Stamford, Conn.

A Boys' Boarding School of the highest grade. 49th year begins Sept. 15th. WM. J. BETTS, M.A., (Yale), Principal.

EDUCATIONAL.

BEST TEACHERS AMERICAN and FOREIGN, promptly provided for Families, Schools, Colleges Skilled Teachers supplied with Positions. Circulars of Good Schools free to Parents. School Property rented and sold. School and Kindergarten Material, etc.

J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO.,

AMERICAN SCHOOL INSTITU . 7 East 14th St., N. Y

CLAVERACK COLLEGE

AND HUDSON RIVER INSTITUTE, Claverack, New York.

Rev. A. H. FLACK, A.B., President.

Affords superior advantages for thorough and systematic education to young men and women.

Unsurpassed for healthfulness and beauty of location.

Large and commodious buildings, recently improved and refitted.

A strong faculty of experienced professors and teachers.

Careful attention given to social, moral and physical culture. Ten graduating courses.

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC AND ART

Courses in Piano, Voice Culture, Organ, and Harmony.

Normal Course for Music Teachers. Weekly Lectures and Musicales.

Recitals by distinguished artists.

Individual lessons only. All practice under supervision.

Classes in Chorus Drill and Vocal Sight Reading.

Painting, Modeling in Clay, Cravoning, and Drawing are thoroughly developed by the most modern theories of teaching. Thirty-third Year Opens Sept. 13.

Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Please mention this paper

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE, BOSTON UNIVERSITY, Opens Oct. 14, '86.

Fourteenth Year. Furnishes superior facilities for thorough scientific and practical instruction in three and four years' courses. Entrance examinations, Oct, 11, 12 and 13. Send for announcements to

I. T. TALBOT, M.D., Dean.

SIGLAR'S PREPARATORY SCHOOL,

NEWBURG-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.,

Gives the best preparation for the best colleges. Two Yale valedictorians in three years. Entrance examinations held at the school by member of Yale Faculty. Daily gymnastics under teacher compulsory. For circulars, etc., address

HENRY W. SIGLAR, M.A., (Yale) Prin.

ALEXANDER INSTITUTE White Plains, N.Y.

23 miles from New York City by rail. Fits boys for College or business pursuits. 30 to 40 pupils 5 Teachers. Board and Tuition per annum $400. For circulars, apply to the Principal, O. R. WILLIS, Ph.D.

SEYMOUR SMITH INSTITUTE

Pine Plains, N. Y., prepares for College. Healthful, homelike, select, thorough. Address Rev. A. MATTICE, A.M., Principal.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

1 hour from New York on the Penna. R. R.

Year begins (examinations for admission) Sept 2, 1886.

SLOAN PRIZES FOR BEST (CLASSICAL) ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS; 1st, $400 ($100 CASH); 2d, $350 ($50 CASH).

Sixteen Professors; no Tutors Classical course full and thorough. Increased facilities for the study of French and German, with a view to practical use. Laboratory work for all students in Chemistry. Well-equipped Astronomical Observatory for students' use. Full Geological Cabinet. 50 000 well chosen books in Libraries.

Ample provision for Electives. Junior and Senior years, in Natural Science, History, etc

The SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT is the New Jersey State College. Constant field-practice in Surveying. Full course in Draughting.

THE AIM OF THE COLLEGE—THOROUGHNESS IN ALL WORK.

Best facilities and personal attention for every student. For full information, address Librarian Rutgers College.

Merrill Edwards Gates, Ph.D., LL.D, Pres't

Rutgers Female College,

58 West 55th street, commences 49th year September 22d. Rev. John Hall, D.D., President of the Board of Trustees. Boarding and Kindergarten Departments Address the College.

HEMPSTEAD INSTITUTE.

Hempstead, Long Island, N. Y.

A Thorough English Boarding School for Boys. Primary, Intermediate, Higher English and Commercial Courses. Twenty-seventh year begins September 15. Catalogues sent on Application.

Riverview Academy,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Prepares for College and the Government Academies, for Business and Social relations. Thorough Military Instruction. Springfield Cadet Rifles.

BISBEE & AMEN, Principals.

38TH YEAR. LYNDON HALL. POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—A High-Class School for Young Ladies. Music, Drawing, Painting, Languages, and English branches thoroughly taught, with full regard to the equally important matters of home care and training. Address

SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Principal.

YOUNG LADIES SEMINARY.

43d YEAR Begins Sept. 22. Address F. CHANDLER, D. D., Pres. Freehold, N. J.

RYE SEMINARY, Rye, NEW YORK. For particulars address Mrs. S. J. LIFE.

PEEKSKILL (N. Y.) MILITARY Academy.

----FLORIDA.----

—ACADEMY AND COLLEGE AT DeLAND, FLORIDA.—

A first-class Academy for both sexes. Five Courses—College Preparatory, Higher English, Normal, Business, Industrial Drawing. First-class Art and Music Departments. Fine New Dormitory Buildings, enabling us to furnish board and tuition at reasonable rates. The purpose of this Institution is to give, in the delightful climate of FLORIDA, as thorough and liberal an education as can be secured in the best New England schools. DeLand College will also receive students of both sexes prepared to enter the Freshman Class. Send for Catalogue to

J. F. FORBES, President, DeLand, Florida, or H. A. DeLAND, Fairport, N. Y.

The Great Church LIGHT.

FRINK'S Patent Reflectors give the Most Powerful, the Softest, Cheapest and the Best Light known for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Parlors, Banks, Offices, Picture Galleries, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A liberal discount to churches and the trade. I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl Street, N. Y.

J. B. WATKINS LAND MORTGAGE CO.

16 years perfect success, 12,531 Mortgages negotiated, aggregating $8,369,200

All the Interest and Principal paid on day of maturity to amount of 5,135,820

We have decided to place ourselves on a plane above every competitor. Hereafter every mortgage that we negotiate will bear our full legal

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTEE OF BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST,

Interest 6 per cent, payable as in the past, by half yearly coupons, at the

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE IN NEW YORK.

Assets to the value of nearly a MILLION DOLLARS are pledged by our guarantee.

SEND FOR PAMPHLET CONTAINING FACTS AND FIGURES, FORMS, AND 450 TESTIMONIALS.

Our Law Department will collect Bonds and other securities in all the Western States for individuals and corporations.

Address J. B. WATKINS L. M. CO., Lawrence, Kansas,

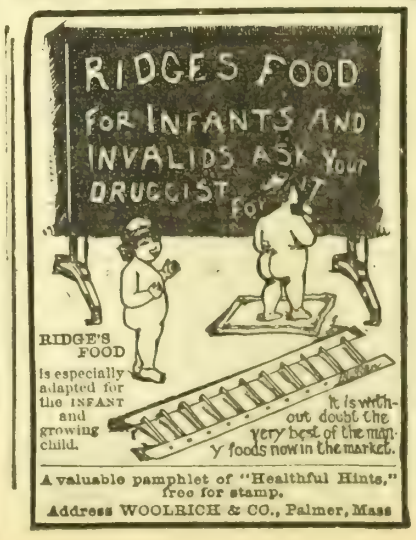
Or HENRY DICKINSON, New York Manager, 243 Broadway.



RIDGES FOOD
FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS ASK Your DRUGGIST FOR IT
RIDGE'S FOOD
is especially adapted for the INFANT and growing child.
It is without doubt the very best of the many foods now in the market.

A valuable pamphlet of "Healthful Hints," free for stamp.

Address WOOLRICH & CO., Palmer, Mass

ROBUST CHILDREN

ARE

THE HOPE OF THE NATION.

If the taint of hereditary disease is shown or insufficient nourishment is furnished from the breast, or if the child shows a lack of assimilation of food whatever it may be, get a 35-cent can of RIDGE'S FOOD—carefully read the "Special Directions," and give it a thorough trial. The pamphlet, sent free to any address, entitled "Healthful Hints," will also be of assistance.

A physician, after speaking of RIDGE'S FOOD saving a patient's life, says: "I cannot close without congratulating you on the sound advice and admirable directions given in your 'Healthful Hints,' especially hints to the invalids and the aged. I never read on so few pages so much sound sense. The only imperfection is its brevity."

RIDGE'S FOOD contains ALL the elements (other foods have some only) needed for the perfect development of the GROWING CHILD. Four sizes; 35 cts. and up.

A MILLION BOOKS

RARE, CURIOUS, CURRENT. IN STOCK.

ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.

Libraries Supplied Cheaper than at any Book Store in the World.

LIBRARIES AND BOOKS BOUGHT.

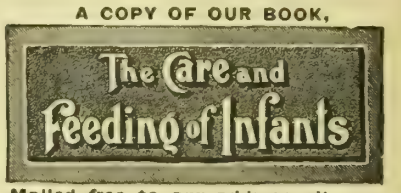
MAMMOTH CATALOGUE FREE.

LEGGAT BROTHERS,

81 CHAMBERS STREET,

3d door West of City Hall Park. NEW YORK.

A COPY OF OUR BOOK,



Mailed free to any address; it contains advice and useful information for nursing mothers and invalids, and an analysis and description of

MELLIN'S FOOD.

DOLIBER, GOODALE & CO., Boston, Mass.

Send for Circular.

WHY DO MOTHERS

Put stiff corsets on their growing Children? Don't do it, but

BUY FERRIS' PATENT GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS

Fit all ages. All Physicians recommend them. Ask your merchants for them. Take no other.

FERRIS BROS., Manufrs 81 White St., New York.

DURKEE'S

GAUNTLET

WARRANTED PERFECTLY PURE TRADE MARK GAUNTLET E. R. DURKEE & CO'S

BRAND

SALAD DRESSING

UNEQUALLED FOR EXCELLENCE.

Without a rival as a dressing for all Salads, and as a sauce for Cold Meats, etc. It is prepared with extreme care; all its ingredients are of the purest and best; and will keep good for years.

BEWARE OF ALL IMITATIONS.

N. W. HARRIS & CO.,

115-117 Monroe St., CHICAGO.

BONDS Of Counties, Cities, &c. of high grade a specialty. Send for descriptive lists.

BARNES' NATIONAL INK.

We are not missionaries and don't pretend to be, but the plain truth of the matter is that our $1.35 per gal. Ready Mixed Paint is a scientific invention, (the best old-fashioned materials so scientifically put together as to wear marvelously well), and that we don't get over one-third for it what we would if it was a patented mach ne of equal value. The F. J. Nash M'f'g Co., Nyack, Rockland Co., New York. Interesting Circulars Free. If your dealer refuses you these goods apply to us direct.

LE PAGE'S LIQUID GLUE

UNEQUALLED FOR CEMENTING WOOD, GLASS, CHINA, PAPER, LEATHER, &c. Awarded GOLD MEDAL, LONDON, 1883. Used by Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Co., Pullman Palace Car Co., &c. Mf'd only by the RUSSIA CEMENT CO. GLOUCESTER, MASS. SOLD EVERYWHERE. Sample Tin Can by Mail, 25c.

HAY FEVER

—

$1 by mail

WARD'S REMEDY FOR

Hay Fever, Rose Cold, &c

Handy to carry. Easy to take. Prepared solely by

I. W. FERRIS, M.D., Schenectady, N.Y.

J. Milhaus' Son, 183 B'way, New York, Agent.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS, a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.

Address, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

OPIUM

Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 Days. No Pay until Cured. J. L. STEPHENS, M. D., Lebanon, Ohio.

The Christian Intelligencer.

Een-dracht maakt macht.

Vol. LVII.—No. 34. Whole No. 2926.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1886.

$2.65 a Year in Advance. No. 48 Church Street.

Editors: Rev. JOHN M. FERRIS, D.D. Rev. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
Associate Editor: MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

THE REVISED VERSION.—The Synod of the United Presbyterian Church, at its session in Edinburgh in May last, having received from the publishers a copy of this book, unanimously adopted the following: "The Synod records its hearty thanks to the delegates and syndics of the University Presses for the copy of the Revised English Version of the Holy Bible which they have presented to the Church; and the Synod, recognizing the importance of the work which has been brought to completion after fourteen years of ungrudging labor on the part of the Revisers, recommends this version of the Scriptures to the diligent and prayerful study of the ministers and members of the Church, and prays that God may bless the endeavors made with such marked success to give the English-speaking people a clearer knowledge of the Holy Scriptures."

IN JAPAN conferences with the representatives of the chief nations of the world have been held to modify the treaties made some years ago. The Japanese have long desired such alterations as would give them a larger control over their own affairs. The conferences are not yet at an end. It is reported that England, France and Germany refuse to surrender the extra territorial jurisdiction of their counsuls, that is, jurisdiction over the territory outside of the treaty limits which bound the region in which foreigners can reside and engage in trade. There is no reason for humiliating the Japanese after this fashion. The government shows no disposition to treat foreigners unfairly, and the people manifest only a friendly disposition toward foreign visitors.

Report says also that these European powers have consented to allow the Japanese a little more control over their tariff. What a piece of insolent bullying this is? What right have England, France and Germany to dictate to Japan what duties shall be charged upon imports! The leader in this insolence for years has been the representative of Great Britain, who has forced British free trade upon Japan. Now British free trade is destroying the native industries in Turkey, Egypt and India. It is an arrangement ruinous to the manufacturers of the countries on which it is imposed.

A CONTRAST.—A writer from Switzerland in the Quarterly Register of the Alliance of the Reformed Churches for July, says, "There are not now any doctrinal contests between Protestants and Roman Catholics; both have learned a mutual toleration and each is working in its own way. There is a certain number of mixed towns and villages in which the worship of both is carried on in the same church." It may be that this amity is the fruit of indifference, neither party being deeply enough interested in religious matters to show any activity. But even in this case the showing is far better than it is in the North of Ireland, where Romanists and Orangemen have been shedding each other's blood and fighting to the death in the name of the Prince of Peace. And alas! it appears that the Protestants began the riot. It is time that the whole Christian world raised its cry against this hideous, this disgraceful wrong-doing. Both parties alike contradict the express words of the Saviour and bring reproach upon His sacred name. Nor are they true believers on either side. The ecclesiastical titles under which they range themselves are mere watchwords and have no meaning save as the designations of parties. We feel it to be a shame that Turkish soldiers must keep the peace at the holy places of Palestine between Greek Catholics and Roman Catholics; but how much greater is the shame that in Western Europe the government must keep the peace between Romanists and Protestants, who are fighting not for liberty, not for conscience, but simply out of mutual hatred? Out upon the miscreants who thus trample under foot the plainest precepts of the Gospel and shock all Christendom with their deeds of murderous violence.

THE JURY in the trial of the anarchists at Chicago on Friday last rendered their verdict that seven of the prisoners were "guilty of murder as charged in the indictment," and fixed the penalty "at death;" also that one was "guilty of murder in manner and form as charged in the indictment," and fixed his penalty "at imprisonment in the penitentiary for fifteen years." The accused had a fair trial. Many days were consumed in selecting a jury. A liberal number of challenges was allowed and used. Able counsel defended the prisoners. The judge was able, impartial and generous in his decisions. The result is a vindication of righteous and humane law that will be received with thankfulness and satisfaction throughout the country. Through the jury a free people, large hearted, charitable, delighting in dealing justly with all men, resolutely opposed to all oppression, condemns anarchism. The decision differs widely from the action of a despotic government, such as that of Russia, or of a European constitutional monarchy or any European government, influenced largely, as they all are, by a regard for class privileges. The Chicago verdict is such a blow as anarchists and all who sympathize with them have never before received. It expresses the conviction of a righteous and merciful free people, and will probably have a mighty effect. The prisoners had conspired to destroy the government, the social order, the family, the home—to overturn the entire domestic, social, industrial and political fabric. The means they had long been preparing to use and finally did use, were arson and murder. The terribly cruel injuries inflicted by a dynamite bomb are indescribable. The weapon almost tears a man into pieces. It covers him with gaping, lacerated wounds. Such bombs these men had made, were waiting for an opportunity to use, finally did use with such effect as is feebly told when it is said that a dozen men were killed and many others crippled for life. A more fiendish conspiracy men never engaged in, or one for which there was less reason. For this these men express no regret, no penitence. They recall none of their words, renounce none of their opinions. They are to-day the merciless enemies of all that men hold dear, as they were when the bomb was thrown at the Haymarket meeting in Chicago.

One peculiarity of this case should have special notice. The leaders of the anarchists and some of these now tried and condemned men came to this country from Europe to execute their diabolical scheme. We had never harmed them, never even interfered with them in any degree. On the contrary, we had sympathized with them in their burden-bearing, their hopelessness, under the political and social conditions of Europe. We had won and maintained at great cost a political and social life which, by its influence, had wrought a great amelioration in their condition. Nothing had ministered so much to their relief. Yet, hither they came with the settled purpose to overthrow our institutions, to destroy our homes, to put us to a fearful death, by dynamite bombs, by mobs and violence, and by the torch. Is there a parallel to this fiendishness in the history of the world? Others like them in every respect are still living among us: men and women who have come from Europe to destroy the established order, to destroy the State, the Church, the family, the home, the school, by cruel violence. They have come to make this fair and free land the arena on which to burn and pillage and kill. They have received a condemnation which they will heed and which will go far to put an end to their conspiracy by destroying their hope. No one wishes to take their lives. Necessity and justice compel their execution. To imprison them for life is to give some possible Carter Harrison an opportunity to pardon them hereafter. They have forfeited their lives.

Great praise is due to the heroism of the jury. Organizations of anarchists still exist in Chicago and in other cities. Probably a majority of the members regard the men of this jury with bitter and cruel hatred, and are enraged against them. The jury has had the courage to do its duty, to render a righteous verdict, and to brave the fury of the anarchists.

The Story of Suema.

BY T. W. CHAMBERS, D.D.

WE do not know the original source of the following narrative, but as it is translated from the Missionsstunden of Dr. Warneck, eminent alike for the fulness and accuracy of his knowledge on all missionary themes, it may be considered entirely trustworthy.

Suema belonged to a tribe living in that part of Africa which lies east of Lake Nyanza, one of the sources of the Nile. She remembers little of the circumstances of her youth, save that her father was killed when engaged in hunting lions, and from that time her mother's misfortunes began. She and her child were compelled to leave their home and take refuge in a neighboring tribe, where, however, she was unable to pay for their necessary food, and of course ran into what was for her a considerable debt. Then there came along an Arab who was conducting a caravan of slaves to the coast. One morning the widow's creditor came to the widow's hut with the slave dealer and sold the girl to him for a dozen yards of cotton cloth, which, it appears, the customs of the country allowed him to do. But when the Arab proposed to remove the child, the mother broke out into loud lamentations. She cast herself at the feet of the dealer and entreated him to take her along into slavery. "Take me also; I can still work and am strong enough to carry an elephant's tusk; do not separate me from my daughter; pity the sorrow of a poor old mother." The Arab consented to her request, and the next day they started. But the unfortunate mother had overestimated her strength; she could not bear up under the load of the ivory tusk, and only with the utmost difficulty dragged herself forward. The weaker she became, the more harshly was she treated; she was deprived of water and beaten till the blood came. One evening she fell behind the caravan and lay down on the roads de. The daughter, anxious about her mother's condition, slily crept to the place and lay in her arms, while the mother, in view of approaching death, sang a sad burial ditty. In the morning the leader of the caravan came and endeavored to take Suema from her mother's arms. But the unfortunate woman held the child as in a vise, and they could not be separated. Then the impatient and angry Arab told his men, "Strike the accursed old woman, strike her dead with your rods." Forthwith a hailstorm of blows fell on the poor woman, but she, with her expiring breath, cried, "Strike, strike away, for I will die rather than be separated from my child." Then the Arab, still more enraged, told the men to strike the girl. She began to cry, and the mother at once relaxed her grasp, and the separation was made. No entreaty was of avail. Suema was dragged away, and the mother left to die.

The caravan then continued its toilsome course until it reached Kilva, the port from which the slaves were to be conveyed by sea to Zanzibar. In great fear the poor wretches were made to embark, for in their ignorance they supposed that they were intended to be eaten by the white men. The voyage was terrible, for "the black merchandise" was packed together like herrings, and in addition to their sufferings from heat and thirst was the torment of sea-sickness. In six days Zanzibar was reached, and the whole number were marched to the slave market. Among them came Suema, in a very dazed condition, full of fear, heart-broken within, and outwardly reduced almost to a skeleton. The poor child was unable to stand when a foreigner in Arabic clothing but in a dialect akin to her own commanded her to rise. The leader of the caravan was then sharply rebuked for bringing such a worthless article. "This girl is completely done for. What was paid for her, and the cost of transportation, and the duty, all is an absolute loss. See that you never again bring me such creatures." Then he turned to two negroes, and said, "Pack this carcase in a straw mat, and carry it to the burying ground. It is useless to give it any more food, for it cannot live."

The negroes seized Suema, rolled her up in an old mat which they tied with cords, and carried her to the cemetery. When they arrived they cast down the burden, and Suema perceived by their digging up the sand that they intended to bury her. When they finished their work, the sand that covered her was so light that she could perceive the sound of their retreating footsteps. A frightful anguish came over her, her whole nature revolted against such a death, and at last after a severe struggle she succeeded in getting her face free so that she was not stifled. She uttered cries as loud as she could, but they died away unheard in the night. Suddenly there was a movement in the bushes near by, and a jackal came howling around. The blood stood still in her veins, the sand was scratched away from her feet, and she felt the first bite of the dreadful creature. She uttered a single cry, and then lost consciousness.

When she came to herself she found that she was in an apartment with white walls, such as she had never seen before. She lay in a bed, and two women with white faces stood near her. She thought within herself, "I am in the land of spirits." Where was she? In the women's side of the Roman Catholic missionary establishment at Zanzibar. The way she came there was this A young mulatto that evening had gone out to shoot jackals, and went to the cemetery, which was a nightly resort of these animals. He arrived just at the time when Suema was bitten, and as the jackals fled at the sound of his gun, he observed the feet laid bare and that they had some motion. Searching further he found the body of a young person whose heart was still beating. Seized with compassion he took up the child and brought her to the Sisters in the mission house, who received her with joy. Under their kindly care Suema recovered health and strength. She also gradually came to a new spiritual life, learned to forgive even those who had done her such cruel wrongs, and became herself a compassionate Sister of Charity.

This simple, unadorned narrative speaks for itself. Better than the most ingenious rhetoric it tells the story of intertropical Africa, the hideous suffering caused by heathen selfishness and barbarity, the hopeless misery of the widow and the orphan, the appalling inhumanity of the slave-trade, and the absolute need of that better faith which breaks every yoke, shields and elevates woman, cares especially for the poor and neglected, and crowns all earthly gifts with the sure hope of a better life beyond the grave.

"Old Colony" Papers.

THE NEW JERSEY MARCHES.

A Reminiscence of Editorial Days.*

I.

SUCH, for want of a better name, I shall audaciously call the immense tract of salt meadows, lying between New York and Philadelphia, through which the Hackensack and Passaic rivers wind their level and loitering way. The "Marches" of Scotland, of France and Italy, and other European countries, were the border lands (land-marks, or margin land), and hence the scene of much marching to and fro between the adjacent peoples and armies. And somehow—though with no etymological reason, but probably because such border lands are generally the beds of rivers,—I have come to associate the word with the like-sounding one of marshes.

Certainly the Edwards of England must have felt like spelling the Scottish Marches with an S, as they and their cavaliers floundered and sank in the pits into which Robert Bruce decoyed them at Bannockburn and Halidon Hill. At least, if we may not thus christen our Jersey meadows, it may be said of them as Bryant said of the prairies,—which strikingly reminded me of these on my first western trip,—that "the speech of England has no name" for them. Possibly there may be some occult Indian term, not altogether too fracturing for the English jaw. Or, as a last resort, perhaps Walt Whitman might be induced to affix some genuine American "yawp" to them.

In speaking of these meadows as a border-land, let me not be suspected of the stale and shallow joke about New Jersey being outside of the Union. For if ever a State was tremendously inside, squeezed and riveted into the Union, connected with it by river-arteries and mountain-bones, inhabited by a composite population made up of natives from every other State, and with soil soaked with the associations as well as with the blood of our national life, it is the Jerseys. Monmouth, Trenton and Princeton were the Stirling, Berwick and Dunbar of our Revolutionary history; Bergen Heights, our Cheviot Hills; and the great meadows beyond, our Marches. Since then, these meadows have been witness to a more peaceful and perpetual marching. They have become, beyond any other district of our land, the highway of national and local travel. Their once trackless swamps have been veined with railroads, like a varicose limb. I have counted at one time nearly a score of trains coming and going, close at hand or on the farthest verge of the horizon, waving each its white flag of smoke, and propelled by an unseen force which would have made old Mars tremble, and Achilles take to his heels—vulnerable as one of those heels was said to be.

Marches indeed were they to me for three long editorial years; and weary ones, too. Not that they added to my weariness, for they were a daily refreshment to my mind and heart as I shuttled back and forth between my city and country "dens." There was a "wideness" in these "mercies" of God to me, which unrolled many a wrinkle from my knitted brow, and bathed my weary soul in seas of heavenly green. I live too much under the Damoclean sword of headache to read in the cars, and I am not one of those who can extract much of the honey of sleep out of any other flower than a bed-post. So it was a god-send to pass nearly the whole of my transit hours either on the river, gazing down the Bay or along the line of the Palisades, or else in looking out over the prairie-reaches of the Jersey Meadows. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that I became pretty thoroughly and minutely familiar with their features and aspects. And it comes to me in the light of a debt-paying, that I should for a few moments claim for my Marches the attention of those who look from the car-windows of the INTELLIGENCER.

I am not one of those who can discourse learnedly of the scientific questions connected with the past and future possibilities of these Meadows. Prof. George H. Cook, the geographical and geological "Old Probabilities" of New Jersey, thinks they were once arable land. Others thinks they were once covered with great trees and jungles of undergrowth, like the swamps of Georgia and Florida, or like the "risers" (as the Dutch people call them,—how they spelled the name, deponent will not venture to say) further up the Hackensack river. It looks, however, to a lay and wholly unscientific mind as if these Marches were once a great arm of the sea, or inland semi-lake, extending from the rock ribbed hills along the Hudson well on toward the Orange Mountains with here and there an island of rock or ridge. In the process of time the waters subsided into the narrower channels of the Hackensack and Passaic rivers, leaving these long stretches of salt marsh on either side for the pasturage of scientific speculation, and the refreshment and salting of weary suburbans to whom life might otherwise lose its savor.

I care not to have the mystery unravelled, so long as they suffice to knit up the ravelled sleeve of care. I will not say, that I can only see what I see. A man were worse than stone-blind, who should say that. But I do find my horizon broadened and the view diversified by these delightful uncertainties. Imagination can make a palace-car out of a caboose, (almost out of a reeking and slimy "gent's" car); and I love to plant and people these Marches with an imaginary past, as well as to take realistic surveys of the prosaic present. I do not object to those hypothetical "great trees." In specially glaring midsummer weather I rather enjoy them, and my mind cools itself by plunging into their jungles and tangles of underbrush and vine, and splashing through the pools in which they stand knee-deep in company with mastodons and water-snakes and other delightful denizens of former days. Imagination makes one as wondrous bold as Ben Adhem's exceeding love; and I can even say—with the unintimidated urchin who, on seeing a bald-headed gentleman pass, ventured to repeat the talismanic words addressed to Elisha and then to shout—"Bring on your bears!' I find myself murmuring in plaintive and poetic vein, after the manner of the Bard of Lake Ontario:

> "Wunst the red injuns thar tuk thar delights,
> Fisht, fit, and bled;
> Now the inhabitants are mostly whites,
> With nary red!"

Whether "arable land" or not, there was certainly no one to plough it in the days before it became so soured as to refuse to be tickled into harvests. The noble red man had a soul above potatoes, and always will have, until inexorably bidden to "root or die."

It requires no great stretch of imagination to see Washington crossing these Marches on his famous Fabian retreat through the Jerseys, whereby he not only saved the cause literally, by refraining from expending its feeble resources, but revived the drooping spirit of his countrymen by the side blows and Parthian arrows of Princeton and Trenton. I can see him riding at the head of his cowering and half-naked troops, sitting squarely in his saddle, the one pillar of strength and guidance, never so majestic, never so calm, as in that hour of darkness and distrust.

Or I can half close my eyes, and the Scottish Marches are before me, with their fierce borderers sweeping down upon the English invader with the cry of "a Douglas!", "a Wallace!", or "a Bruce!" Or through the tender haze of a more classic atmosphere, I can imagine myself among the great levels and desolations of the Campagna, hardly more picturesque than these. One might find in the tall processions of telegraph posts, as they stalk spectrally over the plain, a dim reminiscence of the Roman Aqueduct with its crumbling and fragmentary arches.

I have my personal recollections of boyish travel, at a time when one or two railroads alone disturbed the still and stagnant waste. I used to creep along the edges of the islanded marsh in a jolting stage for twelve toil-some miles between Hoboken and Hackensack. The road lay through sleepy Dutch settlements and lines of old brown-stone, high-roofed, small windowed farm houses, buried in orchards, redolent of pinks and lilacs and catnip, and with perhaps a buxom vrouw or Marije leaning over the opened half-door of the "stoop." Very little of all this is left now before the furious assault of steam

* In going to and from Mottelair during my three years of editorship of the INTELLIGENCER I used to amuse myself with taking notes of the sights and scenes on the route, a portion of which are written out in and electricity. The farm houses have given place to villas, William the Silent to Queen Anne; the vrouw takes summer boarders, Maritje plays on the piano and will probably marry a commercial traveller; the sleepy villages have become city "outskirts," elegant Englewoods, smart but glaring suburbs, beer-drinking Guttenburghs or Irish shanty towns.

Yonder rises out of the weltering plain the round and rock-ribbed form of Snake Hill. Its name was doubtless well chosen; for its lonely heights and wooded depths, and dens and caves of the earth, might easily have furnished a refuge for the reptile population of the great swamp during the times of overflow. At least, it was always a shudder to me even to look at it in the distance, for I peopled it with a squirming, gliding, hissing and rattling mass of serpent life, the very throne of the Old Dragon himself. But to-day the railroad skirts its rocky base, the snaky Jebus is captured, a modern St. Patrick has been there, and Snake Hill is now the retreat of the "creeping things" of poor humanity, being the site of a County Penitentiary, Asylum, and Almshouse.

There still are lines of old country roads over the Marches, with here and there a toll-gate at the crossing of a bridge, and perhaps a weather-beaten and dilapidated wayside Inn. One such stood till quite recently in near view of the Morris & Essex R. R, conspicuously and frankly placarded as the "Mosquito Tavern." But long before it fell, mosquitoes had unquestionably been its chief patrons. These roads, along which a stray wagon may now and then be seen, were once a busy scene of stage coaches and brisk teamsters, appearing from the distant heights like swarming ants. The day of the Dutch Wellers and John Peerybingles was long since wiped out in a smudge of engine smoke. But alas! the aboriginal mosquito has not been dislodged from his ancestral haunts, and winds his merry trumpet in triumph over the silenced stage-horn, and his sting is as keen as ever though the snakes are flown or fang-less. Here are his "gardens of the desert," where he fattens on the rich and rank ooze, devoloping the stock by scientific culture, and supplying the world with the choicest variety of the species, the wonder and terror of mankind.

But before entering further into the classification and description of the fauna and flora, and other natural features of our Jersey Marches, we had better halt. In fact, here is our Station; and entering our vine-clad porch under the shadow of the Orange Mountain, let us forget for a season the things that are behind.

F. N. Zabriskie.

The Joy of Giving.

THERE is no joy like the sweet joy of giving;
Life lived for self, is not a life worth living.
Even our blessed Lord was not content
Till all He had for our poor lives was spent.
And day by day, and hour by hour, His grace
And bounty flow toward this our earthly place;
And up in the bright blissful realms above,
Are better things preparing through His love.

Who would not be like God and know some measure
Of the rich blessedness of outpoured treasure?
The man who for his greed his barns doth fill,
Will surely find the seeming good but ill.
Laid up on earth his wealth will turn to dust,
Or be corrupted by the moth and rust;
Scattered among the needy, it will be Increased by heaven's own righteous usury.

—F. Burge Griswold, in the Advocate and Guardian.

Passover Wine.

THE Rev. P. Anstadt and the Rev. J. M. Reimensnyder have discussed in the Lutheran Observer the nature of the wine used at the Passover. The question involves also the nature of the wine of the Scriptures. Mr. Reimensnyder, in support of his position that the Passover wine was fermented, brings forward the following authorities in his last communication:

Rev. Anstadt makes the remarkable assertion: "There are two distinct parties among modern Jews—the one orthodox, the other liberal or rationalistic. The former, who are strict in their interpretation of the law, and in their observance of its requirements, rigorously exclude all fermented drinks from their Passover. The latter, who are latitudinarian in doctrine and lax in practice, deny that the law of the Passover extends to wine."

This, it will be observed, is exactly the reverse of Rabbi Gottheil's statement, viz.: "The law treats invarably of wine in the ordinary sense of the word, and that it is supposed to possess the intoxicating property is clear from the precept that the celebrants of the Passover are forbidden to drink of the wine between the prescribed cups and certain portions of the ritual, lest their minds should get clouded. Paschal wine is fermented grape juice, which has been carefully kept from contact with leaven. I was reared in strictly orthodox surroundings, and have had, besides ample opportunities of observing the customs of my brethren in many lands; yet I never so much as heard it questioned that fermented wines are lawful for use, and I am quite at a loss to account for the positive assertions to the contrary."

Well, puzzled myself, like the good rabbi who finds the evidence of his own senses flatly contradicted by the assertion that "orthodox Jews rigorously exclude all fermented drinks from their Passover," I sent Rev. Anstadt's article to Dr. A. S. Isaacs, editor of the Jewish Messenger, the paper referred to in brother Anstadt's article. In reply I received the following:

Dear Sir: In reference to the subject mentioned in the Lutheran Observer of June 18th, I have to say that the article by Rev. P. Anstadt is throughout unreliable. I have no time to go into the matter—the topic has been worn threadbare, and yet always stalks before like Banquo's ghost. I write thus briefly:

1. It is not true that the "orthodox" Jews exclude fermented drinks from the Passover. Fermented wines are used. But they must be prepared with special care, either by the family or trustworthy Jewish manufacturers, so as to ensure the utmost purity and freedom from admixture.

2. The statement accredited to Dr. L. M. Isaacs is also unreliable. There was no such person editor of the Jewish Messenger. If my brother, Rev. S. M. Isaacs, be referred to, I do not regard the printed item as trustworthy. He never made such a statement, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

3. The wine at the Passover in Talmudic times must have been intoxicating, if used to excess, from the care taken to mix it with water. . . . It is not to be supposed that at such a family feast [requiring about two hours, during which a meal was eaten, and the four cups or glasses of wine were not necessarily emptied—J. M. R.] any danger as to inebriety would have been seriously entertained.

Yours, A. S. Isaacs.

Dr. Isaacs then finds no difficulty in these directly antagonistic statements of Rabbi Gottheil and Rev. Anstadt. He sustains the former, and pronounces the latter's assertions throughout unreliable, "not true," "not trustworthy," and his authorities "unreliable" and "not trustworthy to the best of his knowledge and belief." Now it seems to me too astounding for belief that if "orthodox Jews rigorously excluded all fermented drinks from their Passover," the first Jewish rabbi in the country and the editor of the most influential Jewish paper, who have seen the customs of their brethren in many lands, would have never even heard of such a thing.

But if cumulative evidence be needed, it is at hand in any quantity. Dr. Isaac M. Wise, of Cincinnati, editor of the American Israelite, says: "In all Jewish ceremonies, as marriages, circumcisions, the beginning and close of the Sabbath, the feast of Passover, wine—fermented wine and not must—has been, and is still, in use."

Professor C. N. Palatta, of Vienna, an Israelite by birth, and a highly competent authority, says: "To my knowledge, the question of the lawfulness of fermented wine at Easter has never been started by any Jewish doctor. Among the many thousands of bottles of Passover wine sold at Vienna every year, there has never been one of unfermented juices."

Rev. J. H. Bruehl, superintendent of the Jewish operative institution, London, writes: "So far as can be seen from the Talmud, the Jews of our Saviour's time had no hesitation whatever about fermented wine at the Passover. Not vinous, but farinaceous fermentation was prohibited. I do not know of any unfermented red wine."

Rev. Anstadt quotes Dr. Lightfoot as to the quantity of wine used at the Passover. Dr. Lightfoot is excellent authority, and I will supply what he has omitted to quote, viz.: "The wine of the Passover was very strong, and unsuitable for drinking in such a quantity without admixture with water. Thus mingled with water it was also considered more wholesome, and gave less occasion for inebriety."—Vol. II., p. 380.

In the Jerusalem Talmud it is ordered that the Passover be celebrated with red wine, and also that it look and taste like wine. The redness was meant to be decisive of its fermentation. "The color of the wine is dependent on the mode in which the fermentation is effected. If the skins be left in the fermenting mass, the alcohol, as it is termed, dissolves the coloring matter, producing the different shades of red wine."—Miller's Organic Chemistry, part 3d, pp. 187, 188.

Certainly, all this is conclusive as to the use of red or fermented wine. That it be red, that it be mingled with water, that it be avoided between the prescribed cups, to prevent intoxication, points to but one possible meaning.

The testimony of devoted and self-sacrificing missionaries in the Holy Land shows that the resident Jews and Christians all use fermented wine in the Passover or Lord's Supper. They thus affirm:

"We, the undersigned missionaries and residents in Syria, having been repeatedly requested to make a distinct statement on the subject, hereby declare that during the whole time of our residence and travelling in Syria and the Holy Land, we have never seen or heard of an unfermented wine; nor have we found among Jews, Christians or Mohammedans any tradition of such a wine having ever existed in the country.

Rev. W. M. Thomas, D.D.; Rev. S. H. Calhoun; C. V. A. Van Dyke, D.D.; Rev. James Robertson; Rev. H. H. Jessup; Rev. John Wartabet, M.D.; James Black, Esq.; Michael Meshaka, doctor; Rev. John Crawford; R. W. Brigstocke, M.D., F.R.C.S.; Rev. James Wright, B.A."

Rev. Eli Smith, the well-known associate of Dr. Robinson, in his geographical researches, says: "When inquiring if there exists any such a thing as unfermented wine, I have uniformly been met with a stare of surprise. The very idea seems to be regarded an absurdity. The name for wine in Arabic is derived from the word which means to ferment."

Dr. Lourie and President Bartlett (travellers in Palestine) testify to the same. When we examine now the great encyclopedic authorities, forming their conclusions from the widest range of inquiry, they are unanimous in their agreement.

I quote from the latest—the great Schaff-Herzog encyclopedia, Art. Wine: "No one who duly weighs the evidence can believe that such a thing as unfermented wine is known in the country in which our Saviour lived during the days of His flesh. During the Passover Jews will not taste or touch fermented drinks in which grain has entered. But the fermented juice of the grape, prepared by Jews and kept carefully free from leaven, is the proper paschal wine. The truth of this can be learned from any intelligent Jew."

I have copious extracts to precisely the same effect, from Kitto's great work, McClintock and Strong's encyclopedia, Smith's large dictionary of the Bible, and from a dozen Jewish rabbis not quoted in this article, but for brevity's sake I forbear to give them.

Spain.

THE Evangelical Continental Society has just completed forty years of its existence, during which period enormous changes have taken place on the Continent. The secretary has lately paid a visit to Spain, and says: "Nothing could exceed the heartiness with which I was welcomed. This was especially the case at Camunas, where the presence for the first time of an English representative of the society seemed particularly cheering to this much-suffering community. Nothing can well be stranger than the appearance of this village, the houses of which being built around the four sides of a court-yard, little or nothing can be seen of them in the streets save white walls, pierced by an occasional doorway or a barred window. Its roadways are little better than channels for the retention of mud or dust, according to the season. But stranger far than the aspect of the place is its history during the last fifteen years. Liberalism in politics and freedom of conscience have here had an incessant battle to fight. The village has been assailed on every hand, but still holds out, though there are traitors in the camp. As regards the Protestants, their lot has been indeed a hard one. Nothing that ingenuity could devise has been left unattempted with a view of terrifying the humble folk who have gathered round the Gospel standard. Threats, expulsion from their homes, false accusations, loss of employment, and imprisonment, have all been endured. During the past year the advent of a new priest has only made matters worse. It is, indeed, a fierce 'fight of affliction' which these poor people, numbering some 100 or 150 persons, have to endure; and still they persevere. This very fact shows that the Gospel has taken hold of their hearts. Moreover, some forty or fifty children attend the day-school, and upon these young ones falls some of the obloquy which their parents have to endure. It was pleasant to see their bright faces as they stood marshalled round the patio, or inner court of the house, on a fine Sunday morning waiting for the order to sing their opening hymn, and then march into the adjoining chapel to be taught by the pastor and his wife."—Evangelical Christendom.

Our Church.

We are thankful for items of Church News compactly stated; or for marked copies or clippings from local exchanges, which we would not therwise see. To insure publication in next number, they must reach us by noon on Monday. A condensation of items is unavoidable

The Northwestern Academy.

THE Reformed Church is the foster-mother of the above-mentioned school. She has repeatedly acknowledged the responsibilities which result from this relationship. Synod after Synod has, in name of the Church, given the fullest endorsement to the institution, and "spoken comfortably" unto it. Herein we rejoice. Is it strange, however, if after four years of waiting our hearts begin to feel the proverbial effect of hope deferred?

It is needless to enlarge on the importance of the Academy. Quite needless, also, to speak again of the golden opportunities which are unquestionably before it. The Rev. Messrs. Skillman and Wyckoff—eye-witnesses—have stated not long ago in the columns of the INTELLIGENCER their earnest convictions in regard to these matters.

But I appeal to the Church for aid. If we are to have on the frontier an institution which shall be a credit to the denomination, we need fifty thousand dollars for endowment, and at least twenty thousand for buildings and apparatus. Only a fraction of these amounts can be secured from the churches belonging to the Classis of Iowa, for the most of those churches have been but recently organized. It is, therefore, to the Church at large, whose servants we are, that we humbly submit our request for help.

Especially to those whom God has blessed with abundant means does a request of this nature come. He, who has made them stewards of His possessions, here shows them how to discharge certain duties of their office to great advantage. One individual or family might endow the chair of Ancient Languages, another the chair of Mathematics, and so on,—the fund in each case bearing the donor's name and perpetuating it. So with the buildings. Aside from worthier motives, is it not a laudable ambition to have one's name associated forever with the sacred cause of learning, by erecting in the far West an Educational Hall which shall bear that name?

The gifts of others, however, are also requested. Would that the Church as a whole were so deeply interested in this, her youngest institution, that all the members would cheerfully contribute something toward its support or improvement. If every reader of these lines would kindly send even a small donation to the Treasurer, (Henry Hospers, Esq , Orange City, Iowa,) the aggregate should prove a welcome surprise to all. Let it be tried.

Gifts of books, suitable to young students, are also urgently desired for the Library.

During the recent session of the General Synod I was frequently cheered by the assurance: "We are going to do something for your school." Brethren, as the fall term is about to begin, and heavy expenses are to be incurred anew, will you not do something now?

J. A. DE SPELDER, Principal.

....FISHKILL, N. Y.—The Fishkill Times of the 18th gives the following account of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of the Rev. Francis M. Kip, D.D., as the pastor of the Reformed church:

"Sunday last was a red-letter day at the Reformed church in this village. It had been announced that Rev. Dr. Kip would preach an anniversary sermon, and the announcement brought a host of his friends from far and near, many former residents coming from distant towns to be present. The day was delightful, and the ladies had trimmed the church appropriately for the occasion. An evergreen arch which spanned the pulpit bore in large capitals '1836—MIZPAH—1886,' while the front of the desk was decorated with golden rod. The singing and chanting was fine and appropriate, the congregation joining heartily in the familiar hymns. The exercises were opened by Rev. Dr. Pingry, who read the Scripture lessons, offered prayer, and gave out the first hymn.

"Dr. Kip read the second hymn:

"'Mid scenes of confusion and creature complaints,
How sweet to my soul is communion with saints.'

After the singing of which he announced his text, Deut. 22: 7, 'Remember the days of old,' and in a clear voice delivered his sermon, which was listened to with marked attention and distinctly heard in all parts of the house. Space forbids our giving anything like a report of his discourse, which would need to be heard in full to be duly appreciated. He stated many facts connected with his call and settlement here fifty years ago, and the condition of the church when he came here, paying appropriate tributes to the memory of the good men and women of the church who stayed up his hands during his ministry of over a third of a century. When he assumed the ministry here there were 114 members connected with the church. During his pastorate 209 were received on confession of faith, and 198 on certificate. Of the former, 32 were received on one occasion, 40 on another, and over 30 on another. Five young men who united with the church during his pastorate are now laboring in the ministry. He gave an interesting account of his labors since leaving here sixteen years ago, and said he was the oldest graduate of the New Brunswick Theological Seminary now in active service. He spoke of his recent bereavement, and feelingly thanked his Fishkill friends for donating a plot for his family in their cemetery.

"In closing, Dr. Kip exhibited a manuscript sermon of Domine Rysdyck, written in Dutch, with text and quotations in Hebrew, which was preached in this church July 20th, 1766, a little over 120 years ago. The choir and congregation then sang two verses of hymn 126, beginning:

"'One family, we dwell in Him;
One church above, beneath.'

After which Rev. Wm. Stevens, of the M. E. Church, pronounced the benediction.

"After the close of the services a large portion of the congregation remained to grasp the hand of the pastor whom they had known so long and loved so dearly. But a few of all the throng remembered his coming here half a century ago, though many of the pews contained the second and third generation of descendants of those who then welcomed his arrival. Never a strong man, he has been preserved through continued labors, and now, although having nearly reached fourscore years, his general health is good. For the last ten years he has been chaplain of the U. S. Marine Hospital at Stapleton, Staten Island."

....HOPE COLLEGE.—The exterior of the President's house is completed and presents an attractive appearance. The interior finish must await the securing of the needed funds.

Van Vleck Hall has been painted throughout and otherwise improved in appearance as well as in convenience, at an outlay of $500. The Library has been brought down to the first story into more ample and safer rooms. It is expected that in Sept., 1887, a new recitation hall will be ready for use, as subscriptions for that purpose are in progress.

....PERSONAL.—The Rev. J. A. De Spelder devoted a part of his vacation to a visit to his old charge at Macon, Mich., and enjoyed a very cordial reception. The local paper, mentioning that he occupied the pulpit for three Sabbaths, says that "the church was not large enough to admit all who came to hear him."....Mr. Albert Oltmans, of Grand Rapids, Mich., was ordained as a foreign missionary, in the Second Church of that city, by the Classis of Grand Rapids, on Thursday evening, Aug. 12th. The service occupied three hours. Rev. Mr. Oltmans was to be married to Miss Alice Voorhorst on Monday last, the 23d. They were to begin their journey to Nagasaki, Japan, at once, where Mr. Oltmans' special work will be the establishment of an academy for young men....The Rev. Dr. C. F. A. Klein, of Hoboken, N. J., has resigned as Principal of the Martha Institute, to enter upon a pastoral charge.

....ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The new church, composed of young people from the First Church, where the services are in Dutch, began its services in English with much promise on the 15th, in the Unitarian chapel. The Rev. D. J. De Bey, of Clymer, N. Y., preached, and the audiences at both the morning and evening service filled the chapel. The Rochester Herald says: "The Second Reformed Church is composed of earnest, intelligent Holland-Americans, and starts out with encouraging prospects, Much enthusiasm is manifested by the members, and the church will undoubtedly prove a permanent and flourishing one."

....GHENT, N. Y.—The festival, managed by the ladies of the Reformed church and held on August 12th, passed off very pleasantly, drew a large company, and yielded over $150 net.

Summer Work Among the Poor.

JULY and August are always trying months with the poor, but this summer there has been more lassitude, sickness and suffering than usual, especially among those who shrink from making known their wants. Most of those who care for the poor are out of the city, making it very hard for the class who are compelled to remain. To mingle with such as the Rev. C. C. Goss does at the immense meetings on the Battery Park on Sunday afternoons, as well as in his visitations among them, and not have the means to relieve, is painful in the extreme. During this heated term $100 a week are needed to meet the various cases of actual destitution, together with obligations in connection with the Battery service. Contributions may be sent to the Treasurer, J. W. Pratt, 75 Fulton street, which will be duly acknowledged.

The above statement comes to us from those engaged in Christian work in the lower part of this city. The Sabbath afternoon audiences on the Battery number as high as from 3,000 to 4,000 persons, who preserve admirable order, join heartily in singing familiar hymns, and listen attentively to the preaching. The effort is a necessary one, is proving itself effective and is worthy of the support of Christians of all denominations. We hope that the members of the churches who are enjoying the rest and invigorating air of retreats in the mountains and on the seashore will not forget the poor they have left behind them, crowded in tenements, breathing a hot and polluted atmosphere, hard at work and bearing heavy burdens.

The General Outlook.

....Every believer in the Holy Scriptures recognizes the importance of movements among the Jews toward a belief in Jesus Christ as the Messiah and Redeemer of Israel. The Congregationalist of last week contains the following summary of good news from various countries:

The deeply interesting movement among the Jews of Southern Russia, initiated or headed by Dr. Rabinowitch, of Kischineff, seems to be not only progressing, but deepening. A recent German observer reports as follows regarding it. The meeting-house in Kischineff is always full. At one end stands a table resembling an altar, on each side of which is a reading-desk, bearing respectively the inscription, "Faith, Love, Hope," and "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." On the former lies a roll of the Law and the Old Testament; on the latter, a Hebrew New Testament. Ascending one of these desks, Rabinowitch pronounced a confession of sin to the following effect:

Guilt have we heaped upon ourselves more than any people; shame more than any generation; joy has gone from us, and our hearts have become arid in their sins. The place of our yearnings has been taken from us as a pledge; the temple, which was the dwelling of our God, has been destroyed because of our iniquity; our refuge is burned into a wilderness. Lord, our God, we cried unto Thee; but because of our sins Thou didst remain far from us. We had turned our back on Thee. But now we return to Thee.... have mercy upon us. Convert Thou those who are forsaking their wickedness, according to the promises which Thou hast given to the children of men in Jesus the Messiah, our Lord, etc.

Then followed a sermon on the narrative of the man with an infirmity at the Pool of Bethesda, in the fifth chapter of John, which culminated in the following application: Jesus approaches the five porches, all of them full of sick persons. They have been there alongside of the five Books of Moses, without moving, for more than 1,800 years, notwithstanding that the healing waters have been constantly troubled; they have lain ill so long that at last they have become incapable of feeling that they are sick. And now the Lord draws nigh and asks the man who has been afflicted with an infirmity, not merely thirty-eight years, but thirty-eight jubilees, and asks:

Wilt thou be made whole? Dost thou still desire to be made whole? Art thou willing to be at last made whole? Look on this assembly; look at the great host of those, in this great Russian Empire, whose eyes are turned toward Kischineff, who are eagerly searching in the New Testament, and listen to their thousand-fold cry, "Jesus, our Brother, whom we have so long blasphemed, despised, misprized, help us!" Yea, Thou who didst bear our sickness and our sins, save us.

It is said, too, that, as a matter of fact, thousand of Jews all over Russia are eagerly gazing toward Kischineff. One traveller reports that, even in the very centre of the empire, he found them exactly informed as to what was going on there; and that small communities or churches are being formed on the model of that over which Dr. Rabinowitch presides. Elsewhere, too, the dry bones seem to be stirring, Galician Jews are corresponding with the managers of the mission to the Jews in Leipzig; and a missionary in Persia is said to have been pressed by the Jews themselves to preach to them in their synagogues regarding Jesus, the crucified One

These things should surely encourage us all to go on working and praying that the kingdom of God may come. Another effect, too, they should have—to stop the tendency to whittle away the meaning of the wonderful prophecies of the wonderful old Book regarding the gathering in of the Jews and the end of the ages. Who knows how soon those who shall still have eyes to see may have the joy of seeing the signs of the near approach of the Son of Man. "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

....The religious interest in this country, exhibited last winter, apparently continues. The denominational papers report gratifying additions on confession of faith during July and August to churches in all parts of the land.

....The agents of the Bible Society make a rather startling report from Maine. During the past year they visited 30,004 families and found that 14,653 attend no church, that 15,253 children attend no Sabbath-school, and that 1,662 Protestant families were without the Bible. In the town of Gray 264 out of 361 Protestant families were non-church-goers, and 325 children were not attending a Sunday-school.

....The temperance festival of the Band of Hope children, held a few weeks ago in the Crystal Palace, London, was attended by over 60,000 people. Fifteen thousand children had part in the choral concerts, and the singing was such as is seldom heard. One of the features of the occasion was the presence of Mr. Shurley, the founder of the Band of Hope.

....One thousand carpenters of Berlin have addressed the following petition to the German Chancellor:

"Prince Bismarck: You have declared that you will not legally forbid Sunday work until convinced by the voice of the laborers that they demand rest on that day. Here, then, is their voice. We declare implicitly, that we desire a law which will grant us protection in the enjoyment of freedom from work on Sunday. Sunday labor leads to misery, crime and vagabondism." Strange that Bismarck should need to be enlightened on this point!—Lutheran Observer.

....The Duke of Westminster, presiding over a meeting in the interests of army total abstinence, remarked that when a member of the committee on temperance, some years ago, reliable evidence was laid before him that a great part of the invalided guards and the greater part of the crime committed by the brigade was owing solely and entirely to drink.

The International Missionary Convention.

BY REV. J. A. DAVIS

IN the early summer of 1884, Rev. Wm. Osborn, a former missionary of the Methodist Church to India, proposed a convention of returned missionaries. Though the time was short, he succeeded in gathering at the Wesley Park camp-meeting ground, on the Canada side of Niagara Falls, a goodly number during the latter part of August. The convention was so interesting and profitable that those present determined that it should not be the only one; and a permanent organization was formed, a constitution adopted, officers elected, and the new association began its uncertain mission. The uncertainty lay in the work the Lord had for it to do rather than in the wish of its members.

Two articles of its constitution will show its object, and who may become its members.

"The object of the Union shall be to promote the mutual sympathy and coöperation of missionaries in their work, and to hold annual meetings for the discussion of important questions connected with the work, and the diffusion of missionary intelligence."

"Returned missionaries of all evangelical churches, whether at home temporarily or permanently, shall be eligible to membership, and may become members by signing the constitution and paying an admission fee of fifty cents."

The second meeting was held last summer at the same place.

The Thousand Island Park Association gave the Union an invitation to hold its convention this year in the tabernacle of that Association, and generously offered free entertainment to all missionaries who came. This invitation was accepted, and the Union assembled August 4th at the Thousand Island Park on Wellesley Island, one of the largest of the Thousand Islands. About sixty missionaries were present, representing Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America, and the New Hebrides Islands.

Eight or ten different parts of China were represented; as many of India; three of Japan, two of Burmah, two of Siam; besides, there were missionaries from Assam, Bulgaria, Buenos Ayres, Greece, Italy, New Hebrides, Western Africa, Zulu Land, and possibly from one or two other countries.

Twenty of these missionaries were, or are, connected with the Methodist missions; thirteen with the American Board; twelve with Presbyterian missions; seven with the Baptist; five with our own Dutch Church missions; one with the missions of the United Brethren; and the writer does not know to what society the others belonged. While most of the missionaries present were from the Northern States of our country, the Methodist Church in the South was represented by the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Cunnyngham, and the Presbyterian Church, South, by Rev. Dr. Leyburn; and both the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches of Canada were represented. While men were in the majority, the ladies presented a working minority; in their number was a young Chinese lady studying medicine in this country preparatory to going back to her own land as a medical missionary.

At the risk of making unfair distinctions the writer yields to the temptation to mention some who were present. Among them, the gentle and courteous Rev. Dr. Gracey who, as President of the Union, has assured its success; Rev. Dr. Happer, made venerable by forty-two years connection with the Canton Mission of the Presbyterian Church rather than venerable because of lack of vigor; the scholarly Warren, who has succeeded in finding the Garden of Eden at the North Pole before others have been able to find the Pole itself; the heroic Wilson, too modest to tell his thrilling story of those awful days at Chieng Mai seventeen years ago, when the Presbyterian mission there was ready to be offered, and the executioners even more ready to slay; the sweet-singing Chandler of India; the eloquent Parks, lately editor of the India Evangelical Review; the witty Smith, whose successes, since the famine and the fever in North China, have thrilled many praying, waiting souls; the venerable appearing, yet comparatively youthful Goodrich, who has perhaps travelled over more of China and preached the Gospel more widely than any other American missionary living; the modest Young, of Canada, whose simple story of the Lord's work among the North American Indians opened many a fount of tears; the gentle Dr. House, who for more than thirty years toiled to save bodies and souls in Siam; Mellen, who for near a quarter of a century preached to the Zulus of Africa; Rev. Dr. Thompson, who for twenty-four years has done faithful service in the Presbyterian mission of Japan; Baldwin of Foo Chow, all the better a Doctor of Divinity in the Methodist Church because educated in and once a member of the Second Reformed Dutch Church of Somerville; Comfort, of Assam Baptist missions, but a boy of our own Dutch Church, and with a heart still warm toward it. The readers of the INTELLIGENCER need no introduction to our own persevering Booth of Japan, nor our honored Chamberlain of India, who were there.

Sessions were held each afternoon and evening and, beginning with the fourth day, each morning also. The first half hour or hour was devoted to prayer and conference; these meetings proved the best of all. Rarely has the writer attended a meeting like that of Sabbath morning. It seemed as though the Lord's children had come so close together and so close to their heavenly Father, that each could feel the throbbings of the others' hearts, and each could feel a Father's arms around the whole company drawing all closer together and nearer to Himself. After that meeting we could not have made much of our own denominations, if we had wished.

At one of those meetings the writer sat with a Methodist behind, a Congregationalist in front, a Baptist on one side, and a Presbyterian on the other. The "Amen" of the Methodist brother was echoed more softly by the Baptist, and whispered with deep feeling by the Congregationalist; but it slipped by the vocal organs of the Presbyterian and dropped in two tears. We realized more than ever there that we were one in Christ.

All through the meetings this spirit prevailed. That there was perfect unanimity of opinion must not be supposed; nor was there any hesitation in expressing views that differed from those presented by others. The men and women there were not made of wax; firm, decided, and of deep convictions, they were ready to let those convictions be known; but they had been fighting the devil too long to think of fighting each other.

After the morning devotional meeting, the rest of the time until noon was spent, first with business, then discussion of some practical subject relating to missions. Rev. E. S. Booth, of Japan, opened the first of these discussions on the teaching of English in mission schools. While those of Japan advocated English teaching, it was noticeable that few, if any other missionaries, regarded it as wise in other countries. Dr. Chamberlain opened another discussion, in a paper that was requested for publication, regarding missionary coöperation and union. It would be but echoing the sentiment of others to say that this was eloquent, explicit and sensible, and probably had not a dissenting missionary in the Convention. It took the ground that there should be cooperation everywhere, and union of churches of like order on mission fields; having, in short, but one Presbyterian, one Baptist, one Methodist denomination, etc., in a mission country. It advocated the very course our General Synod so heartily adopted at its meeting last June.

While the mornings were more profitable to members of the Convention, the afternoons and evenings were of more general interest; as then addresses were delivered, presenting the peoples among whom the missionaries labored, the religions, habits, customs, the difficulties and successes of mission work among them. Some of these addresses were illustrated by the use of the blackboard; others by showing articles of dress, weapons, idols, articles used in heathen worship; in short, whatever might help to present the peculiarities of the people. In this way the Convention became a school of nations, in which the teachers were the men and women who had gained their knowledge of those nations at the fountain head. Probably in no place in the world can so much information be gained in so short a time of the various peoples of the earth as was given at that assembly.

While missionary ladies addressed meetings of their own sex, yet several spoke to audiences in which men were expected to be present. The simple story, in excellent English, of her life and purpose, told by the Chinese lady; the description of the famine, followed by the fever, as given by Mrs. Smith, of North China; the faithful endurance of native Christians of Burmah, as Miss Higby related their trials; the search for forty years of the Hindoo, as in all parts of his native land he sought pardon of his sins, but did not find until he found it listening to the Gospel, and the Gospel work of the converted "jail bird" of India, as told by Mr. Parks—all were interesting, even thrilling. But to describe even a few of the addresses is impossible.

Two or three surprises met the writer. While so much was said of difficulties and trials, hardly a word was spoken of individual sacrifices and privations. Each one seemed to be a practical, common-sense man or woman, who believed in missions above all other parts of Christian work, yet acted and talked exactly as do those who toil among people in Christian lands.

It remains to add that the Convention adopted resolutions regarding the treatment of the Chinese in our country, the opium traffic, and the desirability of a World's Day of Prayer for Missions.

When the time for the next annual gathering comes, if the readers of THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER wish to spend a profitable week, and learn more in that time of the various heathen nations than will probably be learned in a year otherwise, let them attend the Convention of the International Missionary Union. All of its sessions are open to the public, and everybody is made welcome.

News of the Week.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 18.—The Government of Great Britain intends to introduce at the next session of Parliament a measure giving local government to Ireland, England, Scotland and Wales, on a basis prepared by Lord Churchill....There was a renewal of fighting between Orangemen and Catholics at Belfast yesterday....Eighteen new cases of cholera and seven deaths reported at Trieste....Another Afghan war cloud is rising. War may break out any moment....The centennial anniversary of the death of Frederick the Great of Prussia was celebrated at Sans-Souci yesterday. ....The Mexican question is still open. Little progress has been made....The State Department at Washington has received official information from Japan of the acceptance of the extradition treaty ...The Commissioner of Public Works, Rollin M. Squire, and Maurice B. Flynn, have been indicted the second time....New and startling developments are being made in the accounts of the defaulting treasurer Gray, of Boston....Several persons were drowned in West Virginia by floods caused by the recent terrific storms.

THURSDAY, 19.—The Queen of England visited the exhibition at Edinburgh and was greeted with great enthusiasm....Cholera has broken out in Austria, Hungary, and still continues to advance in Italy....The President of Uruguay was wounded while entering the theatre at Montevideo. The assassin was arrested and killed by an infuriated mob....Quiet has been restored again in Belfast....Serious riots have occurred at Nagasaki, Japan, between the Japanese and Chinese....Gray, the defaulter of Boston, committed suicide by shooting himself through the heart....The Irish National League Convention of about 2,000 delegates is in session at Chicago....A fatal railroad accident occurred near Brattleborough, Vt. The bridge over West river broke down, throwing the cars into the water. Two men were killed and eight injured....Mrs. Edwin D. Morgan, of New York, died at Newport yesterday of typhoid fever.... Three British schooners were seized by the revenue cutter "Corwin" for violating seal fishery laws in Behring's seas ..Jefferson Davis made a speech at Mississippi City with his usual advocacy of rebel principles.

FRIDAY, 20.—J. J. Clancy, of Dublin, thinks the Irish will not let the session lapse without a determined effort to find out what Ireland's fate this winter is going to be....Nine policemen are in jail in Belfast, charged with unnecessarily firing upon citizens during the recent riots....The jury in the anarchist's trial have found seven anarchists guilty of murder in the first degree and decide that they shall be hung; and the punishment meted out to the eighth man is 15 years' imprisonment. The seven men are Spies, Fielden, Parsons, Lingg, Schwab, Engel and Fisher; and the eighth is Neebe....Graham's second trip through the whirlpool rapids at Niagara was made yesterday. He used the same barrel as that used in the first trip, but with his head exposed. The weight of the waves did not effect him, but the spray nearly strangled him, and $1,000, he says, would not tempt him to repeat the trip. He was rescued just in time, as he was in a bad place drifting among the rocks and waves, and would probably have been killed if not taken out....Samuel G. Snelling, who embezzled $350,000 of the funds of the Lowell Bleachery Company, was arrested to answer to a new and distinct charge of embezzling $39,683. This charge is made by Mr. Jackson, head of the banking firm of Jackson & Curtis.

SATURDAY, 21.—In the House of Commons the Tory policy was bitterly assailed, and Lord Churchill was charged with having been the cause of the Belfast riots....A British steamer, loaded with tea, foundered while leaving the China Sea....A farewell banquet was given to Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes at Liverpool....Forty houses were destroyed by fire at Bourg, France....Sixteen new cases of cholera and three deaths at Trieste....The anarchists in Chicago are greatly excited over the result of the trial, and trouble is feared

(Continued on page thirteen.)

Our Contributors.

Unrest.

BY LILLIAN GREY.

O HEART, be brave!
And, though thy dearest, fairest hopes decay,
Hopes all fulfilled shall crown another day;
Thou shalt not always grieve beside a grave.

O heart, be strong!
Be valiant to do battle for the right;
Hold high truth's stainless flag; walk in the light,
And bow not weakly to the rule of wrong.

O heart, be still!
If clouds arise, keep in the pathway straight;
If that seem hedged, be patient still, and wait,
And meekly say, "It is His holy will."

O heart, be calm!
The fiercest storm hath always peaceful end;
Dark clouds a background to the sunset lend;
For every bruise there is a healing balm.

O heart, be wise!
Forget thy disappointments, loss, and pain;
Put by thy restlessness and longings vain;
True happiness awaits 'neath stormless skies.

O heart, be glad!
For thou art heir unto a kingdom fair;
Thy joys here lost are safely gathered there;
O heart be brave, be strong, and calm, and glad!

A Dutch Heirloom.

BY JAMES E. WOOD.

CHAPTER I.

DEWITT FANSHAW, to use an every-day figure, was out of sorts. Sooth to say, he had spent most of the day in railing at the fickleness of that most fickle of divinities, Dame Fortune, until, to give relief to his pent up feelings, he had sallied forth for a stroll on Fifth avenue, in the hope to find in its gay tumult distraction of thought if not entire forgetfulness of the theme so fraught with disquietude and oppression to his spirits. Yet the diversities of the scene failed to smooth the scowl that disfigured his face with repellant corrugations, or to soften the moody expression that suffused his eyes, giving to his appearance that dejected air which from time immemorial has endured as the facial livery of the unfortunate.

As he scanned the bright November sky, flecked here and there by a rainless cloud, he mused half audibly: "Just as fair and promising as shine the heavens above seemed my future until a few short hours ago. Perchance the auguries of this smiling firmament will prove as delusive as have all things else of this false world."

These cynical reflections were interrupted by the sudden approach of a handsome turnout, resplendent with the gold and glitter of newly imported harness. A young lady occupant, of rare yet haughty beauty, elegantly attired, and with that indescribable air of good breeding which is the inheritance of generations of gentility, bowed distantly to Dewitt, as the spirited horses shot by. The sole occupant of the carriage beside this pale flower of an over-cultured stem, a young man faultlessly attired, was to all appearances too engrossed with the management of the horses to permit his gaze to be diverted by any object beyond the line of the reins he held so deftly.

"Marcia Van Bolingbroke could not have learnt of the change in my affairs," Dewitt continued in soliloquy. "No! and if so it would make no alteration with her. To-morrow is the day she wrote me her orchids were to arrive. To-morrow I shall laugh away the doubts of to-day. Yet Charley Van Bolingbroke,—but Charley is ever so wrapped up in the horse flesh he has in hand! Its strange though, such conduct just now," and Dewitt bent lower his head and gazed with deeper scrutiny and augmenting concern at the sidewalk, as if to extract a reassuring response from its cold and stony front.

The bell in the Collegiate Dutch Church tolled off the hour.

"Four o'clock! I'll dine at the club."

The club in question, to which he now bent his steps, sustained the reputation of being the most exclusive as well as the most conservative in the metropolis. Despite the prevailing radicalism of the times, it was this feature of conservatism that in no small measure had made it a favorite resort with him.

At the club, trusting to the obscurity of a remote corner of the reading room and the friendly screen of a file of a society journal, he hoped to pass a few hours observant yet unobserved. Notwithstanding this care to escape attention, he was espied by a knot of club men who, with the ready facility of their class, immediately took him up as the theme of their conversation.

"What's the trouble with Fanshaw," remarked one of these opulent idlers, "he looks as if he had made a bad investment."

"Why, haven't you heard the news," rejoined another.

"Not a syllable beyond that of his spinster Aunt Katherine Dewitt's death. I fail to see, however, why her demise should make him so grumpy. Her millions ought in some measure to assuage the poignancy of his grief."

"But the old girl hasn't left her millions to Fanshaw."

A long, low whistle escaped the auditor in lieu of other expression of surprise.

"Yes," continued the interlocutor, "after lavishing her wealth during her life on Dewitt, and giving the poor fellow, and all the world besides, every reason to suppose he would succeed to the bulk of her fortune on her death, she virtually disinherits him; for, beyond a few gimcracks in the way of family relics and a beggarly annuity of six hundred, he gets nothing. But Fanshaw is coming this way. When I try to extend my sympathy to a fellow in misfortune, I am sure to contract a seven-day attack of ennui. Gentlemen, suppose we adjourn to the billiard parlor."

As they thus cleverly eluded Dewitt, he passed out of the club's portal never again to enter it.

On the way homeward he had ample time to ponder and digest this first lesson in the school of adversity. He could gather from it none of the romance with which he had witnessed it invested on the stage. Neither could he bring to bear in this emergency any of the heroism which in print is so ready to the grasp of the unfortunate.

Without breaking the gloom diffused through his room by the deepening twilight, Dewitt flung himself into an easy chair before the spacious fireplace, and raking the smouldering Liverpool, resigned himself to the tranquilizing effect of the magic glow with which it lit up the room. At times his eye would glance around at the comfort, elegance and refinement of his surroundings. Wherever space afforded, racks of books occupied it; on the walls hung choice paintings and engravings, and rare etchings, vying in their artistic merit with well chosen articles of bric-à brac, placed at the most judicious points to relieve the monotony of the print and canvas embellishments of the apartment.

How long Dewitt would have prolonged these solitary and scantily illumined reveries, had not his eye chanced on a letter lying on his table, there is no telling. A faint odor of heliotrope blent with the air as he took up this dainty missive. Striking a light, he tore open the envelope, and as he read all the blood in his veins seemed to mount to his face, only to recede in a reactionary spasm, leaving it pale and rigid as marble. Slowly and deliberately he tore this letter into fragments and cast them to the flame. From a cabinet he next took a richly mounted miniature. One lingering glance at the beautiful face it revealed, and, along with the letter, it passed to the flame. But this struggle between love and pride was too much for him, and with head bowed low on his hands he gave vent to an agony of emotion in half suppressed sobs which threatened the rending of his very being.

Dewitt Fanshaw, be it said, failed to make an appearance at the Van Bolingbroke mansion on the morrow. Despite the absenteeism of so clever a connoisseur, Marcia's orchids, as oblivious to the fact as was the proud Knickerbocker beauty indifferent to it, flourished in all the caprice and wantonness of its countless blossoms, lading the air of the conservatory with a delicacy of fragrance which by far outrivalled the intoxicating perfume of many a rare and costly exotic.

(To be continued.)

The Labor Question.

BY JAMES DEMAREST, JR., D.D.

IN the settlement of any question involving the welfare of society, there are certain great principles which need to be taken into account and suitably applied. It is in this way that the labor question must be dealt with if it is to be satisfactorily resolved. At present we are drifting about on an agitated sea, not knowing which way to steer. If we can get sight of the headlands, or of a well-recognized beacon, shining out over the troubled waves, we shall have something certain and definite by which to direct our course. Doubtless, there are such landmarks, if we can only come within sight of them. To point out some of these is the purpose of this paper.

The first great principle which demands recognition, in our attempts to adjust the differences between labor and capital, is the sacredness of the individual. The social philosophers complain, and with reason, that laborers are too often regarded as mere tools in the hands of capital. A business depression occurs, and the mill is stopped on account of the state of the market, and the tools, that is, the wage-workers, are laid by till capital pleases to take them up again. Meanwhile, these human tools suffer all the distresses of men with families dependent upon them, whose support is cut off. The remedy for this state of things, however, would not be found in the system of socialism which these philosophers advocate. For, supposing that it were possible for socialism to secure steady employment and suitable remuneration for labor, the system would still make men tools, saying to them, in effect, that they must live by bread alone, and repressing the incentives to a larger ambition and a higher exertion. Socialism fails, equally with the present order of things, to take into account the totality of a human being. The need is to emphasize individuality,—to deal with men who labor as men, not as mere tools of capital on the one hand, nor as parts of a great social machine on the other. We are too apt to think and speak of "the laboring masses," losing sight of the individuals who compose these masses. A capitalist stands out in conspicuous individuality; a laborer is lost in the general level of his class. To correct this is the first step in the needed reform.

I shall be met here by the argument that this is a purely economical question, and sentimental considerations have nothing to do with it. But I ask the objector to take notice that "sentimental considerations," as he terms them, are precisely the ones that are forcing themselves to the front in this controversy. The question is one of justice and fair play,—whether it is right that capital should receive ten times as much as labor, (that is about the present proportion), of their joint earnings; whether a system is right which creates a few millionaires, and leaves the great mass of toilers farther and still farther behind in the race for wealth. And I ask him still farther to observe that economical questions are inseparably bound up with moral questions—that the regulation of industry finds its only stable basis in a recognition of the rights of man, and there must be continual upheavals until this basis is found and adopted. The days of privilege and prerogative have gone by, and any attempt to assert these, especially in this land of freedom and equality, is an attempt to antagonize the spirit of the age—to set one's self in opposition to the great moral forces that are moving with ever-increasing strength in the direction of individual rights. No question of any kind is ever settled till it is settled right; and the labor question must be settled right, if it is to stay settled.

The efforts put forth by the laboring classes themselves, in many of their organizations, betray a disregard of this prime element of justice, as concerns individual rights. That wage-workers should combine for the protection and assertion of their rights against the encroachments of capital is entirely natural and appropriate; but these organizations sometimes exhibit as tyrannical a spirit as ever could be charged to the account of capital. The unsettling of trade over large areas of country, involving serious discomfort and loss to innocent multitudes, by means of strikes, which have no motive but personal spite or caprice; the boycotting of parties who, for some reason, have rendered themselves obnoxious; the persecution of those who, in the exercise of their judgment and personal liberty, assume to decide on their own course in the matter of work and wages, declining to accept the dictation of the societies;—all these things argue an entire misconception of the principles which lie at the foundation of the reform that is called for in the relations between capital and labor. It is simply substituting one tyranny for another. The corporation shows itself to be equally soulless, whether on the side of capital or labor. The rights of the individual call for recognition, and so long as these are ignored on either side, the controversy cannot be settled. Much might be hoped for from the labor organizations were they controlled by the counsels of wisdom and moderation, were their aims singly directed to the securing of justice and right. But the injudicious and manifestly unrighteous course which they too often pursue seriously prejudices the cause of labor, repelling as it does the sympathy and support of an impartial public sentiment. For a labor union to say to a laborer that he shall not work unless he joins the union, is an infringement of personal liberty, serious enough to rouse the resistance of every self-respecting man. The agencies which speak for labor, and work in its behalf, need to learn the fundamental principles of their cause. The rights of labor can never be vindicated by wrongs done to the individual laborer.

The principle of individual rights being recognized. the next thing to be considered is the proportion of the increase of the wealth of the country which the laborer is entitled to share. That the condition of the laboring class as a whole has greatly improved in the last fifty years there can be no question; but the question is as to the ratio of improvement compared with other classes, especially with the capital class. Is it right that the share of the laborer in the wealth which he does so much to create should fall so far below the share which the capitalist enjoys? The last census of the United States (1880), compared with that of 1850, shows that, in the thirty years intervening, the increase in the net product of manufactures was more than 400 per cent, while the increase in the average annual wages of labor for the same period was about 40 per cent. Thus it is evident that capital has received the lion's share of the enormous increase of the national wealth. Now the question is: Is this right? Is it the due proportion of the gain of capital and labor respectively, which is indicated in these figures; or do they show, on the other hand, that a readjustment of the ratio of gain as between the two is called for? The answer to this question is to be determined, not by the capricious claims of either party, but by what is due to each on the strict basis of equity. The claim put forth in behalf of labor, by some of its advocates, that wealth can only be rightly expressed in the terms of labor, is altogether extravagant and cannot be allowed. So, on the other hand, the claim of capital, that it alone is to be considered, and labor is simply its tool, is equally extravagant and not to be allowed. The true relation between capital and labor is that of mutual dependence, and so of coöperation, in which neither shall boast itself against the other. Each is, in fact, helpless without the other. If the two could come together in recognition of this, and on a basis of perfectly equality, the way would be open for the adjustment of their differences.

The question to be resolved is certainly grave enough to demand the calmest and most candid consideration of both parties, in a spirit of natural respect for each other's rights and powers. The question is as to the proportionate share of capital and labor respectively, in the results of their joint production. On what basis shall this ratio be adjusted so as to secure the equitable rights of both parties in interest? If this question can be answered to the satisfaction of both, there is an end of the controversy—the labor problem is solved. That this question can be so answered in a calm and candid comparison of views, in the spirit just indicated, there can be no doubt. The investigation may be a prolonged one, or, rather, it must be. It will include tentative efforts, and the teaching of a varied experience; but, conducted in the right spirit, it cannot fail to result sooner or later in a good understanding and an equitable adjustment of conflicting claims. As a contribution in this direction, there is one point of the controversy to which I now call attention in concluding this paper.

It is said, in justification of the large accumulations of wealth in certain hands, that skill is entitled to larger remuneration than mere mechanical labor, which is readily admitted. But the argument goes further and aims to prove that the claims of such skill are to be acknowledged continuously, and even cumulatively, as the enterprises initiated and carried forward thereby grow to larger and still larger proportions, society adjusting itself more and more to the changed conditions which these enterprises, successfully carried on, have brought about. For instance, here is a man who possesses marked skill as a railroad manager. By the consolidation of connecting lines, and the providing of special facilities for travel and traffic, he has built up a business which is of advantage to every employé of the company, as well as to the general public. His services being greater than those of any other man concerned in conducting the enterprise, he is entitled to a larger share of its profits than any other. But how much larger? That is the question. Shall the standard for determining this be found in the state of things which existed prior to his undertaking the business of developing the railway system of the country; or, shall one seek for it among the changed conditions which his enterprise, and that of others engaged in similar undertakings, have brought about? Many men were needed formerly to do the work which his enterprise and organizing talents have enabled him to accomplish. Shall he receive for his services a sum equal to what the thousands or tens of thousands of men needed to bring about the same results under the old conditions would have received for their labor? His railroad is doing what it would perhaps have required a hundred thousand men to accomplish before the days of railroads; shall he therefore have the pay of a hundred thousand men? Or, on the other hand, shall we not take into account the complete revolution in industrial and social conditions which the railroad system of transportation has wrought, and, remembering how the world has moved forward in this regard, place our standard of judgment forward amid these changed conditions? It must certainly come to this. The world after a time forgets the things that are behind. Society insists upon adjusting itself to new conditions. In the transition period, especially when changes take place rapidly, there will inevitably be confusion in this matter; but sooner or later a practical oblivion covers the former state of things from view, as the world addresses itself to the conditions which it meets in the living present.

This principle is recognized in the legislation on the subject of patent rights. The claim of an inventor to receive large profit from his invention is recognized as valid, and is specially provided for by law; but by the very same law a limit is set to the time during which he is allowed to reap a special advantage from his inventive skill. After that his invention is adjudged to be public property. He is entitled to profit by it for whatever it may be worth—to monopolize it, in fact, for a certain period—but he has no right to monopolize it indefinitely, even though it is the product of his own brain. Is not this principle applicable in the relation to society of those men who, by sagacity and foresight, have been of great service to the public in devising and carrying forward their schemes of enterprise, and are entitled to a large share of the wealth thus accumulated, but to whose gains society feels—with a sort of instinct which warns of approaching danger—that some limit should be set? If the gains of an inventor from his invention must be limited in the interest of society, does not the voice of prudence and a regard for the general well-being, demand a similar limitation in the gains which capital brings to its shrewd manipulators? It seems to me beyond question that some such limit should be found, and that sooner or later it will be found.

It has been supposed heretofore that the two principles of competition and self-interest were the opposing forces which, in their mutual antagonism, would maintain the equilibrium of the industrial system; but the logic of events will oblige political economy to revise this time-honored theory. More and more does it become evident that these two forces are the upper and the nether millstone, between which the poor wageworker is being ground to powder. A new force must come in—the force of justice and right. Sentimental considerations, as they are called, must come to the front. Enlightened self interest is doubtless a legitimate factor in the working out of the industrial problem, and competition likewise has its place; but the mutual good-will of human brotherhood must be our main reliance. As this is realized more and more, we shall approach nearer and nearer to the solution of our problem.

Sketches from Manitou, Colorado.

EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER: The town of Manitou Springs is situated in the heart of the Rockies, and on every hand the mountains rise abruptly from the valley, while above all glistens in the sunlight the snow on Pike's Peak.

The mountains are very different from our Catskills, which are green to their summits, for here they are bare and rocky. They do not appear as lofty as we New Yorkers expected, but that is easily accounted for when we know that the valleys in this region are higher above the sea level than Mount Washington.

The town is supported by the summer boarders who flock here from all parts of our wide land to drink the beneficial waters, of which there are two kinds, the iron and the soda. The latter is also used for bathing, and there is a beautiful bath-house built in Queen Anne style.

There are three prominent first-class hotels; but one can find board at almost any price, for every house takes a few summer guests. At the hotel where we are passing a few weeks the table is excellent, an abundance of fresh fruit and vegetables being supplied.

The are many superb drives through the canons, and to different points of interest, so varied that one may go two miles or thirty-two.

One of our pleasantest days was spent in visiting Monument Park, which wonderful and interesting place is situated about ten miles from Manitou. Huge stones, standing on end and topped with flat slabs, look as though the hand of man must have arranged them in some past age, to be the wonder of following generations. The ride to the Park is over the prairies, and, among other curiosities, we saw wild rabbits, prairie-dogs, and a cayote, which is the fox of these regions. It is almost as large as a wolf, with conspicuous ears, beautifully soft fur, and a long bushy tail.

Another excursion which was very enjoyable was to the Cheyenne Canons, which are among the finest in this part of the country. There are two, resembling each other in many respects, for in each there is a rushing torrent, and in each the mountains rise precipitously on either hand. It is at the head of the South Cheyenne Canon that our great writer, Helen Hunt Jackson, is buried, and the spot of her last resting-place is visited by hundreds monthly.

Everyone climbs Pike's Peak and, although it is a hard ride of eleven miles, the extensive views that meet the traveller's eyes fully repay him for the fatigue he has undergone to reach the top of one of the loftiest mountains in the country. Parties start at seven in the morning, mounted on slow but sure-footed mules, and, al hough the high altitude affects some persons, they always return saying, "I would not do it again for a hundred dollars; but I would not have missed it for a good deal."

The town of Colorado Springs is situated five miles from Manitou, and between that place and here there is a ruined hamlet, bearing the name of Old-town, which was the capital of the territory during the Pike's Peak gold excitement. It once contained eight thousand inhabitants, but now numbers only about a hundred; and what was once the State House now is the home of squalid, tow-haired children.

The climate of this region appears to be worked by machinery, for it scarcely varies during the summer. It is always clear in the morning, and every afternoon we have a hard thunder storm, and then very often toward sunset we have the most gorgeous rainbows I ever beheld. They span the heavens in a complete arch, and often a second one appears, and the colors are so very vivid and varied that one is enraptured.

About a week ago we had a cloud-burst, and within five minutes rivers flowed from every mountain, and in every hollow there was a lake on which floated innumerable large hailstones.

Among the natural wonders the Cave of the Winds ranks conspicuously, but no one should attempt the trip who is not accustomed to climbing and stooping. After paying the fee and registering, the guide starts forward, carrying a lamp, and the visitors follow, each with a candle. There is a great diversity of wonders, and some of the coral formations, the stalactites and stalagmites are well worth a visit. The cave was discovered about two years ago by two boys, one aged eleven and the other thirteen, sons of a clergyman.

The Cave of the Winds is equalled in some respects by the Grand Caverns, the most wonderful object there being the Organ, which when struck sends forth musical sounds.

I cannot tell you of all the wonderful spots in the vicinity of Manitou Springs, but before concluding I must say a word about the Garden of the Gods. Here, grouped together in marvellous confusion, are vast boulders which take the forms of animals and persons. Each time one visits this weird place he sees some new fantastic form which he never noticed before.

E P. VAN NORDEN.

MANITOU SPRINGS, COLORADO, August 13th, 1886.

IT is said that the saloon kept by the United States at the Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio, sells more than twenty barrels of beer a day. A thrifty sort of government we are living under now. These old veterans have a few pennies, and the government gathers them in—for beer. And we are told it makes a handsome profit on the beer. It does not sell the amber beverage at cost; not exactly. It has an eye to business, and will make enough on beer, so it is alleged, to pay hospital expenses and clothe the veterans, and perhaps something more. Business is business. even in a charitable institution maintained by the United States. Gambrinus seems to be advancing toward coronation.—Western Christian Advocate.

The Reading Room.

Our Book-Shelves.

....“Annals of the Disruption: With Extracts from the Narratives of Ministers who Left the Scottish Establishment in 1843.” By the Rev. Thomas Brown, F R S E. One of the noblest chapters in the history of the Church of Christ in the present century is that which relates the ten years' conflict within the Established Presbyterian Church of Scotland for the right of self-government, culminating in the day which stirred all Scotland as it had not been moved in many years, when, after reading a solemn protest against the surrender of the Headship of Christ to the temporal power, over four hundred members left their seats in the General Assembly, convened in St. Andrew's Church in Edinburgh, and marched through crowded streets to a public hall and organized the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland. This was on the 18th of May, 1843, one of the most memorable days in the history of the Church of Christ in Scotland, a history abounding in acts of heroic Christian self-sacrifice. It was a noble exhibition of loyalty to Christ and of faith in God. A Church disestablished itself, surrendering churches, manses and all the emoluments of a State Church. The succeeding years were in many instances a period of hardship, privation, misrepresentation, and persecution, but were made illustrious by the Christian endurance of the pastors and the splendid liberality of the people.

The history of this great achievement, of the causes which led to the disruption, of the events of the 18th of May, of the succeeding struggles of the young Free Church, of the zeal and consecration of pastors and people, of the grievances and hardships bravely endured, and of the complete success at last achieved, is told in this volume. Many pages are occupied with the story of the experience of individuals. The steady and rapid development of the Church is presented in detail. The many instances of liberality form a record not surpassed before or since. Besides providing for its own great needs, the young Church was animated by a missionary spirit from the outset, assumed the support of the men on the home and foreign field who sympathized with the disruption and re-enforced them, while it advanced almost immediately to the front rank in the maintenance of Scottish philanthropic and charitable endeavors.

The volume has been prepared by a committee of the General Assembly of the Free Church, and is published by its authority. It contains a number of interesting engravings. It is published by Messrs. Macniven & Wallace, of Edinburgh, at 5 shillings English.

....“Our Country: Its Possible Future and Its Present Crisis.” By the Rev. Josiah Strong. This volume, prepared for the American Home Missionary Society, is adapted to the situation of all societies seeking to advance the kingdom God at home or abroad. It is a most lively and interesting presentation of its theme, full of information conveyed in a strong and lucid style. We have observed only one error of fact. In speaking of Romanism the author quotes the St. Louis Shepherd of the Valley as saying: “The Catholic who says the Church is not intolerant belies the Sacred Spouse of Christ.” We understand that it is vehemently denied that any such sentiment was ever published by the paper referred to, and, of course, the charge should be withdrawn unless it can be proved. The extensive circulation of this little volume is most desirable. In paper covers it is furnished for 25 cents. (Baker & Taylor.)

....“War and Peace.” By Count Léon Tolstoï. These two volumes begin with the preparations for the battle of Borodino in 1812 and conclude with the events of 1820. The record of the invasion of Russia by Napoleon, of the battles, the burning of Moscow and the flight of the French army, is woven into a story of Russian life. Russians of all social grades,—nobles, peasants, soldiers, civilians, officers of the government, servants,—live again on these pages. The story is unusually lifelike and the action of the characters natural, even though they are passing through a succession of most severe trials. The number of personages is large; one finds it somewhat difficult at times to maintain his hold on them, chiefly because their names are unfamiliar. Whether the story is a faithful picture of Russian life and feeling and opinion, between 1812 and 1820, we are utterly unable to decide. We can only say that these personages are men and women like ourselves, with a characteristic addition of patience or submission to fate which is not common among the energetic people of to-day we are associated with. But the story is very real, human and natural. The scenes are numerous and described with great ease and skill. The battles are described in their essential parts, and vividly. Scenes during the burning of Moscow are portrayed with power. There are numerous philosophical digressions, after the manner of Victor Hugo. Count Tolstoï gives constant prominence to an irresistible power, resembling the fate of the ancients, deciding the actions of men. Social, political and domestic life are alike controlled by circumstances not ordered or essentially modified by the persons involved in them. Yet he does not destroy personal responsibility. His accountings for events are likely to cause much profitable discussion. The weaknesses of Napoleon are exposed. He is here shorn of much of his greatness. The power of patient, heroic resistance receives impressive illustrations in the largely passive resistance of the Russians to the French, and in the social life of the people as it is presented. If these volumes are not the book of the season they are not far from it. They are original, out of the beaten track, in style as well as in matter. The style is easy and familiar, free from attempts for rhetorical impressions. It is that of a cultivated, thoughtful man, who writes well, with power and grace, with little or no effort,—who does seem to try to write well. There is occasionally a word in the translation which is in such disagreement with the other words of the sentence that we doubt whether it is a correct rendering. But such words are few. (William S. Gottsberger.)

....Mr. Robert B. Roosevelt has given new proof of his versatility in “Love and Luck,” the secondary title of which explains its character,—“The Story of a Summer's Loitering on the Great South Bay.” This narrative of yachting, fishing, amateur housekeeping and love-making is told in sprightly and entertaining style, and makes a truly delightful book. How far the characters and incidents are the record of actual persons and adventures we know not, but the story is realistic enough to be a transcript from the log book of a private yacht. We have never been upon such a cruise, but one can hardly fail to imbibe a strong relish for such a wholesome and unconventional way of spending a vacation. The book comes across our heated lives like a fresh salt breeze from the “Great South Bay.” (Harper & Bros.)

....“The Travellers' Series” is one of the most commendable literary enterprises of this day of cheap and serial publications. The volumes are attractively gotten up, and in excellent type. One of these is Tom Hood's famous “Whims and Oddities,” including many of his most characteristic and humorous sketches and illustrations. Another is “Pictures and Legends from Normandy and Brittany.” This is in the vein of Longfellow's “Outre Mer,” combining the description of places with their popular legends and tales. It is written in Katharine Macquoid's charming and graphic style, and has twenty-two illustrations by Thomas Macquoid. “Travellers” will find this kind of reading quite as entertaining, and far more profitable than nine-tenths of the paper novels of the day. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

....The Harper's Young People Series has yet another attractive number added to its list. “Jo's Opportunity,” by Lucy C. Lillie, is a story which will greatly contribute to the enjoyment of any girl who may be so fortunate as to possess it. A wholesome, invigorating tone, too often lacking in books for the young, is one of its noticeable qualities. (Harper & Bros.)

....“Reymond: A Drama of the American Revolution,” by Henry M. Cronkhite, is a volume of just one hundred pages, handsomely printed on a superior quality of paper. It has thirty characters, besides “officers, soldiers,” etc., and the scene is laid in “New York and its vicinity,—in camp with the patriot army.” It is partly in prose, and partly in verse. The story is one of considerable incident and interest, but we are unable to see that anything has been gained by throwing it into dramatic form. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

....“Cowley's Essays,” “Sir Roger De Coverly and the Spectator's Club,” “The Voyages of Marco Polo,” and “The Merchant of Venice,” are the four latest volumes of “Cassell's National Library.” A volume comes out every week, and Prof. Morley, of London, guides the selection of these choicest of choice books. For a single dime a reader may purchase any of the volumes. (Cassell & Co.)

Our Library Table.

Periodicals, Serials and Notes.

....The diversity of subjects treated in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Sunday Magazine for September is evident from the following selections from the titles of the articles and selections: Leaves from My Life, by Thomas Powell, Leaf the Second, in which much is said in a pleasant way about famous English poets; Reminiscences of Our Late Civil War, No. 2, which handles the ministers who were deficient in patriotism; The “Wayside Inn,” telling where and what the original of Longfellow's composition was; “The Minister's Vigil,” accounting for scenes in the “Scarlet Letter;” The Supposed Tomb of Noah, The Seal Islands, Behring's Sea, The Chicago Foundling's Home, The Kingfisher, Death Customs of the Indians, Duty of the Pews, Why Do Church Bells Annoy? and a long list of other essays. Three serial stories are continued. The engravings are abundant. The editor, Dr. Talmage, writes on the Protestant Riots in Belfast, and on Another Strike Needed.

....Christian Thought for July-August opens with a clever paper by the editor on the Superstitions of Science, in which Dr. Deems shows his wit as well as his acuteness. Dr. Buttz, President of Drew Theological Seminary, has a capital article on the Apologetic Value of Paul's Beliefs, in which an old position is set forth with novelty and power. He quotes certain utterances of Mr. Tyndall in his life of (not Joseph, as Dr. Buttz gives it on page 25, but) David Hume, in which the old sceptic's objection to the validity of miracles as an argument for the truth of Christianity is put forward with renewed plausibility. Dr. Buttz skilfully marshals the points, which show that the Apostle is an unimpeachable witness and one that meets all the scientific requisites postulated by the professor. The paper is as readable as it is valuable.

....Intelligent musicians and those who desire to become such, will find a treasure in each number of The Musical Herald. The August number contains a valuable paper by Louis C. Elson on “Musical Criticism: Its History and Scope.” A sketch of the life of Caffarelli, an Italian singer of the last century, is also well worth reading. The “Song Without Words,” by Scharwenka, is melodious and pleasing.

... The Atlantic for September contains some most thoughtful and seasonable articles, besides the three excellent serial stories which seem at last drawing to an end. The “Saloon in Politics,” by George F. Parsons, treats the question in a manner free from fanaticism, and yet adds to the terrible indictment against the liquor shops. John Fiske has a strong historical article on the “Paper Money Craze of 1786 and Shay's Rebellion,” which may teach our Greenbackers wisdom. The articles on “Edwin P. Whipple” and “The Law's Partiality for Married Women” are very excellent, as is the “Contributors' Club” at the end.

. ..Mr. W. D. Le Sueur opens the September number of the Popular Science Monthly with a review of President Porter's lecture on Evolution, delivered before the Nineteenth Century Club last May. The review has a maximum of assertion resting on a minimum of proof. As is usual now-a-days in the defence of evolution, broad conclusions are drawn from isolated facts of doubtful significance. The critic expresses his surprise at the order in which President Porter arranges the elements of the philosophy of evolution, as it now stands before us, and says that “not the least vestige of an historical order is discernible.” But the critic is wrong. Dr. Porter's arrangement is the order in which Darwinian evolution has been presented and sustained during the past twenty-five years, and that is evolution as it is known to the present generation—the evolution which Dr. Porter calls a “fanciful philosophy.” The review is weak, and the editors would have pleased many readers if they had not given it the position of honor in the number. Mr. Dudley continues his valuable discussion of Woods and their Destructive Fungi. Some Outlines from the History of Education, by Prof. W. R. Benedict, who occupies the chair of Psychology and Logic in the University of Cincinnati, is an important paper just now when educational systems are debated with zeal. The more than a dozen pages now given constitute the first instalment of the Outlines. Indian Medicine, by Dr. Stockwell, who describes what has passed under his own observation; The Antarctic Ocean, by Joseph F. James; Some Economics of Nature, by Dr Andrew Wilson, and other papers, are interesting and add to our stock of knowledge. The editor writes just enough on Psychology as a Science to make one wish he had written more. He also handles the matter of Moral Teaching in the Public Schools with vigor, but overlooks the fact that moral apart from religious teaching has generally proved not effective.

UNBOUND BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Præterita. Vol. II. Chapter V. The Simplon. By John Ruskin, LL.D. 8vo, pp. 145 to 184.

Our Radicals. A Tale of Love and Politics. By Fred. Burnaby. Edited by his Private Secretary, J. Percival Hughes. (Harper's Handy Series, No. 90.) 16mo, pp. 176. 25 cents; also.

Two Pinches of Snuff. A Novel. By William Westall. (Harper's Franklin Square Library, No. 539.) 4to, pp. 54. 20 cents.

Talmage on Rum. By T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D. Consisting of Sermons and Addresses. 12mo, pp. 114. 25 cents; also, Temperance and the Doctors. Address by B. W. Richardson, M.D., F.R.S. 12mo, pp. 24. 3 cents. National Temperance Society.

Pages from the Sermons of a Young Country Minister. 12mo, pp. 48.

Sabbath Desecration. A Sermon by the Rev. Ralph W. Brokaw. (Published by Request.) 8vo, pp. 13

The Merchant of Venice. By William Shakespeare. With Adventures of Giannette, and other Illustrative Pieces. (Cassell's National Library, Vol. L, No. 30.) 18mo, pp. 192. 10 cents.

A Wife's Confession, and Other Stories. The Great Gold Secret, and Other Stories. 16mos. Each pp. 142. 15 cents.

PERIODICALS.

September.—Cassell's Family Magazine, The Atlantic Monthly, The Popular Science Monthly, Harper's Monthly Magazine, The Library Magazine, St. Nicholas, Domestic Monthly.

Salem Sea Captains in the Revolution.

DURING the Revolutionary war it is hard to tell how the intercourse between Europe and the colonies would have been kept up—with Boston, Newport, New York, Philadelphia, Charleston, and Savannah successively in the hands of the enemy—but for the merchants and mariners of Salem, Beverly and Marblehead. Salem alone sent out 158 armed vessels, carrying in all more than 2,000 guns, each vessel having twelve or fourteen. They took 445 prizes, 54 out of their own fleet being lost. The loss of the vessels was to be expected, but the loss from history of all detailed memorial of these daring men is more serious. What is fame that preserves of all that period only the madcap daring of Paul Jones and forgets the solid heroism of Jonathan Haraden?

Jonathan Haraden was born in Gloucester, but was taken early to Salem in the employ of Richard Cabot, father of the celebrated President of the Hartford Convention. He first went to sea as lieutenant, then as captain of a fourteen-gun sloop built for the State of Massachusetts, and bearing a name that would have delighted Wendell Phillips—the "Tyrannicide." In her he helped capture a British naval vessel, that was carried in triumph into Salem Harbor. Afterward Haraden was put in command of the "General Pickering," a Salem privateer of 180 tons, carrying fourteen six-pounders and a crew of forty-five men and boys. He sailed in 1780 with a cargo of sugar for Bilboa, then a resort for American privateers and prize vessels. On his passage he had a two hours' fight with a British cutter of twenty guns and beat her off, but on entering the Bay of Biscay found opportunity for an exploit more daring. Running by night alongside a British privateer carrying twenty-two guns and sixty men, he ordered her, through his trumpet, to "surrender to an American frigate or be sunk." The astonished Englishman yielded and came on board, to find himself outgeneralled. A prize crew was put on the captured vessel and both made sail for Bilboa, when they were met by a king's ship, which, as the captured captain told Haraden with delight, was the "Achilles," another English privateer, with 42 guns and 140 men. "I shan't run from her," said Haraden coolly. At once the scene changed. The big Englishman recaptured the little one, then lay alongside Haraden's ship all night to fight her next day. Haraden took a sound night's sleep and recruited a boatswain and eight sailors from his prisoners in the morning, when they went to work.

The American ship seemed, said an eye-witness, like a long-boat beside a man-of-war; many of the Englishman's shot went over her opponent, while she herself was always hit below the water-line—this modern Achilles, like the ancient, proving vulnerable in the heel. A final broadside of crowbars from Haraden had great effect, and "Achilles" fled. The "Pickering" gave chase and Haraden offered a large reward to his gunner if he would carry away a spar, but no such luck occurred and the Englishman got off. Haraden recaptured his first prize, which had thus changed hands thrice in twenty-four hours, and went into port with her. The battle had lasted three hours, being fought so near the Spanish coast that a hundred thousand spectators, it was said, lined the shores; and it was also said that, before the "Pickering" and her prize had been half an hour at anchor, one could have walked a mile over the water by stepping from boat to boat; and when the captain landed he was borne in triumph through the city on men's shoulders. This is but a sample of this bold sailor's adventures. On another occasion still, in the "Pickering," he fell in with three armed Englishmen in company, carrying respectively twelve, fourteen and sixteen guns; and he captured each in succession with his vessel, he carrying just as many guns as the largest of the enemy.

Haraden alone took more than a thousand guns from the British during the war. The Salem ships intercepted the vessels which carried supplies from England or Nova Scotia to the garrisons in New York and Boston; they cruised in the Bay of Biscay and in the English and Irish channels; they raised the insurance on British ships to twenty-three per cent and obliged a large naval force to be constantly employed in convoying merchantmen; they, moreover, brought munitions of war from the French islands. Some sailed as privateers pure and simple; others under "letters of marque," in voyages whose privateering was incidental, but where the dangers incurred were much the same. Joseph Peabody, for instance, sailed from Salem in the winter of 1781 as second mate of the letter-of-marque "Ranger," Captain Simmons, carrying seven guns. They took a cargo of salt, sold it at Richmond, Virginia, and at Alexandria loaded with flour for Havana. Part of the cargo, being from General Washington's plantation, was received at Havana at the marked weight; all was sold, and the "Ranger" returned to Alexandria for another freight. Anchoring at the mouth of the Potomac because of head-winds, the officers turned in, but were roused before midnight by the watch, with news that large boats were coming toward the ship from different directions. Simmons and Peabody rushed to the deck, the latter in his night-clothes. As they reached it, a volley of musketry met them, and the captain fell wounded. Peobody ran forward, shouting for the crew to seize the boarding pikes, and he himself attacked some men who were climbing on board. Meantime another strange boat opened fire from another quarter. All was confusion; they knew not who were their assailants or whence; the captain lay helpless, the first officer was serving out ammunition, and Peabody, still conspicuous in his white raiment, had command of the deck. The boats were already grappled to the "Ranger;" he ordered cold shot to be dropped into them, and frightened one crew so that it cast off; then he ordered his men against the other boat, shouting, "We have sunk one, boys; now let us sink the other!" His men cheered, and presently both boats dropped astern, leaving one of the "Ranger's" crew dead and three wounded. Peabody himself was hurt in three places, not counting the loss of his club of hair, worn in the fashion of those days, which had been shot clean off, and was found on deck the next morning. The enemy proved to be a guerrilla band of Tories, whose rendezvous was at St. George's Island, near where the "Ranger" lay at anchor. There had been sixty men in their boats, while the crew of the "Ranger" numbered twenty; and the same guerrillas had lately captured a brig of seven guns and thirty men by the same tactics, which the promptness of Peabody had foiled.—Thomas W. Higginson, in Harper's Magazine for September.

THE SHADOW OF THE ALMIGHTY.—"I believe in God, the Father Almighty." What strong consolation! Other helpers are finite; they may be sincere, yet there is a limit to their succor. But my Father is Almighty! He who is from everlasting; who spake, and it was done; who commanded, and it stood fast; who doeth His pleasure in the armies of heaven and among men—He overshadows me! The hand that spread forth the heavens and flung the stars abroad, that piles the mountains and sinks the sea, is stretched out for my defense. They whose home is the Most High must be safe, for they abide beneath the shadow of the Almighty.—Dr. Newman Hall.

THE MEYERBEERS.—With the interment of the widow of Meyerbeer in the family vault at the Jewish cemetery, in the Schonhauser Allée, Berlin, the last niche has been filled in that vault. The highest honors were paid to Madame Meyerbeer at her funeral, which was attended, among others, by the Minister of the Interior, the Italian Ambassador, the Greek Minister, the Chief Master of Ceremonies of the Court, and many other public men. The great composer himself, who died on the 21 of May, 1864, is also buried in the vault. His widow has, it is stated, left the MS. of a work composed by her husband, and entitled "Goethe's Youth."—Jewish Messenger.

Great Masters of Russian Literature.

By ERNEST DUPUY. Sketches of the Life and Works of Gogol, Torgenief, Tolstoi. With portraits. Translated by Nathan Haskell Dole. 12mo, $1.25.

The intense interest now manifested in the writings of Russian authors will be quickened and stimulated by the appearance of this volume, which gives much information concerning the three authors therein mentioned.

The translator has also added an Appendix, which will be found of value to those who consult the work.

For Sale by all Booksellers.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO.,

13 ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK.

The Royal Singer!

New Singing Class Book by L. O. Emerson.

THE BEST OF ALL!

Teachers of Singing Schools who examine this, the last of Mr. Emerson's series of successful class-books, will generally concede that it is, in some degree, superior to any of its predecessors. The elementary exercises, the graded easy tunes for practice, the part songs or glees, and the church tunes, anthems and chants, all excel in their selection or arrangement.

With its happily chosen title, good and interesting music and generally attractive character, there is good ground for hope that it will be the "favorite of the season."

READY SEPTEMBER 1ST.

Price, 60 cts., $6.00 per dozen.

Parlor Organ Galaxy.

A good and large collection of Reed Organ Music, selected and arranged by W. F. SUDDS. 40 good Marches, Galops, Waltzes, Rondos, Schottisches, etc., and 17 popular songs, covering 96 sheet music size pages, yet sold for the very low price of 50 cts.

Remember our superior new Sunday School Song Book, Songs of Promise, (35 cts.) and our High School Song Book, Song Greeting, (60 cts.)

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y.

Church Decoration.

Church Furnishing.

DESIGNS AND ESTIMATES SUBMITTED.

J. & R. LAMB,

59 CARMINE ST., N. Y.

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers, 805 Broadway, New York.

BARNES'

NATIONAL INK.

CHEAPEST BIBLES Ever furnished Agents. Extra Terms and Large CASH PREMIUMS

FORSHEE & McMAKIN, CINCINNATI, O.

RECENT ISSUES

BY THE

Presbyterian Board of Publication.

NEW EDITION OF

WHAT IS PRESBYTERIAN LAW?

(REVISED AND ENLARGED.)

Containing the Decisions of the General Assembly to 1885, inclusive

By Rev. J. ASPINWALL HODGE, D.D.

12mo. Price, $1.75.

AMONG THE TREES AT ELMRIDGE

A sprightly book for boys and girls, about our forest and fruit trees.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.25.

CHERIE'S ANSWERED PRAYER

Carries the reader to a village in France, and opening to him a form of life new and instructive.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

WALTER HARMSEN.

A thrilling story of Reformation days in the Netherlands.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.25.

Address orders to

JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't,

1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,

Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St., New York, N. Y.

FOR CHOIRS

A Low Priced Collection of Music.

IDEAL ANTHEMS

BY H. P. DANKS.

The great success of Mr. Danks' church music renders unnecessary any comment as to the merit of this collection. The Anthems are all entirely new and adapted to the wants of all denominations, as Services, Opening Pieces, Collection Pieces, etc., and available for Chorus or Quartet Choirs.

The pieces are from Easy to Medium Grade, with the organ part on separate staff, thus avoiding the necessity of the player's reading all the parts at once, as in the old style.

"IDEAL ANTHEMS" contains 64 pages, octavo size, handsomely bound in paper.

Price, 35 cents each by mail, postpaid; $3.60 a dozen by express, not prepaid.

☞SPECIMEN PAGES FREE.

PUBLISHED BY

THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O.

And 19 East 16th Street, New York City.

See this "NOTES ON DECORATIVE ART," free for postage. Covering information on Tapestry, Lustra, Kensington, Oil and Mineral Painting. Regular lessons by mail. Painted and chromo designs to rent. Orders executed.

42 W. 23d St., H. A. JOHNSON, New York.

HAY FEVER — $1 by mail

WARD'S REMEDY FOR

Hay Fever, Rose Cold, &c

Handy to carry. Easy to take.

Prepared solely by

I. W. FERRIS, M.D., Schenectady, N. Y.

J. Milhaus' Son, 183 B'way, New York, Agent.

THE

Christian Intelligencer

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT

48 Church St., cor. Fulton, N. Y.,

BY THE

CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOC.

Editors:

REV. J. M. FERRIS, D.D.,
REV. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.

Associate Editor:

MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

TERMS,

$2.65 per annum.

Ministers and Theological Students, $2.

SINGLE COPIES, 8 CENTS.

☞ Read these Instructions carefully. ☜

ALL COMMUNICATIONS pertaining to the literary columns of the paper must be addressed to the Editors; and those inclosing manuscripts to be returned must be accompanied with envelopes stamped and addressed. No attention will be paid to anonymous communications.

THOSE relating to the business department, to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION, Box 2117, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIBERS, NOTICE.—The date following your name on the direction label informs you to what month and year your subscription is paid. If this date is not changed within two weeks after payment is made, drop us a postal card and we will investigate and reply. Please examine the date, and if in arrears, remit the amount due.

REMITTANCES ARE AT THE RISK OF THE SENDER, unless made by Draft, Check, or P. O. Money Order. These, if lost, can be readily replaced.

Checks, etc., to order of CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION.

IN CHANGING AN ADDRESS, it is necessary to send the OLD as well as NEW address. The change cannot be made unless this is done. And in order to prevent the loss of papers, it will be well to notify the office at least ten days before the contemplated change, as the mail lists are prepared that much in advance of each issue.

ALWAYS GIVE THE NAME OF THE P. O. where the paper is received.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

The Home.

AUNT MARJORIE'S CORNER

The Fresh-Air Mission.

BY MARY SECOR MESEROLE.

FROM the vast and torrid city, with its misery and glare,
Rush the little ones, in masses, to the cool and fragrant air!

Trooping onward to the mountains, with their faces all aglow,
Every smile of rapture showing sweet forgetfulness of woe.

Bend the hills in salutation as the children wend their way,
Giving each a lordly greeting on this blessed holiday.

Spicy odors from the forest, perfumed breezes from the vale,
Flowerets wild with hearts of fragrance, scenting every passing gale.

All unite to bless the strangers as they journey from the town,—
Little waifs who on life's current float so helplessly adown.

Ah, these groups of men and women! Liliputians every one,
How their tendrils of affection reach to others older grown!

Clinging with a sweet persistence, causing stoutest hearts to yield,
And disclosing thoughts of mercy hitherto all unrevealed.

Heaven's blessing rest upon them as they seek the fragrant air!
Willie with the eyes of hazel, Dot with rings of golden hair!

Let them see God's acres, nodding with the waves of yellow wheat,
Let them watch the hay mounds rising, newly mown and strangely sweet.

Can a heart unused to pleasure with a sudden rapture break?
Answer, fields of scented clover, waxen lilies of the lake!

Vast and torrid is the city, with its misery and glare,
But, thank God! the fresh-air mission lifts its head in triumph there.

Noblest of all benefactions in this age of charity!
Sweetest blossom from the root of a true philanthropy!

"After Labor Cometh Rest."

BY E. M. DAVIS-GRANT.

WEARY, oh, so very weary,
With the labors of the day,
All my trials and vexations
Mocking, stand in bold array.

Even try to hide my Saviour,
For the flesh is very weak;
Hark! He bids them each one vanish;
Oh, how sweet to hear Him speak.

Rest, oh rest my weary lov'd one,
Lean thy aching head on Me;
I was tempted, tired and weary,
I can sympathize with thee.

Nay! thou need'st not even tell Me;
I have watched thee every hour,
Helped thee when the cross was heavy;
Rest! I hold thee, and My power

Evermore will shield and guard thee;
I will smooth the rugged way,
Lead thee to the living waters,
To the land of perfect day.

Lucy Anthon.

A Story for Girls.

BY ELLEN AINSLIE.

PART II.

IT is commonly supposed that girlhood is a period of profound happiness and contentment. Freed from great responsibilities, with no special anxieties, her clothing and food provided for her, and her days filled with tasks which are pleasures, a girl at home in her father's house is almost an object of envy to care-burdened older people.

Yet Lucy Anthon was not singular in the feeling of ennui and dissatisfaction which came over her when her school days ended, and she settled down into a luxurious life, in a household where wealth provided for, and good housekeeping anticipated every possible want. For domestic details she had little taste, and her mother had the house so well in hand that beyond a little dusting, an occasional foray into the kitchen to whip up a syllabub or make a sponge cake, there was little for Lucy to do. She hated pretty fancy-work and despised mere small talk. To keep up a course of reading aimlessly was not sufficiently practical to satisfy her mental requirements, and, besides, the stimulus of class competition removed, with many other girls she found it difficult to go on with her studies, subject to the many petty interruptions of home life.

Lucy's desire was to study medicine and have a profession. In this ambition her father sympathized with her, holding that every woman should be armed for the possible warfare of the world, and for the adverse circumstances which may come to anyone, however guarded, by having some bread-winning skill on which to depend.

Her mother, on the other hand, was decidedly opposed to what she considered a most chimerical idea. To a gentlewoman, she thought, the domestic sphere afforded everything necessary for usefulness and duty; she disliked lady doctors, and she wished Lucy to make a brilliant marriage. And so it had come to pass that the only child, who should have been the light and joy of the home, was at present the cause of frequent storms, and her wish to study, and in time practice the healing art, was an apple of discord.

When Lucy went to her chamber after leaving her father, she sat long by the window in the starlight pondering earnestly "Called to be Saints!" The words haunted her like the fragment of a tune. Finally she said her prayers and went to bed. She had arrived at a decision.

Next morning when she entered the breakfast room she greeted her father as usual with a kiss, and laid beside her mother's plate a superb Gloire de D jon rose.

"Mamma!" she said, "I've been looking at it again, and I've concluded that it's very hard for you to be disappointed in your only daughter. If you had two, one of us might be spared to go away and live her own life. As it is, I'll try to be contented as a mere young lady in society."

Judge Anthon gave her an approving glance, in which, too, there was some sadness. Her mother smiled with the conviction that her firmness had brought about its own reward. Unable to let well enough alone, however, she proceeded to break the entente cordiale by the remark:

"I am glad you have come to so sensible a conclusion. And now, give up all your absurd theories of culture and improvement, and be a useful woman. Don't burn candles half the night over stupid books. There is plenty of daylight for reading. I dislike to see a girl everlastingly bending over a book. It is such a waste of precious time."

Like other women with no taste for literary pursuits, Mrs. Anthon maintained a patronizing attitude to the world of authors. To sit down for a solid hour of reading, morning, noon, or night, always seemed to her rather sinful, and except on the rare occasions when some story captivated her, she did her own reading under protest. Her book-loving daughter from babyhood had been compelled to surreptitiously snatch much of her delight in reading.

"Sufficient unto the day, my dear, is the evil thereof," quietly observed the Judge. "By-the-by, there is a fine engraving at Tenêbre's which I want you to look at if you drive in that direction to day, and I think there is a place in Lucy's chamber which it will adorn beautifully. The title is Heartease, and the central figure is a girl sitting on a bank of flowers with folded hands, a look of peace in her face. Lucy, if you like it, order it sent home. It is my gift to you, darling."

"I," said Mrs. Anthon," will also give Lucy something in memory of the day when she determined to yield her own will and please her mother. She shall have the loveliest set of pearls which money can buy."

Although Lucy for long could not think of what she had resigned without a feeling of regret, yet she was not so disappointed as she had expected to be. We often victimize ourselves with a morbid pleasure in thinking how much we are to be pitied, and when we give up a cherished plan we do it only by halves. So soon as Lucy set herself to find pleasure in the daily home routine she began to take pride in it, realizing the truth of the familiar stanza:

> "The trivial round, the common task,
> Will furnish all we ought to ask,
> Room to deny ourselves, a road
> To bring us daily nearer God."

Gradually, as she relieved her mother of certain assigned duties, she found it possible to secure time for those studies which she found agreeable, and Mrs. Anthon did not object to her joining classes in art literature and history. It happened one day that a Doctor Lelia Cairns, professor of hygiene in a noted woman's college, was announced as about to give a course of lectures on nursing and kindred topics, and Lucy, attending these, found that without going to a training school, or devoting herself for a set period of discipline, she could gather a great deal of knowledge which would be useful.

As a mission school teacher, and Secretary of a Young Girls' Club, she was able to do a great deal of good, showing young women how to make the most of narrow means, and teaching poor mothers how to keep their little homes clean, sunny and wholesome.

So that, when a few years passed, and she was no longer Lucy Anthon, but Lucy Palmer, the wife of a popular physician, she found life full of privileges and opportunities, and her husband, to whom she was a gift above rubies, took his place among the honored of the land, partly through her wise help and never-failing sympathy.

[This brief outline of individual experience may be a rift in the clouds to some who are struggling in the dark.]

A Precious Saviour.

IT is not an uncommon thing to find thoughtful people who express a strong desire to become Christians, but who are discouraged by the want of sure, unmistakable evidence that they possess a saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. To such I offer this bit of personal experience, trusting it may bring relief to some burdened soul.

At the time when I was led to determine to unite myself with the church, I put myself on a three months' probation, to make sure that I was not acting under excitement or with undue haste. As the end of this time drew near, I found myself in a state of profound discouragement. I could not see that I had made any progress in a Christian life, nor could I get any assurance that my faith in Christ was a saving faith, and yet I could not bear to relinquish my intention of enrolling myself among His people. I was exceedingly unhappy. One day I had a book in my hand, but could not fix my attention upon it because of the conflict in my mind, when, idly turning the leaves, these words caught my eye, "Unto you, therefore, which believe he is precious." They brought a flood of light into my troubled soul. I instantly saw that, poor and feeble as was my faith in Him, there was nothing in the whole universe of God that I would look at for a moment in exchange for Him; that all my hope of peace, of pardon, of holiness, rested in Him. He was precious. I also saw that this had not always been the case. I could look back to a time when I cared nothing for Him, in fact, rather disliked to hear about Him. It was faith—my faith in His Word, His work, His promises, that made Him precious to me. All my doubts and fears vanished. I joined the church at the next communion season, and through all the temptations, failures and trials of the thirty-nine years which have since elapsed, I have never lost the assurance of faith which came to me then in the preciousness of Christ. Faint-hearted brother, sister, is He not precious to you? Then remember, unto them which believe, He is precious.

New Brunswick, Aug. 2d, 1886.

The House Found Empty.

"DON'T talk to me about educated servants," fumed an indignant mistress the other day; "they only learn enough to feel above their business, and it makes them entirely good for nothing."

"Yes, indeed," agreed her companion; "I never willingly get a nurse who can read. I much prefer one who has no use for her spare time except sewing."

There may be—doubtless is—some trouble on that side of the question. "A little learning" does sometimes prove dangerous to that patient, cheerful drudgery which we expect from our domestics. A nurse with a taste for reading may not be as unflaggingly watchful as we would have her; we must not expect to get all the virtues for twelve dollars a month! But reason and observation both teach that the loss on that side is more than made up on another,—that by giving our servants' minds some training, some reasonable thoughts, in short, some furnishing, we help to keep out several such devils as discontent, envy, and mischief making.

Another particularly noxious spirit who is almost always found in possession of these "empty, swept, and garnished" minds, is suspiciousness. It is amazing to many a mistress to find on what slight grounds one servant will found her suspicions of another. "Nurse behaves very quare to me, mum," said my chambermaid yesterday; "when she saw me coming up the walk, she snatched baby up out of her carriage, and ran in as if I was after harming the darlint!"—the truth being that I had just called the nurse from an upper window.

Even more readily do they suspect the mistress herself of talking about them, of complaints against them, of favors shown to their fellows, etc. And I am persuaded that this is, in great measure, because they have nothing else to think of; while their hands are busy in our service, their idle minds are the easy prey of these imps of darkness, who defile them at will.

We can help them in this matter if we set ourselves to do it; in a ten-minutes' chat, as we pass to and fro among them, we can drop interesting little facts into their minds, show a friendly interest in their interests, and promote kindly speech among themselves.

And, more than all, as most of them can read, we ought to keep a lookout in our own reading for things to put in their hands. Little story papers are always in favor with them, and a daily newspaper (the purest we can find) does a great deal to lighten the dense fog of ignorance in which so many of them live.

"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men," especially to those of our own households.—Elizabeth P. Allan, in Sunday-School Times.

If parents fed the bodies of their children, and if young men and young women took their diet, as recklessly as they feed their minds, they would invite death in his most hideous forms.—Morning Star.

CHILDREN'S PORTFOLIO.

A Fresh-Air Child.

"EVERY day this week," said Aunt Letty, looking up from her Tribune, "a pleasing sight may be witnessed by anybody who visits the Grand Central Depot. Hundreds of little children are being sent to the country to stay two or three weeks, and, in my opinion, it's the most Christian thing that's been done in the century, this taking care of the children of the poor in such a sweet, generous way. Poor darlings, shut up in the tenement houses, with never a chance for play or healthful development. I shall send a contribution to the Fresh-Air Fund to-day. Priscilla," with a total change of manner, "remember you are to sit perfectly still, my dear, until the carriage comes. You must not get your dress spotted or rumpled, or you will not be presentable for your drive in the park."

Little Priscilla, a pale, dark-eyed child, moved uneasily in her small chair.

"Oh, Aunt Letty!" she said, "I wish I might tumble my dress, or tear it, or get down on the grass and roll. I am tired of being nicely dressed and driving in the park. I hate it. I'd like to be a poor child, and then I might have some fun."

"You are very naughty, I fear," said Aunt Letty, gravely. "I understand it perfectly. 'Tis I who am to blame. If

"'Satan finds some mischief still
For idle hands to do,'

he generally puts some fretfulness into idle hearts. Go and bring me the bag of silks. Your badness must be punished."

With leaden feet and a pouting face, Priscilla did her aunt's bidding. How she hated that bag of silks. It represented to her much such a task as the wicked queen in the fairy tale used to set the unfortunate little princess who was doomed to undertake hopeless pieces of work. For Priscilla, like the little princess, was to straighten out of their tangled confusion the strands of silk which had been bought twisted and snarled together from the refuse of the mill, in some economical caprice of Aunt Letty's. That lady did not care a pin whether they were ever straightened or not, but she fancied it was a good way to employ Priscilla, who often puzzled her. Establishing the little rebel on a hassock by the library window, she carried on her interrupted talk with Mrs. Houghton, a friend from the country, who was her guest.

"Why do you keep that poor little wretch in such misery?" said the latter, carefully lowering her voice that Priscilla might not hear. "I should put her into a loose blue flannel or a stout brown holland slip, and let her play to her heart's content. She has never a moment's peace, just because she is always so beautifully arrayed, I declare. I believe if I were Priscilla, I'd be a fresh-air child if I had to run away! I'd change places with one of them."

"Margaret!" exclaimed Miss Letty, reproachfully, "suppose Priscilla should hear you! I am sure she has as much liberty as any other child of her class. Marie takes her out every morning, and she always goes to drive when I do. I think children should learn to be careful of their clothes. I was taught to be so, I am sure."

"Well, dear, when I go home I mean to take a fresh air child with me if I can find one, and I intend that child to have a real good old-fashioned time. She shall romp, and hunt for eggs, and fish in the brook, and wear old dresses, because she probably will have no others, and help dry the china, and for the rest of her life that child will remember her visit to Maple Farm, or my name's not Margaret Houghton."

Neither of the ladies knew that their conversation had an eager listener, but Priscilla, sorting the dull blues and brick reds of the embroidery silks, had not missed a word.

The carriage came to the door. Golden curls, brown eyes, pink-tinted cheeks, and a dress as white as new-fallen snow, the little girl beside Miss Letty was the object of many admiring eyes. She was very silent and well-behaved, did not fidget nor fret as usual, and Miss Letty felicitated herself so much on the result of her discipline that she stopped at Huyler's on her way to pick Mrs. Houghton up at a friend's, where she had left her, and purchased a pound of caramels for Priscilla.

"There!" she said, "she what you gain by being a dear, good child! Why can you not always act as you have done to-day?"

But Priscilla's little head was revolving a deep-laid scheme. And when she found a chance she proceeded to put it into operation.

The cook, a very black and shiny person, had a little daughter of Priscilla's age, who was greatly given to pomps and vanities. She rejoiced in the anomalous name of Blanche. When "little Miss" went to her and proposed an exchange of dresses, from dainty jacket and skirts to slippers and stockings, Blanche was at first aghast at the audacity of the proposal, but it was so charming to fancy herself clothed like the little lady that she at last yielded, and much to her satisfaction saw herself in the long mirror as she never had dreamed of being dressed in the whole world.

Meanwhile Priscilla, she was only seven, in a blue and white checked gingham, stout shoes, and a coarse bib-apron, tip-toed to Mrs. Houghton's door and knocked. Bidden to enter, she found her friend busy with her packing, and amazed her by pleadingly exclaiming:

"Here I am! Now I'm a fresh-air child! Take me with you, dear, dear Mrs. Houghton, and let me do all the beautiful things you talked about! Please, please do!"

While still Mrs. Houghton gazed, not understanding the situation, a sudden and too familiar sound came from the regions below.

"You owdacious, misguided, villainous chile, you. You been puttin' on Miss Priscilla's tings. For de lan's sake, Blanche, come here to me!"

"Oh! Mrs. Houghton, come, Chloe is going to whip Blanche, and I coaxed her to put on my dress and give me hers. It isn't fair! Poor Blanche!" and away flew Priscilla like the wind, not in time, however, to arrest the summary justice which Chloe never lost a chance to administer. Blanche had been whipped and shaken and set on the stool of repentance, and there, sobbing and weeping, she still hugged her new attire, convinced that Miss Priscilla had the right to give it to her.

But her mother thought differently. Sternly she spoke:

"People may bring up w'ite chillen as they please," she said. "It takes a heap o' correction to make Blanche a decent young pusson. And Miss Letty don't nebber mean to let Miss Priscilla gib her coats and shoes away dat fashion. Take dem furbelows off dis minit, and Miss Priscy, give her her own clothes."

The upshot of it all was, however, that Mrs. Houghton carried two fresh-air children off to green fields, a white child and a black one, and both enjoyed their outing with the most rapt and complete satisfaction. And Aunt Letty, in the goodness of her heart, suffered herself to be convinced that it was better for one little rich girl to be treated more like hundreds of little poor ones, and live a free, innocent, out-door life with few restrictions and a plain, serviceable dress, while the summer lasted.

ALMA ROCHESTER.

How the Bridge was Crossed.

"MOTHER," said a little girl, "what did David mean when he said, 'Preserve me, O God, for in thee do I put my trust?'"

"Do you remember," said her mother, "the little girl we saw walking with her father in the woods yesterday?"

"Oh, yes, mother. Wasn't she beautiful?"

"She was a gentle, loving little thing, and her father was very kind to her. Do you remember what she said when they came to the narrow bridge over the brook?"

"I don't like to think about that bridge, mother; it makes me giddy. Don't you think it is very dangerous, just those two loose planks laid across and no railing? If she had stepped a little on either side she would have fallen into the water."

"Do you remember what she said?" repeated the mother.

"Yes, mamma; she stopped a minute as if afraid to go over, and then looked up into her father's face and asked him to take hold of her hand, and said 'You will take hold of me, dear father; I don't feel afraid when you have hold of my hand.' And her father looked so lovingly upon her and took tight hold of her hand, as if she were very precious to him."

"Well, my child," said the mother, "I think David felt just like that little girl when he wrote these words you have asked me about."

"Was David going over a bridge, mother?"

"Not such a bridge as the one we saw in the woods; but he had come to some difficult place in his life—there was some trouble before him that made him afraid, and he looked up to God just as that little girl looked up to her father, and said: 'Preserve me, O God, for in thee do I put my trust.' It is just as if he had said, 'Please take care of me, my kind, heavenly Father; I do not feel afraid when Thou art with me and taking hold of my hand.'"—S. S. Visitor.

Training the Eyes.

THE following story from the Penn Monthly is related of Agassiz, and it is sufficiently characteristic of this remarkably accurate observer to have the merit of probability. We are told that once upon a time the professor had occasion to select an assistant from one of his classes. There were a number of candidates for the post of honor, and finding himself in a quandary as to which one he would choose, the happy thought occurred to him of subjecting three of the more promising students in turn to the simple test of describing the view from his laboratory window, which overlooked the side yard of the college. One said that he saw merely a board fence and a brick pavement; another added a stream of soapy water; a third detected the color of the paint on the fence, noted a green mould or fungus on the bricks, and evidences of "bluing" in the water, beside other details. It is needless to tell which candidate was awarded the coveted position.

Houdin, the celebrated prestidigitateur, attributed his success in his profession mainly to his quickness of perception, which he tells us in his entertaining autobiography, he acquired by educating his eyes to detect a large number of objects at a single glance. His simple plan was to select a shop window full of a miscellaneous assortment of articles, and walk rapidly past it a number of times every day, writing down each object which impressed itself on his mind. In this way he was able, after a time, to detect instantaneously all of the articles in the window, even though they might be numbered by scores.—Scientific American.

Little Heads Together.

AN ACROSTIC FOR YOUNG BIBLE STUDENTS.

1. Mountains east of the Dead Sea.
2. A Chaldee name given to Azariah, one of the three captive young princes of Judah.
3. A city built by the Hebrews during their servitude in Egypt.
4. A tree mentioned in the Scriptures.
5. A member of the Jewish Sanhedrim, who was at first a Pharisee, but afterwards became a disciple of Jesus.

Primals and finals form the names of two brothers often spoken of in the Bible. "ITTALIE."

BEHEADINGS.

1. Behead closed and leave a poor dwelling.
2. Behead something to be dreaded and leave a word often used by Scottish bards.
3. Behead a painful disease and leave not in.
4. Behead the smallest and leave a point of the compass.
5. Behead a word meaning quickly and leave an article of food.
6. Behead a weapon and leave something that has power either to wound or to help.
7. Behead darkness and leave a useful machine. LEX.

DIAMOND.

1. In desirable. 2. Practised by civilized nations. 3. A vision. 4. A sailor. 5. In Mediterranean. V.

Answers to Puzzles of August 4th.

Nellie's Puzzle.—1. C-olomb-o. 2. N-asturtium-s. 3. T-heres-a. 4. N-es-t. 5. I-ndia-n. 6. O-verseer-shi-p. 7. L-adl-e. Constantinople.

Misplaced Words.—

While ripening corn grew thick and deep,
And here and there men stood to reap,
One morn I put my heart to sleep,
And to the lanes I took my way.
The goldfinch on a thistle head
Stood scattering seedlets while she fed;
The wrens their pretty gossip spread,
Or joined a random roundelay.

Correct answers from "Prague" and Rappie Bowne.

Contributions to this department and solutions of puzzles are solicited from all. Address Cousin LOIS, office of THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

A Sunday in the City.

BY A. R. VAN NEST, D.D.

We read letters from the summer vacation tours in all quarters; perhaps it is well to let country friends know what is going on in town. Dr. Oliver Bronson, formerly of Hudson, N. Y., who for himself and his companion in life made climate a special study, used to say that for the winter months St. Augustine, in Florida, afforded the best atmosphere for delicate persons, but he preferred New York city for the summer. Abraham Van Nest, Esq., whose pleasant mansion in Bleecker street many of our older citizens will remember, said that, "Summer was not the time to go into the country, for it was too hot to be shut up in the narrow, confined rooms which one often meets with there. He would choose the spring or autumn for such visits." My experience of late has proved the wisdom of these ancients.

It has been my part for several weeks to be about Great South Bay, a beautiful sheet of water which separates the ocean beach from the mainland of Long Island, finding a variety of pleasure; but at the same time enduring fogs and much severe heat, and being assailed by great armies of mosquitoes, which made life miserable. Last week, in utter distraction, I made up my mind to come to New York, where I found an invigorating atmosphere. The rains had thoroughly cleansed the streets and the persecuting mosquitoes were few and far between.

Sunday was notable for its perfect atmosphere. There was some difficulty in finding a church for service. Several leading ones were tried in vain, but Rev. Roderick Terry, D.D, was found at his post of duty, and he gave us a very practical sermon, his subject being Simeon waiting for the consolation of Israel. It was good to be there; there was fine music, profitable preaching, and a nice looking congregation that might compare favorably with those that gather in the winter season. The old South Church had its Gospel armor on. But the great treat was furnished in the evening.

The Collegiate Church has for several seasons invited eminent preachers from other cities to occupy one of its pulpits, giving them ample remuneration for the services. Thus they have shown great wisdom, by giving their people good instruction and entertainment and securing full audiences for the churches; also sending the good ministers on their way rejoicing with more means to enjoy their vacations. I have often thought that if Dr. Hall's people would pursue such a policy there would be less talk about empty churches in summer. The preacher for last Sunday in Fourth street was Dr. Herrick Johnson, of Chicago. The first result of his presence was to have the house nearly filled—the middle body of pews solidly to the doors, and there was quite a sprinkling in the galleries. Everything was first-rate.

The Dutch Church at 48th street and 5th avenue is a most beautiful building. A professor from Oxford told me that it was "the finest parish church in the world." Then the music was excellent. The organist was remarkable, if I mistake not a real Doctor of Music from London, and the choir is artistic. As to the style, perhaps my taste is not cultivated enough to appreciate it. I was reminded of a scene that occurred in Florence long years ago, between John David Wolfe, an eminent philanthropist of our city, and the teacher of one of our schools, old Signor Ferretti. Mr. Wolfe was delighted with the singing of the children, using our beautiful Sunday-school hymns, with their sweet Italian voices. His warm Christian heart inclined him to help the cause, and he could think of no better proposal than to make a present of prayer books sufficient for the whole school. There were three hundred and more children. I was amused at the effect upon Ferretti. His countenance began to work and he was evidently preparing for a speech. "Mr. Wolfe," he said, "every nation worships God in its own way. You English people, you like to pray to God out of a book; but we Italians, we like to talk with Him right out of our warm, full hearts, and do not want your prayer books." So with Ferretti, we like the old Methodist tunes, where the people all can join in rather than have our religion interpreted for us by the most refined and artistic choir. Still, the music was beautiful. Then the prayers were sweet. Dr. Johnson lives very close to heaven and talked with God as a man talketh with his friend.

The sermon was, as it ought to be, the climax of the service. What is it that ministers are set up for, except to preach the Gospel? His text was a proverb, "The heart of the wise teacheth the mouth and addeth learning to his lips." He began with the praise of speech; "To talk well," he said, "is the best gift, and to talk supremely well is to be supreme in power." But this talent comes from the heart—the heart of the wise—not the head. He would not undervalue the intellect; it had great uses; but pure intellect produced cold talk like marble. Then there was some fine scholarship on the great words in the Christian vocabulary: courtesy from cor, the heart; sympathy, feeling with, patience; sacrifice; the heart of the wise must do it all.

It was a great and good sermon and afforded high inspiration to a devoted, hearty life, and I went home under that beautiful moon thanking God for the delightful air, and the very pleasant Lord's day that I had enjoyed, and that so many had heard the good Word of the kingdom; above all, thankful for the dear old Collegiate Church. What a witness it has been for the truth of God these two hundred and fifty years! Thankful, also, for this grand and glorious city of New York, where are so many churches and Christians, and where so much good is done in the name of Christ, and anxious whether more might not be done for the 900,000 people that remain in town. Let these that are left appreciate their privileges.

Marriage-Made Men.

"Let him marry, then," was the crusty reply of an old bachelor on being told that a friend had gone blind; "let him marry, and if that doesn't open his eyes, then his case is indeed hopeless."

The sneer has been confuted by the experience of scores of blind scholars, whose wives have been eyes to them. Huber, the great authority on bees, was blind from his seventeenth year, and conducted the observations which gave him the facts for his studies through the eyes of his wife. He declared that he should be miserable were he to regain his eyesight, adding: "I should not know to what extent a person in my situation could be beloved; besides, my wife is always young, fresh, and pretty, which is no light matter."

Blind Henry Fawcett became professor of political economy at Cambridge, an effective debater in Parliament, and a most successful postmaster-general, by using the eyes of his cultured wife.

The crusty old bachelor's sneer falls flat when it encounters such wives as these—and they are but two out of many who have made their husbands men of good repute.

Sir Samuel Romilly, the leading lawyer and law-reformer of his day, illustrated the experience of successful men when he said that nothing had more profited him in his public life than the observations and opinions of his wife.

The biographer of Sir William Hamilton, commenting upon the helpfulness of Lady Hamilton, says: "The number of pages in her handwriting, still preserved, is perfectly marvellous." When he was elected professor of logic and metaphysics in the University of Edinburgh, he had no lectures in stock. He began at once to write them, but though he worked rapidly, and far into the night, he was often only a few hours in advance of his class. Lady Hamilton sat up night after night to write out a fair copy of the lectures from the roughly written pages he had scrawled in the adjoining room. He would take her legible sheets and read them that morning to the students, who knew not that their professor's success was due to his being a marriage-made man. When paralysis, brought on by mental overwork, had stricken him, she became even more helpful, and by her assistance he was enabled to perform his professional duties until death removed him from his chair.—Exchange.

Hints for Farmers.

SEEDING MEADOWS.

Now is the time to do this work. The sod can be turned over and the land reseeded. We regard August as not only the most convenient time of the year for this work, but the best month in which to sow grass seed. We always prefer to apply some top dressing before sowing. Special manures are easily applied, and answer a good purpose. We have the best success, however, when we use well-rotted horse manure. Much depends upon the weather after the dressing is spread. If it proves to be very dry much is lost, and the grass seed will fail to come up.—Editor Hyde, in the Congregationalist.

THE EARLY APPLES.

Early fruit begins to ripen, and it should be carefully picked and sent to market in nice looking, clean packages. The bushel boxes are growing in favor for this purpose, as being better than barrels when the fruit is not to be transported too far. It should be assorted carefully, making all the fruit in a box as nearly uniform in size as possible, as customers will pay much more for it when so packed. The windfalls should be picked up and cooked and mixed with a little grain for the hogs, or put through the root-cutter and fed to the cows. Do not feed too liberally at first in either case, but begin with a small quantity and increase gradually. This answers a double purpose. It destroys the larvæ of the apple and codling moth, which will be found in nearly all the fruit that falls prematurely, and the fruit has a considerable feeding value when rightly fed. The contrary opinion, that apples were injurious to milch cows and would dry up their milk, probably arose from the results that were noticed when the cows broke into the orchard and ate too many. The same result follows eating too much meal, yet when it is judiciously fed it produces only good results. When they are allowed to eat too many sour apples, it makes their teeth sore. Having a few apple trees in the pasture, so that the cows are tempted to spend their time there waiting for fruit instead of filling themselves with grass, is also apt to give an unfavorable opinion of apples as a food for cows. Such trees had better be removed at once.—American Cultivator.

Crocks of butter to be kept for several months, says the United States Dairyman, should never be placed upon the cellar bottom. This causes two degrees of temperature in the crock, which will be at expense of the quality of the butter at the top. The crocks will keep their contents far better if placed at least a foot from the cellar bottom upon a bench, and a thick woollen cloth thrown over it.

FALL TREE-PLANTING.

In conversation lately with a neighbor about planting fruit trees in the fall, he said he did not believe in fall planting. He knew that the agents generally advised people to plant in the fall, and he supposed it was to the agents' or nurserymen's interest to get the trees off their hands at that season; but he thought the buyer would do better to get spring dug plants. I told him I would plant apple and pear trees in the fall, as they would have a better chance to live, and would make a better growth the first summer.

He inquired why there was such a difference of opinion. I explained it in this way: The trees come from a distance, having been dug early in the fall, and I would advise every planter to let all trees that are dug before the leaves are ready to fall, to go to some other buyer. As soon as planters learn to tell these early dug trees, they will lose all value, for of intrinsic value they have none for planting here; if they live at all, it will take at least one year for them to recover from the injury caused by early and too often bad digging. A tree with roots three or four inches long may survive; it may even grow well, yet the man that plants good trees prefers roots to tops. It makes very little difference about the tops, so long as there are good strong roots.

The effect of the early stripping off of the leaves is to stop the flow of sap before the tree has ripened the late growth; and the effect is precisely the same, whether the denudation is done by insects or by men. I have seen one lot of 500 apple-trees that were dug in the fall, and almost stripped in summer, that lived, yet very few have made or will make trees. I have also seen several hundreds dug at the proper time and set in the fall that did better than spring set, all being out of the same lot of trees and set in the same kind of soil.—Correspondent of Rural New Yorker.

Financial.

Tuesday, Aug. 24th.

It is reported and seems to be true that $5,800,000 in gold are on the way from Europe to the United States. The Treasury has issued another call for bonds, namely, for $10,000,000 to be redeemed on Oct. 1st. So that when the demand for money from Boston, to overcome the effects of the defalcations there, and from the West, to move the harvest, are satisfied, money here will again probably be abundant at a fair, living rate of interest.

The bank report of Saturday showed loans reduced $7,017,500, a decrease in legal tenders of $4,055,800 and in deposits of $11,142,600, and an increase in specie of $796,800. The surplus of reserve was reduced $473,350, making it $6,738,875. The rate for money during the week ranged from 1 to 20 per cent, the ordinary rate being from 6 to 8 per cent. Yesterday morning money on call was loaned at 5 to 6 per cent, and in the afternoon declined to 3 and 4 per cent. The best commercial paper pays 5 to 6 per cent. The West continues to draw from the East.

Securities declined at the Stock Market at the beginning of the week; but a considerable part of the list recovered nearly all that was lost. Bonds as well as stock have fallen off in value. Even the West Shore guaranteed bonds, which have been favorites on the street, are down to 101 7-8. If money continues worth 5 to 6 per cent a decline in quotations of stocks for a time is to be expected; but the wealth of the country is constantly increasing and must be invested in something. Really good investment securities cannot long remain unsought for.

Europe at last began last week to replenish its much reduced stores of grain. The English and French markets yesterday were reported firm, with wheat higher in England than on Saturday. The following closing quotations of yesterday indicate the rise in value: September wheat here 90 1-8, in Chicago 79 1-8; corn here 51 1-8, in Chicago 42 3-8; oats here 32 3-8, in Chicago 26 1-2. The visible supply of wheat in the United States and Canada, east of the Pacific slope, increased last week 1,603,449 bushels, was nearly 5 millions of bushels less than at this time last year and nearly 21 millions of bushels more than in 1884. The better prices are bringing out the holdings of the farmers; but the amount of grain in this country and in the world is much less than it was a year ago. The closing quotations for cotton were: Aug. 9.13-15; Sept. 9.15-16; Oct. 9 14-15; Nov. 9 15-16; Dec. 9 20-21; Jan. 9.28-29. There is no material change in the value of hay. The supply of the best grades is moderate, The soil is becoming dry in this region and the pasture is not as good as it has been. Long rye straw is quoted at 65 to 70 cents, oat and wheat straw at 45 to 50.

Despatches by cable from London yesterday said: "A rise in the Bank of England rate is expected on Thursday, possibly before if the drain of gold to America becomes excessive. To-day a large amount of gold will be withdrawn for shipment to America by Tuesday's German steamer, and further large shipments have been arranged for next week." "A rise in the Bank of England rate," because less than 6 millions of dollars in gold is on its way to New York! There is free trade with a witness! What a farce British free trade is! At the beginning of this year the United States exported 40 millions of dollars in gold to Europe; yet the rate on money was not advanced by so much as an eighth of one per cent, in fact was not advanced at all. The matter was left free to adjust itself, according to the laws of trade. But when the eighth part of that sum leaves England and France for New York, the advocates of British free trade are thrown into a panic, and, to prevent the outflow, raise the home rate of interest. And American free trade theorists are blind to this fact.

Foreign exchance here yesterday was sold at $4 82 1-2 for 60 day bills and $4.84 1-2 for demand for sterling. The exports of merchandise for the week were valued at $5,549,646, and the imports at $8,610,053.

News of the Week.

(Continued from page five.)

Ten counties in Western Texas are suffering greatly from want of food....Frederick Pappenheimer, a wealthy young man from New York, committed suicide in Louisville, Ky....A bank defaulter, Elbert P. Cook, who ruined the Bank of Havana of New York, together with his little daughter, was shot and killed by an insane man at Buenos Ayres, South America....Galveston, Texas, is inundated. A terrible storm has raged there for two days....Mr. Egan, a member of Parliament, attending the convention at Chicago, was presented with a silver service by the Irish National League. ....The fare on the Third Avenue Elevated in this city is to be reduced to five cents at all hours before long. The effect on the Third avenue horse road may add to the troubles of that corporation.

MONDAY, 23.—Prince Alexander, King of Bulgaria, was informed on Saturday by M. Karaveloff that the people desired his deposition. The Prince appeared in front of the palace and abdicated; he was then escorted over the frontier. There was no disorder. Karaveloff was the head of conspiracy, conducted with profound secrecy, believed to have been instigated by Russia ...Evictions have been going on by wholesale in Donegal, Ireland, because a total sum of £50 in rent was not paid....Congregation of a Presbyterian church was hooted at and stoned yesterday in Belfast....A woman lost $60,000 in Monte Carlo at the gaming tables, and killed herself. This is the seventy-sixth suicide there this season ...Further reports of damage in Texas by the gale and high sea of Thursday and Friday last....W. J. Kendall, a Boston detective, swims through the whirlpool at Niagara, manages to cling to a rock near the shore and was rescued in extreme exhaustion....The "Mayflower" won the yacht race on Saturday....Prof, Calvin E. Stowe, husband of Harriet Beecher Stowe, died yesterday at New Haven, aged 84 years....A great strike at Brockton, Mass., 6,000 men out....Strike on Broadway surface railroad here to-day. The company added one trip to the day's work, for the same pay.

TUESDAY, 24.—All Europe disturbed by the deposition of Prince Alexander. Further agressions by Russia expected. The people of Bulgaria favorable to the Prince. Those opposed to Russia fleeing from the country. ...Irish affairs debated yesterday in House of Commons. The government reported a Commission to investigate the Belfast riots. ....People of St. Johns, N. B., opposed to the Canadian policy on the fishery question. ....Police barracks wrecked yesterday in Belfast by a mob....Yacht race here futile yesterday; wind died out....Storm last week nearly destroyed Indianota, Texas; 38 lives lost. Storm extended 200 miles inland. Thousands of buildings destroyed. Great destitution among poorer classes....Cashier of City Bank, Williamsport, Penn., defaulter in $20,000....Broadway cars still tied up. Public sympathy in with the men....Mrs. Cleveland in telegraph office in Adirondacks touches button and starts machinery of Minneapolis Exposition....Police officers report to the District Attorney here, the speeches made at anarchist meeting in Irving Hall last Friday evening. Some arrests may follow....A Milwaukee anarchist paper threatens dire results from the condemnation of the Chicago anarchists.

The purest, sweetest and best Cod Liver Oil in the world, manufactured from fresh, healthly livers, upon the sea-shore. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in the market. Made by CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., New York.

PIMPLES removed and the Skin made smooth by using Juniper Tar Soap, manufactured by Caswell Hazard & Co., New York
Sold by druggists.

Market Report.

Review of the New York Market for Butter, Cheese, etc. Reported by DAVID W. LEWIS & Co., Produce Commission Merchants, 49 Pearl St., New York.
Commission on Butter, Eggs, Poultry, etc., is five per cent; Flour, Grain, etc., 2½ per cent.
Marking-plates furnished when desired.

NEW YORK, August 21, 1886.

BUTTER.—Receipts for the week, 36,984 pks.; exports 4,725 pks.

Western creamery makes have fallen off in quality, causing a greater demand for near-by State marks to take their place. Strictly fine last week's creamery and dairy make is sought for, and has advanced about 1c. per lb., and there is now a good reliable demand for old, well made, fresh butter. There were sales of finest fresh full flavored creamery make at 22c; finest fresh dairy sold at 19a20c., with some closely selected tubs going at 21c., and this kind of stock is wanted, while ordinary and common lots are freely offered at 14a16c., without finding buyers. In Western butter there were sales to local trade of best fresh make creameries at 22c.; 21a22c. was made for some specials; also sales of several large lots of fancy June make for speculative account at 20a20½c. Summery and off flavored Western creameries are in large supply, hard to sell, and take a wide range in price, say 14a17c. We note sales of large lines of fine June make factory butter at 11a12c., and lower grades for export at 8a 10c. We quote:

Fancy creamery	21½@23
do dairy (selections)	20 @21
Good to fine	16 @19
Poor to common	8 @13

Publisher's Department.

A SOFT, VELVET TEXTURE is imparted to the skin by the use of Glenn's Sulphur Soap. For skin diseases it should be used freely. Never take a bath without it. It is also especially useful as a means of bleaching and purifying woolen, cotton and linen fabrics.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap heals and beautifies, 25c.
German Corn Remover kills Corns, Bunions, 25c
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye—Black & Brown, 50c.
Pike's Toothache Drops cure in 1 Minute, 25c.

To thoroughly cure scrofula it is necessary to strike directly at the root of the evil. This is exactly what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, by acting upon the blood, thoroughly cleansing it of all impurities, and leaving not even a taint of scrofula in the vital fluid.

Many bodily ills result from habitual constipation, and a fine constitution may be weakened and ruined by simple neglect. There is no medicine, for regulating the bowels and restoring a natural action to the digestive organs, equal to Ayer's Pills.

3 month's treatment for 50c. Piso's Remedy for Catarrh. Sold by druggists.

MARRIAGES.

GOLDSMITH—LAMPMAN.—At Athens. N. Y., July 27th, by Rev. Wm. Bancroft Hill, Mr. Charles Goldsmith, of New York city, to Miss Dorothy M. Lampman, of Athens.

MANNING—BONNER.—At the parsonage of the Reformed Church of Farmer Village, N. Y., on Thursday, August 19th, by Rev. W. H. Nasholds, Zephaniah L. Manning to Salinda H. Bonner, both of Ovid, N. Y.

DEATHS.

Obituary notices five cents per line (nine word to the line.) For subscribers we will insert fifteen lines free; all lines in excess of that number will be charged same as non-subscribers.

LUYSTER.—At Hopewell Junction, N. Y., August 17th, Peter Luyster, in the 87th year of his age. His death was very sudden, caused by a stroke of paralysis.

PITCHER.—At Rose, N. Y., on July 17th, Mrs. Gertrude Pitcher, aged 83 years and 11 months. She was born in Kinderhook, N. Y. Her trust and confidence in God was unbroken by the storms of life and characterized her last hours, her last words being, "Bless the Lord. He is my Shepherd." "She was lovely in life and in death," are the words of those associated with her daily. The Christian hope sustained her through the changes and sorrows of life. Her love for the Church, and especially for the Reformed, was a conspicuous trait of her character. It was her custom to contribute regularly to the missionary Boards and to the other charities of the Church. With her this was a religious duty. She did what she could. She had become strongly attached to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER and was one of its most ardent friends. She leaves three daughters. V.

Notices and Acknowledgments

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—Evangelical but not denominational. Prints in 147 languages in aid of foreign missions; grants religious reading to the needy; sends colporters to millions in our highways and hedges, and to the immigrants in Castle Garden and elsewhere. This work depends wholly on charitable gifts. Donations and legacies are earnestly solicited. A summary of the sixtieth year mailed free. O. R. Kingsbury, Treasurer, 150 Nassau street, New York.

FULTON STREET DAILY NOON PRAYER-MEETING,
113 Fulton Street, and 58 Ann Street,
Just east of Broadway, near William Street.
COME IN, REST, AND PRAY.
Stop 5, 10 15 or 20 minutes, or the hour, as your time permits.

HOPE COLLEGE will open its sessions for 1886-87 on Wednesday, September 15th, at 9 o'clock A.M. The Faculty will meet for the reception of new students at 9.30 A.M. The course of instruction at this institution and all its adjuncts have been so far improved that students are invited from the East, as well as from the West, with the assurance of a good education at a very moderate cost. For further information or catalogues address

CHARLES SCOTT. President.

References: Rev. G. H. Mandeville, D.D., 34 Vesey street, New York city; Rev. C. E. Crispell, D.D., Spring Valley, N. Y.; Rev. Wm. J. R. Taylor, D.D., Newark, N. J.; J. C. Benham, M.D., Hudson, N. Y., or the editor.

WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.—In the absence of the Stated Clerk, I would hereby give notice that the Western Theological Seminary at Hope College will open on Wednesday, September 1st, 1886, at 9 o'clock A.M. The committee for the reception of students will meet the same morning at 10.30 o'clock.

Rev. Henry E. Dosker has accepted his appointment as lector for the ensuing year, having for that purpose resigned his pastoral charge.

CHARLES SCOTT,
President of the Board of Superintendents

Woman's Board of Foreign Missions.

RECEIPTS FROM JULY 10 TO AUG. 10, 1886.

Yonkers, N. Y., aux., $45; Nassau, N. Y., aux., 30; Christ Church, Utica, N. Y., 30; Readington, N. J., aux., 36; Busy Bees, Bacon Hill, 37; Union Church, High Bridge, N. Y., aux., 21.25; Bergen Church, Jersey City Heights, N. J., 71; Flatbush, L. I., for freight, 3; Miss Leila Winn, 5; Jamaica, N. Y., aux., 8.94; Acquackanonck, N. J., aux., 100; Neshanic, N. J., aux., 30; North and South Hampton, Pa., aux., 17.80; 2d New Brunswick, N.J., 160; Kalamazoo, Mich., aux., 35; Raritan, N. J., aux., 85; Ellenville, N. Y., 16.04. Total, $731.03.

Parties wishing to remit will please do so by check, if possible, made payable to the Treasurer, or by registered letter, but not by Post-Office order.

MRS. PETER DONALD, Treasurer,
39 West 46th street, New York City.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall-st., N. Y.

NATURE'S CURE FOR CONSTIPATION, Sick-Headache, AND DYSPEPSIA.

TARRANT'S Effervescent Seltzer APERIENT,

an elegant, efficacious, pleasant aperient, in the form of a powder, producing when dissolved in water an Exhilirating, Effervescent Draught, recommended by our best Physicians as a reliable and agreeable remedy. It cures Constipation, cures Indigestion, cures Dyspepsia, cures Piles, cures Heartburn, cures Sick Headache, cures Liver Complaint, cures Sick Stomach, and gently urges all the Excretory organs to a proper action. It should be found in every household and carried by every traveler. Sold by druggists everywhere.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,
Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

PERFECT SAFETY, prompt action, and wonderful curative properties, easily place Ayer's Pills at the head of the list of popular remedies for Sick and Nervous Headaches, Constipation, and all ailments originating in a disordered Liver.

I have been a great sufferer from Headache, and Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the only medicine that has ever given me relief. One dose of these Pills will quickly move my bowels, and free my head from pain.—William L. Page, Richmond Va.

Ayer's Pills,
Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

The Church.

Satisfied.

LIKE an impatient child by stormy skies,
Unwilling pent within his nursery doors,
Who leaves his toys unheeded on the floor,
And, with his face against the casement, sighs,
But when his mother's step draws near, with eyes
Alight and cry of joy, his troubles o'er,
Forgets them in her smile and sighs no more,
So, oft, the weary soul in captive guise
For freedom pines, and beats with restless wings
Against the narrow confines of its birth,
Till, suddenly, God enters, and it springs
To nestle in His arms, the bars of earth
Forgotten as the infinite above
Dawns o'er it in the face of Perfect Love.

—Julia Larned, in The Churchman.

Papering with the Bible.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Friend of Missions in Japan tells the following interesting story of a lady who went into a cake-shop to buy some cakes for her children:

While waiting for the cakes she saw that the walls were papered with leaves from the Bible. This was so strange that she asked the old woman about it, and she told the lady that one day, passing by a book-shop, she saw a pile of papers thrown away as useless. As her shop needed papering, she thought this was just the thing, and took some of it home and pasted it up over her walls. One evening her grandson came in and began reading aloud from the paper on the wall. The old woman was so interested in what she heard, that she listened eagerly and got all who would to read it to her. One day a young man came who asked if she understood it, and whether she was a Christian. She told him how much she enjoyed hearing it, but she did not understand it much, so he promised to take her to church the next day. After this she attended regularly, and became an earnest Christian. She now keeps a stock of tracts by her, and into every bag of little cakes she drops one. Is not this encouraging? All that good came out of leaves of the Bible thrown away, which were considered of no use.—Mission Dayspring.

A Word in Season.

"HOW good it is," the wise king said. But to be really good, it must be "in due season." Its value consists in its utterance at the right time, and in the right way. There is danger of erring on the side of much and untimely speaking, as well as on that of failure to speak when the golden opportunity offers. Religious prattle—mere phrase making—talk for the sake of talk, or for the purpose of discharging one's self of a duty, regardless of any special suitability to the occasion or the person addressed—is no more useful or edifying than idle gossip about secular things. Of the two, indeed, the latter is less likely to prove harmful than the other, for it has to do with matters of no particular moment, while an ill-timed religious exhortation may repel an immortal soul seeking light and life. But when, with the wisdom which truly "cometh from above," as the fruit of prayerful desire to speak wisely and effectively, one is able to utter a timely word, it is not likely to fall on unheeding ears. Such words are winged with power. They have "a virtue not their own." Their power lies even more in their timeliness and the spirit in which they are spoken than in the words themselves; and they reach the heart, not because they are peculiarly eloquent or impressive—the most effective plea is often clothed in the homeliest phrases—but because they come from the heart.

An excellent illustration of this—faculty, shall we call it?—of knowing when and how to speak, was related to us a few days ago. A Christian gentleman, while crossing the Atlantic, was standing on deck one day with the captain of the steamship, a brave but irreligious man, when he accidentally dropped a book from his coat pocket. The captain, seeing it fall, picked it up and handed it to him. The gentleman thanked him warmly, saying that he valued it beyond price, and should have been exceedingly sorry to lose it. "What book is it?' the captain asked. "Why, it's my chart and compass," was the reply. "You have yours for sailing your ship; this Testament is mine for guiding my life. And, captain," he added smilingly, "I wish you were always as sure of your way as I am of mine." No more was said, but some time afterwards the captain hunted up his friendly passenger in order to tell him that the arrow shot apparently into the air had reached its mark. "If you had tried to preach to me," he said, "I should have given you a rough answer; but the few words you said, and the way you said them, took such a hold upon me that I could not shake off the impression till I became a Christian."

No doubt there are some persons who have a peculiar gift for speaking opportunely, and from whose lips "truths divine," if they do not, according to the poet's fancy, "come mended," at least come with a sweet persuasiveness which wins attention and compels assent. But this spiritual sagacity may be acquired, in some degree, by all who will earnestly seek it at the divine source of wisdom. And as opportunities for exercising it are abundant in every life, and the fruits of it glorious beyond expression, the child of God can desire no higher privilege than that of knowing when and how to speak "a word in due season."—The Examiner.

SABBATH BREAKING.—In the course of time evidence becomes public that occupations or enterprises indulging in a desecration of the Sabbath don't pay. One of the most notorious Sabbath breaking ventures in the country has been the first railroad using steam between Brooklyn and Coney Island. The last report for the present season shows an income considerably smaller than the necessary expenditures. The chief owner is trying to sell it. Whoever buys it will certainly pay much less than the face value of the stock and bonds composing the capitalization.

The baseball clubs of the West pay little regard for the Sabbath, in fact are in the habit of playing match games on Sunday afternoon as on any other day, and practice on the Sabbath. The chief owner of the St. Louis club has just sold it. He is reported as saying, "Well, I'm out of the baseball business now, once and forever. I've lost on baseball business up to date the sum of $61,000, and before the affairs of the club are all wound up and settled I shall have lost $70,000, and that's the last baseball business will ever get out of me."

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Home Readings.

LESSON 10, THIRD QUARTER.

M. Jesus the True Vine.....John 15: 1-17.
T. The World's Hatred.....John 15: 18-27.
W. God Dwelling in Us.....1 John 4: 1-21.
T. The Fruitless Fig Tree.....Luke 13: 1-17.
F. Being Found in Christ.....Phil. 3: 7-21.
S. Seeking Things Above.....Col. 3: 1-17.
S. Loving in Deed.....1 John 3: 1-24.

—From the Westminster Question Book.

International Sunday-School Lesson.

BY REV. JOHN C. VAN DEVENTER.

Sept. 5th.—"Jesus the True Vine."—John 15: 1-16.

Golden Text.—"I am the vine, ye are the branches."—JOHN 15: 5.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—"For me, to live is Christ."—PHIL. 1: 21.

INTRODUCTION.

THE 14th chapter closes with the words, "Arise, let us go hence." It would, therefore, seem probable that the remaining discourses were spoken in the open air on the way through the city to the Mount of Olives. Jesus had been using the wine cup in the services just concluded, and had been speaking of the fruit of the vine; the idea of this discourse was, therefore, naturally suggested, especially if, as might easily have been the case, the fires were still smoldering among the vineyards of Olivet, where the cuttings of the vines had been recently burned. The key-word to this passage is "Abide," which occurs in some form twelve times in these sixteen verses.

THE LESSON.

I THE LIFE OF THE VINE IN THE BRANCHES.—VS 1-6.

V. 1.—"I am the true vine." True here signifies real as opposed to seeming. The vine, the fruit of which furnished the symbol of His blood, was only a type; He Himself was the archetype. "My Father is the husbandman." Both proprietor and caretaker. God the Father is personally interested in the work and success of His Son.

V. 2.—"Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away." This expression indicates that there may be a formal outward union with Christ, which results in the appearance of life, but without evidence of that life in the form of fruit. Such branches are encumbrances to be removed by a wise and skilful husbandman. It is said that a dead branch makes drafts on the life of a tree at the expense of the living branches. "Every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it." Jesus does not add "in me" in this clause because the fact of fruitfulness implies and proves the branch to be in Him. The purging is the pruning, cleansing process whereby the health and fruitfulness of the branch is increased. There is much in us foreign to our life in Christ, and that hinders our fruitfulness. These incumbrances God, faithful to us as to His Son, removes by means of the discipline of life.

V. 3.—"Ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." The cleansing process had been so far begun that its success was assured. These disciples still had to pass under the knife of the pruner.

V. 4.—"Abide in me, and I in you." Both of these clauses are imperative and imply that our vital union with Christ will depend upon ourselves. We may separate ourselves from Him by neglect, or we may drive Him from us by sin. We need to cultivate this life flowing from Jesus into ourselves. "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself." Nothing is more useless than a branch separated from its parent stem. It is not even fit for firewood. "No more can ye except ye abide in me." It is equally useless for one to attempt to imitate the Christian life without this vital union with Christ.

V. 5.—"I am the vine, ye are the branches," This important truth needed to be repeated, in order that the disciples might learn to look up for their life in the times to come. "He that abideth in me, and I in him." The interliving of Christ and His followers is mutual. The vine runs into the branch, and the branch enters into the substance of the vine. "The same bringeth forth much fruit." Upon the closeness of our union with Christ depends the degree of spiritual vitality we possess, and the amount of our fruitfulness. "Without me, that is, apart from me, ye can do nothing." The moment separation occurs death ensues.

V. 6.—"If a man abide not in me." The case of the false branches is now considered. The little life apparently possessed, has dwindled until the branch is condemned as unhealthy. "Cast off,—withered,—burned." First the self-destruction,—the closing of the heart against gracious influences; then the providential excision,—the cutting off from apparent connection with the vine; then the final condemnation,—cast into the fire and burned. This last verse seems to refer to all men and to declare the universal truth that no spiritual life is possible apart from Christ.

II. THE FRUIT OF THE VINE IN THE BRANCHES.—VS. 7-10.

V. 7.—"If ye abide in me" If your life is hid with Christ in God. "Ye shall ask what ye will." This was not an unsafe promise because it was conditioned upon the abiding. If we abide in Christ we shall will to ask His will. "It shall be done unto you." All things needed for the life and fruitfulness of the branches will be granted in answer to their requests. The spirit of prayer may be regarded as one of the fruits of the vine.

V. 8.—"Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit." The branches and the vine exist for the husbandman. Jesus glorified His Father, and expects us to do the same. We cannot glorify Him except as we bear the fruit He looks for, and bear it abundantly.

V. 9.—"As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you." If a complete devotion of ourselves to Jesus is expected, this is no more than He has given us. His love is Infinite, Divine. "Continue ye in my love." Love for Jesus will be one of the fruits of our life in Him, and will also secure increased fruitfulness.

V. 10.—"If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love." As love is the manifestation of life, so obedience is the proof of love. The only real obedience is that which springs from love. "Even as I have kept my Father's commandments." "Even as,"—there is no expression in the New Testament which unveils more fully the wonders of redeeming love than this comparison. It places the redeemed sinner upon a high plane of fellowship with God. When we have Christ we have all that the trees of Knowledge and of Good and Evil in Eden symbolized.

III. THE JOY OF THE VINE IN THE BRANCHES.—VS. 11-16.

V. 11.—"That my joy might remain in you." The joy which Jesus would impart to His people is His own joy. That joy which springs from His union with His Father and delight in His will. "That your joy might be full." Our joy will be full only as we are full of Christ, and then we shall have joy unspeakable and full of glory.

V. 12.—"That ye love one another, as I have loved you." They are to find their joy out of themselves in the joy of their brethren.

V. 13.—"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." The love of Jesus for His friends was tested by the sacrifice He made for them. Our love for Him or for His will be measured by the spirit of sacrifice which we exhibit.

V. 14.—"Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." These men were soon to find that friends were few. The members of their own households would become their bitterest enemies, yet they would have the consolation of the friendship of the Son of God. This friendship was to be preserved by their yielding themselves to Him. In almost every intimacy there is a commanding influence on one side; such an influence Jesus rightly claims over His human friends.

V. 15.—"I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." The confidence of love in which Jesus reveals Divine truth to His disciples is a proof of our high and close relation to Him, and a constant source of joy to the believer.

V. 16.—"Ye have not chosen me." The origin of this union was with Jesus, and this fact is a guarantee of its stability. "Ordained you that ye should go and bring forth fruit." The service of Jesus is to be the aim of the Christian's life. In that service he is to find his fellowship and joy in the Lord. "That whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you." It is noteworthy how often the promise of answer to prayer occurs in these last discourses of Jesus. It is like His parting benediction upon His children.

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

1. As a branch your life depends upon Christ the vine.
2. As a branch you must partake of the nature of the vine.
3. As a branch you must resemble the vine.
4. As a branch you are subject to the care of the husbandman.
5. As a branch you must be more and more fruitful.
6. As a branch you may partake of the joy of the vine.
7. As a branch you live only for the vine.

Leather Knees.

ON a certain spring morning when all was bright and beautiful overhead, and—well, the less said the better about what was underfoot—seven enterprising small boys awoke to a remembrance of the fact that there is such a game as marbles in the world. No doubt they were duly thankful; at any rate they caused more or less confusion (in most cases more) each in his respective home by hunting, boy fashion, for the remains of last year's supply of marbles. At last, a triumphant shout from seven strong lungs, sounding through seven houses, showed that the search had been successful, and that the treasures were found. Then the seven boys ran gayly off to school, and seven mammas sighed. The marble season had commenced.

On the school ground the boys met and compared notes; then one of them drew a straight line or a circle (which is it, boys?) with his thumb nail, and soon all were heartily engaged in the game.

At length the school-bell rang, and the boys all jumped up quickly from the damp, dirty ground, and slapped their knees vigorously until the dirt was well pounded in out of sight. That is, all except one did. Phil Lawrence, the most tidy in appearance of them all, gazed ruefully at his own dirty knees for a moment, then remarked:

"Rather hard on a fellow's knees, isn't it? It wouldn't take very many games to wear a hole clear through, to say nothing of the dirt."

"Oh, well, never mind!" Al Sanders replied, "we don't have to wash or mend them."

"No, sir! we don't; but our mothers do! More's the pity," was the indignant rejoinder.

By this time the boys had reached the school-room and there was no more time for talking as they passed quickly to their seats.

At the noon recess the boys exchanged invitations with each other to hurry back as soon as possible from dinner; and Al Sanders called out banteringly to Phil:

"Now, my dainty Lady Phil, we will hope to see you back again in good season, unless you have decided to give up playing such an untidy and unladylike game as marbles."

But Phil had no intention of giving up marbles; and it cut him to be called "my lady," just as it would any other boy. Nevertheless, he did not hurry one bit; but, on the contrary, walked toward home at an unusually slow pace. He was thinking. He did dearly love marbles; but then he loved his mother, too, and did not like to make her any more trouble than he could help.

"And it can't be much fun to clean dirty knees every once in awhile and patch them, too, in the bargain."

Suddenly a thought struck him, and with such force that he said, "Oh!" right out loud in the street. Then he turned right-about-face and went into Mr. Winter's shoe-shop, which happened to be standing conveniently near.

"Mr. Winter, have you any pieces of leather you could sell me?'

"Yes, I guess so; how much do you want?"

"This much," Phil answered after a moment, holding up two pieces. That settled, he ran home fast enough, I can tell you, to make up for lost time. He found dinner not quite ready, so he busied himself with the leather. First, he cut two soft, black pieces into oblongs about six by eight inches; then he scalloped the edges, cut three holes in each end of them, hunted up some shoestrings and tied these pieces of leather over his knees. It did not take him long to eat his dinner and run back to school, where he was one of the first boys on the playground. Of course the leather-covered knees attracted general attention.

"What in the world has he got on his kness?" exclaimed one in wonder.

"Oh, ho! Leatherknees!' from another.

"Let's get a piece of carpet for him to kneel on," suggested the third.

While a fourth bowed low and said with mock deference:

"Captain Leatherknees, may we presume to ask you to play a game of marbles with us?"

Roly Poly Potter, a fat, good-natured boy, with very little mind of his own, stood by and giggled at the remarks of the other boys, while Harry Anderson, Phil's chum, said indignantly:

"I don't see what there is to make such a fuss about!"

Phil stood in silence until the first excitement was over, then he exclaimed manfully:

"Now, see here, boys. Honor bright, don't you think our mothers have enough to do without a lot of extra knee-cleaning and patching? We wouldn't like it if we had to do it ourselves, and I don't suppose our mothers enjoy it very much. Now, if we would only wear these leather knees, it would save a good deal; and we could form ourselves into a company and have a captain and parade days with leather knees of fancy colors for dress—black is best for every-day use. We could get lots of fun out of it; and, anyhow, it won't hurt us to show that we have a little consideration as well as lots of love for our mothers."

Phil stopped here, all out of breath, with a very flushed, but a very earnest face.

"Hurrah! Three cheers for Phil!" one of the boys exclaimed; and three hearty, lusty cheers followed. When the last sound died away, Phil exclaimed eagerly, "Now, let's give three times three cheers for our mothers!"

And this was heartily responded to. Phil's speech had won over to his side the most of the boys. A few hung back and ridiculed, but only for a short time; for this class of seven were too good friends to disagree long. Before the close of the week they each owned two pairs of leather knees—a black for every-day use and a colored for parade, to be fastened on with ribbons.

On Saturday they made their first parade. Each boy had on his fancy knees, also a black leather cap, around which was pasted in colored leather letters "Leatherknees." Each boy carried in his right hand a bag of marbles, and one bore a small leather flag having thereon this motto: "Mothers and Marbles Forever!"

Perhaps it is needless to say that Phil was chosen captain of the company. Proudly they marched back and forth in front of their several homes and on the principal streets. Some wondered at them, some laughed good-naturedly, some ridiculed, and still others gave hearty approval. But certain proud mammas smiled at the sight and were made exceedingly happy thereby.—Cora Van Nostrand, in N. Y. Tribune.

Gush.

DON'T gush. Avoid extremes, superlatives, and—gush. Don't exaggerate the significance of trifles; don't describe mole hills as mountains. If a rain-drop wets your face, don't say the storm was terrible; if a person is polite to you, or does you a favor, don't immediately conclude that he adores you and would die for you; if, on the other hand, he seems somewhat uneffusive, don't infer that he hates and would like to kill you. Appreciate all good things, but don't sentimentalize over them. Don't run when walking would be just as well, and probably better; and don't just pour yourself out when, perhaps, it would be better to contain yourself. Gush is doubtless enjoyed by an individual here and there who is himself effusive, but by the world in general it is usually received as one of the things to be endured with other afflictions. —The Watchman.

Profanity.

ONE of the greatest treasures of an age is its language, and one of the richest jewels an individual can possess is that of tongue, Greek, or Latin, or French, or German, or English, which is to the mind the harp-strings by which it makes itself audible, not only to others, but even to itself. An ancient declared language to be the picture of the soul. We all think in it just as we sing in the eight notes. To take this sublime property and mix into it vulgarity and profanity is to have fallen as low as one would be who should pass the Louvre throwing mud and pitch upon the inimitable canvases. For all these idle words man ought to be and is brought to judgment. Few persons ever design to become profane. None dream in advance of losing their language, their power of speech, and of becoming vandals in the temples of the divinities. Men come to profanity only by a long neglect. As the defaulter comes to his final great fraud by long and slow approaches, by long gazing away from the right and toward the wrong, so the man who loses the gift of speech mixes in his oaths little by little until noble speech is dead, and he mutters, and stammers, and raves with lips which once knew the honey of sweet eloquence.—Professor David Swing.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate
In Debility.

Dr. W. H. HOLCOMBE, New Orleans, La., says: "I found it an admirable remedy for debilitated state of the system, produced by the wear and tear of the nervous energies."

Care for the Children

Children feel the debility of the changing seasons, even more than adults, and they become cross, peevish, and uncontrollable. The blood should be cleansed and the system invigorated by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Last Spring my two children were vaccinated. Soon after, they broke all out with running sores, so dreadful I thought I should lose them. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured them completely; and they have been healthy ever since. I do feel that Hood's Sarsaparilla saved my children to me." MRS. C. L. THOMPSON, West Warren, Mass.

Purify the Blood

Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarities: 1st, the combination of remedial agents; 2d, the proportion; 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, effecting cures hitherto unknown. Send for book containing additional evidence.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over." J. P. THOMPSON, Register of Deeds, Lowell, Mass.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla beats all others, and is worth its weight in gold." I. BARRINGTON, 130 Bank Street, New York City.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

7% NET Security 3 to 6 times loan. INTEREST semi-annual and paid at your home. 29th year of residence, and 10th of business. No investor ever had to pay taxes, costs of foreclosure, wait for interest, or take land. BEST of References all around you. Write if you have money to loan.

D. S. B. JOHNSTON & SON,
Negotiators of Mortgage Loans.
MENTION THIS PAPER St. Paul, Minn

POPULAR LECTURES.

1.—The Romance of the Revolution.
2.—An Evening with Longfellow
3.—The Tudors
4.—Monologue—National Poems and Events

Address MRS. E. T. BARRETT,
SING SING, N. Y

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for
PLATFORM ECHOES
or LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART,
• By John B. Gough. •

His last and crowning life work, brim full of thrilling interest, humor and pathos. Bright, pure, and good, full of "laughter and tears," it sells at sight to all. To it is added the Life and Death of Mr. Gough, by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT. 1000 Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $100 to $200 a month made. ☞ Distance no hindrance as we give Extra Terms and Pay Freights. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Lactated Food

The Most Successful PREPARED FOOD
FOR NEW-BORN INFANTS.

It may be used with confidence when the mother is unable, wholly or in part, to nurse the child, as safe substitute for mother's milk.

No other food answers so perfectly in such cases. It causes no disturbance of digestion, and will be relished by the child.

In CHOLERA INFANTUM,

This predigested and easily assimilated Food will surely prevent fatal results.

FOR INVALIDS, it is a Perfect Nutrient in either Chronic or Acute Cases.

Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value. It will be retained when even lime water and milk is rejected by the stomach. In dyspepsia, and in all wasting diseases it has proved the most nutritious and palatable, and at the same time the most economical of Foods. There can be made for an infant

150 MEALS for $1.00.

Sold by Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.00.

☞ A valuable pamphlet on "The Nutrition of Infants and Invalids," free on application.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

7% FARM LOANS!
SECURED BY
FIRST MORTGAGES ON IMPROVED FARMS.

TWELVE YEARS in the business. Over $1,000 000 invested during this time. References: My old customers in all sections of the United States. If you have money in savings bank or lying idle, send to me for circular containing full information, letters from my old customers, references, a NEW MAP OF DAKOTA, all sent free on application. Address E. P. GATES,
PRESIDENT MERCHANTS' BANK,
Grand Forks, Dakota.

6% 7% 8%

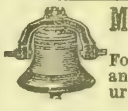
The American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, incorporated, with a paid-up capital of $500,000, with branches at Huron and Mitchell, Dakota, offer First Mortgage Farm Loans in Iowa, Minn., Dakota, and Neb., both Principal and Interest Guaranteed. Also 6 per cent. Debenture Bonds (obligations of the Company), running 10 years, secured by Mortgage loans deposited with the Mercantile Trust Co., N. Y. It also issues Demand Certificates of Deposit at 5 per cent. interest. Write for pamphlet and references.
Home Office, Emmetsburg, Iowa.
E. S. Ormsby, Pres., 150 Nassau St., N. Y.

INVEST Through the Sound and Reliable
WESTERN FARM MORTGAGE CO.
F. M. PERKINS, President. LAWRENCE, KAN. L. H. PERKINS, Secretary.
CAPITAL AND SURPLUS, $250,000.
Carefully selected 1st Mortgage Farm Loans payable in N. Y. Unrivalled facilities. Absolute satisfaction. 10 years' experience. No losses. Refer to 3d Nat'l Bank, N. Y. City; Nat'l Bank, Lawrence, Kan.; and Hundreds of Investors. Send for pamphlet, forms and full information. Branch Offices in N. Y. City, Albany & Phila. N. Y. Office, 137 B'way, C. C. Hine & Son, Agts.

BELLS.

McShane Bell Foundry
Finest Grade of Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS for CHURCHES, &c.
Sent for Price and Catalogue. Address
H. McSHANE & CO.,
Mention this paper. Baltimore, Md.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Fire Alarms, Farms, etc. FULLY WARRANTED. Catalogue sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.



MENEELY & COMPANY
West Troy, N. Y. Bells,
For Churches, Schools, etc., also Chimes and Peals. For more than half a century noted for superiority over all others

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.
Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and endorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it. J. G. WALTEMEYER Prop. 239 N. Second St. Phila. Pa.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

GEO. MATHER'S SONS, PRINTING INK

Manufacturers. Superior Black and Colored Ink Lithographic and Plate Ink. Varnishes, etc. 60 John street New York.
The Intelligencer is printed with our ink.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.
CATARRH
Also good for Cold in the Head, Headache, Hay Fever, &c. 50 cents.

CURE for the DEAF by PECK'S PAT. IMPROVED CUSHIONED EAR DRUMS. Whispers heard distinctly. Conversation, even by the feeble, perfectly restored. Book of proofs, FREE. Address or call on F. HISCOX, 853 Broadway, N. Y. Name this paper.

CONSUMPTION

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address. DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., N. Y.

R. H. MACY & CO.,

14TH STREET, SIXTH AVE., AND 13TH STREET NEW YORK.

GRAND CENTRAL FANCY AND DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT.

We Call Attention to Our Large and Varied Stock Goods Adapted to the Summer Season.

Our Customer Residing in the

COUNTRY,

Or Those Visiting the

MOUNTAINS

OR

SEA-SHORE,

Can Rely on Having Their

ORDERS BY MAIL

Carefully Executed and Promptly Shipped.

OUR PRICES

Are Always the Lowest.

R. H. MACY & CO.

James M'Creery & Co.

HAVE OPENED THEIR EARLY IMPORTATIONS OF SILKS, VELVETS AND PLUSHES, AND ARE NOW EXHIBITING COMPLETE ASSORTMENTS IN RICH AND EXCLUSIVE DESIGNS. AN EXAMINATION IS INVITED.

Broadway & 11th St.,

NEW YORK.

A MILLION BOOKS

RARE, CURIOUS, CURRENT. IN STOCK.

ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.

Libraries Supplied Cheaper than at any Book Store in the World.

LIBRARIES AND BOOKS BOUGHT.

MAMMOTH CATALOGUE FREE.

LEGGAT BROTHERS,

81 CHAMBERS STREET,

3d door West of City Hall Park. NEW YORK.

The trouble is it blisters and the trouble is it peels and the color flats out. Well then try us. The F. J. Nash M'f'g Co., manufacturers of Ready Mixed Paints, at $1.35 per gallon, that don't fade, don't peel and won't blister. Nyack, Rockland County, New York. Interesting Circulars Free. If your dealer refuses you these goods apply to us direct.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE Grammar School,

New Brunswick, N. J.

PREPARES BOYS AND YOUNG MEN FOR COLLEGE OR BUSINESS.

Additional buildings were last year required, erected and filled.

This year additional teachers engaged to meet the increased number of students.

Rooms carpeted and cared for. Some arranged in suites—a study-room 14x14 with two single sleeping-rooms adjoining. A few single rooms to be had if desired.

Last year at the opening of the school every room was engaged, and many applicants were refused admission because of the lack of room. This year rooms will be reserved as applied for.

For catalogues and further information, address E. T. TOMLINSON, Headmaster.

EDUCATIONAL.

BEST TEACHERS AMERICAN and FOREIGN,

promptly provided for Families, Schools, Colleges
Skilled Teachers supplied with Positions.
Circulars of Good Schools free to Parents.
School Property rented and sold.
School and Kindergarten Material, etc.
J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO.,
American School Institute, 7 East 14th St., N. Y.

CLAVERACK COLLEGE

AND HUDSON RIVER INSTITUTE.
Claverack, New York.
Rev. A. H. FLACK, A.B., President.

Affords superior advantages for thorough and systematic education to young men and women.

Unsurpassed for healthfulness and beauty of location.

Large and commodious buildings, recently improved and refitted.

A strong faculty of experienced professors and teachers.

Careful attention given to social, moral and physical culture. Ten graduating courses.

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC AND ART. Courses in Piano, Voice Culture, Organ, and Harmony.

Normal Course for Music Teachers. Weekly Lectures and Musicales.

Recitals by distinguished artists.

Individual lessons only. All practice under supervision.

Classes in Chorus Drill and Vocal Sight Reading.

Painting, Modeling in Clay, Crayoning, and Drawing are thoroughly developed by the most modern theories of teaching. Thirty-third Year Opens Sept. 13.

Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Please mention this paper.

The Misses Anable's

English, French and German Boarding and Day-School

WILL REOPEN SEPTEMBER 22D.

40 BAYARD ST., New Brunswick, N. J.

Elmira College. FOR WOMEN.

Under Care of Synod of New York.

Course of study equal to that of the best Colleges; also Elective and Special Courses. Best advantages in Music and Art. Building with best modern improvements; heated by steam, and furnished with elevator. Astronomical Observatory --Museum and Art Gallery. Terms moderate. Address Rev. A. W. COWLES, D.D., Pres't, Elmira, N. Y.

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE, BOSTON UNIVERSITY, Opens Oct. 14, '86.

Fourteenth Year. Furnishes superior facilities for thorough scientific and practical instruction in three and four years' courses. Entrance examinations, Oct, 11, 12 and 13. Send for announcements to
I. T. TALBOT, M.D., Dean.

SIGLAR'S PREPARATORY SCHOOL,

NEWBURG-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.,

Gives the best preparation for the best colleges. Two Yale valedictorians in three years. Entrance examinations held at the school by member of Yale Faculty. Daily gymnastics under teacher compulsory. For circulars, etc., address
HENRY W. SIGLAR, M.A., (Yale) Prin.

ALEXANDER INSTITUTE

White Plains, N.Y.

23 miles from New York City by rail. Fits boys for College or business pursuits. 30 to 40 pupils 5 Teachers. Board and Tuition per annum $400. For circulars, apply to the Principal, O. R. WILLIS, Ph.D.

Deckertown, Sussex Co., N.J.

A SELECT ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes. School year begins September 8. For Circular, address,
W. H. SEELEY, A.M., Prin.

SEYMOUR SMITH INSTITUTE

Pine Plains, N. Y., prepares for College. Healthful, homelike, select, thorough. Address Rev. A. MATTICE, A.M., Principal.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

1 hour from New York on the Penna. R. R.

Year begins (examinations for admission) Sept 22, 1886.

SLOAN PRIZES FOR BEST (CLASSICAL) ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS; 1st, $400 ($100 CASH); 2d, $350 ($50 CASH).

Sixteen Professors; no Tutors. Classical course full and thorough. Increased facilities for the study of French and German, with a view to practical use. Laboratory work for all students in Chemistry. Well-equipped Astronomical Observatory for students' use. Full Geological Cabinet. 50,000 well chosen books in Libraries.

Ample provision for Electives, Junior and Senior years, in Natural Science, History, etc.

The SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT is the New Jersey State College. Constant field-practice in Surveying. Full course in Draughting.

THE AIM OF THE COLLEGE—THOROUGHNESS IN ALL WORK.

Best facilities and personal attention for every student. For full information, address Librarian Rutgers College.

Merrill Edwards Gates, Ph.D., LL.D., Pres't

VASSAR COLLEGE,

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

FOR WOMEN, with a complete College Course, School of Painting and Music, Astronomical Observatory, Laboratory of Chemistry and Physics, Cabinets of Natural History, a Museum of Art, a Library of 15,000 Volumes, ten Professors, twenty-three Teachers. Catalogues sent on application.
Rev. JAMES M. TAYLOR, D.D., President.

Rutgers Female College,

58 West 55th street, commences 49th year September 22d. Rev. John Hall, D.D., President of the Board of Trustees. Boarding and Kindergarten Departments. Address the College.

Somerville Seminary, Somerville, N. J.

A Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies and Children re-opens September 15th. Thorough instruction in English branches, Music, Languages and Painting. MISSES PARSONS & LE FEVRE.

HEMPSTEAD INSTITUTE.

Hempstead, Long Island, N. Y.

A Thorough English Boarding School for Boys. Primary, Intermediate, Higher English and Commercial Courses. Twenty-seventh year begins September 15. Catalogues sent on Application.

Riverview Academy,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Prepares for College and the Government Academies, for Business and Social relations. Thorough Military Instruction. Springfield Cadet Rifles.
BISBEE & AMEN, Principals.

38TH YEAR. LYNDON HALL.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—A High-Class School for Young Ladies. Music, Drawing, Painting, Languages, and English branches thoroughly taught, with full regard to the equally important matters of home care and training. Address
SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Principal.

YOUNG LADIES SEMINARY.

43d YEAR
Begins Sept. 22.
Address
F. CHANDLER, D. D., Prest.
Freehold, N. J.

Auburn Theological Seminary.

The term opens September 1st, 1886. For catalogue address WILLIS J. BEECHER, Clerk of Faculty, Auburn, N. Y.

Betts' Academy, Stamford, Conn.

A Boys' Boarding School of the highest grade. 49th year begins Sept. 15th Wm. J. Betts, M.A., (Yale), Principal.

RYE SEMINARY, Rye, NEW YORK.

For particulars address Mrs. S. J. LIFE.

PEEKSKILL (N. Y.) MILITARY Academy.

ATLANTIC

Mutual Insurance Co.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 51 WALL STREET

ORGANIZED 1842.

Insures against Marine and Inland Navigation Risks.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest in accordance with its Charter.

J. D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice President
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice Pres't.
A. A. RAVEN 3d Vice Pres't.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

CONTINENTAL Insurance Co.

Continental Buildings
100 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Cor. COURT and MONTAGUE STS., BROOKLYN
106 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, E.D.

Insures against loss by Fire at reasonable rates.

Reserve for re-insurance	$2,265,427 8
of which for Inland Marine, $55,969 52
Reserve ample for all other claims	553,171 3[illegible]
Capital paid in cash	1,000,000 00
Net surplus	1,358,879 85

Total Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886. $5,177,478 99

This Company conducts its business under the restrictions of the New York Safety Fund Law. The two Safety Funds together equal $1,200,000.

H. H. LAMPORT, President.

CYRUS PECK, Secretary.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK.

OFFICE, No. 119 BROADWAY.

Sixty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the Condition of the Company on the 1st day of July, 1886.

CASH CAPITAL	$3,000,000
Reserve Premium Fund	2,938,020 0
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	301,040 1
Net Surplus	1,389,341 71
Cash Assets	$7,628,401 81

SUMMARY OF ASSETS

Cash in Banks	$126,608 99
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	743,300 0
United States Stocks (market value)	2,9 2,697 50
Bank and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	1,733,640 00
State and City Bonds (market value)	286,000 00
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	180,000 0
Interest due on 1st July, 1886	10,394 74
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	299,646 97
Real Estate	1,364,113 61
Total	$7,628,401 81

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
D. A. HEALD, Vice-President.
J. H. WASHBURN, V. P. & Sec'y
T. B. GREENE, W. L. BIGELOW, E. G. SNOW, Jr., } Ass't Sec's.

EQUITABLE

Mortgage Company,

SIX AND SEVEN PER CENT

FARM Mortgages & Municipal in Kansas, Missouri & Nebraska BONDS

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST

GUARANTEED.

Capital, $600,000.00.

A pamphlet containing information concerning the history of Farm Mortgages for the past twenty-five years sent free on application.

OFFICES:

NEW YORK, 208 B'way, Evening Post Bl'dg.
CHARLES N. FOWLER, V.
BOSTON, 23 Court Street.
H. H. FITCH, Manager.
PHILADELPHIA, 112 South Fourth Street.
CHAS. BENJ. WILKINSON, Manag
KANSAS CITY, Mo.
JOHN AVERY, General Manager.

N. W. HARRIS & CO.,

115-117 Monroe St., CHICAGO.

BONDS Of Counties, Cities, &c. of high grade a specialty. Send for descriptive lists.

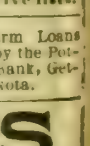
8 Per Cent,

Choice Farm Loans Negotiated by the Potter County Bank, Gettysburg, Dakota.

LE PAGE'S LIQUID GLUE



Is used by thousands of first class Manufacturers and Mechanics on their best work. Received GOLD MEDAL, London, '85. Pronounced strongest glue known. Send card of dealer who does not keep it, with five 2c stamps for SAMPLE CAN FREE
Russia Cement Co., Gloucester, Mass.

OPIUM

Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 Days. No Pay until Cured. J. L. STEPHENS, M. D., Lebanon, Ohio.

----FLORIDA.----

—ACADEMY AND COLLEGE AT DeLAND, FLORIDA.—

A first-class Academy for both sexes. Five Courses—College Preparatory, Higher English, Normal, Business, Industrial Drawing. First-class Art and Music Departments. Fine New Dormitory Buildings, enabling us to furnish board and tuition at reasonable rates. The purpose of this Institution is to give, in the delightful climate of FLORIDA, as thorough and liberal an education as can be secured in the best New England schools. DeLand College will also receive students of both sexes prepared to enter the Freshman Class. Send for Catalogue to
J. F. FORBES, President, DeLand, Florida, or H. A. DeLAND, Fairport, N. Y.

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS
RIDGE'S FOOD
THE BEST DIET for INVALIDS.
THE BEST FOOD for INFANTS.
Sold by all Druggists. Four sizes in Cans.
With Woolrich & Co on every label

The Best Test is Use.

Below are a few condensed extracts from letters received:

"I used for my own babe and can truly say that it is elegant, palatable, nourishing, and easily digested."
J. W. LIGHTNER, M.D., Napoleon, Mo.

"I am feeding my baby by the 'Special Directions.' It has worked like a charm."
Mrs. R. S. TUBMAN, Boston Highlands, Mass.

Another physician writes

After Trial of Ridge's Food:

"It meets my most sanguine expectations. I expect to use it whenever occasion offers."

"Everybody thinks he is a month older than he is—a great fat, strong, healthy boy. . . A great many of my friends are trying to induce me to change, but if my baby thrives on RIDGE'S FOOD that is enough."
Mrs. LENA G. VOSE, Lynn, Mass.

"I have used RIDGE'S FOOD the past six months and find it just as recommended. In fact, would not be without it."
Miss DORA S. DAVIS, Rockford, Ill.

Send to WOOLRICH & CO., Palmer, Mass. for "Healthful Hints," SENT FREE.

The Christian Intelligencer.

Een-dracht maakt macht.

VOL. LVII.—No. 35. WHOLE No. 2927.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1886.

$2.65 A YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 48 CHURCH STREET.

EDITORS: Rev. JOHN M. FERRIS, D.D. Rev. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR: MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A WRITER in one of our Baptist contemporaries makes this very instructive statement. We doubt not that he sets forth accurately cause and effect.

"The Juniata Association, the Redstone Association and the Baltimore Association were once large and flourishing bodies. But, in an evil day, under the combined influence of human selfishness and of a onesided and exaggerated view of the truth, they adopted anti-mission sentiments. They denounced the folly and presumption of going to preach to the heathen, 'as if God did not know His own business' (their exact words). What the result has been is no secret. Once the Baptists were strong all through the lower tiers of counties. But anti mission has been the death of them."

BOHEMIA.—We have seen a recent private letter from the Rev. Dr. Cattell, who is now in Europe, in which he mentions that the Reformed Church in Bohemia has added to its doctrinal standard, (the Second Helvetic Confession, the work of Bullinger, 1566, generally adopted by the Reformed in the sixteenth century,) the yet older and more generally recognized symbol, the Heidelberg Catechism. A translation of this venerable standard into the Cech language was made some years since by Von Tardez. This is now undergoing correction and revision at the hands of Pastor Szalatnay. It is somewhat singular that the catechism has been long since rendered into Greek, Arabic, Malay, etc., and only in the present century translated into a dialect of modern Europe. No one can doubt the doctrinal position of the Bohemian churches since they formally recognize such time-honored standards as the two we have mentioned.

IT IS DIFFICULT to glean from the journals professing to represent the wishes of working men a definite outline of what changes in laws, customs or administration the workingmen would bring about. If one allows the history of the past four or five centuries to regulate his expectations he will hope for more salutary changes from the efforts of workingmen than from the plans of employers or capitalists; but how can any one know what to think, what to advocate or what to sympathize with if there is no definite statement of the regulations or adjustments through which relief is to be obtained. For some weeks we have been reading such workingmen's journals as have come to our hands and have been puzzled with the vague, indefinite and sometimes inconsistent grievances which they declare and the lack of a distinct indication of what it is desirable to do or to endeavor to do. We read an excessively general condemnation of "capitalism." How much or how little does that mean? Is it proposed to get on without capital? We find also monopolies, corporations, and so on, deprecated and condemned in general terms. Just how much does that mean? So one could go on. On every point the declarations are most vague and unsatisfactory. They may mean communism or they may mean equitable or humane adjustments. It seems to us that one of the first things now needed is a definite declaration of their faith by the workingmen. What would they have? What are they striving for? Let us have the articles of your faith, your industrial creed.

Furthermore, our regard for the lessons of history does not lead us to expect valuable results from Unions which hold their business meetings on the Sabbath, or from the deliberations of men who assail the Christian Church and pulpit, or from those who express sympathy with the condemned Chicago anarchists, or from those who express no godliness, seem to have no regard for the Bible, give little attention to the importance of temperance and economy and other virtues which could be named. Besides, our regard for the lessons of the history of the past three hundred years does not lead us to expect any important improvement in social affairs, or what are called economical arrangements, from men who, so far as they have any religion, are Romanists.

THE UNION proposed between the branches of the Reformed Church in this country is discussed wisely, temperately and in an excellent Christian spirit by contributors to the Messenger, which represents the Reformed Church in the United States. Among ourselves a waiting disposition prevails, so far as we know. The Church is awaiting, it seems to us, the declaration of the basis of union which may be made by the Committees selected by all parties. The matter is one to be conducted with deliberation. A union may prove desirable for many reasons, if it can be effected with entire cordiality. No attempt should be made to force it. Time should be taken to arrive at results which will be accepted universally or almost universally and be heartily accepted. Concessions may be necessary, probably will be; but it seems desirable to reduce them to a minimum. There is a tendency to a union or confederation of some sort. After the committees have met we shall know just what that tendency is. Meanwhile, neither party interested can do too much in the way of cultivating and exercising a fraternal spirit. There is no call for inconsiderate or precipitate action. This is not said for the sake of limiting or delaying discussion. An expression of opinion is important, and these columns are open to the statement of the desires and reasons of those who favor a union.

PARACLETE is the equivalent in English for the word translated Advocate and Comforter in English versions of the Gospel of John. It means one called to assist another. That is its most narrow and literal meaning. Before the month is over the International Lessons will bring this word before the Sabbath-schools. It is a very precious word, as many a one in the Holy Scriptures is. If it could be preached upon from the pulpit of every church in the land the sermons would be an excellent preparation for the work of the fall and winter. The mission of the Holy Spirit will come before the Sabbath schools on the 12th. A sermon on that or the following Sunday on the relation of the Holy Spirit to the followers of Christ could not fail to be profitable. Our Lord's word, "Paraclete," to the minds of those who heard Him and of those who afterward heard the Gospel read in Christian assemblies, conveyed the idea that the relation between the Holy Spirit and the Christian was like that then existing between the patron and client. The relation has now passed away, but it was in force then. The patron was generally a man of wealth and position, often an influential member of the government; he was also, if not learned, intelligent in regard to the influences of the time in commercial, social and political life. The patrons often belonged to noble families, held in honor and firmly established in influence. The client was one often needing help. He engaged to render certain services to the patron, to swell the body of his retainers on occasions when that was desirable in times of peace or war, to do work for him when necessary, and for this the patron became the counsellor, the advocate, the helper of his client. He pleaded for him, appeared in his behalf before the authorities or before any accuser or opponent. He was the friend and helper of his client in every way, protecting, advising, encouraging and strengthening him. In its best estate this relation was one of the highest value to the client. It was most beneficial to him in all his plans and pursuits. He became the friend, often the intimate friend of his patron. A similar relation exists between the Spirit of God and the believer, and the word, paraclete, expressed all these benefits to the men of the day of the apostles. The Holy Spirit is the Christian's advocate before the Court of Heaven, and that it is not necessary to dwell upon here—it will come up in the Sabbath-school lesson. But in looking over some of the expositions we do not find it said that the Holy Spirit is our advocate with men in our work in this world. Such He is, teaching us what to say and what to do, protecting, sustaining, advising and encouraging us—befriending us as far as may be necessary. He is in the literal and most precious sense "one called to assist us." What an assistant! He pleads for us with men, when we are endeavoring to win them to repentance and faith. If we look to Him, confide in Him, as our patron, He tells us what to say, enables us to see clearly what it is best to say or do, and then, by the unseen influence which He can put forth, commends our efforts in the minds and hearts and consciences of men and clothes them with power. If we confide in Him He upholds and cheers and strengthens us through trial and temptation, in all the toils and perplexities and vexations of life. He makes us more and more the sons of God and testifies to our spirits that we are the children of God and gives us the foretaste and earnest of that which God hath in reserve for them that love Him. Such is He who is called and sent of the Father and the Son to assist us. Our Lord assures us that He "gives" this paraclete to us. Let us value the gift as we ought.

OUR EXPECTATIONS in regard to the new Commissioner of Public Works in this city have been agreeably disappointed. General Newton, who has superintended, with superior skill and unquestioned integrity, the work of removing the rocks in Hell Gate, has been selected and installed as the head of this department. We hope he may be as successful in removing the causes of many political wrecks in our city affairs as he has been in taking out of the way the sources of peril and ruin in one of our chief water ways. Still, one cannot forget the corruption which has been brought home to the County Democracy, which now puts forward so acceptable a man as General Newton, or the old adage that "one swallow does not make a summer." The deputy of the new commissioner, a gentleman no doubt accepted on the recommendation of the politicians of the County Democracy, has been so intimately associated in the past with the late Hubert O. Thompson, and in the same position, that he is regarded with some suspicion. But we hope that General Newton is to be allowed to give the city the full benefit of his knowledge and experience as an engineer and of his executive ability, without the incumbrance of the intrigues of political thieves and office seekers.

CO-OPERATION.—The last Quarterly Register of the Reformed Alliance contains notices of the work in different parts of the wide field. The account from France is given by Pastor Wheatcroft, who writes from Orleans. One of the most grateful features of his letter is contained in the following paragraph, which touches upon a point of general and increasing interest just now, both abroad and at home: "We are thankful that the Protestant churches remain linked together by a true spirit of intercommunion. No better example of the existing harmony can be formed than the great work pursued by our Foreign Missionary Society, which is directed by a Board in which representatives of the Lutheran, Established, Reformed and Free Churches are to be found. The most successful enterprise of the Society has been the mission to Basutoland in South Africa. There the native flocks have become in their turn animated with the missionary spirit, and have contributed men and money to the expedition to the Zambesi, which, in the midst of many dangers, is laying on the banks of the great African river the foundations of another advanced post for Christ."

"Old Colony" Papers.

THE NEW JERSEY MARCHES.

A Reminiscence of Editorial Days.

II.

WE are beginning to find out how much of color there is in what we call the neutral tints, and of music in the minor and the monotone. The French school of landscapists have revealed the picturesqueness and grandeur which are latent in almost unbroken levels, with only a straight road or a narrow stream running through the sedgy plain. The Brontés have done much the same in literature for the sober monotony of the Yorkshire downs. And George Eliot has discovered to us in village life, in mills and carpenter shops, all the dramatic situations and excitements for which Æschylus required "his Jove, his Titans, his earthquakes, his mysticism, and the blackness of inconclusive Fate." Why, then, should the Jersey Marches be a dreary blank or "waste" to the wayfarer, intent on seeing "life" in the city or "nature" in the country. The Lord of Nature, equally with the God of all grace, has to bid us: "Lift up your eyes, and behold the fields." There are harvests unreaped, because undiscovered, by the eye-evangel as by the sickle of salvation.

It is not my purpose nor in my power to play the White of Selborne, nor the Corot, in behalf of my Marches. It will suffice me to have pointed out very sketchily some of the things I have seen, which were not obtainable at the ticket-office or from the porter of the train, and which refresh me more than the cerebro-spinal torture that my neighbor calls a nap, and are more instructive than the wretched type and gossip of the daily paper or the pamphlet novel. To such travellers as use their eyes only to shut them, or to ruin them by reading, the meadows are interesting merely so far as they have been encroached upon by the cities, or swallowed and half-digested by the anacondas of the railroads.

Those highly prosaic and rather tawdry civic sisters—Hoboken, Jersey City, Bayonne, Newark—have waded far out into the marsh with dirty feet. The outskirts of cities are not apt to be attractive to eye or nostril. But these are not simply ravelled edges; the skirts are bedraggled with mud. The habitations, which the cities have thrown out as avant-couriers, have a decidedly toad-stool appearance, and the inhabitants are as water-rats. A Hibernian Venice has sprung up here and there. We look down upon an unsightly plain, which has got itself filled up in a dumpy and garbagy way, till now its physical geography is that of an islanded pool. The proportion of pool to island is dependent upon the rainfall, together with less pure sources of supply, such as slaughter-houses and breweries.

These puddles are often in the last stages of stagnancy, and are covered with a scum which seems so "thick and slab" as must prove a serious impediment to the boys, who in hot weather use them as exceedingly "public" swimming-baths. To one who has an eye for color, to be sure, these surfaces cannot fail to be an interesting study. They abound in the richest greens and yellows, and (in the immediate vicinity of the slaughter-houses and pig-pens) in an opaline variety of reds and blues and browns and blacks. Drainage is a thing as unthought of as in the Dismal Swamp or the Florida Everglades. Those shallow ditches which you see here and there are seemingly not to lead off, but to receive and concentrate, the oozy and unctuous fluid. The islands are accidental mounds and ridges, most of which have been selected by persons of aquatic tastes for residence. Some of these ditch-side or pool-side citizens have erected their villas so that the paludal slime shall not only spread its greenness like a liquid lawn about them, but shall gently plash upon their door-step, or even serve as a moat requiring at times a drawbridge to pass out from their castle to the highway.

Civilization has invaded the Marches with still other "improvements." Conspicuous among these—to the olfactory sense, at least—are phosphate works on the most extensive and unsavory scale. So that, in "observing the wind," the concern of the traveller is not so much a question of East or West as of windward and leeward. Surely we Jerseymen, who inhale so much of this pungent fertilizer, ought to be the most highly "cultivated" people in the world; and if "all flesh is grass," our growth ought to be rank indeed.

The "iron industry" has also advanced with its drum-beat and clatter, and taken up its position in the central and strategic points. These furnaces and "works" during the day-time are comparatively inconspicuous, and can make no appeal to the eye at all commensurate to that which their brother bone factories make to the nose. But at night they are auroral and meteoric in brilliance proportionate to the darkness, so that the olfactory establishments cannot "hold a candle" to them. Their volcanic chimneys are in a state of furious and refulgent irruption, like the Vesuvii of an Iron Age and a New World, and trail clouds of glory as resplendent, if not as spiritual, as Wordsworth's soul of infancy on the borderland of two worlds.

When returning belated from the city, I always choose this side of the car—albeit the bony side also—and rejoice in the lurid fierceness which my tame and peaceful meadows can assume. As I watch the great and far shining flags of flame, I forget that they cover the fortresses of a foe which is one day to subdue the Marches and annex them to the domain of materialistic progress. And the glimpses which I catch of the flaming forges below are horribly suggestive of the under-world of fiery passion and gehenna activities, which underlies so much of the "progress" whereof we boast, and whose throbs we mistake for heart-beats, and its glare for sunrise. The nocturnal effect has been greatly heightened by the introduction of electric lights, whose pale brilliancy is in striking contrast to the red fires of the works and adds not a little to the sulphureous aspect of the whole scene. Electric light also marks the advanced positions of the railway invasion, whose shops are moonlighted by this subtle agent, content now for a season to serve where by-and-by it shall drive out the whole dynasty of steam, as Babylon erected its new empire over Assyria.

Still, it is only here and there that the Plantagenets of progress have entrenched themselves. The Marches know little of any invading foot except that of the rustic haymaker or the sportsman, otherwhere than in the long and narrow tracks of the railroads. These are as yet but the highways through the wilderness, thrown up before the gospel of Modernism, which has too much land still to possess to make it profitable to reclaim old campagnas or drain the new-world swamps. But these black lines—not as black as the soil on which they rest—multiply like the threads of an industrial spider, broadening each with its side extensions, and drawing closer to one another. On our road there is quite a stretch where the track is so close to that of the next railroad that one could almost toss a biscuit into the rival train.

It is a favorite diversion for the engineers of certain synchronous trains on the two roads to occupy this distance with a trial of speed. And it seldom fails to be an awful joy to the most conservative passenger. There is a great deal of human nature in man. Scratch even a deacon or a dude, and you will find a jockey. I have failed yet to see the face of a fellow-passenger which did not break into a smile as we forged ahead of the other train, even though he had succeeded in keeping the dance-light of excitement out of his eye during the critical moments of the race. It is, by the way, an unfailingly novel sensation to watch at such close quarters a train passing, or falling behind us. It is almost impossible to persuade one's self that it is not standing still and we ourselves doing all the motion, dropping back or running on.

I have alluded to the animating spectacle of the Marches at those hours of the day when trains to and from the city are most numerous. Especially suggestive is it in the morning, when a dozen or more converging trains are bearing down upon the city from all directions, each flying its vaporous flag of truce or of defiance, and convoying its little army of life battlers to the scene of daily struggle, defeat or victory. The smoke-streamer is all we can see of those in the farther distance. Sometimes from atmospheric causes these barely rise higher than the smoke-stack, and then trail for immense distances on the same plane and with scarcely diminished volume. Sometimes they rise straight up, like some gigantic ærial mushroom of a moment, or send up puffs of steam and smoke, like a conjuror's dexterous play with balls. Usually they are simply white clouds, but at times are shot through and through with the level beams of the early or the latter sun, and assume exquisite pearl or opalescent tints. As night falls, they will resemble comets and meteors; and the glittering spectacle of a long line of lighted cars rushing past is eminently inspiring.

Sundown on the Marches has its distinctive charm, as well as that among the mountains or on the sea, especially in the autumn. Then as we ride westward with the wide expanse of the meadows between us and the setting sun, we have a duplicate effect. The sky back of the western hills records glowingly the passing day, and the far-reaching fore-ground of variegated and richly dyed vegetation under the mellow and chromatic light records the sunset of the year. There is often a peculiar intensity, an almost startling vividness, about the atmosphere at such times,—a divine sleight by which Nature holds up its paintings in the most favorable and focalizing points of view. And I have sat entranced before the picture framed in by my car-window, and my weary soul has seemed to find the pathway back to Paradise. But it was only the "Newark meadows." Yes, but heaven lies that way too; and Paradise may be regained through the Jerseys as well as anywhere else, if we have the eye to discover it, and the faith and hope and patience to "follow on to know the Lord."

But the grandest effects are produced by the meadow fires at night. Portions of the Marches are mowed for their salt coarse hay. But those bordering on the railroads answer mostly to Bryant's "unshorn fields" of the West, and like them are notable for their prairie fires. At certain seasons when the conditions are favorable, these are lighted far and near over the vast campagna. They are kindled before nightfall, and at intervals for miles perhaps. Even in these first stages they have their attraction, as one watches them grow and spread from little twinkles of white flame hardly more than fire flies, or creeping stealthily toward one another like fiery serpents. But after dark, when they have got their back-ground and their growth, and have joined hands all along the line and around the horizon, they have a lurid sublimity that might have helped Gustave Doré to illustrate Milton's "burning marl," which constituted the border marches of Lucifer's abode. The result at other times and especially in the day-time is not at satisfactory, the effect being immense and stagnant volumes of smoke covering the moors and the region all around with a dense and dismal fog,—more properly suggestive, however, of the Satanic situation than the more "cheerful flames."

As I have watched these far-spreading and high soaring conflagrations, I have sometimes dropped into allegory of a more edifying kind. I have thought how much of our best work on earth must be of the consuming sort. These meadow fires are not kindled to be looked at, or with a thought of their picturesque effects. There are rank and, if allowed to remain along the railways and in reach of building and other property, dangerous growths. These can not be left for the slow scythe of the reaper; in fact they are not worth reaping, by those who own them. And even those who do mow these brackish fields find it better and needful at times to burn them over the ashes and débris being tenderer and sweeter grass for the cattle, and the fires keep down still ranker and more weedy vegetation.

Is it not so, likewise, along the railways and over the fields of human life? There is a mission and necessity in divine providence, whether in dealing with races or individuals, for far-flaming and wide consuming devastations, and Sodom and Gomorrah burnings. The world is sweeter and the air is cleaner and the future is fraught with less of peril and more assured harvests. Only let us, so far as we have a hand in kindling them, make sure that they are moors and marshes, and not woods or grain-fields, which we set on fire. Let us be certain, too, that it is the right season, that the wind sets in the right direction, away from the homes and the highways of peaceful life and progress. Let us not lose sight of the fact that destruction may be either divine or devilish, even as it is meant to clear the way for reconstruction or is kindled for its own sake. And finally, let us never forget that meadow fires are very easy to kindle; but who ever saw one put out before it had done its work and spent its force?

F. N. ZABRISKIE.

Vacation Gleanings

From Greenwood Lake, Clifton Springs, Elmira Reformatory, Luray Cave, Gettysburg, William's Grove and Moody s Northfield Conference.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

LAST year my rest was in one place,—reading and boating in the Thousand Islands, with decided gains of bodily strength. To the English question, "Will you sit or flit?" I have this year given the other answer, with larger gains to the mind, if not to the body.

The first lighting place in this summer flitting was on the shores of the Loch Katrine of the American Trosachs, "the Lake of the Green Woods," (shortened by unpoetic economizers of breath and ink into Greenwood Lake), where one can have Scotch coaching and all kinds of boating and country rambles, with headquarters in homelike cottage or hotel, as he pleases. The Fourth of July Sabbath in its little church, set not only on a hill but on an island facing the whole lake, where it cannot be hid nor its bell unheard by any Sabbath breaker, with a sermon on "True Liberty," made a pleasant opening of summer rambles. Many New Yorkers spend their whole vacation at this near resort.

But Clifton Springs called me on, and in its baths of all sorts for the weary body and its atmosphere of religious rest for the soul, ten days passed pleasantly away. In no other country place, perhaps, in the United States, can one get intellectual and religious privileges so fully equal to those of a great city. Bishops, missionaries, musicians, lecturers, of rarest talent, are constantly found there for rest, but able to give out mental and spiritual riches, nevertheless. One's first influence under the invigorating influence of its manifold water-cures is to hasten back to New York and put a public bath on each corner in place of the drug stores. When will "doctors" cease to be dosers and become what their honored title implies, teachers of the people that water is the best of all liquids, both to prevent and heal disease, and that diet, air and exercise are the only things with which it needs to be mixed?

A brief visit at the famous

ELMIRA REFORMATORY

is next in order. It is the most popular prison in the State, if not in the nation, to which every convicted prisoner wishes to be sent, and almost the only true "Reformatory." Its methods, though far from the ideal of prison reformers, approach it more nearly than any other penal institution. Mr. Brockaway is not simply a warden. His aim is not to make money for the State, but to make men. Theological students might well come here for a post-graduate course of study in sinful human nature. Some of the prisoners have only the nebulous beginnings of mind. They cannot learn the multiplication table. In such the mind is disciplined by drills in light gymnastics, by which the power to give attention is developed, while the over-fed body that has kept the mind under is pulled off by diet and massage treatment. This nebulousness of mind is, however, less frequent and less important than the nebulousness of conscience. Here is a sample: Mr. Brockaway said to a thief, just received, "What department have you usually worked?" He answered, with as little shame as a grocer or lawyer would tell his business, "Sneak; and so long as I stuck to my own line I was prospered." In the moral instruction class, which meets every Sabbath, a shrewd Christian lawyer compels the prisoners to think, and on the right side, by taking the wrong side with such apparent sincerity and such strength of argument that his real purpose is not discovered. The prisoners, particularly the numerous Catholics, have again and again demanded his removal on the ground that he was an atheist, a socialist, etc. Evidently he has read from Dr. Holland, or learned by observation, that there is either a great deal of the pig in human nature, or a great deal of human nature in the pig, and he talks the very opposite of what he wishes to teach. When he defends atheism his class search with zeal to prove there is a God, and so he teaches morality with God behind it, the only kind that can have any grip on any conscience. So, by defending socialism, he makes these thieves defend the rights of property.

What our public schools should put in for prevention of crime, the State tardily puts into this reformatory for its cure—industrial education in trades, and moral education. The newspaper published in this prison, called The Summary, which excludes all records of crime and epitomizes public news without scandal or sensationalism, is a model for the daily papers, which are excluded lest they incite to crime by their records of crime. When will Christian fathers learn that papers not clean enough for a prison are not good enough for their parlors, and demand in every city a "Summary" of news in place of a sewer of filth.

The hands of prisoners are taught during the day and their minds at evening, with marks for fidelity that are indicated in three colors in the clothes worn by the three grades. These marks determine, also, whether they shall be released in one year or kept two, three, four or five. In all cases except the last they are let out on parole for six months, and are liable to re-imprisonment unless a good record is made in some honorable trade. A good percentage of these youthful criminals, many of whom are yet in their teens, are permanently reformed.

SOUTHWARD INTO SHERIDAN'S SHENANDOAH

is the next move. A Sabbath at Harrisburg, then into the Cumberland Valley, which in war times the North sowed for the South to reap, a valley which might now be called "The Happy Valley," in which there is no poverty, and therefore no communism, in which the marks of war that are seen to the very banks opposite Harrisburg are mantled with the green of prosperous peace.

The Shenandoah Valley is only the prolongation of the Cumberland Valley, less fertile in its soil but more so in war memoirs and more beautiful. One of its branches southward, the Luray Valley, can hardly be surpassed for natural loveliness, while its famous cave excels the Mammoth in quality as much as the Mammoth excels the Luray in quantity. On this ride one passes Charleston, where John Brown was hung, and his soul sent marching on to liberate those for whom he had fought in vain in the body. Antietam is another point of interest which I surveyed in company with one of the farmers on whose land the battle was fought, while he staid by his stuff. Moving southward into the regions that Sheridan made famous, I rode with one of Early's staff, then with one of Stuart's cavalry, and talked with the utmost good nature of the Shenandoah campaigns. The subject led naturally to the question of the present good feeling between the two sections, particularly the soldiers, and to the new party which knows no "solid South" or solid North, but seeks to defend the home against the saloon. Though of this party himself, he believes that Southern temperance Democrats will be much slower to give up their democracy in national than in State campaigns, having just come into national victory after so many years of waiting.

Returning, this part of the trip reached its climax in the best marked battle-field in the world, the ripple-marks of that rising tide of blood being indicated by monuments or other signs to show the locality of every regiment or battery engaged. Gen. Hunt estimates that 500 tons of iron and lead were fired away. It is a lesson in patriotism which as many as possible of the youth of the land in this unheroic day should receive to go over the battle-field with the matchless guide, Holzworth, who knows Gettysburg battle better than any General who was in it. In brief, the Union line on the third day was a ridge in the shape of a fish-hook, the long side toward the enemy, whose line was a semi-circle—mostly on another ridge, which he had captured the first day. From the concave centre of the Confederate line, Pickett's charge was made against the centre of the Union line, which it broke, but was driven back in final defeat, chiefly through the spontaneous action of the 72d Pennsylvania which, without waiting for orders, moved from its place in reserve, and threw itself as a living breakwater against the torrent that had seemingly broken the last barrier between it and the homes of the North. I mention the familiar incident as an illustration of the spontaneous uprising of the American people whenever any great national peril threatens our country. Anarchists may bombard the patient public with their threats for years with little repression, lest liberty be wronged, but when, bombs in hand, they charge in deadly conspiracy upon our institutions, the nation rises swiftly and together, and red flags and boycotts have to go.

GETTYSBURG,

From Gettysburg I went to William s Grove Sabbath-school Assembly, which was attended by thousands, and gives promise of becoming a worthy member of the rapidly-multiplying Chautauqua family. Dr. Geo. P. Hays, a living cyclopedia of educational and religious knowledge, was the chief speaker, and equally delighted and instructed the crowds that gathered to his lectures and question services.

The next move brought me to

MOODY'S NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.

Though its three meetings a day left but five hours per day for physical recreations, it was almost the ideal of Christian summering. As a sample, let me give you a few things from the last and best day, whose subject was "The Holy Spirit for Service." Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, spoke of Jesus as "the Advocate with the Father," and of His promise, "I will send you another Advocate" (literal). As a law firm often consists of two advocates, one for pleading in the courts, the other for counsel in the office, so we have two Advocates—Christ our Advocate in the Court of Heaven, and the Holy Spirit as our indwelling Advocate and Counsellor on earth. One works for us above, the other works in us here. Jesus intercedes. The Spirit also "maketh intercession for us;" that is, He moves us to pray for ourselves in accordance with the mind of God. "If two agree," that is sympathize with each other and the Spirit, their prayer is answered. "Thy will be done" will always be a part of such prayers, as of Christ's. This phrase is too much associated with suffering. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." Jesus is not only our Advocate, but also a Witness in our behalf in the Court of Heaven. The High Priest carried the blood into the Holy of Holies as a witness of the sacrifice he had made. So Jesus carries His wounds into "the Holiest of all." So we also, are to be witnesses of the sacrifice of Calvary, "bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus" As He points to His wounds, in pleading for us, so let us point to His wounds to plead for Him. In witnessing, let it be remembered that "living epistles," to be useful must be legible—their testimony in word and life clear, not obscure. Jesus is also ascended to be the Giver of gifts. Eph. 4:8. He gives not only "the riches of grace, but what is more, the riches of His glory." The former came to us from His Cross; the latter from His throne. We should not be content with pardon, but seek the riches beyond that come by the Holy Spirit sent by the ascended Christ. Some people are forever living on a memory. They say over and over, "I was converted twenty-five years ago in a little schoolhouse one Sabbath night." They hammer out that little nugget of gold until it becomes as thin as gold-leaf, and then they seek to gild their whole lives with it. The Holy Spirit is the executor of God s will and testament to give us the "riches of glory" which He bequeathed to us.

How shall we get these riches of the Spirit's power? "The wind bloweth where it listeth." We know that it always listeth to blow toward a vacuum. If our hearts are empty of self and pride and hate, the Holy Spirit will fill them.

Dr. Pierson called attention to seven things on which Christians are apt to depend instead of the Holy Spirit. 1. On numbers. 2. On money. 3. On time. 4. On human wisdom. 5. On influential men. 6. On natural law. 7. On ordinary means.

Mr. Moody asked these questions of the audience: "Is your life what you want it to be?' "Is it what it ought to be?' "Is it what God wants it to be?" Most Christians, he said, are sons and daughters without power. Christ breathed on His disciples the Holy Spirit for sonship before He ascended. But at Pentecost He gave that greater gift which all Christians should receive, the Holy Spirit for service. The men who were filled in the second chapter of Acts were filled again in the fourth. It is not enough to be filled once. One may lose the power or gain greater capacity. If he has this power he will speak for Christ, whether preacher or layman.

Major Whittle said that as passengers get out of a train before the new-comers are allowed to get in, so Eph. 4 tells us that lying, stealing, anger, filthiness must get out of our hearts before the Spirit of purity and power can come in.

Our Church.

We are thankful for items of Church News compactly stated; or for marked copies or clippings from local exchanges, which we would not otherwise see. To insure publication in next number, they must reach us by noon on Monday. A condensation of items is unavoidable

The Church of Highlands, N. J.

THE annual fair in connection with the Seaside Reformed (Dutch) Church, Highlands, Monmouth Co., N. J., was held in the ball-room of Thompson's Hotel, kindly lent for the occasion, on Wednesday, Aug. 11th. There was a good attendance, notably the few friends whose interest in its welfare remains unabated, viz.: Mr. and Mrs. Burgess; Mrs. Riker, widow of the late A. P. Riker, who kindly gave the site for the mission church at Parkertown eleven years ago; Mrs. A. Allen, of Brooklyn; Mrs. C. Dean, of N. Y. city, and friends from the Neptune Club. The articles sold readily and the proceeds go to the general purposes of the mission.

The Reformed (Dutch) Church here was founded by the late pastor, the Rev. A. W. Allen, about twelve years ago, and although within so short a distance of New York city is as truly a mission as the most remote station of the "Far West." Those who knew Highlands, including Parkertown, when this mission was formed by the late hard toiling pastor, and who know it now, must see, notwithstanding that much remains to be done, that very much has already been accomplished. The very deplorable and degraded condition of the people has at least given way to a semblance of civilization if not to Christianity. Without church, without school, destitute of every means of elevation, "No man cared for their souls." Crime abounded and was committed with impunity by the inhabitants, "who feared not God nor regarded man."

The good effected in the past and whatever visible advancement has been made, (and that is not a little,) is doubtless, under God, the outcome of that good man's labors, which at the present time can scarcely be appreciated. The squalor of twelve years ago has given place to an approach to respectability, and the terrible condition of the past has largely been effaced.

The neighborhood is building up and the wretched hovels of the past are being substituted by decent cottages and other improvements. Still there yet remains much to be done, and when we state that the inhabitants have no means of obtaining a livelihood but from the product of a part of the Shrewsbury river, that is, clamming and a little fishing, and that, too, only for a limited season of the year, the necessity for generous aid to such a mission can very readily be understood.

It only remains for a few of our earnest Christian friends, whose hearts are warmed with love to Christ, to make a little effort, even if it be coupled with self-denial, in order that "this little one," this struggling little church in the wilderness and fringing the ocean may prosecute untrammelled the work so well begun by the dear man now gone home to his rest and reward.

A church on the Highlands is an indispensable necessity, (at present we have only a tent,) and the pastor and people are now waiting for the necessary funds to put up a church, which is already promised as soon as land can be procured to put it on. A very eligible site can be obtained for $1,800; but the people are poor and it is far out of their reach. Who will help? Brethren, help us! Sisters, help us!

Contributions will be thankfully received for the site of the new church at the Highlands either by the pastor, the Rev. H. Boggis, or the Rev. Jacob West, D.D., at the Synod Rooms, 34 Vesey street, N. Y.

B.

HIGHLANDS, N. J., Aug. 17th.

A Reviving Church.

BY REV. N. D WILLIAMSON.

THROUGH the grace of a kindly invitation to deliver an address on "The Importance of the Bible," before the Tazewell County, Ill., Sunday-school Convention, on August 18th, I re-visited Pekin. This Sunday-school Convention of one of the foremost counties in the foremost State of the Union for Sunday-school work, was held for two days in the Reformed Church of Pekin, was attended by the President of the State organization, and was the crown of a successful year's labor in township conventions and in local work.

By invitation of our worthy pastor, Rev. S. L. Gamble, the visit was continued over the Sabbath, amid the scenes of my first pastorate by missionary appointment, 1843–1848, and of a year's labor by ecclesiastical request, 1861–1862. It was pleasant to find that the church edifice of 1843, when left by the outward growth of the city, had escaped the frequent fate of becoming a livery stable or a billiard hall, and had been taken down and rebuilt into a lumber depot and office. It was pleasant to worship in the comely church erected through the labors of the sainted Livingston. It was pleasant to note the advance of the church and the city in convenience and in beauty. It was pleasant to find a lady who remembered correctly the text of my first sermon in Pekin, Nov. 12th, 1843. It was pleasant to hear an admirable address before the Sunday-School Convention to the children by the daughter of a brave officer of the war for the Union, whose funeral sermon I preached in 1861. It was very pleasant to visit those who remain of the friends and fellow workers of the olden time, and to speak lovingly on Sabbath evening of the virtues and labors of those who have "gone before."

But it was more pleasant to learn that the children and grandchildren of these old friends were coming out with others on the Lord's side. Twelve of them had united with the church on the previous Sabbath. And a similar accession in members, by which the praying force of the church was greatly strengthened, had been made not long before. This is greatly encouraging to the faithful few by whom "the perseverance of the saints" has been strongly exemplified. And it looks as though the new pastor, who came last autumn from a church belonging to a cluster, the seventh in size among the churches of our Reformed Zion, to cultivate this field which lay fallow for two years after Dr. Livingston went to Sioux Falls, will find the blessing of the Master continuing with him, until this church, too, shall be become "as a garden of the Lord." The Sunday school, which which has been sustained by Elder E. M. Hoff and the ladies, but which is now superintended by the pastor, is an important and promising factor in the future of church.

....HARLEM, N. Y.—The Rev. J. Erlendorf, D.D., expects to begin his ministry in the Reformed Church, on the old and well-known site, on the second Sabbath of September. May he have an encouraging welcome.

....PAMPHLETS.—The Rev. J. H. Wyckoff, by request of the Board of Foreign Missions, has prepared a "Sketch of the Arcot Mission," in which the physical features, the climate, the productions of the field, and the characteristics of the people—their social divisions, their languages, religion and village life—are described. Subsequent pages are devoted to the history of the mission, its method of work, its success and prospects. A great deal of information is packed into the nineteen pages of this pamphlet. The need of just such a record has been felt, and such a history has often been asked for. It can be had from the Secretary of the Board....The sermon preached by the Rev. Ralph W. Brokaw, pastor at Belleville, N. J., on "Sabbath Desecration," and recently published, presents in vigorous and animated sentences the inroads which have been made upon the observance of the Lord's day in this vicinity, and reasons why the day should be carefully kept in obedience to the will of God. The excuses made by Sabbath breakers are swept away with a strong but kind hand. The discourse will be found interesting and profitable throughout. It was wise to print it.

....WESTERN ITEMS.—Rev. A. Buursma, of Orange City, Iowa, has preached again for the Sixth Church of Paterson, N. J. The church has twice called him and he has as often declined....Rev. A. Zwemer has been called unanimously by the Church of Blondin, Mich....Rev. J. H. Karsten and family, of Coopersville, Mich., were agreeably surprised a fortnight ago by a visit from the American citizens bringing several useful and valuable articles in silver as gifts expressive of their esteem.

....A CENTENNIAL.—The Reformed Church of Middleburgh, Schoharie Co., N. Y., celebrated its centennial and re-dedicated the church building on August 26th. The attendance was large. Mr. John M. Scribner, the chairman, delivered an interesting address; the pastor, Rev. D. K. Van Doren, welcomed the visitors and the congregation in a very pleasant speech; the Rev. Dr. Jacob West responded in happy terms, and George L. Danforth, Esq., held the attention of the audience as he told the history of the church. The beginning of worship dates back to 1711, when Rev. H. Hager ministered to Middleburgh and Vrooman's Land and the congregations consisted of Hollanders and Germans. In 1780 the church was burned by the British, Tories and Indians who in a raid devastated the Schoharie Valley. That was a time of such frequent alarms and assaults that men carried their rifles with them to the church on the Lord's day and to other services. After the destruction of the church the services were held for some time in what was known as the middle fort. A new edifice was built in 1786 and this is the one still in use, and which after some improvements has now been re-dedicated.

....RUTGERS COLLEGE.—The second edition of the new catalogue reached us last week. We recommend it to the examination of parents expecting to send their sons to college this fall and to young men seeking an institution where they can obtain thorough and practical instruction. The course of study commends itself to us as comprehensive and adapted to the demands of the present. The list of fifteen professors gives assurance of such instruction as is desired by those who hunger for knowledge. The catalogue furnishes all the information needful to those who wish to know what advantages the College offers, what expenses are, and under what superintendence the institution is conducted.

Gleanings from our Exchanges.

....The Kingston Argus of the 25th has this in relation to Woodstock, N. Y.: A very pleasing and successful entertainment was given in the Reformed Church last Tuesday evening, called "Ye Old Folks' Concert." The church was packed to its utmost capacity. At the hour appointed the Old Folks, seventeen in number, filed in and took their places on the platform. The company was under the direction of Prof. Hermance, of Kingston, and composed mostly of young people. As the singers took their seats on the stage, dressed as they were in the costume of a hundred years ago, the audience could not restrain a burst of applause, and from beginning to end showed its appreciation of the pieces sung and the manner in which the parts were rendered. Nothing like this entertainment was ever given in Woodstock before, and for success nothing has had a parallel. It was repeated on Wednesday evening to a small house. An admission fee of 25 cents was charged at the door, and an even $100 added to the treasury of the church.

....The Unionist Gazette, of Somerville, N. J., announces: Rev. John Addison Van Doren died at his home in East Millstone, this county, on Tuesday evening, August 24th. For a year and a half he has been confined to his house and for many years has been a sufferer. He received on Tuesday morning a third paralytic stroke, and, while conscious, was unable to speak until his death, about 5 P.M. His funeral will occur on Saturday afternoon, for notice of which see elsewhere.

Mr. Van Doren was born in 1815. He graduated at Rutgers in 1835 with Dumont Frelinghuysen, Esq., of this place, and others; entered the seminary there, concluding his studies in 1838. The same year he was called to the Middlebush Reformed Church, and remained its faithful pastor for 28 years. Resigning, he took charge of the new church at Annandale for six years, and in 1872 found himself unable to continue in the active ministry longer. Since that period he has resided at East Millstone, where, latterly, the wife of his youth being deceased, he has been tenderly watched and cared for by his faithful daughter, Amelia. Four children survive him: G. V. Van Doren, Mrs. B. F. Totten, J. Addison Van Doren and Miss Amelia Van Doren.

....Local papers say that the Church of Castleton, N. Y., has determined to erect a new house of worship, at a cost of $10,000.

The General Outlook.

....The now by-gone insurrection of the Cubans has had an interesting religious result. One group of the insurrectionists satisfied themselves that their plans were disclosed to the government through the agency of the confessional, and they determined to break with the Roman Catholic Church. Arriving in this city as exiles, they organized a sort of assembly for the study of the Bible in their own tongue. This has grown into a congregation of Cuban Protestants which has met for years past in the Bible House of this city. One of them offered himself as a colporteur to circulate the Scriptures in Cuba. His arrest and imprisonment and subsequent release led to the submission of the question of religious liberty to the Spanish Government; and one of the last acts of the late king was to accord to Protestants in Cuba every liberty but that of public processions.—The American of Philadelphia.

....The percentage of free churches in several dioceses is found to be as follows: In Florida alone, all are free; Springfield has 97 1-2 free; Fond du Lac, 97; Minnesota, 96; Mississippi, 95; Maine and Nebraska each, 94; Iowa, 92; Maryland, 75 1-2; Chicago, 19; Connecticut, 15. Forty-one dioceses average 70 per cent free In 1879 there were 1,643 free parishes in 28 dioceses; in 1885 there were 2,097, a gain of 454; in 1879 there were 792 free churches; in 1885 there were 1,409, an increase of 617; in 1879 from about 3,300 parishes, 1,350 were free; in 1885 the number of free parishes had reached 2,106, showing the gain in parishes, 300, in churches, 756.—The Churchman.

....One of our contemporaries, remarking upon the American Board, speaks of having "looked over the official correspondence of the five persons" whom it has alleged to have "been discouraged, delayed, or denied missionary appointment because they refused to accept Dr. Alden's creed"—leaving, however, fifteen of the full "score" of the Andover Review still unaccounted for. One wonders how that "official correspondence," which is held as confidential by the Prudential Committee, came under that Journal's inspection. But especially one wonders why Dr. Alden, who acts in a preliminary way for the committee, but has not even a vote upon the subject himself, should be singled out as ultimately responsible, instead of the committee, for the good or ill which it has done.—The Congregationalist.

....The Government of India recently certified to the value of mission work in its 'Blue Book," in the following fashion: 'The winning of converts is but a small portion of the beneficial results which have sprung from missionaries' labors. No statistics can give a fair view of all that they have done. The moral tone of their preaching is recognized by hundreds who do not follow them as converts. The lessons which they inculcate have given to the people new ideas, not only on purely religious questions, but on the nature of evil, the obligations of law, and the motives by which human conduct should be regulated. Insensibly a higher standard of moral conduct is becoming familiar to the people. The Government of India cannot but acknowledge the great obligation under which it is laid by the benevolent exertions made by the 600 missionaries, whose blameless example and self-denying labors are infusing new vigor into the life of the great populations placed under English rule."

....The officers, teachers and scholars in the English Wesleyan Methodist Sabbath-schools number 1,005 576.

....From the Minutes of the English Primitive Methodist Church, just printed, it appears that the Connexional chapels number 4,307, and their present value exceeds three millions sterling. Accommodation is provided for 922 456 worshippers, and the average number of hearers is 559,658. The aggregate income of the chapels during the past year amounted to £271 514, and £40,-539 was paid off the debts upon the trust estates. Sixty-seven new chapels were opened in 1885. They provide accommodation for 14,507 worshippers. They cost £50,308; and £26,062 was raised, a much larger proportion than in previous years.

... The ancient church of St. Helen, adjacent to Colchester Castle, which has not been used since the Reformation, has been restored to the service of the Church by the Bishop of St. Alban's. The chapel is known to have been standing about the year 1100, and was rededicated as far back as 1239.

....The money for the restoration of Shakespeare's Church, Stratford-on-Avon, comes in but slowly. The vicar, in making another appeal for subscriptions, intimates that those received from England shall be devoted to the nave work, those from America to the chancel, and those from the colonies to the transepts. During the work of restoration now in progress the ancient memorial stone, which records the birth and death of George Hart, grandson of Shakespeare's eldest sister, has been removed from its original position in the aisle, and is being used as a curbstone to keep the people from treading on the grass in the churchyard.

....The Christian Advocate has the following information in regard to the riots in West China about two months ago: Advices have been received from West China up to the second day of July. It seems that before that the city of Chung King had been placarded with announcements that on the first day of the Chinese six months (the second day of July) all the mission property in the city would be destroyed; but on the day before that, the first day of July, the mob assembled, and destroyed seven places—six missionary places of various denominations, and the house of the British Resident. The plan of operations was to rob the houses, and then to tear them down piece by piece. The Romish cathedral was burned, but the other buildings were not burned, because it would endanger the entire city. Everything of ours was destroyed, and all the personal property of the missionaries, everything—books, mementoes, etc. They saved nothing, excepting the clothing they wore. Mr. Gamewell saved three coats and his underclothing, but he had no hat nor collar. By dodging the crowd and stopping at the great houses they managed to reach the residence of the magistrate, where they were sheltered at the time of these advices. The violence of the mob seemed not to be directed so much against their lives as against the property, which they were determined to destroy. The Chinese official was very kind to them. There were eighteen of them, including children, sheltered in his house. They expected they would have to go down the river in a few days, and Mr. Gamewell thought the affair would take him to Pekin. The damage will amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

... An article appeared in The Forum a few months ago defending the Sunday newspapers. It was written by the Rev. Julius H. Ward, and has been quoted by the daily journals in justification of their Sunday editions. Mr. Ward is a minister without charge and has been for some years one of the editors of the Boston Herald, and largely occupied with work on the Sunday issue.

A Christian Academia.

DEAR CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER: You have an interest in all movements in the world of Christian thought, and a real delight in giving to your readers reports of efforts that are of value to the Church of God. I send you, therefore, the first of two letters on the Ninth Summer School of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy. The School has assembled this year at Key East, N. J., where the meetings are held in a lovely grove, not far from the sea, and within hearing of its rich and mighty music.

It may be worth noting that the Institute had its origin ten years ago. It was the idea of the Rev. Charles F. Deems, the pastor of the Church of the Strangers, in New York city. It was established for the following purposes: (a) to show the unity of Scientific and Scriptural truths; (b) to bring into fellowship Scientists and Christian Teachers; (c) to encourage profound and reverent studies in Science, Philosophy, and Natural Religion, with the end of reaching conclusions justified by each respectively; by all in co-relation; and in their separate and combined relations to Christian Revelation. The effort was not futile; the blessing of God has rested upon it. The Institute has gathered into its membership many eminent and learned men. It holds ordinary meetings once a month, and publishes its transactions in a bi-monthly entitled Christian Thought, which has taken its place beside the leading organs of the Scientific, Philosophic, and Christian Press. The Rev. Charles F. Deems is the President of the Institute, and the editor of its journal.

The Summer School is one of the most useful and certainly one of the most enjoyable efforts of the Institute. This is my first taste of the sweet felicities of studies when pursued in the Summer School, but I hope for much enjoyment in it year by year. For anyone who has made one visit to it, not to look forward to others, I think will be found impossible; the fascination about a school of this kind is so great, and the influence so invigorating. Here, away from city life, in the still, sweet beauty of a grove, the soft soothing cadences of the summer sea waves falling on our ears, fruitful studies occupy the hours.

The Summer School opened on Tuesday evening with a reception of the members and friends of the Institute. The first ordinary session took place on Wednesday morning, when Professor Benjamin C. Blodgett of Smith College, Northampton, Mass., delivered a lecture on "The Mission of Music to Mind and Heart." The attendance was large. The lecture embraced the following subjects: the history and progress of music in America during the present century; the rationale of music; the relative importance of sensuous and spiritual ideas in music; the essential functions of the musical art; its importance in Christian worship; and Christianity considered as the supreme inspiration of music.

The School adjourned till three o'clock, when a discussion of the subject took place Some of the questions were extremely interesting, amongst which I may name these: the possibility of Christian worship without music; the distinction between the complemental and supplemental offices of music in human life; the unique position of the organ as an instrument in Christian worship; and the state of the composer's consciousness under the inspiration of a great musical work; or as the speaker put it: "Is a great harmonious musical work the expression of an inward silent harmony in the composer's soul?"

On Thursday the Rev. W. D. Wilson, D.D., LL.D., of Cornell University lectured on "The Origin of our Moral and Religious Ideas." He examined the philosophic systems of Plato, Descartes, John Locke, Kant, Hegel, Bishop Berkeley, David Hume, M. Cousin and others. He met the arguments of those who say, "We know nothing of God, of the Soul, of the Future Life," by the logic taught of Christian Truth and Christian Experience. At the afternoon session of the School many questions were proposed and met by the lecturer; these related to the nature of space; Hegel's position in philosophy; to Hegel's distinction between that which is seen, the appearance; and that which is not seen, the reality; and to the difference between the mathematical and metaphysical infinites.

The sessions of the School on Friday were occupied with the subject "Capital and Labor." It was introduced by the Rev. Robert B. Fairbairn, the President of St Stephen's College, Annandale, the Chairman being the Rev. Dr. Whiteman, of Baltimore. The lecturer pointed out the improved position of the laborer of to day, compared with his position in past times; the levelling influences at work amongst us; the laws governing human society; the relations of demand and supply; the value and the right use of wealth; and other kindred matters. The discussion that followed at three o'clock was an all-a-live one, and not the least important of those that have been held to the Christian social economist.

The same subject occupied Saturday It was re introduced by a brief but valuable paper by the Right Rev. Dr. Potter, the Assistant Bishop of New York, read in the absence of the Bishop by the President, the Rev. Charles F Deems. It was on "Christian Brotherhood," and set forth eloquently and with great sympathy with the poor, the Christian Ideal of Human Society. The rest of the morning was occupied with a lecture by Mr. W. G. Moody, the author of "Land and Labor in the United States." The afternoon debate was very earnest on points suggested by Mr. Moody's paper. The following subjects, among many, were considered: the relation of our present industrial methods to the idleness of so many of our fellowmen; the tenant farm system; machinery as a factor in social economy; the evils of tenement houses.

Thus half the sessions of the School have been spent; in my next report I will describe the rest. But I would say here that it has been a great privilege to listen to the words of so many men who, by reason of their special attainments, are qualified to bear a valuable testimony on subjects of the highest importance. And as we have listened to them, in this beautiful scene, the sunlight tinging the woods with golden hues, we realize what must have been the fascination of the Academia in the classical world, and are thankful that Christianity, in the spirit of a true inclusiveness, has adopted similar means to promulage its own sublime ideas and for the culture of souls. We have not merely come under the influence of the wise Socrates, the sad Plato, and the subtle Aristotle; nor have their ideas been supreme with us; we have felt the influence of mightier masters of Divine Philosophy than these—the influence of St. Peter, St. Paul, St. John, and of One, Whose Name is above every name and Whose Words are above those of all others; the Serene, the Beautiful, the Divine Christ

BARNARD GISBY.

QUEEN ANNE COTTAGE, KEY EAST, Aug. 23d, 1886.

News of the Week.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 25.—Both the Broadway and the Belt Line roads of this city are tied up, the men claiming that the companies have not kept their agreement. The men are right. Some disturbances have occurred....Mr. Blaine opened the campaign in Maine yesterday with a speech at Lake Sebago, before a large audience.... Anarchists of Cleveland, Ohio, met last evening and declared war to the knife if the Anarchists of Chicago are hung. About 100 persons were present ...Cutting, the Texan editor, threatens to sue the U. S. Government for $500,000 damages for his imprisonment in Mexico....A young German woman in this city yesterday killed her child with an axe and then set fire to the room ...The Dry Goods Commission has obtained reduced rates on railroads on cotton piece goods ...The Irish delegates sailed for Queenstown yesterday, after expressing satisfaction with the Chicago Convention....Both Parnell and Gladstone assailed the administration's Irish policy in the House of Commons last night....Great indignation in Ireland over evictions of tenants. American Irishmen send £3,000 for relief of tenants....An embankment on the Irrawaddy river burst on Monday, and Mandalay, Burmah, was overflowed with water from four to twenty feet deep. Fifty thousand persons were made homeless, many persons were drowned, food supply stores were swept away. Damage of $5,-000,000 already reported.

THURSDAY, 26.—Some rioting yesterday among strikers on Broadway and Belt Line roads; one man shot, cars overturned, attack made on car on Third avenue road. A few cars were run one or two trips over the Broadway road....The "Mayflower" is chosen to defend the America Cup against the "Galatea." She won yesterday by four minutes....Senator Evarts, C. C. Perkins, Boston, and Miss Matthews, daughter of Justice Matthews, were thrown from a carriage yesterday near Windsor, Vt. Mr. Perkins was killed instantly, his head striking a stone. Mr. Evarts and Miss Matthews considerably but not seriously bruised.... The steamer 'Queen" ran down a schooner on Tuesday night forty miles off Shoal Light. Schooner was abandoned, steamer slightly damaged....Commissioner Squire was removed by Governor Hill yesterday. Rev. James C Beecher, brother of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, shot himself yesterday at Elmira, N. Y., Water Cure. He has been treated in an insane asylum.... The revolutionists in Bulgaria overthrown, old Ministry restored, Prince Alexander invited to return. The Prince is supposed to be in Austria. Meetings in his favor have been held all over Bulgaria....Another riot in Belfast yesterday routs the police.... General Delgado, supported by Nicaragua, is invading Honduras.

FRIDAY, 27.—Everything quiet again in Belfast. Huge paving stones and broken glass mark the scene of last night's riot.... Prince Alexander has arrived at Darmstadt. It is stated that after being conveyed out of Bulgaria he was set free at Reni. It is thought that when the Prince hears of the counter-revolution in his favor he will at once return to Sofia, for it is thought his presence will quell all disorder and restore peace to the country....Glasgow reports the present condition of the shipping trade the worst on record. Thirty-four steamers and twenty-three sailing vessels are rotting at the docks, having been idle for two years or more. This is due to low freights and the general depression in business....A mortgage was recorded in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., from the Poughkeepsie Bridge Company to the Mercantile Trust Company of New York, for $5,000,000. The mortgage covers a bridge to be constructed over the Hudson river at Poughkeepsie ...Prairie fires are raging in Minnesota and villagers have turned out to make back fires, as the town of Hallock will be in danger unless the wind changes A number of farmers have been burned out....The Broadway car strike ended and the men returned to work on the company's terms.

(Continued on page thirteen.)

Our Contributors.

A Dutch Heirloom.

BY JAMES E. WOOD.

CHAPTER II.

ALAST, long, tear-laden glance, and Dewitt resigned books, pictures and furniture of his snuggery to the hammer of the auctioneer. One book of his collection, however, he held tight under his arm. This was Aunt Katherine's Dutch Bible, printed at Dordrecht in the early part of the seventeenth century. It was rather cumbrous to handle, yet substantially held together by a binding of dark leather over wooden covers, rich in elaborately finished silver mountings. Two clasps of the like precious metal kept the leaves from straying apart in that vagrant manner sometimes realized in the modern bookmaker's art. Attached to the upper rims of the covers were two silver rings, designed to receive a chain by which, in the days when the vogue, it was worn suspended from the arm or neck of dame or damsel. This leather-bound, wooden-sided, silver-manacled old Bible was one of the "gimcracks" left by Aunt Katherine to Dewitt. Involuntarily he opened the book to a page at which a marker rested, and his eyes fell on a passage emphasized by an underscoring by Aunt Katherine. It read:

"Goed van ydelheid gekomen zal vernimderd worden; maar die met de hand vargadert, zal het vermeerderen."—Proverbs 13: 11.

"Pshaw! Aunt Katherine beggars me like the whimsical old woman she always was, forsooth, that by poverty I may be forced to make that exertion which my indolent nature, as she styles it, could never find possible in affluence. Then, to sooth the impatience and bitterness of the moment, she thrusts upon me a Dutch homily, which I can just about as readily render into English as I can one from Chaldee;" and he tossed the ancient volume to a further corner of the room amongst a heap of rubbish. Yet he did not allow it to remain there long.

There was a tradition running through generations of his family, and verified in every instance, that the possessor of this Bible would be a favored one of fortune. As he reclaimed it from its ignominious position a blush suffused his cheek at the credulity that had actuated it, and, as the sale concluded, he departed for his new quarters, which were on the uppermost story of a dwelling in a lower by-street near to Broadway. The building had an aspect of faded respectability, not unlike that met with in the individual upon whom impoverishment has set its hand, yet who strives to keep up a good appearance against fearful odds.

For several weeks he followed the newspapers for advertisements in hope of in this way securing the occupation that was now a necessity. Responses were few, and new disappointment was the only outcome, until an advertisement for a reporter for a newly established daily paper coming to his attention, he set out with no little trepidation to the editorial room of the Daily Vibrator. Dewitt's journalistic experience was meagre indeed, for beyond a year's editorship of a college journal and occasional contributions to periodicals, he was a novice. In spite of all this he entered, with a good show of confidence, the sanctum of the city editor of the Daily Vibrator.

The general air of neglect and slovenliness which pervaded the place was a matter of some surprise to Dewitt, who, in imagination, had pictured the reverse of such characteristics. The city editor, too, as he raised his head from the copy before him, revealed a face none too cleanly, but immaculate in comparison with the hand which held a pen in its grimy, ink-stained grasp.

"Well, young man, what do you want?" was the abrupt inquiry of this individual, as he allowed his attention to be diverted for an instant from the task before him to Dewitt.

"Ugh! applicant for reporter. College graduate? Yes! Sorry for that; collegians make poor journalists—takes them too long to merge theory into practice. Got anything with you to show what you can do? Didn't bring anything with you, eh?" and, much to Dewitt's gathering confusion, he leaned back in his chair and surveyed him with an expression none too complimentary.

Just then the telephone alarm rang, diverting the editor's attention, much to Dewitt's relief.

"What's that, Felix?" to a small boy at the tele phone.

"A fire in a brush factory in Pearl street, Dr. Grimquill."

"Indeed! suppose we have the unimportant particular—the street number. Ah! that's better," as the street number was announced. "Forethought and precision, Felix, are important factors in the art of journalism." This homily, although addressed to the boy, Felix, was spoken at Dewitt.

"Send Denton to report that fire."

"Denton ain't here to-day, sir."

"Oh, he isn't; do you know where he is?"

"No, sir."

"Well, I know where he is progressing to. Since he has turned Bohemian, all the promise and talent in the young fellow is being slowly sapped by companionship with those of that ilk. Here, Mr.—what's your name?—Fanshaw, just try your hand at that fire."

The brush factory, much to Dewitt's joy, burnt freely. If it had been a weakly combustion, he would have found himself not a little embarrassed. As it was, he enlarged on the struggles of the firemen in combating the flames; gave that prominence to trivial incidents usually allotted to important ones, and as a sort of peroration, enlarged on fires in general, and brush-factory fires in particular, with a confidence that he was treating the occasion as cleverly as possible.

Dewitt was greeted on his return to the Vibrator's office by the city editor with, "Well, back so soon, Mr. Handsaw? Waited until the building burned down? Capital idea! Next time you will no doubt wait till the débris is removed."

A sudden explosion of risibility on the part of Felix, the office boy, followed this sally, which was promptly and severely checked by the author of it.

Dr. Grimquill went to work, blue pencil in hand, reviewing Dewitt's first effort in journalism, all the time permitting ejaculations and snortings to escape him, as he ran his pencil through line after line of copy—the pet peroration included, until it looked as if the cerulean shade of heaven had settled over it.

"You can call to-morrow, Mr. Fanshaw," said the editor as he finished his task. "One word," he continued, as Dewitt was making his exit, "so long as you are connected with the Vibrator, never again call a fire a conflagration. Good morning, Mr. Fanshaw."

Dewitt now set to work to master his new calling with a perseverance and energy that would have astonished acquaintances of former days. There was much to learn and equally much to unlearn, yet he met all obstacles manfully and found that it worked wonders in overcoming difficulties. "Old Grimquill," as the incipient journalists of the Vibrator styled the city editor, he found on a fuller acquaintance in no wise the bear he would make people believe himself to be. Behind this guise, with which he chose to array himself to new or casual acquaintances, Dewitt found him kind hearted and sympathetic, a man of scholarly attainments and thorough in everything appertaining to his profession, which he held to be the highest calling known to mankind. The tyro who had the perception to grasp this side of the Doctor's character, and the tact to humor it, was sure to make a staunch friend and counsellor in him.

The conscientious manner with which Dewitt took up journalism, and the evident desire he evinced to make his way to the front, did not escape the notice of one like Dr. Grimquill, ever on the alert to detect budding talent, and ever ready to encourage and advance it. Both, too, were without near kindred, and consequently without a home, in the stricter meaning of the word. This domestic desolation, in which he partook without repining, but which as the lot of his protegé seemed so forlorn and dismal, served to open the Doctor's heart in pity and sympathy to Dewitt. Perhaps neither realized how close were the ties that bound them together until Dewitt's acceptance of a sub-editorship on an out-of-town weekly brought about a separation.

Dr. Grimquill was more busy than usual as the time came to say farewell, and growled out a leave-taking without looking from the sheet before him. As the door closed on Dewitt, however, the boy Felix noticed a tear trickle down the Doctor's cheek and fall, an unsightly blot, on the copy in hand. Felix forthwith sought out young Blossom, the junior reporter, whose copy had been rejected that morning by the Doctor because of its indulgence in "gush" and "snivelling," as the person most likely to be gratified with the intelligence, and talking the matter over in a safe corner beyond a third hearing, the two decided that the Doctor's criticism of the rejected manuscript was woefully inconsistent, seeing that the weakness he so reprehended in others was in equal measure a failing of his own.

To be continued.)

A Visit to Headquarters.

BY A. DEW. M.

ABOUT one-half mile to the southeast of the Morristown, N. J., green, stands a large dwelling-house, attractive and almost impressive in its severe simplicity. At first sight it would be deemed the well preserved homestead of some ancient family. But the tall flagstaff, with the stars and stripes floating from its head, and the brass cannon glistening in the summer sunshine on the trim lawn before the door, are tokens of other than private occupancy. It is a two-story-and-attic frame building, with the old-fashioned "double hipped" or gambrel roof. It has no verandah, but the central door, divided in the middle after the old Dutch style, opens on a small stoop with low seats on either side. The ornamental carving around the top of the door and the narrow strip of scroll work under the front eaves are fine specimens of their style of decoration. The entire edifice is painted a spotless white, and is surrounded, at the distance of ten or twelve feet, by a low ornamental balustrade, which distinguishes the house plot from the remainder of the grounds. The rear presents much the same appearance as the front, and not far from it a good-sized flower garden, fragrant with the box edging of its odd little triangular and circular beds, and bright with the "posies" of poppy and hollyhock and pink and dahlia, such as our grandmothers loved to tend, lends a well-fitting air of antiquity to the scene.

We ascend the front steps, lift and let fall the heavy brass knocker that once responded to Washington's touch, the old door invitingly opens, and we stand in the main hall of the mansion. The first glance at the interior confirms the impression made by our previous inspection, that this house was intended as a home of affluence and station. And so it was, for Col. Jacob Ford, who laid the foundations of the mansion in 1772, was the chief representative of one of the oldest and most honored families of Morris County. He, and then his son, Col. Jacob Ford, Jr., occupied the house, and on the death of the latter, (by disease, in the trying winter of 1777), his widow held the homestead until the fortunes of war gave her the gladly-welcomed opportunity of placing it at the disposal of that great leader whom her father and her husband had delighted to honor. Remaining in the Ford family and carefully preserved as far as possible in its original condition, it recently passed by purchase into the possession of the "Washington Association of New Jersey," who now hold it for the pleasure and profit of their own and future generations.

Here, therefore, when it had been determined to winter the Continental army at Morristown during the season of 1779-80, came Washington, and, surrounded by many of that band of illustrious men who cast in their lot with the patriot cause, passed the dreary months in guarding those interests in whose defence he had taken up the sword. And not only the Commander in-Chief himself, but his stately Virginian wife, Martha Washington, and her friends; La Fayette, the Chevalier Bayard of the Revolution; Baron Steuben, the great drill master of the Continental troops; bluff Putnam, of Connecticut; Generals Greene and Schuyler, Colonel Hamilton, the household friend of Washington, and a score of others not less distinguished walked and talked in these halls and rooms and gazed through these same small paned windows through which we are looking over those same rolling fields and distant hills.

Let us imagine that the distinguished family has just "stepped out" and we are guests awaiting their return and privileged to spend the moments in examining their household arrangements. We pass from the wide hall, in which we have been standing, through a door opening to our left and, entering the parlor, are transported to the "best room" of three generations ago.

The room is square in shape, with two windows in front and one on the side. The wide fireplace, with its brass andirons and shovel, poker and tongs, complete as in the days when the four-foot logs of honest hickory and oak had not yet given place to their modern supplanter from the mines, occupies the centre of the rear wall. In the space between the two front windows stands a small piano, the first instrument of its kind ever used in Chatham township, and a mere pigmy in size compared with the "concert grand" or even the "square" piano of to day. In one corner stands a small mahogany table, about eighteen inches square, on which Washington wrote almost all the dispatches which he issued from these Headquarters. A large horsehair-covered sofa and similarly upholstered chairs complete the furniture of the room. On the walls hang an oil copy of Stuart's "Washington," a portrait of La Fayette, another of Paul Revere, the midnight rider, with his commission as second lieutenant in the Colonial forces, signed by Gov. Shirley, of Massachusetts, and dated 1786, hanging beneath it. A steel engraving of "Lady Washington's Reception," gatherings similar to which, though less pretentious, have often taken place in this very parlor, and a fac-simile of her husband's commission as Commander-in-Chief of the Continental army, complete the decorations of the room.

We cross the hall and enter the dining-room. Here is the ample mahogany table around which Washington and his household daily assembled, seated in the stout arm-chairs which still are placed in order as if expecting the guests who will no more return. The fare was not always so ample as the table, for once, it is said, in the early part of the winter of scarcity and want which he spent in this house, the General's housekeeper came to him with the news that all the provisions which she had with which to furnish his table were the ordinary army rations. "Then you must cook the rations," answered the Commander, "for I have not a farthing to give you." "If you please, sir," responded the woman, "let one of the gentlemen give me an order for six bushels of salt." "What do you want of so much salt?" asked her master. "To preserve the fresh beef, sir," was the reply. The order was given, and though a part of the salt was doubtless used for the purpose designated, some of it appeared on the table in the shape of various articles of food, for which the thrifty cook had exchanged the salt, that article then being worth some eight dollars a bushel and readily taken in barter by the neighboring farmers.

As to the manners and customs of that table, a guest of those far-off days has left this record of his impressions: "The civilities of the table were performed by Colonel Hamilton and other members of the family, the General and lady being seated at the side of the table. In conversation, his Excellency's expressive countenance is peculiarly interesting and pleasing. A placid smile is frequently seen on his lips, but a loud laugh seldom, if ever, escapes him. He is polite and attentive to each individual at the table and retires after the compliment of a few glasses. Mrs. Washington combines in an uncommon degree great dignity of manner with the most pleasing affability, but possesses no striking mark of beauty."

Leaving the dining-room, we cross a narrow hall and stand in a veritable "New England kitchen." The yawning fireplace, with its great logs and on one side of the "chimney nook" the "settle," seated on which you may look up through the gaping throat to the blue sky far above; the tall, narrow mantelshelf, with its row of brightly-shining pewter plates and platters; the swinging crane, with its long array of pot-hooks and hangers; the cupboard, with its odd-shaped blue and white china dishes and dainty cups; the old eight-day clock, used by Washington and still steadily ticking off the hours as it did when its eminent possessor noted on its truthful countenance the flight of time, which waits for no man, illustrious or obscure; the "wheels," little and big, for spinning flax and wool, on one of which still hangs a hunch of flax, as if the dainty hand that turned it a hundred years ago might at any moment lay its gentle touch again on the whirling spokes; all are here and bring to memory again the simple, honest days when people had not merely "residences," but homes; when the "living-room" was the focus of the home life and the "spinster" not the crabbed "maiden of uncertain age" now denoted by the term, but the daughter of the family, fresh and comely and light-hearted, whose task it was to spin the wool and flax into the thread from which the skilful housewife wove the cloth whence she after cut and sewed the "homespun" garments, stout and warm, wherewith her family were clothed. Then the "husband" was indeed the "house band" by which all were joined together in earnest and loving unison, seeking each other's welfare and the good of all. Such were the homes of a former age, whose stalwart virtues more than compensated for their lack of many of the "modern improvements," material and moral, which so often refine our home life to the vanishing-point, and whose pure and simple influences rooted in "the fear of God and the love of man," sent forth into the world men and women "who knew the right, and knowing, dared maintain," until the heritage of liberty was bought and confirmed to them and to us.

But we must not longer moralize in the old kitchen. We will retrace our steps, and reëntering the main hall pass from it into the library and the office situated respectively behind the dining room and the parlor. The library is attractive, mainly because of the framed autographs of Patrick Henry, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, and other distinguished men, which hang upon the walls; while the office contains Washington's writing-desk, at which he often has sat immersed in the cares of state or perplexed by the hidden designs of the "foxes in sheeps' clothing" that were not scarce even in those days of patriotic lives. Leaving this room we turn to our left and open a door which discloses a steep and narrow flight of stairs, ascending which we find ourselves in a hall, the counterpart of that which we first entered. At present this is termed the "armory," and contains many interesting military relics of the revolutionary days, among them two four-pounder brass cannon, surrendered by Gen. Burgoyne at Saratoga. Muskets, used by the Continentals at the battles of Yorktown and Monmouth, or captured from their foes at Trenton, are here—old flintlocks, for the most part, in some of which the flint yet remains in the lock as it was when it last struck forth the Promethean spark to urge on the avenging ball. In a corner stands one of Washington's camp chests. In a case in the centre of the hall are displayed the chapeau and epaulettes of Gen. Henry Wisner; the twisted, horn-headed cane of Gen. Nathaniel Greene, and other interesting mementoes of by-gone days.

The ladies will mark with interest the odd looking "tea-caddy" of Mrs. Gen. Alexander Hamilton, and near it a dainty pair of pointed toed white satin slippers, now soiled and frayed, in which the feet of some fair Mistress Prudence or Abigail tripped gaily a century ago. Near by, a grim reminder of the stern leveller who respects neither eminence nor beauty, lies a small fragment of Washington's coffin and a lemon, now shriveled to the size of a hickory-nut, which grew on a tree planted by the General's own hands. In other cases are various books and documents relating to the Colonial and Revolutionary history of the country, prominent among which are the original manuscripts of the orders issued from these Headquarters; while on the wall, among the muskets and swords which helped to nullify the purposes of king and minister, hangs a commission signed by George IV. and his great premier, Sir Robert Peel.

Turning from the hall we enter the bed-room, immediately over the parlor, which was used by General Washington. We miss the tall, valanced "four-poster" which should stand in that cosy corner by the fireplace, but lose sight of the defect in the examination of other articles here displayed. On the wall, protected by a glass case, is exhibited a piece of the carpet which covered the floor of the room while Washington used it. A somewhat coarse piece of tapestry it is, in which red, white and blue figures predominate. Near it, remnants of the battle flags taken from the Hessians at Trenton, and from Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, and a small piece of the ensign of Washington's Life Guard, contrast strangely with the little memento (in the shape of a piece of the shawl which Washington wore when he was baptized), of the day when the great leader, a helpless infant, was consecrated not to a war with human tyranny, but to that inevitable conflict "with sin, the devil, and his whole dominion," which we all must wage who hope to come off "conquerors and more than conquerors through Him who loved us."

"Mrs. Washington's Room," on the opposite side of the hall, contains as its principal object of interest a small mirror, with its curious old-fashioned gilt frame dividing, by a horizontal bar, the glass into two unequal portions. Not stopping to note the reflections to which the glass gives rise, we mark only the large and elegant slab of Mexican onyx presented to Mrs. Washington "as a mark of esteem," and forming the top of the dressing-bureau often used by her during her sojourn in Morristown.

The "guests' room" and "officers' room," in the rear of the apartments just entered, complete the set of chambers on this floor, and with the exception of the attic and the small rooms in the wing over the kitchen, comprehend the entire house. As they contain nothing of importance, save a piano made in London early in the century by a brother of the famous John Jacob Astor, of New York, we reënter the lower hall and leave this spot, fragrant with the memories of the past, whose pleasantest recollection is, not that it was once the shelter of a great warrior or of a successful ruler, but of an earnest Christian gentleman who served God and his generation well, and whose name shall be revered for what he was as well as for what he did, while liberty and piety retain the home won for them at so great a cost by the free men of America in by-gone days.

Contemplations of a Sparrow.

A Realistic Ethic.

BY ANNA M TOOKER.

I. UNDER THE EAVES.

TWO sparrows through patient industry founded a home in the hollow of an old tree. In it they placed a nest, and it was lined with down. They were very happy and disposed to be generous; they would feed hungry sparrows, and the well-fed ones they would entertain. They would soar away through the golden sunshine each morning; at eve they would swing in the beautiful boughs, chattering and chirping to each other, and at night they would dream of butterflies and glow-worms.

But an awful whirlwind came and upheaved the mighty tree, throttling it. As to the nest, there was not one straw left upon another; and the down—it was blown away. Everywhere was desolation, and the sparrows were very terrified. They could find no rest for the soles of their feet, but flew in great dismay, first into the upper enclosure and then into the lower court of an old ivy-covered temple, but from thence were driven by the money-changers. "What a cold, bleak world!" cried they. But has it not been said, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?" "And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your father." Then the pair flew away up under the eaves of an old house and sat there, under the shadows, with drooping wings; under the eaves, to meditate.

But the anxious mate, leaving her side once more, she thought, "The earth under the old tree must have been thorny or stony," but, "Though He slay me, I will trust in Him." So she sat still under the eaves and waited. At nightfall, returning, he brought in his beak a few crumbs which a kind man had thrown to him. Accepting them in faith she forgot they were food ("Yet your heavenly Father feedeth them"), for her little mind ran away back again, ob ovum, to first principles. Being thus comforted, she ate the crumbs under the eaves.

At the decline of the following sunlight the wearied mate brought not only in his beak crumbs, but straws; and the little sparrow smoothed her ruffled plumage, lifted her head high toward the heavens and sang this song, "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord." "The sparrow hath found an house" "where she can lay her young, even Thine altars, O Lord of Hosts."

So thither they flew, going out each day into the world trying to praise God and scatter seed. And she sat no more under the eaves, but "upon the housetop."

II UPON THE HOUSETOP.

Oh, Solitude! sweet Solitude! How few know thy charms! Not they who flee to thy embrace for shelter from the calamitous whirlwind; not they who would retreat with thee for a season from the dazzle of dissipation; nor they who in adversity would brood under thy shadow.

To know thee is to love thee; and that love is not begotten of necessity, but is born of a clean heart, a right spirit and high resolve. Thus clad, the soul may lie in thy embrace with uplifted eye and listening ear, breathing in fulness from thy life-giving presence.

This Solitude, boon of Divinity, breeds not loneliness or darkness as from enforcement, but, surrounded with an atmosphere of light, truth and beauty, in it we bask; from it we emerge helpful and radiant.

The whisperings of the Father to the Christ-boy in His solitude home at "cheerful Nazareth" quickened into awakening the suggestions of His mysterious mission, which were evolved before the doctors in the temple.

The conflict with the enticements of ease, wisdom and ambition, from the world, the flesh and the devil, among the "frightful solitudes of Horeb," at the pinnacle of the temple, and upon the Paræan heights, when He hurled the adversary from His presence, and thereupon came angels ministering to the Christ-man, wrought out the sermon of beatitudes, where on the Mount he sat, The Alone, Ὁ Μακάριος. Of Gethsemane, treasury of prayers, wrestlings, tears, and of the solitude of the cross, who can speak? Have they not crucibled for mankind, universal redemption and infinite joy?

Thus we who seek thy anointing, O, solitude, receive from it sweet infusions of power and light. Power bestowed by the Creator of energy and force, who, while He governs the world with impulsive majesty, stoops to commune with the weakest of His creation; and light from His sweet revealed will, from His own lips, dedicated by blood, transmitted by blood to the solitary soul for solitary acceptance, with solitary judgment, when its faith-struggle here shall have burst this mortal shell to expand into sight-life and immortal companionship with its Creator.

Seeking that anointing, I lay this upon Thine altars, oh Lord. While pecking and singing I watch for gleams of light in the Orient; I watch for the fulfilment of golden promises in the West; "I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house top," for the signs of the coming of my well Beloved, who hath said unto me, "Fear not, ye are of more value than many sparrows."

The Reading Room.

Our Book-Shelves.

....“THE STORY OF SPAIN,” by Edward Everett Hale and Susan Hale, is after all the most charming volume thus far issued, of the “S ory of the Na tions” series. It could hardly help being so in the hands of such writers. The story goes back to the earliest traditions of the ancient Iberia, and how it first came in contact with the rest of the world through the Phœnician ships which traded with “Tarshish,” and the successive conquests of the Carthaginians and Romans. Then follows the Gothic kingdom, followed by the Moors. The reigns of Alphonso X., and of Ferdinand and Isabella, Charles V., the three Philips, the Bourbons, and the more recent kings and queens, are given with lessening detail as we approach the present day. The history involves such picturesque and heroic episodes as those of Hannibal, the Scipios, Sertorius, Julius Cæsar, Theodoric, Attila, Roderic, the “Song of Roland,” the Abencerrages, the Fall of Grenada, The Cid, Columbus, the career of Charles V., and the struggle of Nelson and Wellington with Napoleon. In each of these periods —especially the Iberian, the Roman, the Gothic, and the Moorish—the state of the country and the life of the people are graphically described.

This volume pleases us particularly by the absence of sensational headings to the chapters, and by a style which is interesting and even familiar without being “smart.” (G P Putnam's Sons.)

....“A LIFE IN SONG” is a poem, in seven “notes” and other divisions, by George Lansing Raymond, of Princeton College. Professor Raymond has distinguished himself by one of the best manuals of elocution, and by his very able and original work on “Poetry as a Representative Art.” He now appears as a poet. “A Life in Song” relates the spiritual and active experience of a fervid soul through the stages of Dreaming, Daring, Doubting, Seeking, Loving, Serving, and Watching. The main impulse and incident of the life are furnished by the enlistment of the hero in the anti slavery cause. The story of his love is also a leading factor, and is beautifully told. The poem displays, as might be expected, a mastery of poetic rhythm and construction, and, as a whole, it is pervaded by the imaginative quality which lifts “a life” into the region of poetry,—the peculiar quality which marks Wordsworth's “Excursion,” Buchanan Read's “New Pastoral,” and Bayard Taylor's “Wagoner of the Alleghanies.” At the same time, there are few striking or brilliant single passages or poetic thoughts which lend themselves readily to quotation. We cannot help thinking that this is largely due to a tendency to diffuse expression, or at least to a lack of condensation and compression. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

....“OUR RADICALS: A Tale of Love and Politics.” By Fred Burnaby. All who have read the “Ride to Kiva,” and who lament the death of the gallant author while resisting the Arabs in Egypt, will take up this story with affectionate and pathetic interest and with an expectation of an entertainment of a specially agreeable nature. Before two chapters have been finished a revulsion of feeling will be experienced. The introduction by Mr. J. Percival Hughes, Capt. Burnaby's private secretary, appeals to and touches the heart, both by the tribute of love and admiration which it contains and by the selections it gives from the letters of Capt. Burnaby. The change to the story is abrupt and extreme, for a time is like a plunge into a cold bath in November. It was to us what we did not expect and was for a time rather bewildering.

This is the situation: The Radicals are in power in Great Britain, that is, in what is left of it, for Ireland is in open armed rebellion, the colonies have been lost and nothing remains but the small island including England, Scotland and Wales. The government is weak, vacillating, incompetent, surrendering this and that to a dominant socialism. A large part of the workingmen are communists and imperious, and have had their destructive way for some years. The Fenians have become a powerful organization, are thoroughly organized and are led by men who are perfectly at home among the explosives, poisons and various inventions of the age, which have been developed almost to perfection. These forces this body of conspirators, consisting of women as well as men, are with fearful effect. The day of the destruction of Great Britain seems to have come. Even the religion of the country has become agnosticism and [illegible] ray of hope shines from any quarter. But there are those who are in hearty and determined antagonism to this weak radicalism and resolved to overturn it and restore the old power and glory of the empire. They collect an army, march on London, and a battle follows with such results as are told in the story. Incidents of the most startling character follow each other in rapid succession. The story never flags, it moves on swiftly. These incidents are possible, perhaps probable if the Radicals and Communists shall be able to seize the reigns of government. The inventive faculty of the author is amazing. The diabolical plots conceived and executed by the personages he creates almost exceed belief. All this hangs upon or rather attends the progress of a love story, which is a very fair story, leading to discoveries entirely unexpected. As a matter of course the book is well written, for the hand at work here is that which recorded the “Ride to Kiva.” Whoever needs something to dispel the listlessness of these sultry days will find it in these pages. As a revelation of possibilities the book may prove of value. It is one of “Harper's Handy Series” and costs but twenty five cents. (Harper & Brothers.)

....“PRÆTERITA,” Volume II., Numbers 4 and 5, are entitled respectively “Fontainebleau” and “The Simplon.” The former receives this designation from the fact that it was at Fontainebleau that Ruskin ended his “chrysalid days” in art, and suddenly discovered that he “had virtually lost all his time since twelve years old because no one had ever told him to draw what was really there” “The Simplon” records his first close and realistic study of Alpine scenery. In these chapters also he informs us of his restoration to health under a regimen of meat and iron diet, walks and early bed time; of his admiration of Dickens, and his opinion that Agassiz was a “blockhead;” of his introduction to Turner, his writing “The King of the Golden River,” and publication of the first volume of “Modern Painters.”

They contain also some fine descriptions of the Alps, and of the Geneva of that day, which he calls his “mother city.” (Wiley & Son.)

....“THE GOSPEL TO THE POOR VERSUS PEW RENTS,” by Principal B. F. Austin, B.D., of Alma Ladies' College, St. Thomas, Ontario, assails the system of pew rents with Scriptural principles, facts and arguments. The pamphlet contains much deserving serious examination. The topic it treats is hardly a settled one, and the present custom of the churches may be hereafter considerably modified if not essentially changed. We have made trial of both free and rented seats, and found that while the rent system brings in a larger and more certain income, the church is not so much the resort of all classes of people as it was when the seats were free to all, and the revenue derived from subscriptions and a plate collection at every service. Besides the discussion by Principal Austin, the pamphlet contains a paper by the Rev. Newman Hall, D.D., articles from various newspapers and a letter from a layman. The argument is clearly stated and in an interesting manner. It certainly deserves to be read and seriously considered. Those who believe in the voluntary system will find their opinions satisfactorily presented. The pamphlet costs 25 cents. (William Briggs, Toronto, 78 East King's street.)

....“AS COMMON MORTALS.” The scene of this story is laid in Brooklyn, under the pseudonym of Goverick. Why it was written, or what good purpose the writing can serve, it passes our ability “as common mortals” to comprehend. Overlooking its contemptuous flings at Goverick, Goverick society and churches, it is difficult to see what good purpose of any sort can be served by the recital of the vagaries of an undisciplined, sentimental young lady, whose aspirations and speculations, struggles and escapes, lead up to no conclusion save that of a wedding and peace and splendor ever after. As the wedding and splendor are found across the river, perhaps the moral is, “get out of Goverick, if you would be happy.” (Cassell & Co.)

....“THE CHILDREN OF OLD PARK'S TAVERN” lived some time ago near the Massachusetts coast, and had a great many enjoyments unknown to the boys and girls of to day. Their various experiences are pleasantly recounted by Frances A. Humphrey, the author of “Dean Stanley with the Children.” (Harper & Brothers.)

....“WANTED—A SENSATION.” By Edward S Van Zile. A new volume added to “Cassell & Co.'s Rainbow Series,” which may serve to while away an hour or two on the train or at the seashore. Its moral tone is certainly not of the highest, nor the interest profound. But “for those who like that sort of thing, this is probably the sort of thing they will like.”

Our Library Table.

Periodicals, Serials and Notes.

....Harper's Magazine for September opens with an article on Ferdinand Barbedienne, “le père du bronze,”—to whom in connection with the lathe invention of Achille Collas, is due the perfection to which the use of bronze in art has been carried within the last forty or fifty years. Other interesting illustrated articles are “Workingmen in the British Parliament” (with portraits); “Old Salem Sea Captains,” by Col. Higginson; and “Short-horn Cattle,” by Lewis F Allen. Richard T. Ely writes hopefully on “The Reform of Railway Abuses.” Two of Harpers' characteristic cyclopædia articles are Admiral Simpson's “United States Docks and Navy Yards,” and Richard A. Proctor's “The Central Engine of the Solar System.” Short stories are furnished by Harold Frederic and Julia D. Whiting,—the former's “Brother Angelau,” being a sketch of great beauty. “Their Pilgrimage,” concerning Long Branch, Saratoga and Lake George, has little of the genuine Warner flavor, and strikes us as rather commonplace The editorial departments are in the well-known vein of the writers, and cover a large variety of topics.

....We have the July and August numbers of the Church Review, which, in accordance with the fashion of the time, has become a monthly. It is neatly printed at the Riverside Press, which always furnishes creditable work, and is carefully edited. The reviews of Contemporary Literature are not numerous, but good. The tone of the periodical is, as its name would lead one to expect, eminently churchly. We notice (page 61) the words, “the futility of their favorite method of seeking for the meaning of the Holy Volume, by private interpretation, in neglect and contempt of the authority of the Catholic Church.” But if private interpretation, i. e., one's diligent study with prayer, fails to give a man the sense of Scripture, how shall the same enable him to determine which is the Catholic Church whose voice he is to hear? Two different bodies in this city claim the title. How can one decide between them without a private interpretation?

....The August number of the English Pulpit of To Day contains four able discourses: Mr. Williamson on Burden Bearing; Dr. Dale on Rest, A Christian Duty; Dr MacLaren on the Paradox of Love's Measure; and the Rev. A. Whyte's vivid and searching delineation of Herod the Great. It is not often that one issue furnishes so much and such varied excellence.

....We cordially welcome the Medical Missionary Record, issued monthly at a dollar a year by Dr. Dowkoutt, 118 East 45th street. Its object is denoted by its title—to further the cause of Medical Missions and Christian effort among physicians in all lands. Four numbers have been issued, each filled with interesting matter bearing upon the subject. Christ, the great Missionary, ministered to the body and to the soul, and they who pay regard to both seem to be treading most closely in the Master's footsteps. We trust that the periodical will have a large and increasing circulation.

....The latest issue of the Mededeelingen, of the Netherlandish Missionary Society, contains reports for the year 1885 of the three chief mission stations, together with full statistical tables of the churches, laborers, schools etc. No striking progress is reported, but the work seems to go steadily forward. It would doubtless prosper more were it free from any sort of connection with the civil government. The Gospel works best when it is most untrammelled.

....The Quiver for the month is handsomely illustrated. The frontispiece, the picture accompanying the verses “The Unknown Martyr,” the illustrations of the Lake District, those of The Lights Along Shore, that of In The Golden Eve and others are well executed engravings. The articles and verses accompanying these pictures are attractive, and those on Workingmen and the Sunday, Buddha, and The Burning Bush are valuable.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.: The Great Masters of Russian Literature in the Nineteenth Century. By Ernest Dupuy. Translated by Nathan Haskell Dole. The Prose Writers: Gogol, Turgenief, Tolstoi. With Portraits and Appendix. 12mo, pp 445. $1.25.

Cassell & Co.: John Parmelee's Curse. By Julian Hawthorne. 12mo. pp. 270 $1.

C. E. Bartholomew, N. Y.: Modern High Farming: A Treatise on Soils, Plants, and Manures. By Francis Wyatt. 12mo, pp. 94.

UNBOUND BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Sketch of the Arcot Mission, India. By the Rev. J. H. Wyckoff. 16mo, pp. 19. Board of Foreign Missions, 54 Vesey St., N. Y.

Catalogue of Rutgers College 1885-'86. 8vo, pp. 66.

Twenty-First Annual Report of Rutgers Scientific School, The State College for the Benefit of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts. 1885. 8vo, pp. 61.

A Wicked Girl. A Novel. By Mary Cecil Hay. (Harper's Handy Series, No. 91.) 16mo, pp. 175 25 cents; also.

The Court of France in the Sixteenth Century. 1514-1559. By Catherine Charlotte, Lady Jackson. (Harper's Franklin Square Library, No. 4.) 4to, pp. 88. 25 cents.

Religio Medici. By Sir Thomas Browne, M.D. With the “Observations” of Sir Kenelm Digby. (Cassell's National Library, Vol. I., No. 31.) 12mo, pp. 192. 10 cents.

PERIODICALS

September.—The American Kindergarten, The Forum, The Pulpit Treasury, Our Little Ones and The Nursery, The Methodist Review, Lippincott's Monthly Magazine, Outing, Magazine of American History, The New Princeton Review, The Century.

Notes.

....Harper's Magazine for October is to have an illustrated article of special value and interest. It is a full account of Zoan, the classical Tanis, its history, monuments, its disclosures by Mr. Petrie of the Egypt Exploration Fund, and of the unique objects already deposited in the museums. Mrs. Amelia B. Edwards, the distinguished writer and Egyptologist, has prepared the paper. She is particularly qualified for this work.

...."Home Fairies and Heart Flowers," by Margaret E. Sangster, and "Happy Hunting Grounds," by W. Hamilton Gibson, are in preparation by the Harpers as illustrated works for the holidays.

....Messrs. Cassell & Co. are expected to publish the papers on "Imagination in Landscape," by P. G. Hamerton, now appearing in the Magazine of Art, with twelve illustrations, as a holiday gift book.

....A correspondent of the Examiner writes welcome news in regard to an excellent journal in these words: "Many of the readers of the Examiner, who are also readers of the Youths' Companion, will be glad to know that this wonderful little paper is having the most successful year in its eventful history. Between the first of November last and the first of August it enrolled 88,000 new subscribers, and made a net gain of 37,000. It is climbing rapidly toward 400,000, and doubtless may claim the largest circulation of any weekly paper in the world. The success has been honorably won by the enterprise and liberality of its proprietor, and its large income is devoted to the best of religious uses. Nearly 6,000 competitors entered the lists for its recent offer of prizes for the best stories, and a prodigious work was thrown on its busy corps of editors."

....An Egyptian historical novel, written on papyrus 1700 years before Christ, has become the property of the Berlin Museum. There is some talk of translating and publishing it.

NATURE'S CURE FOR CONSTIPATION,

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

Sick-Headache, AND DYSPEPSIA.

TARRANT'S Effervescent Seltzer APERIENT, an elegant, efficacious, pleasant aperient, in the form of a powder, producing when dissolved in water an Exhilirating, Effervescent Draught, recommended by our best Physicians as a reliable and agreeable remedy. It cures Constipation, cures Indigestion, cures Dyspepsia, cures Piles cures Heartburn, cures Sick Headache, cures Liver Complaint, cures Sick Stomach, and gently urges all the Excretory organs to a proper action. It should be found and carried by every traveler.

Sold by druggists everywhere.

Church Decoration.

Church Furnishing.

DESIGNS AND ESTIMATES SUBMITTED.

J. & R. LAMB,

59 CARMINE ST., N. Y.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

The New National Series!

BARNES' NEW TEXT-BOOKS.

Complete Outfit for Public and Private Schools. Truly National. Non-Partisan. Non-Sectional.

READERS.	GEOGRAPHY.	ARITHMETIC.	HISTORY.
Barnes' New National	Barnes' New Geography.	Barnes' Arithmetic.	Barnes' Brief Series.
"The Educational Gems of the Decade."	Two Books. As near Perfection as Attainable.	Two Books. A Minimum of Theory with a Maximum of Practice.	For Every Section and All Classes, in Attractive Form.
First, 20c.; Second, 35c.; Third, 50c.; Fourth, 70c.; Fifth 90c.	Elementary, 60 cts; Complete, $1.25.	Elementary, 40 cts. National, 75 cts.	United States, $1.00. The World, $1.60.
The Set for Examination, $2.00.	The Set for Examination, $1.50.	The Set for Examination, $1.00.	The Set for Examination, $2.50.

GRAMMAR.	SCIENCE.	PENMANSHIP.	DRAWING.
Barnes' New Grammar.	STEELE'S Fourteen Weeks' Course.	Barnes' New Series.	BARNES' Popular Drawing Series.
Short Studies in English.	Chemistry, Physics, Physiology, Astronomy, Zoology, Geology, Botany. In Seven Volumes. $1.00 per Volume.	For the first time we are now able to present a series of Copy Books on a par with our other publications, in point of excellence and beauty.	BY AN EXPERIENCED TEACHER, ON A MOST SUCCESSFUL PLAN.
Price for Examination, 50 cents.	The Set, with Key, $7.00.	Small 6mos, Price 80c. per doz. Large, Price. $1.20 per doz.	The Set for Examination, $3.75.

* Send for "Special Illustrated Catalogue." Sixth Edition Just Issued. ****

To facilitate the examination of our new books, we offer to send Specimen Pages FREE, or copies of all or any of the books themselves, delivery prepaid, subject to return if not introduced.

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers, New York and Chicago.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF

STEPPING HEAVENWARD.

BY MRS. E. PRENTISS.

12mo, 432 Pages. Cloth, $1. By mail, $1.10

Originally published in 1869, this book at once attracted wide attention. It has been translated into the French, German, Norwegian and Swedish Languages. More than

75,000 COPIES

have been sold in the United States, while the sales in England and the Colonies have been very large, no less than five English publishers having reprinted it. In this country there is still a large, constant demand for it. The present edition, complete in every respect, is issued in response to many inquiries for a cheaper edition.

ALSO A NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF

The Life and Letters of Mrs. Prentiss

Crown 8vo, 575 pages, with steel portrait and five illustrations. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.65.

The demand for a cheaper edition of this remarkable Memoir, of which have already been sold in the United States and Great Britain, has led to the present issue. Complete in every respect.

20,000 COPIES

The two books will be sent by mail on the receipt of $2.50, or singly at the above-named price.

ANSON D. F. RANDOLPH & COMPANY,
38 West Twenty-third St., New York.

Local Agents wanted to sell these and other popular books. For terms and territory apply to the publishers.

"OUR BABY'S First and Second Year."

By MARION HARLAND,

With other valuable information—48-page book—sent free, on receipt of two-cent stamp. Address,

REED & CARNRICK,
MERCANTILE EXCHANGE BUILDING, New York.

Useful for Everybody.

MANY MISTAKES MENDED

IN READING, WRITING and SPEAKING.

12mo. 320 pages. $1 by mail.

N. TIBBALS & SONS, New York

The Royal Singer!

New Singing Class Book by L. O. Emerson.

THE BEST OF ALL!

Teachers of Singing Schools who examine this, the last of Mr. Emerson's series of successful class-books, will generally concede that it is, in some degree, superior to any of its predecessors. The elementary exercises, the graded easy tunes for practice, the part songs or glees, and the church tunes, anthems and chants, all excel in their selection or arrangement.

With its happily chosen title, good and interesting music and generally attractive character, there is good ground for hope that it will be the "favorite of the season."

READY SEPTEMBER 1ST.
Price, 60 cts., $6.00 per dozen.

Parlor Organ Galaxy.

A good and large collection of Reed Organ Music, selected and arranged by W. F. SUDDS. 40 good Marches, Galops, Waltzes, Rondos, Schottisches, etc., and 17 popular songs, covering 96 sheet music size pages, yet sold for the very low price of 50 cts.

Remember our superior new Sunday School Song Book, Songs of Promise, (35 cts.) and our High School Song Book, Song Greeting, (60 cts.)

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y.

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers, 805 Broadway, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JULIAN HAWTHORNE'S NEW NOVEL,

John Parmelee's Curse.

1 vol., extra cloth. Price, $1.00.

"One of the choicest bits of fiction with which this popular author has entertained the novel reading public."

For Sale by all Booksellers.

Cassell & Company, Limited,

739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

RECENT ISSUES

BY THE

Presbyterian Board of Publication.

NEW EDITION OF

WHAT IS PRESBYTERIAN LAW?

(REVISED AND ENLARGED.)

Containing the Decisions of the General Assembly to 1885, inclusive

By Rev. J. ASPINWALL HODGE, D.D.
12mo. Price, $1.75.

AMONG THE TREES AT ELMRIDGE

A sprightly book for boys and girls, about our forest and fruit trees.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.25.

CHERIE'S ANSWERED PRAYER.

Carries the reader to a village in France, and opening to him a form of life new and instructive.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

WALTER HARMSEN.

A thrilling story of Reformation days in the Netherlands.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.25.

Address orders to

JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't,
1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,

Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St., New York N Y

FOR CHOIRS

A Low Priced Collection of Music.

IDEAL ANTHEMS

BY H. P. DANKS.

The great success of Mr. Danks' church music renders unnecessary any comment as to the merit of this collection. The Anthems are all entirely new and adapted to the wants of all denominations, as Services, Opening Pieces, Collection Pieces, etc., and available for Chorus or Quartet Choirs.

The pieces are from Easy to Medium Grade, with the organ part on separate staff, thus avoiding the necessity of the player's reading all the parts at once, as in the old style.

"IDEAL ANTHEMS" contains 64 pages, octavo size, handsomely bound in paper.

Price, 35 cents each by mail, postpaid; $3.60 a dozen by express, not prepaid.
SPECIMEN PAGES FREE.

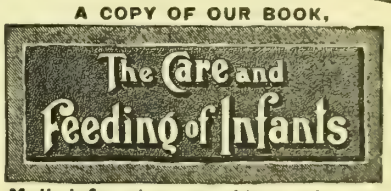
PUBLISHED BY

THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O.
And 19 East 16th Street, New York City.

Philadelphia Third Reformed Church.

This historic church, formed by the Rev Dr. Geo. W. Bethune, having passed through fires and having been sustained in its trials by the grace of God and by the unanimous vote of the Particular Synod of New Brunswick, and also by the General Synod, at its last session, now seeks a pastor to build again her broken walls. Any minister who thinks he can do more good in a great city like Philadelphia, can obtain all information relative to the Third Church by addressing GEORGE F GORDON, 857 North Broad street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A COPY OF OUR BOOK,



Mailed free to any address; it contains advice and useful information for nursing mothers and invalids, and an analysis and description of

MELLIN'S FOOD.

DOLIBER, GOODALE & CO., Boston, Mass.

Established 1857.

The GREAT CHURCH LIGHT

FRINK'S Patent Reflectors for Gas or Oil, give the most powerful, softest cheapest & Best light known for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Banks, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A Liberal discount to churches and the trade. Don't be deceived by cheap imitations.

I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St., N. Y.

HAY FEVER

$1 by mail

WARD'S REMEDY FOR Hay Fever, Rose Cold, &c

Handy to carry. Easy to take. Prepared solely by I.W.FERRIS, M.D., Schenectady, N.Y. J. Milhaus' Son, 183 B'way, New York, Agent.

THE

Christian Intelligencer

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT

48 Church St., cor. Fulton, N. Y.,

BY THE

CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOC.

Editors:

REV. J. M. FERRIS, D.D.,
REV. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.

Associate Editor:

MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

TERMS,

$2.65 per annum.

Ministers and Theological Students, $2.

SINGLE COPIES, 8 CENTS.

Read these Instructions carefully.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS pertaining to the literary columns of the paper must be addressed to the Editors; and those inclosing manuscripts to be returned must be accompanied with envelopes stamped and addressed. No attention will be paid to anonymous communications.

THOSE relating to the business department, to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION, Box 2117, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIBERS, NOTICE.—The date following your name on the direction label informs you to what month and year your subscription is paid. If this date is not changed within two weeks after payment is made, drop us a postal card and we will investigate and reply. Please examine the date, and if in arrears, remit the amount due.

REMITTANCES ARE AT THE RISK OF THE SENDER, unless made by Draft, Check, or P. O. Money Order. These, if lost, can be readily replaced.

Checks, etc., to order of CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION.

IN CHANGING AN ADDRESS, it is necessary to send the OLD as well as NEW address. The change cannot be made unless this is done. And in order to prevent the loss of papers, it will be well to notify the office at least ten days before the contemplated change, as the mail lists are prepared that much in advance of each issue.

ALWAYS GIVE THE NAME OF THE P. O. where the paper is received.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

The Home.

AUNT MARJORIE'S CORNER

Truthfulness.

NOT very long ago, while I was waiting in a photographic gallery, two ladies came in, one of them holding by the hand a dear little boy of three years. One was evidently the mother and the other an intimate friend of hers. The child was very beautiful. His long, flaxen hair fell in ringlets over his chubby little shoulders, and I thought what a lovely picture his would be, and how pleased his father would be when he received across the ocean, where he was, such a type of innocence and beauty. I was very much attracted toward the little one, and as he timidly came to my side, asked him the questions which always come readily to us,—his name and age. With a little trembling voice he answered me. His mother then said, "Robin, tell the lady who you are going to see." His cheeks flushed and his eyes sparkled as he replied, "'Ittle sister—my 'ittle sister!" "Where is little sister?" asked the mother. "Up in heaven, 'way up in heaven!" again chimed the little voice. "What has she upon her back?" "Wings! wings!"

I then inquired if the sister had died. "O no," said the mother, "he never had one. We only tell him that. Dear little Robin is so imaginative!" The mother then asked the child other questions of a similar character, all of which were answered in the same excited manner.

I listened with astonishment mingled with sorrow, and wondered how a mother could expect her little boy to become a truthful man when she was herself sowing seeds of untruthfulness in his heart. The habit grows very fast, and when once it has taken root it maintains its hold with very great tenacity. We cannot labor too assiduously to inculcate lessons of truth upon the minds and within the hearts of our children. "Line upon line, precept upon precept."

How well I remember an incident which occurred during my childhood; when, but a little girl, I went to spend a few weeks with a friend who was very fond of me, and whose affection I fully reciprocated. During my stay at her home she visited the great city of New York for the purpose of doing some shopping, and as she left home she said to me: "If you'll be a good girl and not feel lonely while I'm away, I'll bring you a sugar husband." Little girls were little girls in those days, and I immediately began to wonder what she meant, and O, how I tried to be good so that I should deserve the promised gift. I eagerly looked forward to her coming home, and afterward to my going home with a possession which I felt assured would be something wonderful and altogether new to my playmates.

The longed-for day at last arrived, and my heart leaped with joy and expectation when she placed within my hands a package, which I opened with eagerness, and to my disappointment found only a beautiful new dress. For days I hoped, but no "sugar husband" came and no allusion was made to the promise; as my hope of ever receiving the gift diminished, so faded my great confidence in my friend, and my love for her was never again the same. She had broken her promise.

Many a mother, yes, and father, too, will make an almost endless succession of promises which, being too numerous to remember, are many of them broken. Children are early learners, and very soon place little weight upon the value of those promises; when they have full confidence in a parent's word, that parent has gained a great hold upon the childish heart, and one of the most important lessons is being successfully taught.

Only a few days ago I overheard a brother and sister conversing; one had a secret which the other desired to learn, and only the mother understood it. Said the little girl: "I'll ask mamma; she'll tell me." "No," said the brother, "she said she wouldn't tell." These few words told of a childish faith which will be priceless in helping to establish principle and truth in the hearts of those children. Then, mothers, let us see to it that our lives are fit illustrations of the great precept we would teach. If we would teach truth we must live it.

Who among us cannot recall to mind a friend, perhaps some very dear one, whose besetting sin seems to be this same sin of untruthfulness? We almost hold our breath when such a one begins to relate an occurrence, and while common politeness commands us to listen, still we have so little faith in what we hear that it is difficult for us to decide just what proportion of it to believe.

Lamentable fact! Could we not ofttimes trace this habit of the grown child back to some precocious "Robin," with a very imaginative disposition?

Let us be cautious how we feed the fire of imagination with the fuel of untruth, bearing in mind that "Lying lips are abomination to the Lord;" also, "The lip of truth shall be established."

EMILIE H. DAVIES.

It is difficult to understand on what principle of common sense a woman, not imbecile, could justify herself in teaching a child as Robin's mamma taught him, to prattle about a sister in heaven whom he had never had. The absurdity and folly of such a course are as patent as its sinfulness.

Imagination, the noblest faculty God gives the soul, should be cultivated in children by every legitimate means, but never by the deliberate trampling on truth.

And when, dear friends, we promise our children anything, let us keep our promises. Do not let us say we have "changed our minds," or plead forgetfulness as a convenient excuse. Above all, let us not wholly ignore in silence the disappointment we have inflicted on a little sensitive heart.

Children should rely implicitly on their parents' word, which should never be broken, once pledged.

Another thing, do not doubt the word of your child. However improbable the account he gives you, unless you have previously discovered in him a tendency to falsehood, receive the statement as accurate. We have no right to insult a little girl or boy by doubting what he or she may say to us.

Friends will please write as freely to this "Corner" as to any of their personal friends. It does not make any difference whether you are accumstomed to writing for the papers or not. If anything occurs to you about the management of children or servants, the care of the house, the table, or the wardrobe, or if you have some helpful experience or troublesome problem in the Christian life, sit down and write a letter to "Aunt Marjorie's Corner."

Kindness that Came too Late.

BY BELLE V. CHISHOLM.

AT last the tired hands were at rest, folded peacefully over the heart that had ceased to throb with joy or pain. It seemed strange that Rachel Mathews should be a guest in the darkened parlor, where her weary feet had never been wont to linger. It was not like her to lie there so still and quiet, while the cows lowed uneasily at the barnyard gate, and the harvest hands waited for the sound of the breakfast bell that for the first time failed to ring out its welcome summons promptly to the minute. In the kitchen everything showed the touch of her magic fingers. The table was spread ready for the morning meal, while the fuel in the stove needed but the application of a match to send the flame roaring up the chimney. "Everything is now ready for the morning's work," she said, wearily, the night before, as she left the kitchen, where so much of her dreary life had been spent. Yes, everything was ready, but other hands than hers would take up the work where she had laid it down, for in the silent watches of the night the angel of death paused at her threshold, and with his icy finger stilled the beating of her heart. The morning sun arose as on other days, but in the old farmhouse on the hill, its bright, effulgent rays seemed mockery, for they shone in upon a family, stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. Those were bitter tears that John Mathews let fall upon the face of his dead wife that summer morning. Ah! but it was too late to smooth out the tangles in the barren life that had opened into the full fruition of eternal day.

Twenty-five years before when Rachel Wentworth left her father's house to make a home for John Mathews, she carried with her a warm, loving heart, in which he ruled king.

What an Eden she hoped to make for this man who, before God, had promised to love, cherish and protect her; but even before the honeymoon began to wane the scales fell from her eyes, and to her dismay she discovered the utter selfishness of the man by whose side she was to finish her earthly pilgrimage. When her soul cried out for the sweet ministries that had come so naturally during their courtship, he coolly informed her that as a married woman she must give up all such nonsense and settle down into a thrifty housewife. So, one after another of the joys she had anticipated were put aside, until her life, that promised so much in the outstart, was stripped of all she held most dear. At times her whole being rebelled against this dwarfing of her soul, but she was too true a woman to herald her wrongs before the world, so she took up her heavy cross and, without a complaint, slipped hopelessly into the dreary, tread-mill life into which she had walked blindfolded.

When her children came she lavished upon them the love which her husband had cast from him. In her anxiety to shield them from hardships, she took upon herself the burdens their young shoulders should have borne, thus, in her mistaken devotion, laying the foundation for the selfishness that characterized their after lives. Though they dearly loved their patient, plodding mother, they did not hesitate to take from her tired hands the comforts and pleasures of life which they should have bestowed upon her, and, unnatural as it may seem, there were times when they were actually ashamed of her faded dress and old-fashioned ways. They forgot that it was in their service that her hands had grown hard and her face wrinkled, neither did they call to remembrance that it was to her patient toiling and self-denial that they owed all the advantages they had gained. How many heart-aches she might have been spared had they rewarded her according to the sacrifices she had made on their behalf, but she was at rest now, and it mattered not how weary and foot-sore she had been during the journey just completed; it was over and she was at home, safe in her Father's house. In mercy, her worn-out body had not been racked with torturing pain, and the dreaded agony of a bitter parting from loved ones had been spared her. Yes, she was at rest. The tired expression on her face had given place to one of peaceful quiet, while the poor, drawn features seemed rounded out into youthful freshness and beauty. After years of unrest and disquietude, she had fallen into a sleep which awaited no rude waking in the morning. The sun would rise on the morrow, as it had done thousands of times before, but the thought of the monotonous rounds that must be gone over before it should set disturbed not the sleeper, for with her it was everlasting morning, and all her cares and trials were ended.

The remorseful tears of her husband, and the bitter self upbraidings of her children, fell unheeded upon her closed ear. If she could only have heard the tender, appreciative words that dropped from their lips, or felt the warm tears that were showered so plentifully upon her cold face, how they would have warmed and cheered her frozen heart, but, alas! they came too late; she had gone out of life without receiving any of its sweet, tender ministries from those who now wept bitterly over her shrouded form.

For the first time her heart did not respond to the cries of her children, nor her hand return their pressure. She was at rest, sleeping the unbroken sleep that knows no waking, but who could bring balm to the broken-hearted children who gathered so disconsolately around her bier? How all her love and sacrifice rose up before them now! How could they have given pain to one who lived and died in their service? And who will say that the tears shed by the husband, who had snatched all the flowers from the path over which her weary feet were forced to walk, were not genuine? In his own way he had loved her, but until this hour he had never realized how much of life's sweetness he had shut away from her, and all the flowers he could heap upon her coffin were utterly powerless to atone for the kindness he had refused while she travelled beneath his shadows. He may extol her virtues in fitting eulogies, and chisel her good deeds in imperishable marble, but no after love can bring back the shattered life whose best affections he has slighted, or redeem the vows so heartlessly broken.

God pity the husband and children who, in addition to their crushing sorrow, are compelled to bear about with them the consciousness of having planted thorns in the pathway of the stilled heart that never throbbed but in love for them.

Oh! who is able to endure the pangs of separation, with all the heavy weight of unforgiven unkindness still pressing upon the bleeding heart!—The Presbyterian Observer.

CLOUDLESS SKIES drop no rain. We may bathe ourselves in the unclouded sunshine for days and for weeks, thinking that, if the blue of the heavens were nevermore veiled by the blackness of storm, we at least would be perfectly satisfied. But as the unclouded days pass on, the parched earth begins to gape to heaven for water, the flowers fade, the grass is burned up, and men and beasts droop in the merciless heat, which now seems no longer the messenger of life, but the angel of death. For need like that there is no help in cloudless skies; the sign of deliverance rather comes in the livid thunder-cloud, the flashing lightning, and the pouring rain. There is a like need of the rain-cloud in the inner life. There is a parching and deadening influence even here in too much sunshine; and the storm cloud of pain or of sorrow, which drenches out heart-soil with the rain of tears, alone makes possible the continued growth of that which is best in our heart-culture. We do right to thank God for cloudless days; but we do wrong if we do not thank Him also for days not cloudless. If the one gives the sunshine, the other gives the rain; and without either there would be no increase.—S. S. Times.

CHILDREN'S PORTFOLIO.

The Blessing of Song.

"WHAT a friend we have in Jesus,"
Sang a little child one day;
And a weary woman listened
To the darling's happy lay.

All her life seemed dark and gloomy,
And her heart was sad with care;
Sweetly rang out baby's treble—
"All our sins and griefs to bear."

She was pointing out the Saviour,
Who could carry every woe;
And the one who sadly listened
Needed that dear Helper so!

Sin and grief were heavy burdens
For a fainting soul to bear;
But the baby, singing, bade her
"Take it to the Lord in prayer."

With a simple, trusting spirit,
Weak and worn she turned to God,
Asking Christ to take her burden,
As He was the sinner's Lord.

Jesus was the only refuge,
He could take her sin and care,
And He blessed the weary woman
When she came to Him in prayer.

And the happy child, still singing,
Little knew she had a part
In God's wondrous work of bringing Peace unto a troubled heart.

—Christian Observer.

To Be Repeated.

YOUR mothers, boys, have probably often entertained you with stories. Here is one which, after reading, you may repeat to them. The domine told it to me one day when he came to make us a visit. He said that it was a true story, and that I might write it out for you.

In a certain manufacturing town of Connecticut there lives an estimable lady who has two sons. She and her husband, who is a minister, have brought up their boys to follow whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, and to avoid even the appearance of evil. Sometimes in the course of parental talks they have said: "We ask you both, Harold and Arthur, never to go to the theatre while you are under our care. When you are grown up and are able to think and act for yourselves, you will do what your consciences tell you is right. Until then, keep away from the theatre."

Well, one day two friends of the mother called upon her with an invitation.

"Mrs. M.," said they, "we are going to New York to see a new and popular play. It is reported to be a very good one, to which the most moral persons cannot object. If you will go with us you shall be free from expense, and we will be sure to have a delightful time."

"Thank you very kindly," Mrs. M. replied, "but my husband and myself have taught our boys not to go to the theatre, and what can I say to them about it if I set them the example of going?"

The ladies took their leave—not offended, but thoughtful. I suppose that they made their visit to New York, and that they saw the play. A few days afterward, however, one of them called upon the minister's wife again.

"Mrs. M.," said she, "my friend and myself esteem you all the more highly because you declined our invitation. Had you accepted it, although we would have enjoyed your society, we would have thought less of you than we did before."

"Then," asked Mrs. M., "why did you give me the invitation?"

This is the story which you may tell to your mothers, and when they have heard it they will probably say to you: Men, women, boys and girls are not only most respected, but are most worthy to be respected when they have the courage to stand by what they know is right

COUSIN LOIS.

The Eagle.

RECENTLY I was very much interested in the following little story, as I heard it related by an earnest worker in the meetings. It carries with it its own lesson, and forcibly illustrates the precious promise, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles."

He said that when he was a small boy his home was very near a river on the banks of which he and other boys of his own age spent much time at play. There was a noble old eagle who frequented the same place. Sitting in a tree near by, they often saw him swoop down and catch a fish for his meal.

One day, however, he got out of his element, for he wandered into the corn-field and got caught in a trap. It took two strong men to take him from the trap and to confine him in an old attic. At first he was very cross and would not permit the boys to come near him. After awhile he thought better of it and decided to be friendly, would eat corn from their hands, and soon got so he would let them smooth the feathers upon his head.

Months passed, and he seemed to have forgotten his former free and happy life; had seemingly lost all high and lofty aspirations; was very docile and contented. One bright, beautiful day the boys conceived the idea of taking him out of doors, to see what he would do. They did accordingly. He was just as patient and docile as ever; did not seem to take much notice of the change; so they decided to let him have a little more liberty. They tied a clothes-line to his leg, giving the other end to a man to hold, as they did not care to lose him. He walked about the yard very leisurely for a time. At last his eye caught sight of the noon-day sun. He quivered all over; and with his eye fixed steadily upon the sun he began to lift his wings, but they had been so long unused that he could not raise himself from the ground for some time. He never once took his eye from the bright sun. What longings filled him for a flight above the clouds?

Renewing his strength, he at last raised himself and flew up, up. When he came to the end of the line, in his great strength he snapped it asunder, and soared up towards the sun, and was soon beyond the sight of man, filling the place for which he was made.

So we, dear friends, with our eye fixed steadily upon Jesus, the blessed Sun of Righteousness, shall renew our strength day by day, and be enabled to mount up above the trials, sorrows and pains of life, and bask in the pure sunlight of His love.—A. H. H., in The Advocate and Guardian.

The Faith of Little Hans.

A FIERCE wind came sweeping around the corner of Pennsylvania avenue one morning in the winter of '84; down the deserted street it rushed, whirling the freshly-fallen snow into little light heaps, then scattering it madly in every direction. Against this storm a young woman was making what progress she could toward the post-office. A pair of dark eyes and a very pink nose were all that was visible above her wrappings. "I must hurry," she thought, as she glanced up at the great clock, and in a few minutes she was at her desk in the Dead-letter office. Her work was to open and read all the letters whose destination could not be found from the envelope, and whose contents often reveal the desired address.

What a motley pile it was that lay before her! Here was one from a broken-hearted father begging a wayward son to come home, and telling him that his voice and smile alone could remove the gentle melancholy that had settled upon the dear old mother.

Here was another from some queer old gentleman full of the small-talk and scandal of his own village, and touching upon political scandal then rife in the city where his letter had found lodgment.

There were letters full of the vivacity of the school girl, letters full of the burning love of the college boy, letters whose prim upright hand and gossipy nature suggested spinsterhood, letters to convulse you with laughter, and letters that would give you the heartache. Yet, strange to say, not one of these eager correspondents had taken the pains to write the correct address on the envelope that contained so much that seemed to be of the greatest importance. Perhaps they were too much absorbed in what they had said from their hearts to take thought for the formal writing on the outside.

The young clerk had worked her way down through a large heap, and was beginning to think of lunch, when she came upon a peculiar little envelope addressed in German to "Jesus in Heaven;" she tore it open hastily, and found a soiled sheet written all over in a child's cramped hand. Some of the words seemed blurred with tears, and she could scarcely make them out.

Here is the translation:

"DEAR JESUS: I have prayed so hard to you, but I guess you could not hear me so far off, so I am going to write you a letter. We came over a big ocean when it was summer-time. My mamma has been sick all the time. Can't you send her something to make her well? And, dear Jesus, please send my papa some work to do, so he can buy us some warm clothes and something to eat, and please do it quick, for we are cold and hungry.

"Nobody knows I am writing to you. I thought you might send us something for a surprise.

"HANS BRAHM.

"P. S.—My hands are so cold I can't write very well."

Katrina's eyes were filled with tears as she came to the end. She sat for some time with the letter in her hand; as she folded it she resolved to do something to make the little boy happy. She said: "Whatever his parents may be, this beautiful child faith must not be destroyed." That evening after dinner she told several of her friends about the matter, and they were eager to help her make up a box.

It was ready in a few days. There were some flannels for the mother and little Hans, comfortable clothes for the father, and toys enough to make the boy believe that the Christ Child did not live in Germany only. At the very top lay a crisp ten-dollar bill. As soon as the box left the house Katrina wrote a letter to Hans. She told him his letter had been received, and that Jesus had sent one of His servants on earth to help him, and that a nice box was on its way out West.

Not long after there came a letter of warm thanks from the father. He explained how they had been in the country but a few months, and had not yet found work.

As the weeks went by another and another letter came, telling of fairer prospects and brighter days. One thing they assured Katrina—"that they could never forget her kind letter and generous help in their time of saddest need."—Edith Miller, in Harper's Young People.

A GOOD REPUTATION is important to any man in any sphere. Yet a good reputation is neither gained nor preserved by anxiety about it. There is no way of getting a reputation like deserving it. There is no way of preserving a reputation like continuing to deserve it. If you would have others think a good deal of you, first see to it that there is a good deal to you. If you think too much of yourself, others will not. If you think very little of yourself, others may think more.—Sunday-School Times.

Little Heads Together.

HALF SQUARE.

1. The mountain on which the ark rested. 2. The place of Samuel's birth, residence and burial. 3. The fourteenth king of Judah. 4. What a herd of swine did. 5. An interjection. 6. A letter in thanks.

"ITTALIE."

A LESSON IN GEOGRAPHY.

1. What river in Nevada bears the name of a famous man of science?
2. What place in Utah reminds us of a heroine of Madame de Staël?
3. What river in Montana makes you think of certain shell-fish?
4. What mountain in Oregon has the name of a precious stone?
5. What cape of Oregon bears the name of a lamented military commander?
6. What place in California reminds you of the growing moon?
7. What town in Nevada is a quotation from an ancient philosopher?
8. What place in Idaho has the name of an Italian city?

LEO.

CROSSWORD ENIGMA.

My first is in roses, but not in bouquet;
My second in roadstead, but never in way;
My third in the prettiest always is seen;
My fourth is in verdant and yet not in green;
My fifth is in earliest—never in soon;
My sixth is in melody, absent from tune;
My seventh you'll find is in bride, not in maid;
My eighth is in helper, but never in aid;
My ninth is a letter in rune and in run;
My whole is a month half devoted to fun.

Answers to Questions of August 11th.

1. Esther 1:18. 2. Job 1:20. 3. Psalms 55:21. 4. Psalms 140:10. 5. Proverbs 27:25. 6. Isaiah 3:20. 7. Ezra 1:9. 8. Exodus 1:14. 9 Exodus 12:45. 10. Numbers 15:15.

The "Little Heads" and their friends are requested to send original puzzles for this department to Cousin LOIS, office of THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

Notes from Long Branch.

A LONG branch of the Shrewsbury river turns to the east and empties into the Atlantic ocean about twenty miles south of Sandy Hook. The broadening estuary of the branch was once known as Green's Pond, but since the advent of population, wealth and culture, the old name has been replaced with the more ancient cognomen of aboriginal flavor —Lake Takanassee. Back in the country and along the shore for a mile or two houses and hotels cover the ground, making the village and summer resort of Long Branch. Coney Island, Rockaway, Long Beach and Glen Island have started a formidable competition with Long Branch as seaside or excursion resorts, yet the old retreat holds its own, with special attractions for cottagers and lovers of good cuisine, as well as plungers in the surf.

From five to half-past six the stroller along the ocean drive may see a fine array of horse-flesh, carriages, and pretty dresses. One week in the morning, another week in the afternoon, the disciple of Neptune may loll upon the beach and inhale the oceanic ozone and buffet the tumbling billows of the much resounding sea, or observe and admire the dainty costumes and fairy shrieks of the lady bathers or the massive proportions and heroic behavior of the masculine children of the sea. Should he stroll along the piazzas or the corridors of the West End,—the best patronized and best kept hotel of the place,—the summer pilgrim may see, every evening of the season, a charming array of beauty, wealth and fashion, while the terpsichorean strains of Neyer's orchestra invite the youthful feet to the mazes of the dance in the parlor.

The Sunday which we spent at the Branch was a day of summer splendor, leaving nothing to be wished for in temperature or balmy, bracing air, unclouded sky, and ceaseless, heavy surf. At eleven the church going bell of St. James' Chapel at Elberon announced to us our morning service. Several hundred well-dressed saints from the Elberon cottages and the adjacent parts filled the pews of the beautiful edifice and followed with earnest attention the service,—singing and sermon. The Rev. Dr. Greer, of Providence, Rhode Island, preached an able discourse on Matthew 23: 19-21, in which he urged the consecration of life through a realization of the Divine existence and presence in all pursuits and all events. Mr. Rieger, of New York, sung at the offertory, "There is a green hill far away," to a beautiful accompaniment, and the whole musical service was of a high order.

It was our intention in the evening to attend the Taylor Memorial Presbyterian Church, where the Rev. Dr. John De Witt was announced to preach; but the second service was held in the afternoon, so that we again resorted to the Chapel of St. James, and enjoyed the evening service, at which Dr. Greer gave a short and excellent address on the Christian as the self dissatisfied, struggling ever higher to the ideal of Christ.

Mr. George W. Childs, of Philadelphia, acts as sexton of the chapel and pays most courteous attention to the worshippers who desire seats or information about the service. A melancholy interest is attached to the edifice from the Franklyn Cottage near by where President Garfield passed away from earth, and the handsome bronze tablet on the right of the chapel chancel which records the fact of his presence and sufferings.

The Reformed Church in the village lamented the removal of the Rev. C. J. Young to Saratoga Springs, whose place here has been acceptably filled since April by the Rev. Mr. Cornet, of Nebraska. The old Seaside Chapel has been kept open for morning service, where the Rev. Arthur Potts has ministered during the summer, also serving the little Presbyterian church recently organized near by.

The Rev. Elliott D. Tomkins has begun his fourteenth year of pastoral service in the old parish church of St. James, while Methodism rejoices in a large village church and a new Simpson Church nearer the shore, where the Rev. Mr. McNichol edifies and entrances the multitude. The Romanists have the Church of our Lady, Star of the Sea, hard by Daly's residences (of gambling fame), while the Jews meditate an appropriation of the Seaside Chapel for a synagogue. Now, if the Reformed Church or the Presbyterian desire to prevent this apostasy, let them raise seven or ten thousand dollars and relieve the First Church of Long Branch of this chapel, which they have been carrying as a heavy burden, and secure it as a place of Christian worship for which the money (twenty thousand, more or less,) was originally given. A word to the wise is sufficient.

E. J. Runk.

Long Branch Aug. 28d, 1886.

Hints for Farmers.

A NEW FERTILIZER.

MR. J. A. PRICE, of Scranton, recommends the use of culm, or coal-waste, in agriculture, by reducing it to dust and applying it to land, to darken the color of the soil, produce porosity, and stimulate plant-life. His opinion that benefits will be derived from this application is confirmed by the experiments he has made. A dark color of the soil is usually associated with fertility, and with reason, for it promotes the absorption of heat and thus makes the soil warmer and prolongs the season of freedom from frost at both ends. Mr. Price's observations of the effect of colors on soils side by side, and otherwise precisely alike, showed that a vigorous existence was maintained on a soil darkened by waste coal, greatly in excess of that of the adjoining strip which was left in its original condition. So in the quality of porosity, in a soil treated as the author recommends—a blue clay or hard pan taken from an excavation and fertilized with organic manures—it was found that greater porosity as well as improved color was given, and the two sections, treated and untreated, exhibited all the peculiar features of two different soils. The corn upon the culm-charged section exhibited a vigor of growth of tap and stay roots and of stalk and ear that surprisingly surpassed that of the other section. This result has been maintained through several plantings; and similar effects were observed with Lima beans. Since coal contains nearly all of the substances requisite for the healthy growth of plants, it is reasonable to suppose that its application will have the effect, as it is gradually decomposed by chemical action, of a positive manure. This supposition has also been confirmed by the experiments. The fertilizing results of this kind begin to reveal themselves in the second year.—The American.

FOWL FACTS IN AN EGG SHELL.

The breeds of fowls having the quality of laying and not sitting, may be classed in four groups—all layers of white eggs. 1st. Single-combed fowls, including the Black-Spanish, Minorcas, Andalusians and Leghorns in variety. These all are distinguished by large, erect, single combs in the cocks, and drooping combs in the hens. 2d. The rose combed fowls of the Hamburg group. 3d. The true "top-knots" —White-Crested Black Polish, Golden-Spangled Polish, Silver-Spangled Polish, White Polish, all of which have split or double combs, or the rudiments of such combs. 4th. The Galic group of fowls, some of which, like the Crevecœurs and the Houdans, have crests like the Polish; others, like the Gelderland fowls of Holland, La Fleche and La Bresse of France, show the split or bifurcated comb or the rudiments of it. Among all these the most useful, simply as egg-producers, are to be found in the single-combed group. The cock of the White-Faced Black Spanish breed is characterized by lustrous black plumage, gay with rainbow tints, and only a little less glossy in the hens—red combs or wattles and white faces. They lay eggs of the largest size and pure white, of course. The Minorcas are like them but with red faces, and the Andalusians are blue. Leghorns, White and Brown, are desirable, hardy, prolific, and breed generally true to feathers and style. The Leghorns—and there are several other breeds—are by no means so high-bred as the Spanish, yet they are hardier, and the eggs, though smaller, are more abundant, so that so long as eggs sell by the dozen, rather than by the pound, they are very profitable fowls to keep. Houdans are favorite French fowls, and combine egg laying and flesh production in a high degree; they are, besides, hardy, prolific, and, like all other Galic fowls, excellent eating, which can hardly be said with truth of the fowls of any other of the groups of non sitters.—American Agriculturist for September.

CONDITIONS REQUISITE TO THE PRESERVATION OF TIMBER.

The cheapest operation to protect our woods, and quite sufficient for many purposes, is to season or thoroughly dry the timber, reducing the contained moisture from eight to twelve per cent of the weight of the wood; and when in this condition, with a circulation of air around it, to prevent the collection and absorption of moisture, the wood will last indefinitely, as the fungi cannot grow in such surroundings. Everyone is more or less familiar with the soundness of timber in the upper parts of buildings, while in lower parts near the foundations it is often decayed on account of moisture.

In many situations, however, where timber must be used, the conditions of growth of the fungi are present, and it will decay; some species can be used which resist the attacks of the fungi for a long period, but the final result is decay unless the wood is treated by some process preventing the growth of the fungi, which must be capable of doing either one of two things: 1st. It must keep the fibers dry, preventing the absorption of moisture. 2 1. If the wood must be in a damp place and kept moist, some antiseptic must be present, sufficient to prevent the growth of any of the various kinds of destructive fungi. Timber entirely submerged does not come under these considerations. To use the first process successfully means more than a thin coat of paint or tar on seasoned wood when exposed to continued moisture. It must be some substance which penetrates the tissues of the wood sufficiently far, in case the exterior surface is broken, to prevent any absorption of moisture. Woods impregnated with the heavy tar or lighter oils are protected more from the fact of prevention of access of dampness to the fibers than by the contained antiseptics, unless in the exception of a great percentage of creosote. In the second method the moisture is permitted to come in contact with the fibers of the wood, and reliance depends upon the antiseptic. In this case, the entire wood should be saturated to give the greatest measure of success, not merely an exterior protection of a half-inch or so in depth, the latter fact, as before explained, being the cause of many of the failures which have taken place. The antiseptic treatment, to succeed, must destroy all the germs which have found lodgment in the timber, and also those which may come from the exterior.—From "Woods and their Destructive Fungi," by P H. Dudley, C. E., in Popular Science Monthly for September.

Financial.

Tuesday, Aug. 31st.

The banks reported for the week: Loans reduced $5,724 400, specie increased $2,416,208, legal tenders decreased $4,430 000 and deposits reduced $8,728,300. The surplus of reserve was increased $168,275, making it $6 907 150. Loans are still 22 millions in excess of the amount at this time last year, while the amount of specie held is 47 millions less, of legal tenders 7 1-2 millions less, and of deposits nearly 42 millions less. The rate for money fluctuated considerably, but varied generally between 5 to 8 per cent; the average on Saturday was 5 1-2 per cent on call. Yesterday money on call was from 5 to 7 per cent, the ruling rate being 6 per cent. The Bank of England on Thursday raised the rate of discount 1 per cent, making it 3 1-2 per cent. This did not stop the engagement of gold for export to this country, as $500,000 were engaged a day or two after. The German steamers brought $1 200,000 in gold on Saturday, and the steamers arriving yesterday from Havre and Liverpool brought $1 074,000. Foreign exchange sold yesterday at $4 81 1-2 for 60 day bills and at $4 84 1-2 for demand for sterling. The bank clearances for last week show an increase of 17 per cent upon those of the corresponding week of last year. Outside of this city the increase was 19 per cent.

On the expectation of war in Europe, as the result of the overthrow of the Government in Bulgaria, wheat rose rapidly and soon after fell 3 cents. The visible supply of wheat in the United States and Canada, east of the Pacific slope, increased last week 1 464,183 bushels, against an increase in the corresponding week of 1885 of 730,940 bushels. The visible supply on the 28 h was reckoned at 41 285,032 bushels, which is 3,300,000 bushels less than it was on Aug 29th, 1885. If the surplus from last year's harvest held in this country on June 1st, 1886, has been correctly reckoned, then about 30 millions of bushels of wheat must have been in the hands of the farmers at that time. They have probably been selling to make room for the new crop and also to realize on the recent advance. The probabilities are that the increase of the visible supply will soon begin to fall off. Quotations for grain yesterday were: Wheat here 86 7-8, in Chicago 75 7 8; corn here 50 1-8, in Chicago 40 3-8; oats here 31 3-4, in Chicago 25 5-8. These prices are lower than those of August 1st, and for no good reason. The world's harvest of grain is considerably below that of last year, which was less than that of the year before. Europe will need from us more grain than last year, for the only surplus of any importance is here. India has had less to spare this year than last. There ought to be a steady increase in the value of wheat and corn. Before the next harvest there will be. The cotton market is quiet. Quotations yesterday were: Sept. 9.4 5; Oct. 9 5-6; Nov. 9 8-9; Dec. 9 12-13. There is no change of importance in the prices of hay and straw, except that long rye is worth from 60 to 65 cents.

The imports of merchandise at this port last week were valued at $8 555 320 and the exports at $6 429,-916. Gold is not coming here to settle a balance of trade in our favor, but to pay for stocks and to be loaned at 5 to 6 per cent or more. Whether it will stay or not will depend on the trade of the future.

The Stock Market is dull, has yielded a little more under the increased value of money, but in the main is strong.

AT PESTH, in Hungary, the deepest artesian well in the world is being bored. A depth of 3,120 feet has been reached and the flow of water yields 176,000 gallons daily, which is used to supply public baths and other establishments. The temperature of the water is 158 degrees, indicating great heat in the interior of the earth. The boring is to be continued to obtain if possible a larger volume of water at a still higher temperature.

News of the Week.

(Continued from page five.)

Mayor Grace yesterday appointed General John Newton Commissioner of Public Works for Mr. Squire's unexpired term.... Weather here hot and dry. Mercury yesterday rose to 85 degrees.

SATURDAY, 28.—Lord Randolph Churchill announced in the House of Commons yesterday that the Government would propose the abolition of the Secret Service fund, which amounts to £10,000 yearly. This was greeted with cheers....A number of soldiers belonging to the Dragoon Guards have been placed under arrest for rioting in Belfast....Mr. Gladstone has arrived at Munich ...Rev. Henry Ward Beecher has recovered from his illness and will preach in Glasgow on Sunday....Mr. Gladstone's brochure on the Irish question was published yesterday. ..It contains fifty eight pages and is similar in the excellence of its style to Mr. Gladstone's pamphlet on the Bulgarian atrocities....A cyclone occurred in Cuba about the 18th of August and crossed the island and left it near Sagua. The losses at Sagua are estimated at $100,000. A number of persons were killed and injured; chimneys were blown down and trees uprooted... Several hundred men are thrown out of employment in the Montana mines....A review of the week's business shows an improvement in trade....Several convict laborers were thrown from a train which ran away down a mountain and killed, near Hendersonville, N. C ...Half of the village of Montrose, Penn., was burned up yesterday....The Isaac Howe Burch will, which made a stir 30 years ago, is contested again in the Circuit Court, Chicago....The trial of Mrs. Robinson, the poisoner, began yesterday at Somerville, Mass.

MONDAY, 30.—Prince Alexander welcomed back to Bulgaria. A royal and enthusiastic reception was given him at Rustchuk, where he was crowned by a body of officers and carried on their shoulders to the palace, followed by cheering crowds. ....A terrible earthquake occurred in Greece, near Athens. Six towns laid in ruins, 600 lives lost and 1,000 persons injured....Mt. Vesuvius is again in a state of eruption and people are fleeing for their lives....The Laflin-Rand powder magazine was blown up two miles southwest of Chicago by a bolt of lightning. One hundred thousand pounds of powder and ten thousand pounds of dynamite were exploded, destroying every building in the vicinity. One person killed and four severely injured. ...Northern Pacific Railroad is threatened with a strike over the working of its coal mines, and the Knights of Labor are greatly excited all along the line....The elegant steamer "Daniel Drew," of the People's line on the Hudson, was burned to the water's edge, at Kingston Point. Loss from $150,000 to $175,000....Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes returned from England yesterday on his 77th birthday....A man in Queens County, L. I., was killed with a crowbar. His wife is accused of the deed....It is now ascertained by Captain Dutton that Lake Carter of Oregon is the deepest body of fresh water....Three persons were drowned at Jacksonville, Florida, while bathing.... Lieutenant Schultze, who was sent by the Government to the Lena delta, to distribute rewards to those who helped save the survivors of the "Jeannette," has discharged his mission and is on his way home.

TUESDAY, 31.—The explosion of the powder mill near Chicago made an excavation in the ground 150 by 50 feet and in places 40 feet in depth. Near Brighton Park are seen windowless houses, roofs caved in, fences blown clean away, trees blasted and stripped of their leaves, and large portions of the surface earth blown away. At the building of the Board of Trade in the city and seven miles away, large plate glass windows were broken into pieces no larger than a fifty cent piece, the building was rocked, the tower swayed as though it would topple over....The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. ran trains yesterday into and from Jersey City over the tracks of the New Jersey Central....The President and his wife have plunged into the Adirondack wilderness....Gas exploded yesterday morning in the Fairlawn Colliery, near Scranton, Pa., killing five miners and seriously injuring two....The Times of this city reported that Mr. Sedgwick, sent to Mexico to look into the Cutting case, had disgraced himself by drunken buffoonery at a dinner given by Mexican young men. The story is declared to be absolutely false....The sixteen-year-old daughter of a wealthy German citizen of St. Charles, Mo., eloped with the coachman yesterday. Two hours later the pair were arrested in St. Louis by the girl's father. ....Geronimo, the Apache chief, wishes to surrender....Drought has prevailed over a large district in Texas fourteen months; the people are nearly starving; help is sought for them....A Philadelphia boy of sixteen and a Chicago girl propose to jump from the Brooklyn Bridge....A violent hurricane visited the Island of Nassau on August 22d. ....Rioters in Belfast sentenced to imprisonment for from two to nineteen months.... In the House of Commons the annexation of Burmah was assailed and defended....The progress of Prince Alexander through Bulgaria is a continuous triumph.

While not desiring to discriminate unfairly with reference to educational institutions, we feel perfectly justified in recommending Ossining Institute for girls as a Christian home and school where the highest advantages are combined with the most excellent conditions as to health and natural situation. The Principal is a teacher of experience and the atmosphere of the school is favorable to the attainment of the best culture. We should not hesitate to place a daughter there.

A Florida College.

It is no longer necessary for those who find it desirable to pass the winter in a warm climate to hesitate about going because of the poor educational facilities heretofore existing in many of the Southern States. Parents can now take their children to DeLand, Florida, with the comforting assurance that no break need occur in their course of studies, for there is established at this delightful and flourishing village an academy and college that is first class in every particular, affording every opportunity offered in the best schools here in the North for securing a thorough and liberal education. Board and tuition are supplied at reasonable rates, and students sent there will receive the same kindly care as at home. For full particulars write to either J. F. Forbes, President, DeLand, Florida, or to H. A. DeLand, Esq., Fairport, N. Y.

INDIGESTION, DYSPEPSIA, nervous prostration, and all forms of general debility relieved by taking Mensman's Peptonized Beef Tonic, the only preparation of beef containing its entire nutritious properties. It is not a mere stimulant like the extracts of beef, but contains blood-making, force-generating, and life-sustaining properties; is invaluable in all enfeebled conditions, whether the result of exhaustion, nervous prostration, over work, or acute disease; particularly when resulting from pulmonary complaints. Caswell, Hazard & Co., Proprietors, New York. Sold by druggists.

Market Report.

Review of the New York Market for Butter, Cheese, etc. Reported by DAVID W. LEWIS & Co., Produce Commission Merchants, 49 Pearl St., New York.
Commission on Butter, Eggs, Poultry, etc., is five per cent; Flour, Grain, etc., 2½ per cent.
Marking-plates furnished when desired.

NEW YORK, August 28, 1886.

BUTTER.—Receipts for the week, 35,501 pks.; exports 1,345 pks.

This has been a dull week, and outside of fancy fresh creamery and best dairy makes there were free offerings and lower prices accepted to effect sales, and there was less trading than any time this summer. We note sales of fancy fresh creamery to local trade at 22½a.3c., and fine fresh dairies at 19a20c. Also some small peddling sales of finest June goods at 18a20c., and shippers took some low grades of Western at 9a10c. Market closes with liberal receipts, large stocks, and dealers very firm in their views in the absence of buyers. We quote:

Fancy creamery	21½@23
do dairy (selections)	—@20
Good to fine	16@18
Poor to common	8@13

CHEESE.—Receipts for the week, 49,513 boxes; exports 38,276 boxes.

The bulk of sales, finest cheese, were at 8¾a8⅞c., night milk skims 7a7½c., and full skimmed sold down to 2c. There are a good many cheese carried over this week, and the market closes with less enquiry and sellers firm. We quote:

Factory, white, full cream, finest	—@8⅞
" colored, " "	—@8⅞
" good to fine "	7½@8¼
" night milk skims	6@7¾
" skims	2½@5

EGGS.—Receipts for the week were 15,939 bbls.

All fresh near-by marks have sold quick at an advance of 1c. per doz. We quote:

Near-by marks, fresh eggs, per doz	—@17
Western and Canada, fresh eggs, per doz	14½@15½

Publisher's Department.

Rheumatism and the Gout, cease their twinges, if the affected part is daily washed with Glenn's Sulphur Soap, which banishes pain and renders the joints and muscles supple and elastic. It is at the same time a very effective clarifier and beautifier of the skin.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap heals and beautifies, 25c.
German Corn Remover kills Corns, Bunions, 25c
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye—Black & Brown, 50c.
Pike's Toothache Drops cure in 1 Minute, 25c.

100 Doses One Dollar is inseparably connected with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and is true of no other medicine. A bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla contains 100 doses, and will last a month, while others will average to last not over a week. Use only Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The only way to cure fever and ague is either to neutralize the poisons which cause the disease or to expel them from the system. Ayer's Ague Cure operates in both ways. It is a warranted specific for all forms of malarial disorders, and never fails to cure. Try it.

If a cough disturbs your sleep, take Piso's Cure for Consumption and rest well.

MARRIAGES.

GILLESPIE—HELM.—At the house of the bride's parents, in New Brunswick, N. J., Aug. 25, by Prof. Jacob Cooper, D.D., D.C.L., Rev. J. H. Gillespie, pastor of the church at New Hurley, N. Y., to Miss Maria W. Helm.

VAN ALLEN—COLES.—Aug. 25, in the Reformed Church of Wynantskill, by the Rev. H. M. Voornees, Rev. Ira Van Allen to Miss Minnie A. Coles.

DEATHS.

Obituary notices five cents per line (nine word to the line.) For subscribers we will insert fifteen lines free; all lines in excess of that number will be charged same as non-subscribers.

METTLER.—At New Brunswick, N. J., Aug. 24, I. M. Mettler, son of Wilson and Elizabeth Mettler. He was kind and generous, a loving son, and an affectionate brother.

WACK.—At Fort Plain, N. Y., Aug. 26, Anna, wife of W. G. B. Wack.
Her many years of helplessness and patient suffering rendered her peculiarly dear to her family and friends, and as is the case always with those "whom God has touched," her loss is most keenly felt, and while we cannot but rejoice that her bonds are loosed, and she is at rest, still we grieve sorely as one who mourns a loving mother. I. S. W.

Notices and Acknowledgments

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—Evangelical but not denominational. Prints in 147 languages in aid of foreign missions; grants religious reading to the needy; sends colporters to millions in our highways and hedges, and to the immigrants in Castle Garden and elsewhere. This work depends wholly on charitable gifts. Donations and legacies are earnestly solicited. A summary of the sixtieth year mailed free. O. R. Kingsbury, Treasurer, 150 Nassau street, New York.

FULTON STREET DAILY NOON PRAYER-MEETING,
118 Fulton Street, and 58 Ann Street,
Just east of Broadway, near William Street.
COME IN, REST, AND PRAY.
Stop 5, 10 15 or 20 minutes, or the hour, as your time permits.

HOPE COLLEGE will open its sessions for 1883-87 on Wednesday, September 15th, at 9 o'clock A.M. The Faculty will meet for the reception of new students at 1.30 A.M. The course of instruction at this institution and all its adjuncts have been so far improved that students are invited from the East, as well as from the West, with the assurance of a good education at a very moderate cost. For further information or catalogues address

CHARLES SCOTT, President.

References: Rev. G. H. Mandeville, D.D., 34 Vesey street, New York city; Rev. C. E. Crispell, D.D., Spring Valley, N. Y.; Rev. Wm. J. R. Taylor, D.D., Newark, N. J.; J. C. Benham, M.D., Hudson, N. Y., or the editor.

THE CLASSIS OF BERGEN will meet in regular session on Tuesday, Sept. 21st, in the Church of Schraalenburgh, at 10 o'clock A.M. Classical dues must be paid at this session.

P. V. VAN BUSKIRK, S. C.

THE CLASSIS OF HUDSON will meet in the church at Upper Red Hook, the third Tuesday in September at 10 A.M. The Rev. G. D. Lydecker will be installed pastor of said church at 10.30 A.M., of the same day. T. S. DUSINBERRE, S. C.

THE regular fall meeting of the Classis of Schoharie will be held in the Reformed Church of Gallupville, N. Y., on Tuesday, Sept. 21st, at 10.30 o'clock.
D. K. VAN DOREN, S. C.

CORRESPONDENTS are requested to address Rev. J. Elmendorf, D.D., at 61 East 123d st., New York.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall-st., N. Y.

JAMES PYLE'S

PEARLINE
The Great Invention,
For EASY WASHING,
IN HARD OR SOFT, HOT OR COLD WATER.
Without Harm to FABRIC or HANDS
and particularly adapted to Warm Climates.
No family, rich or poor, should be without it.
Sold by all Grocers, but beware of vile imitations. PEARLINE is manufactured only by
JAMES PYLE, NEW YORK.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Meadville, Pa.

The Best Remedy

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who knew me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

The Church.

Roslin.

A BEAUTIFUL poem written in stone,
And another, recited in wood and glen,
And scenes which the fairies might have known,
Are here in Roslin and Hawthornden.

Hands that were servants of loving hearts
Only thus could have wrought their will:
The highest and lowliest did their parts
With patient loyalty, perfect skill.

And this was the reason of all their care,
Of their work by day and their dreams by night:
The chapel was loved as the House of Prayer,
And they made it lovely to meet God's sight.

We hear how the "'Prentice Pillar" rose,
Enwreathed with foliage carved in stone,
Of the master's anger, and all the woes
That Roslin Chapel of old has known.

But pillars and arches, and roof and aisles
Lighted with sunshine, vocal with psalm,
Has a history rather of joy and smiles,
Of nights that were quiet and days of calm.

Softly the knights in their armor sleep,
But life is glad in the summer air,
And the crowds that gather a memory keep
Of the marvellous beauty of Roslin fair.

And as they pass into glen and wood
Each face seems radiant, each voice low,
And some have been worshipping as they stood
'Mid the triumphs of labor of long ago.

And we all have learned that work that will last
Is the work well done for its own love's sake.
And back to our toil when the rest is past
For our inspiration the thought we take.

Poets have pondered, and learned men
Have gained an impulse, a purpose high,
As they walked by the river through the glen,
With the eloquent chapel standing by.

And we, the crowd of the later days,
As we lift our eyes to the heavens above,
Though smallest and meanest, may give God praise
That we all can work, and we all can love.

—Marianne Farningham, in The Christian World, London.

Inspiration of God.

THE Rev. George D. Hulst preached yesterday morning before a good sized congregation at the South Bushwick Reformed Church, Bushwick avenue and Himrod street. He chose for his text Second Timothy 3: 16.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Said he: "It is remarkable how men criticize the Word of God. It is more remarkable that the Church of God continually attempts to answer these criticisms from the standpoint of their origin. Men criticize the Word of God, saying it does not agree with the record of nature—it is in some parts a record of myths; it is a transcript of ideas of Egypt and Babylon; it is a collection of manuscript written from various sources; it records impossibilities, and so on. And the Church has said 'no' to all these things, and has asserted and endeavored to prove the contrary. I do not mean to say these matters are unimportant; some indeed are, but some are not, but they are not vital. Let them all be proved and the Bible may yet be regarded as the Word of God. I say it is remarkable that men criticize as they do. It is so far apart from the ordinary methods of man. A book is always supposed to be criticized in view of the object for which it was written. A work on botany is to be criticized in view of what it makes known on that subject, and no criticism can be vital save as it bears upon that point. It may show many defects otherwise. It may make misstatements in the line of other sciences. Its rhetoric may be poor, its views on chemistry, so far as that is touched on, may be out of date. These are defects, but they are not vital. One of the most wonderful books ever written is Butler's "Analogy." The object of this work was to show that whatever can be urged against religion can be urged against nature, and that we are as much justified in believing in spirit existence and moral obligation as in anything physical and natural. This book is written in perhaps the poorest and most involved, complicated English which was ever put in a book by an educated man. Is the critic justified in casting the book aside as worthless if he finds it poorly printed and difficult to read understandingly? Certainly not. These are superficial defects, but they do not touch the real object and aim of the book. Its unanswerable argument stands, whatever its style may be, and the only vital criticism is the effort to overthrow that reasoning which has stood unshaken against all the arguments and sneers of infidelity. So we, looking to the Word of God, are first to determine what is its object and aim, and our only proper basis is the declaration of the Word itself. We find that uttered in many places, directly and indirectly, and notably in the text. It is for certain specific objects, not history for its own sake; not science of any sort whatsoever; not for the revelation of a cosmogony; not for the sake of ethnology. The power of the truth lies not so much in argument as in application, and its defense is not so much in the fact that exceptions can be answered as in the fact that it meets the needs of the soul. It is like medicines. We cannot understand why quinine should heal and strychnine destroy, but so it is. And this is the truth to have in mind as we read the Word of God or listen to its exposition. The Word of God is personal for our wants, not for our criticism; for our choice, not for our analysis. As when one presents water to us, not that we may analyze it and see if it be chemically pure, but first to look into ourselves and ascertain if we are thirsty and have need of it and then take it. And if one have water offered and he be in need of it, it is not only his choice but his duty to take and live. As a wounded soldier after the battle, when water is offered, takes it, so as God, to us weak and wounded creatures of sin, offers the water of life, we have no choice or duty but to take and live. We cannot neglect the Word of God."—Brooklyn Times, August 23d.

Confidence and Success.

DR. JUDSON was once asked, when the cause of missions was in its infancy, if he thought the prospect for the conversion of the world looked bright. His reply was: "Yes, as bright as the promises of God can make it."

Christianity is a religion of expectancy. It does not look backward. Its standard, its ideas, its golden age, are all in the future. Its watchword is always "Forward." The work of the Church rises before her, grand, urgent, sublime. She expeects victory, and, therefore, prepares for it. A gloomy Church, claiming that the world is growing worse, that here sin and Satan are too strong for Christ, and the Church and the Holy Spirit; a church whose hopes are languid and in whose heart springs no enthusiasm from the vision of grand successes yet to come to Christ and the truth, is not calculated to win the glorious battles of the Lord and plant the standards of victory on every shore.

It is said that Admiral Dupont was explaining to Admiral Farragut the reasons why he failed to enter Charleston harbor with his fleet of ironclads. He gave this and that and the other reason. Farragut remained silent till he was through and then said: "Ah, Dupont, there is one reason more." "What is that?" "You did not believe you could do it." A church not believing the world's conversion possible will fail to accomplish it. To win victories for Christ the heart must be hopeful. That which kept Livingstone undaunted, and bore him on through numberless perils, until he died kneeling, with his hands clasped in prayer, was the thought, "Africa for Christ."—Morning Star.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Home Readings.

LESSON 11, THIRD QUARTER.

M. The Mission of the Spirit.....John 16: 1-15.
T. Christ's Closing Words.....John 16: 16-33.
W. The Promise of the Spirit..... Acts 1: 1-14.
T. The Promise Fulfilled..... Acts 2: 1-21.
F. Bearing Witness.....Rev. 8: 14-27.
S. Searching the Heart.....1 Cor. 2: 1-16.
S. The Fruit of the Spirit..... .....Gal. 5: 16-26.

—From the Westminster Question Book.

International Sunday-School Lesson.

BY REV. JOHN C. VAN DEVENTER.

Sept. 12th.—"The Mission of the Comforter."—John 16: 5-20.

Golden Text.—"He will guide you into all truth."—JOHN 16: 13.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—"I will not leave you comfortless."—JOHN 14: 18.

INTRODUCTION.

THESE three chapters constitute really but one continuous discourse of Jesus, and ought to be studied with constant recognition of the close connection between the different parts. The promises of the Comforter, which in this lesson assume a prominent place, are found scattered through the entire address. At the close of chapter 15, Jesus warns His disciples of the hostility of the world, which they shall encounter as His friends, and promises them that the Holy Spirit shall be their helper and comforter. In this passage He explains more fully the nature of the Spirit's mission.

THE LESSON.

I. THE SPIRIT AND THE SON.—VS. 5-7.

V. 5.—"Now I go my way to him that sent me." Notice how Jesus speaks of His approaching death, not as the triumph of His enemies but as the fulfilment of the Divine purposes. "None of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?" The emphasis is upon "whither." The disciples had asked about the going, but had not been curious about the whither or the why. They had not imagined that this departure was for a purpose.

V. 6.—"Sorrow hath filled your heart." They had been so occupied and overwhelmed by the prospect of their personal bereavement that they had not thought to ask whether there might not be some compensation for them in this trial; whether Jesus might not be still planning to bless them. If they had dwelt more upon these things their sorrow would have been less keen.

V. 7.—"It is expedient for you that I go away." We see that the work of the Son which He accomplished on earth in the body was only preparatory, and really the smaller part of His great enterprise, at least so far as results are concerned. He was to complete the work from the throne, and in doing this it was necessary that He should pass out of the world, and be represented on earth by another. "If I depart I will send him unto you." The Comforter came as Christ's messenger. He sent Him upon His work, so that what the Spirit does Jesus does. He is the only Vicar of Christ on earth.

II. THE SPIRIT AND THE WORLD.—VS. 8-11.

V. 8.—"He will reprove the world." We naturally think of the work of the Spirit as limited to the people of God. Here we are taught that He has a mission to the world, and, in fact, that His work begins with the unbelieving. The word "reprove" does not represent the force of the Greek. The idea is to convince or condemn. When He leads a sinner to Christ it is by convincing him of sin; when the sinner resists and refuses to believe, then the Spirit condemns him to hardness and unbelief by withdrawing His gracious influences.

V. 9.—"Of sin, because they believe not on me." The work of the Spirit as here contemplated is in connection with the Gospel, so that those are spoken of who have a knowledge of Christ, and whose crowning sin is their rejection of Him.

V. 10.—"Of righteousness, because I go to my Father." The world had condemned Jesus on the plea of righteousness, and in the name of religion. The ascension of Jesus and the sending of the Spirit was to be the disproof of this claim, and would convince the world of the righteousness of Jesus, and of its own unrighteousness at the same time.

V. 11.—"Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged." The Prince of this world holds sway over the people of the world. His approval is sought, and His favor esteemed so far as men yield to the spirit of this world. But the work of the Spirit will prove more and more that he is a vanquished prince, and that those who seek his favor or yield to his influences will soon find themselves on the losing side.

III. THE SPIRIT AND THE DISCIPLES.—VS. 12-20.

I. AS TEACHER.—VS. 12-15.

V. 12.—"I have many things to say unto you." The revelation which Jesus came to make of His Father was far from being complete at the time of His death. The disciples were to find themselves learners at the feet of Jesus throughout the entire course of their lives. "Ye cannot bear them now." We know how they had misapprehended many things that Jesus had told them already, and now their hearts were so filled with sorrow that they could not consider the truths still to be taught. They needed the calming, uplifting power of the Spirit in order to comprehend the deep things of God.

V. 13.—"The Spirit of truth,....he will guide you into all truth." All necessary spiritual truth is meant. All that pertained to the kingdom. This promise refers not merely to the Apostolic men, but to all Christians. Our knowledge of the truth depends upon the guidance of the Spirit. It is only as we follow Him that we enter into truth or life. "He shall not speak of himself." His work is linked on to that of the Son, just as Jesus came not to do His own will but the will of Him that sent Him. "He will shew you things to come." Not only give the Spirit of Prophecy where that may be needed, but give the needed wisdom for unforeseen emergencies.

V. 14.—"He shall glorify me." The work of the Spirit is in no sense independent of that of the Son, much less can it be regarded as detracting from Him. The Spirit can only take the things of Jesus and apply them.

V. 15.—"All things that the Father hath are mine." The personal distinctions and essential oneness of the Godhead are brought out in this verse with great distinctness. The Son is one with the Father, and the Spirit is one with them both, each having a specific relation to redemption, yet each doing the work of the others.

II. AS COMFORTER—VS. 16-20.

V. 16.—"A little while and ye shall not see me." Jesus here reverts to their sorrow. He would point them to the source of comfort. "And again, a little while, and ye shall see me." There is a distinction here which the translation obscures. The first "see" refers to physical sight, the second to spiritual apprehension. They were living by sight, while Jesus was in the flesh; they were to live by faith, which is a higher life, when Jesus should be absent.

V. 17.—"What is this that he saith unto us?" This perplexity was an immediate illustration of what Jesus had said about their inability to receive His teaching. They could not solve the paradox, although they recognized the distinction between the words seeing and perceiving.

V. 19.—Jesus knew that they were desirous to ask Him. A certain awe had fallen upon the disciples, so that probable they were afraid to ask Him the meaning of His words. He, however, read their thoughts and answered their question by giving them still another enigma. He did not expect them to apprehend these things until after the coming of the Spirit.

V. 20.—"Ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice." This was to be their next experience. The Prince of this world was to gain an apparent triumph. The sheep were to be as bereft of their shepherd. The gloom and sorrow that settled upon their souls at the time of the crucifixion would be unspeakable. At the same time the world would be laughing its fiendish laugh of triumph, but of a short lived triumph. "Ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy." Beyond the Cross were the resurrection, the ascension, and the coming of the Comforter. When they should receive the promise of the Father then would all clouds be illumined with the glory of a heavenly sunrise, usbering eternal day.

LESSONS FOR TO-DAY.

1. "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"

2. Are you walking in the Spirit?

3. Are you bringing forth fruit of the Spirit?

4. Have you the witness of the Spirit?

5. Are you being taught of the Spirit?

6. Have you the comfort of the Spirit?

7. "Quench not the Spirit!"

8. "My Spirit shall not always strive with man."

Tony's Clothes.

"I CAN'T mend these any more," said grandmother, holding up a very sorry-looking pair of small trousers. "You'll have to put on your Sunday suit for every day now, Tony."

"Yes'm," answered Tony.

"And don't you slide down any more trees with rough bark."

"No'm," replied Tony.

"And you'd better go down to Sarah Jane Green's and see when she can come and make your new suit."

"Yes'm," said Tony. "I'll go now, 'fore I get my clothes dirty."

The only difference between Tony's Sunday suit and his everyday suit lay in the fact of the former being in good order.

His suits were always made by one pattern, owned by Sarah Jane Green. Tony grew so fast that Sarah Jane always had to cut her pattern larger, and sometimes she forgot to enlarge everything, so that the suit had a curious look, which, however, never troubled Tony at all.

The trousers were sure to be baggy, and the jacket rather short in the back, with sleeves so long—"to grow in," grandmother said—that they were still too long when worn out.

When the everyday suit was past all mending he took the Sunday one for every day and had a new one for Sunday.

"I'm very sorry, Tony," said Sarah Jane, when Tony reached her house, "but I've sprained my wrist and don't know when I can come.

Tony looked dismayed.

"The picnic's to be in two weeks," he said.

"Oh, I'm pretty sure to be well by that time. I'll keep it in mind, and you'll be pretty sure to see me."

Tony lived on a sheep ranch with his father and his grandmother and one or two hired men. Until about a year ago it had been twenty miles to a post-office, and neighbors had been so scarce that weeks would sometimes pass without their seeing one.

But now a railroad came within four miles of them, and a little bit of a village was springing up at the station, so that Tony and his friends felt almost like city folks, they sometimes declared.

The picnic Tony spoke of was for the Sunday-school at the station, which Tony attended, thinking nothing of a four-mile walk.

He had never heard of one before, but grandmother knew all about picnics and talked a great deal concerning them, leaving his mind in an excited state looking forward to wonders and delights to come, in which a railroad ride and plenty of good things to eat stood out from all the rest.

A week passed, and Sarah Jane did not come. Tony took to giving a peep at the brown cloth, which lay ready for his suit, and then climbing to the top of the tallest hitching-post outside the door, to watch anxiously for her stout figure and jolly round face.

One day he saw a wagon in the far distance and his heart gave a great bound, for there certainly was a woman in it.

But as it drew near his joy turned to curiosity. The face and form of the stranger were not a bit like those of Sarah Jane, but who could it be.

"Is this Tony?" she asked.

"Yes'm," said Tony.

"I am your Aunt Eleanor," she said. "I have come a long way to see you."

Aunt Eleanor was his mother's sister. Tony found it so pleasant to be near her that he spent several hours in the house, almost forgetting his suit.

She told him all about her boys and asked all about what he had learned, seeming surprised to hear that he had read the "Pilgrim's Progress," the "Life of Washington," and half of "Jay's Lectures," which were the only books on the ranch.

"But I don't like 'Jay's Lectures' very well," he admitted to her, at which she laughed and told him to go out and play.

Then Tony climbed on the post again and watched so long and anxiously for Sarah Jane that Aunt Eleanor came out and asked him about it. And Tony found courage to tell her all his fears about his new suit.

The days went by, and still no Sarah Jane. Tony took again the long walk to see her, and learned that she had gone over to her sister's, a long way off, but had left word that she would come to Tony's grandmother's the first day that she was able to sew.

Tony's heart sank lower every day, but he remembered that Sarah Jane could do wonders in the way of haste with her needle, and so did not quite despair.

But the day before the picnic came, and grandmother began baking all sorts of nice things. Tony took a last look at the brown cloth, and then went to her with a swelling heart.

"You couldn't do anything with my old clothes, could you, grandmother?" he said, turning around and around before her.

There were woful spots on the jacket, but the holes in the sleeves were small, and Tony was thinking hopefully of a bottle of benzine, which had a very bad smell, and a wonderful power of sending away the spots on a boy's jacket.

But the trousers were past all help—Tony had taken too many climbs on the hitching-post—and grandmother shook her head and went on with her baking. Aunt Eleanor did not take much notice. So fine a lady as she could not be expected to concern herself about little boys' old clothes.

Tony took a last look down the road, and and then went out to pour his griefs, as he always did, into the ears of his pet sheep.

"Oh, Chippy!" he cried, flinging his arms around her neck with a burst of tears, "the picnic's to morrow, and my clothes ain't made. I can't go, and grandmother don't seem to care very much. I want to go, oh! oh! and my trousers are all tore. Oh, Chippy, I wish I had nice soft wool like yours, that Sarah Jane didn't have to make."

He staid with his fleecy friend until it was dusky enough to hide his tear-stained face, then ate his bowl of bread and milk and went to bed.

"Here, Tony!" "Quick, Tony!" "Hand that, Tony!" "Carry this, Tony!" Such a calling him here and there, and everywhere Tony had never heard, as grandmother and Aunt Eleanor filled baskets and packed them in the spring wagon. And no one could have guessed how heavy his heart was as his feet flew nimbly in answer to each demand.

"Now run and dress yourself, dear," said grandmother.

Tony looked at her in amazement, with a tear gathering in each eye.

"Why, grandmother, don't you know my clothes ain't made?"

"Tony!" called Aunt Eleanor. "Wash yourself and come up here. You will be late."

Late for what? It could not be that any one expected him to go in his old clothes?

But Tony always obeyed, and he obeyed now and ran upstairs.

What was that which Aunt Eleanor held up before him? Just out of the sunshine which played around the wash-bench under the spout, the room seemed almost dark, and it looked as if a boy might be standing there; but the boy had neither head nor feet.

"Quick!" said Aunt Eleanor, unbuttoning his old jacket.

And in ten minutes he stood before her, arrayed in a new suit of soft, light-gray cloth, with such buttons and pockets as Tony had never dreamed of. And when he took a peep in the glass it looked like some other boy.

"Where did they come from?" he managed to ask.

"I wrote a letter, the day I came, to the place where I buy my boy's clothes," said Aunt Eleanor. "They came yesterday, and your father brought them when he went to the station. You look just like my Johnny," she said, kissing him, as she looked at him with very tender eyes; "and after a while you shall come and see us all."

Sarah Jane Green took the pattern of the new suit, and before long nearly every boy within miles around had one cut like it, which Sarah Jane believed looked so exactly like the ready-made one that they could not be told apart. But no one else thought so.

When Tony grew older he went to Aunt Eleanor's to go to school. He has had a great many new ready-made clothes since, but never a suit which could compare with the one which came to him on the morning of the picnic.—Golden Days.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate
In Constipation.
Dr. J. N. ROBINSON, Medina, O., says: "In cases of indigestion, constipation and nervous prostration, its results are happy."

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Combines, in a manner peculiar to itself, the best blood-purifying and strengthening remedies of the vegetable kingdom. You will find this wonderful remedy effective where other medicines have failed. Try it now. It will purify your blood, regulate the digestion, and give new life and vigor to the entire body.
"Hood's Sarsaparilla did me great good. I was tired out from overwork, and it toned me up." MRS. G. E. SIMMONS, Cohoes, N. Y.
"I suffered three years from blood poison. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and think I am cured." MRS. M. J. DAVIS, Brockport, N. Y.
Purifies the Blood
Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarities: 1st, the combination of remedial agents; 2d, the proportion; 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, effecting cures hitherto unknown. Send for book containing additional evidence.
"Hood's Sarsaparilla tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over." J. P. THOMPSON, Register of Deeds, Lowell, Mass.
"Hood's Sarsaparilla beats all others, and is worth its weight in gold." I. BARRINGTON, 130 Bank Street, New York City.
Hood's Sarsaparilla
Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.
100 Doses One Dollar.

POPULAR LECTURES.
SUBJECTS
1.—The Romance of the Revolution.
2.—An Evening with Longfellow
3.—The Tudors
4.—Monologue—National Poems and Events
Address MRS. E. T. BARRETT,
SING SING, N. Y

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE,
Its merits as a WASH BLUE have been fully tested and endorsed by thousands of housekeepers. Your grocer ought to have it on sale. Ask him for it. A. S. WILTBERGER, Prop., 239 N. Second St., Phil., Pa.

7% FARM LOANS!
SECURED BY
FIRST MORTGAGES ON IMPROVED FARMS.
TWELVE YEARS in the business. Over $1,000,000 invested during this time. References: My old customers in all sections of the United States. If you have money in savings bank or lying idle, send to me for circular containing full information, letters from my old customers, references, a NEW MAP OF DAKOTA, all sent free on application. Address
E. P. GATES,
PRESIDENT MERCHANTS' BANK,
Grand Forks, Dakota.

Lactated Food
The Most Successful PREPARED FOOD
FOR NEW-BORN INFANTS.
It may be used with confidence when the mother is unable, wholly or in part, to nurse the child, as safe substitute for mother's milk.
No other food answers so perfectly in such cases. It causes no disturbance of digestion, and will be relished by the child.
In CHOLERA INFANTUM,
This predigested and easily assimilated Food will surely prevent fatal results.
FOR INVALIDS, it is a Perfect Nutrient in either Chronic or Acute Cases.
Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value It will be retained when even lime water and milk is rejected by the stomach. In dyspepsia, and in all wasting diseases it has proved the most nutritious and palatable, and at the same time the most economical of Foods. There can be made for an infant
150 MEALS for $1.00.
Sold by Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.00.
A valuable pamphlet on "The Nutrition of Infants and Invalids," free on application.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

6%, 7%, 8%
The American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, incorporated, with a paid-up capital of $500,000, with branches at Huron and Mitchell, Dakota, offer First Mortgage Farm Loans in Iowa, Minn., Dakota, and Neb., both Principal and Interest Guaranteed. Also 6 per cent. Debenture Bonds (obligations of the Company), running 10 years, secured by Mortgage loans deposited with the Mercantile Trust Co., N. Y. It also issues Demand Certificate of Deposit at 5 per cent. interest. Write for pamphlet and references.
Home Office, Emmetsburg, Iowa.
E. S. Ormsby, Pres., 150 Nassau St., N. Y.

INVEST Through the Sound and Reliable
WESTERN FARM MORTGAGE CO.
F. M. PERKINS, President. LAWRENCE, KAN. L. H. PERKINS, Secretary.
CAPITAL AND SURPLIS, $250,000.
Carefully selected 1st Mortgage Farm Loans payable in N. Y. Unrivalled facilities. Absolute satisfaction. 10 years' experience. No losses. Refer to 3d Nat'l Bank, N. Y. City; Nat'l Bank, Lawrence, Kan.; and Hundreds of Investors. Send for pamphlet, forms and full information. Branch Offices in N. Y. City, Albany & Phila. N. Y. Office, 137 B'way, C. C. Hine & Son, Agts.

BELLS.
McShane Bell Foundry
Finest Grade of Bells,
CHIMES AND PEALS for CHURCHES, &c.
Send for Price and Catalogue. Address
H. McSHANE & CO.,
Mention this paper. Baltimore, Md.
BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Fire Alarms, Farms, etc. FULLY WARRANTED. Catalogue sent Free.
VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.
MENEELY & COMPANY
West Troy, N. Y. Bells,
For Churches, Schools, etc., also Chimes and Peals. For more than half a century noted for superiority over all others

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S
STEEL PENS
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

GEO. MATHER'S SONS,
PRINTING INK
Manufacturers. Superior Black and Colored Ink Lithographic and Plate Ink. Varnishes, etc. 60 John street, New York.
The Intellgencer is printed with our ink.

PISO'S CURE FOR
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION
25 CTS. 25 CTS.

CURE FOR THE DEAF
PECK'S PATENT IMPROVED CUSHIONED EAR DRUMS Perfectly Restore the Hearing, and perform the work of the natural drum. Invisible, comfortable and always in position. All conversation and even whispers heard distinctly. Send for illustrated book with testimonials, FREE. Address or call on F. HISCOX, 853 Broadway, New York. Mention this paper.

I CURE FITS!
When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS, a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.
Address, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York

R. H. MACY & CO.,

14TH STREET, SIXTH AVE., AND 13TH STREET NEW YORK.

GRAND CENTRAL FANCY AND DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT.

We Call Attention to Our Large and Varied Stock Goods Adapted to the Summer Season.

Our Customer Residing in the

COUNTRY,

Or Those Visiting the

MOUNTAINS

OR

SEA-SHORE,

Can Rely on Having Their

ORDERS BY MAIL

Carefully Executed and Promptly Shipp'd.

OUR PRICES

Are Always the Lowest.

R. H. MACY & CO.

HIGH NOVELTIES ON EXHIBITION.

JAMES MCREERY & CO. ARE NOW EXHIBITING THEIR RICHEST AND MOST SELECT STYLES OF IMPORTED NOVELTIES. AN EXAMINATION IS CORDIALLY INVITED.

James M'Creery & Co.,

Broadway and 11th Street, New York.

DURKEE'S

GAUNTLET

WARRANTED PERFECTLY PURE TRADE MARK GAUNTLET E.R. DURKEE & CO'S

BRAND

SALAD DRESSING

UNEQUALLED FOR EXCELLENCE.

Without a rival as a dressing for all Salads, and as a sauce for Cold Meats, etc. It is prepared with extreme care; all its ingredients are of the purest and best; and will keep good for years.

BEWARE OF ALL IMITATIONS.

Ah! says the Old School Painter, after an attack of painter's colic, "I am almost turned wrong side out." There's old Anthony Dunbeg, he belongs to the Good Old White Lead school, too; died of paralysis last week. I am afraid we'll have to go over to that F. J. Nash M'f'g Co.'s, $1.35 per gallon, Ready Mixed paint. They say that's got lead in, too, but somehow I never felt better in my life than last month, when I worked with it. A shower come up while I was at it, but it didn't seem to wash off. Oh! oh! oh! my! well if I ever get out of this alive, I'll use The Nash M'f'g. Co.'s $1.35 per gallon Paint. The F. J. Nash M'f'g. Co., Nyack, Rockland Co., New York. Interesting Circulars Free. If your dealer refuses you these goods apply to us direct.

8 Per Cent. Choice Farm Loans Negotiated by the Potter County Bank, Gettysburg, Dakota.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 Days. No Pay until Cured. J. L. STEPHENS, M. D., Lebanon, Ohio.

EDUCATIONAL.

Somerville Seminary, Somerville, N. J.

A Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies and Children re-opens September 15th. Thorough instruction in English branches, Music, Languages and Painting. MISSES PARSONS & LE FEVRE.

EDUCATIONAL.

BEST TEACHERS AMERICAN and FOREIGN, promptly provided for Families, Schools, Colleges Skilled Teachers supplied with Positions. Circulars of Good Schools free to Parents. School Property rented and sold. School and Kindergarten Material, etc. J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO., AMERICAN SCHOOL INSTITU . 7 East 14th St., N. Y

BRIGHTON HEIGHTS SEMINARY. For Young Ladies, New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y. GEO. W. COOK, Ph.D., Principal.

OSSINING INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG SING SING, N.Y. Ladies & Misses. High Grounds. Best advantages in Music, Art, Elocution. English and Modern Languages. Full or partial courses. 30 miles from N. Y. City. Charges moderate Opens Sept. 21st. REV. C. D. RICE, Principal.

RUTGERS COLLEGE
Grammar School,

New Brunswick, N. J.

PREPARES BOYS AND YOUNG MEN FOR COLLEGE OR BUSINESS.

Additional buildings were last year required, erected and filled.

This year additional teachers engaged to meet the increased number of students.

Rooms carpeted and cared for. Some arranged in suites—a study-room 14x14 with two single sleeping-rooms adjoining. A few single rooms to be had if desired.

Last year at the opening of the school every room was engaged, and many applicants were refused admission because of the lack of room. This year rooms will be reserved as applied for.

For catalogues and further information address E. T. TOMLINSON, HEADMASTER

The Misses Anable's
English, French and German Boarding and Day-School

WILL REOPEN SEPTEMBER 22D.

40 BAYARD ST., New Brunswick, N. J.

Elmira College. FOR WOMEN.

Under Care of Synod of New York.

Course of study equal to that of the best Colleges; also Elective and Special Courses. Best advantages in Music and Art. Building with best modern improvements; heated by steam, and furnished with elevator. Astronomical Observatory --Museum and Art Gallery. Terms moderate. Address REV. A. W. COWLES, D.D., Pres't, Elmira, N. Y.

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE, BOSTON UNIVERSITY, Opens Oct. 14, '86.

Fourteenth Year. Furnishes superior facilities for thorough scientific and practical instruction in three and four years' courses. Entrance examinations, Oct, 11, 12 and 13. Send for announcements to I. T. TALBOT, M.D., Dean.

SIGLAR'S PREPARATORY SCHOOL, NEWBURG-ON-HUDSON, N. Y., Gives the best preparation for the best colleges. Two Yale valedictorians in three years. Entrance examinations held at the school by member of Yale Faculty. Daily gymnastics under teacher compulsory. For circulars, etc., address HENRY W. SIGLAR, M.A., (Yale) Prin.

EDUCATIONAL.

RUTGERS COLLEGE

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

1 hour from New York on the Penna. R. R.

Year begins (examinations for admission) Sept 2, 1886.

SLOAN PRIZES FOR BEST (CLASSICAL) ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS; 1st, $400 ($100 CASH); 2d, $350 ($50 CASH).

Sixteen Professors; no Tutors. Classical course full and thorough. Increased facilities for the study of French and German, with a view to practical use. Laboratory work for all students in Chemistry. Well-equipped Astronomical Observatory for students' use. Full Geological Cabinet. 50,000 well chosen books in Libraries.

Ample provision for Electives, Junior and Senior years, in Natural Science, History, etc

The SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT is the New Jersey State College. Constant field-practice in Surveying. Full course in Draughting.

THE AIM OF THE COLLEGE—THOROUGHNESS IN ALL WORK.

Best facilities and personal attention for every student. For full information, address Librarian Rutgers College.

Merrill Edwards Gates, Ph.D., LL.D., Pres't

Rutgers Female College,

58 West 55th street, commences 49th year September 22d. Rev. John Hall, D.D., President of the Board of Trustees. Boarding and Kindergarten Departments Address the College.

ALEXANDER INSTITUTE White Plains, N.Y. 23 miles from New York City by rail. Fits boys for college or business pursuits. 30 to 40 pupils 5 Teachers. Board and Tuition per annum $400. For circulars, apply to the Principal, O. R. WILLIS, Ph.D.

HEMPSTEAD INSTITUTE. Hempstead, Long Island, N. Y. A Thorough English Boarding School for Boys. Primary, Intermediate, Higher English and Commercial Courses. Twenty-seventh year begins September 15. Catalogues sent on Application.

Riverview Academy,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Prepares for College and the Government Academies, for Business and Social Relations. Thorough Military Instruction. Springfield Cadet Rifles. BISBEE & AMEN, Principals.

38TH YEAR. LYNDON HALL, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—A High-Class School for Young Ladies. Music, Drawing, Painting, Languages, and English branches thoroughly taught, with full regard to the equally important matters of home care and training. Address SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Principal.

YOUNG LADIES SEMINARY, 43d YEAR Begins Sept. 22. Address F. CHANDLER, D. D., Prest. Freehold, N. J.

Deckertown, Sussex Co., N.J. A SELECT ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes School year begins September 8. For Circular, address, W. H. SEELEY, A.M., Prin.

Auburn Theological Seminary.

The term opens September 1st, 1886. For catalogue address WILLIS J. BEECHER, Clerk of Faculty, Auburn, N. Y.

Betts' Academy, Stamford, Conn. A Boys' Boarding School of the highest grade. 49th year begins Sept. 15th WM. J. BETTS, M.A., (Yale), Principal.

RYE SEMINARY, Rye, NEW YORK. For particulars address Mrs. S. J. LIFE.

PEEKSKILL (N. Y.) MILITARY Academy.

ATLANTIC
Mutual Insurance Co.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 51 WALL STREET

ORGANIZED 1842.

Insures against Marine and Inland Navigation Risks.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest in accordance with its Charter.

J. D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice President
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice Pres't.
A. A. RAVEN 3d Vice Pres't.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

CONTINENTAL
Insurance Co.

Continental Buildings
100 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Cor. COURT and MONTAGUE STS., BROOKLYN

106 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, E.D.

Insures against loss by Fire at reasonable rates.

Reserve for re-insurance	$2,265,427 8
of which for Inland Marine, $55,969 52
Reserve ample for all other claims	553,171 2.
Capital paid in cash	1, 00,000 00
Net surplus	1,35-,879 85
Total Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886.	$5,177,478 99

This Company conducts its business under the restrictions of the New York Safety Fund Law. The two Safety Funds together equal $1,200,000.

H. H. LAMPORT, President.

CYRUS PECK, Secretary.

HOME
INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK.

OFFICE, No. 119 BROADWAY.

Sixty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the Condition of the Company on the 1st day of July, 1886.

CASH CAPITAL	$3,000,000 0
Reserve Premium Fund	2,938,020 0
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims	20 ,040 1
Net Surplus	1,8 9,.4: 71
Cash Assets	$7,628,401 81

SUMMARY OF ASSETS

Cash in Banks	$136,6'8 99
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on Real Estate	743,3 0 00
United States Stocks (market value)	2,9 2,697 50
Bank and Railroad Stocks and Bonds (market value)	1,733,640 00
State and City Bonds (market value)	2 6 0 00
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	180,000 00
Interest due on 1st July, 1886	10 ,394 74
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	299,646 97
Real Estate	1,364,118 61
Total	$7,628,401 81

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
D. A. HEALD, Vice-President.
J. H. WASHBURN, V. P. & Sec'y
T. B. GREENE, W. L. BIGELOW, E. G. SNOW, JR., } Ass't Sec's.

N. W. HARRIS & CO.,

115-117 Monroe St., CHICAGO.

BONDS Of Counties, Cities, &c. of high grade a specialty Send for descriptive lists.

A pamphlet containing information concerning the history of Farm Mortgages for the past twenty-five years will be sent free on application to the Equitable Mortgage Co., 208 B'way, N.Y.

---FLORIDA.---

—ACADEMY AND COLLEGE AT DeLAND, FLORIDA.—

A first-class Academy for both sexes. Five Courses—College Preparatory, Higher English, Normal, Business, Industrial Drawing. First-class Art and Music Departments. Fine New Dormitory Buildings, enabling us to furnish board and tuition at reasonable rates. The purpose of this Institution is to give, in the delightful climate of FLORIDA, as thorough and liberal an education as can be secured in the best New England schools. DeLand College will also receive students of both sexes prepared to enter the Freshman Class. Send for Catalogue to

J. F. FORBES, President, DeLand, Florida, or H. A DeLAND, Fairport, N. Y.

FLORENCE FILOSELLE

(FILLING SILK.) Manufactured expressly for fine art needle work from the best Italian Silk and dyed by the most approved methods known to ancient and modern science. This brand is noted for uniformity in the size of thread, and for the correct shading of colors. Every skein bears the ticket with trade mark—"Florence" as shown in engraving. The color number is also placed on every ticket through the entire list of nearly 300 Shades, which is a great convenience to dealers and consumers. Trade supplied by NONOTUCK SILK CO. Sole Manufacturers, 25 Green Street, New York.

J. B. WATKINS LAND MORTGAGE CO.

16 years perfect success, 12,531 Mortgages negotiated, aggregating $8,369,200

All the Interest and Principal paid on day of maturity to amount of 5,135,820

We have decided to place ourselves on a plane above every competitor. Hereafter every mortgage that we negotiate will bear our full legal

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTEE OF BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST,

Interest 6 per cent, payable as in the past, by half yearly coupons, at the

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE IN NEW YORK.

Assets to the value of nearly a MILLION DOLLARS are pledged by our guarantee.

SEND FOR PAMPHLET CONTAINING FACTS AND FIGURES, FORMS, AND 450 TESTIMONIALS.

Our Law Department will collect Bonds and other securities in all the Western States for individuals and corporations.

Address J. B. WATKINS L. M. CO., Lawrence, Kansas,

Or HENRY DICKINSON, New York Manager, 943 Broadway.

A MILLION
BOOKS

RARE, CURIOUS, CURRENT. IN STOCK.

ALMOST GIVEN AWAY.

Libraries Supplied Cheaper than at any Book Store in the World.

LIBRARIES AND BOOKS BOUGHT.

MAMMOTH CATALOGUE FREE.

LEGGAT BROTHERS,
81 CHAMBERS STREET,
3d door West of City Hall Park. NEW YORK.

BARNES' NATIONAL INK.

RIDGE'S FOOD

Is the most reliable substitute known for mother's milk. Its superiority rests on the test of 30 years' experience throughout Great Britain and the United States. A sustaining, strengthening diet for invalids. Nutritious, easily digested and acceptable to the most delicate stomach. Four sizes, 35c. up. Send stamp for "Healthful Hints," a valuable pamphlet, to WOOLRICH & CO., Palmer, Mass.

LE PAGE'S
LIQUID GLUE

UNEQUALLED FOR CEMENTING WOOD, GLASS, CHINA, PAPER, LEATHER, &c. Awarded GOLD MEDAL, LONDON, 1883. Used by Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Co., Pullman Palace Car Co., &c. Mfd only by the RUSSIA CEMENT CO., GLOUCESTER, MASS. SOLD EVERYWHERE. Sample Tin Can by Mail, 25c.

The Christian Intelligencer.

Een-dracht maakt macht.

VOL. LVII.—No. 36. WHOLE No. 2928 | NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1886. | $2.65 A YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 48 CHURCH STREET.

EDITORS: Rev. JOHN M. FERRIS, D.D. Rev. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR: MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

THE URGENT necessities of the people of Charleston appeal irresistibly to our benevolence. A careful survey of the damage to buildings has been made by competent civil engineers, and they announce to the country that the original estimates of the ruin wrought by the earthquake were not exaggerations, but were less than the actual condition of the city warrants. The repairs to and the rebuilding of houses and public buildings they say will cost $5,000,000. Much besides that must be replaced has been destroyed. A fearful disaster has fallen upon one of the chief centres of Southern trade and life. We who have been spared the anxieties and losses of such a calamity cannot be too prompt or too generous in our gifts for the relief of those whose situation is really heartrending and discouraging in the extreme. If any of our subscribers wish to do so they can mail their gifts to this office and they will be at once paid over to the Treasurer of the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of this city.

THE INCIDENT taken from the American last week in regard to the conversion of Cuban exiles in Philadelphia by the simple reading of the Bible, and the important results, and the recital of the power of a single leaf from the Gospel of John made by a missionary lady in the Lutheran Observer, and republished on our third page this week, ought to tend to strengthen the faith and augment the zeal of Christians. Such occurrences prove that the Holy Spirit attends the truth, that God is glorifying His Word. There is great encouragement in such facts, encouragement to prayer and to constant endeavors to communicate to men a knowledge of God's revealed truth. There is instruction also. We are taught to rely more entirely and more confidently on what God has said. God's words are better than ours. Happy is the man who has learned to make a Scriptural sermon or address, one that has not too much or too little Scripture in it, that presents mutually sustaining and explaining and enforcing passages in an interesting way and in a way to be remembered. It is worth while to endeavor to learn how to do this in an address or a conversation. And an exposition of Scripture by Scripture is much more interesting to an audience than many suppose. Who that has heard one of Mr. Moody's expositions has forgotten it?

CUI BONO? What good and desirable end was attained by the processions of workingmen in the Northern cities of the country on Monday? Why a labor day? What is to be accomplished by it? As a demonstration of strength it was a failure. Twenty thousand men were in the ranks, some say fifteen thousand. Three or four times twenty thousand did not parade, were in their places in the shops, at work. No demonstration of strength is needed. Everybody is sensible of the power of the workingmen. Almost everybody has been made to feel it again and again since the first day of last March. No additional exhibition of strength was necessary. The expense, therefore, except as it gave the men a day out in the open air, was a waste of money. Probably the cost of the demonstration, including the loss of wages, was not less than three hundred thousand dollars. Many citizens will argue that if the men can afford to spend so much money for such a purpose, their condition is not one of hardship. Besides, the ranks consisted of well-fed, well-dressed men. To see the workingmen make so respectable an appearance was gratifying; but it did not convey the shadow of a notion that they were the subjects of injustice or ill-treatment.

The banners, much to the relief of many, bore no communistic legends, except one in German, but some of them upheld boycotting. Now, the workingmen may as well know that the boycott will be resisted to the end as a despotic, unjust, cruel and wicked expedient. This is not a Papal country, and Papal excommunication or a modification of it will not be tolerated. The freedom of every man to work or not to work for certain wages, and to select his employer, will be maintained. Americans are patient, because they are free; but an attempt to establish a despotism by employers or employed, if persisted in, will finally be swept away as by a whirlwind.

INDEX DEFICIT.—For as long as we can remember it has been the custom for careful reviewers of books to note the lack of an index and scourge the laches of author or publishers. There has been a general agreement that this sin of omission should be adequately punished. Some have suggested fine and imprisonment, and one truculent soul hinted at decapitation. But the New Princeton Review seems to have lighted upon the penalty which all will admit to be exactly suited to the nature of the crime. In the course of a pleasing and discriminating notice of the Life of Longfellow, the writer says, "It is a grave offense against morality, an almost unpardonable sin, to send out a book like this without a full bibliographical appendix, a table of chronology, and above all an Index worthy of the name. Some heavy penalty ought to be imposed by law upon those who sin after the similitude of this transgression. They should be compelled to spend two or three years at hard labor in a library without a catalogue, looking up references in unindexed books." Could anything be better? Surely this is a Daniel come to judgment.

LETTERS AND HOUSEWIFERY. — Dr. Johnson is reported to have said, "A man is, in general, better pleased when he has a good dinner on the table than when his wife talks Greek. My old friend Mrs. Carter could make a pudding as well as translate Epictetus from the Greek, and work a handkerchief as well as compose a poem."

We have in our own day and land a lady of fine literary attainments, the author of a dozen volumes, who is at the same time a most accomplished housekeeper, and yields to nobody in making a pudding or getting up a dinner. It is to be hoped that Wellesley and Vassar will turn out graduates who will emulate this bright ornament of the sex, and show themselves equally expert with the pen and in the household economy.

Christian Literature in Japan.

FEW facts are more significant in connection with the remarkable growth of the Church and the spread of Christianity in Japan, and probably few influences have been more directly promotive thereof, than the circulation of the Scriptures and Christian literature. The facts are not at hand that would enable us to give a complete view, but there lies before us a "Catalogue of Publications of the American Tract Society's Committee for North Japan," dated July, 1886, from which we extract the following impressive figures. The list embraces thirty-eight titles of tracts, of from one to ninety-four pages each. Of these from one to eight editions have been already published, (all but eight have passed the first edition,) and 86,528 copies were circulated in 1885.

The list of books numbers fifteen, of from 79 to 312 pages, and includes such titles as "The Story of the Gospel," "Christ the Son of God," "The Dairyman's Daughter," "Notes on the Parables," "Manual of Sacred History," by Rev. H. Stout, "The Being of God," and "The Attributes of God," by Rev. J. L. Amerman, D.D., etc.

The Union Theological School at Tokyo has issued fourteen text books, (four of them included in the Tract Society's list,) of which seven are by Dr. Amerman, four by Prof. Knox, one by Mr. McLaren, and two by Dr. Imbrie. They represent the departments of Theology, Sacred History, Ethics, Homiletics, Apologetics, and Church Government, with one Commentary, on the Acts.

For the year 1885 the American Bible Society reports a circulation of 32 939 volumes, of which 675 were Bibles and 11,406 New Testaments; the whole number making 12,657,701 pages of Scripture. There were manufactured in Japan during the same year, under the auspices of the Society, 25,408 volumes, of which 403 were Bibles and 12,051 New Testaments.

The influence of such a literature and such a circulation of the Word of God cannot be estimated. It must be a powerful factor in the great work now going on in that empire.

The Earthquake.

FOR the first time in our history an American city has been reduced to a pitiable wreck by the quaking of the earth. As strong men read the sad story their hearts tremble. A new and strange peril has come into our life, a peril beyond control, that cannot be anticipated and prepared for, that cannot be averted. It threatens the homes of the people and all the precious things gathered in them. The heart faints when it regards the possible destruction of the dear objects consecrated by the lives of those who have gone before, and of the living, of friends and kindred, of those beloved beyond expression. Fire is feared, but something can be saved even from a conflagration, and fire can be fought and conquered, but what can a man do when, without warning, in a few seconds, his beautiful home can be reduced to a heap of rubbish. As the possibility of such disaster becomes probable our hearts grow faint and sink within us. The people of the United States have read of such direful disasters in other lands and rejoiced in their own security. Now this pitiless giant moves his mighty shoulders under our everlasting hills and the solid earth is tossed to and fro, and reels and staggers, and the strong and costly and most precious structures of human hands totter and fall a heap of heartbreaking ruins.

Men inquire into causes; but what relief comes from such inquiry? The causes are beyond control, are out of sight, out of reach. An active movement of the crust of the earth, proceeding from forces far below the oldest rocks, is progressing along the coast of the Atlantic, the Geological Survey tells us. There is no comfort in such knowledge. The energy of the stars, the mighty magnetic currents of the earth, others say, have wrought this heaving of the surface from the ocean to the great lakes. Our fears are not allayed. There is no profit in such information. Ignorance is bliss.

We are living under new conditions. It is not pleasant to have such proof of it as last week supplied. We shall face the new foe bravely and hope for the best, but with the consciousness that this is the worst enemy of our peace in this life we have yet encountered. It is most trying to feel one's utter helplessness; but we shall bear it stoutly and with thankfulness for the many peaceful, bright and happy days vouchsafed to us.

Behind it all is our Father's hand. Beneath all, deeper down than all are the everlasting arms. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." Back of and controlling all other causes is the First Cause, the almighty Creator and Governor of the universe, who speaks and it is done, who commands and it stands fast. The earth may tremble, but he who has made God his trust shall not be moved.

A new meaning of many passages of Holy Writ, associated hitherto with events in distant regions, has become a part of our experience during a few days. Our trust is in God, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who so loves us that He has given His Son to die for us. Nothing can take away, nothing can touch the everlasting life received through faith in Him. What the believer knows not God knows, what he cannot anticipate God sees and provides for, what he cannot control God rules. "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God."

PAMPHLETS.—"The librarian of the University of Pennsylvania has sent out an appeal for gifts of pamphlets, speeches, sermons, reports of societies and corporations, catalogues, etc. These documents, though valueless to many individuals, may be of great use in a library which is resorted to by all classes of students. Indeed, libraries are constantly taught that the trash of one generation may be the treasure of another. Anything which is not morally bad has its uses in a great library. Beginning with the home and the private scholar, and extending through church, Sunday school, village, town, city, state, nation, there should be an effort to preserve all manner of suitable printed material for the use of later times."

These words of a sensible contemporary we are glad to repeat, and at the same time remind our readers, lay and clerical, that the College and the G. A. Sage Library at New Brunswick will gladly receive and safely preserve all printed matter that may be sent to them. We are quite sure that there is much, of no use where it is, that could be made of great service by being sent to either of these repositories.

"Old Colony" Papers.

THE NEW JERSEY MARCHES.

A Reminiscence of Editorial Days.*

III.

OUR Marches have their own flora and fauna, so to speak. I have no dire purpose of leading my readers, who have never done me any harm, upon a botanizing or zoological tour, with Gray and Agassiz in hand, and microscope at eye. Doubtless there might be many a hideously lovely bug or reptile tracked to its lair, and plants with unpronounceable names unearthed along with fever and ague. But I could not, if I would. We should get as intellectually "stuck" as we should be physically mired. We are "picturesque tourists," and care to know only such aspects of the moors as may be instantaneously photographed upon the mind in rapid transit.

It may hardly be according to Cuvier or Agassiz, but I should classify the fauna of the Jersey Marches as chiefly geese, goats, old horses, stray dogs, ragged children, tramps and mosquitoes. The principal flora appear to be salt hay, rushes, swamp flowers, stunted trees, telegraph poles, and lichenous growths of advertisement.

There are no birds, so far as I have noticed,—a fact which imparts a certain strangeness and added monotony of desolation. A single crow on a naked bough, or a flock of blackbirds in the air, or a line of swallows homeward or otherwise flying, would be a decided relief and blackly brighten up the scene. Formerly this must have been a sportsman's paradise, where he could push for days through the creeks, concealed by the tall flags and grasses, with gun and reel and long-eared dog. But the iron horse has it all his own way now, and is monarch of all he surveys. The birds have fled to their mountain, and the "floating population" of the creeks has been "fished out."

But if there are no wild geese or duck flying and screaming over the marshes, there are plenty of tame ones waddling along their margins. What is so ludicrously solemn as a flock of domestic geese en route for the nearest puddle? Their great clumsy bodies, syphon necks, spoon bills and splay feet are in striking contrast to their exquisitely soft and usually white plumage. They seem to be painfully conscious of their awkwardness, and to be making up for it by an excess of dignity and deliberation of movement. How far their irritability of temper on the land may be due to this uncomfortable sense of being in a false position, is worth while for heaven-born charity to take into the account.

But let them once slip heavily into the water, and straightway we have the very poetry of motion, the synonym of all that is graceful in form and serene in temper. No cork could be lighter, no mood more amiable, no bearing more queenly. Interpose in their path, and instead of the outspread wing, the tip-toe scamper (as of some stout woman holding up her skirts at the sight of a toad), or else the unfolded neck and quivering tongue and hissing and screaming assault, they will scarcely deign to notice your existence as they gracefully circumnavigate you and glide contemptuously by. All of which should impress even these ragged urchins, who mingle with them on such familiar terms, with the sad consequences of being "out of one's element" in life, and the extreme difficulty of playing the rôle of an amphibian.

But woe to the youngster who shall ignore the dignity and militancy of anserine maternity! Mother Goose shall loom up before him in a new and tremendous aspect. Those little dirty-yellow puff balls have evolved in her gentle breast a new type of goosehood. She is a Nemesis, a Fury, a feathered Amazon. And more than once has it devolved upon us to rescue some small frocked creature from her smiting beak and wing, or ourselves to retreat, with what saving of dignity we could, from her determination to test the fabric of our summer trousers. She may be a goose, but she is a mother. She makes no boast of brains, but she has a heart as big as her liver; and it is in the right place. And she means that you shall keep in your right place, which is not in the path of her precious goslings. And Father Goose is the same, only more so. What is sauce in the goose is sauce in the gander.

Nowhere can that interesting animal, the goat, be studied to more advantage than on the Jersey Marches,—that is to say, on those peninsular and island portions which are habitable. For your American goat is a strictly domestic animal. He is particular about his associations. He does not demand the exclusion of geese, and I recently saw a dusty little donkey admitted within the tropic of Capricornus. But his true place is in the shanties, and as the yoke-fellow, of man. Science tells us that he belongs to the same epoch as man. He starts neck and neck in the evolutionary development of species, and is our "esteemed contemporary."

Science, moreover, conjectures, that "the domestication of the goat formed probably the first step in man's progress towards civilization." I can readily understand it, as I note the extremely "first steps" towards civilization which characterize the dwellers on these desolate tracts, as also on the outskirts and vacant lots of all our cities. The way upward is slow and rough for these poor human beings, but Billy and Nanny will stand by them and, as it were, give them a helping toss on their strong horns. They ask but little; they give much. They can make a rich living where even the rag-picker, the ash-man and the swill-boy would starve. In fact, they are, so to say, on their native soil where the human eye searches in vain for any green thing. Their frugal wants are apparently supplied by a few empty cans and beer-bottles, and the privilege of foraging in search of an occasional play bill by way of dessert. In return for which Nanny will deliver her daily quart of milk at the door without requiring tickets, and Billy will patiently ride the children around on their rickety wagon, and the kids will be always ready for a scamper or a set-to with them. We can, I say, readily calculate how much the goat may have had to do with the early survival and development of man, and may see in him a sort of providence. Great Pan himself was half a goat. (An infamous punster at our side, in view of the habit of the goat to haunt the spots which have become the receptacles of obsolete tin-ware, together with the suspicion that he finds stealthy nutrition therefrom, here attempts in vain to muddy the clear current of our thought by an unhallowed emphasis upon the word pan, which we scorn to admit to our columns.)

The domestic goat is the decayed gentleman among animals. He feels himself the boon companion of the human species, and he will not under any stress of circumstances come down to the level of the lower brutes. He will sooner cling to the outskirts of "society," and constitute himself a hanger on about the habitations of men, trying to make himself serviceable in any way but regular employment, and taking what he can get—kicks as well as crusts. He walks with as erect head, and plants his foot as daintily, in a tenement lot as in the Vale of Cashmere. He stands in deplorable seediness—stroking, as it were, his thin goatee—on the top of a blasted rock, or on this "blasted heath" of Jersey meadow, with a gentle dignity and reminiscence of Himalaya and Chamois days which make him the very Colonel Newcome of animals. It is this trait which doubtless accounts for his being the leading "fauna" of our Marches. He knows he will be welcome in these suburban villas, because he will give no trouble, keeps well out of the way when he is not wanted, and can make himself genteelly useful.

The secret of the prevalence of the goose and of the goat is the same. A glance at the class of dwellings found in the Marches will suffice not only to show the sublime indifference of their occupants to the decorative arts, but their complete emancipation from any of those "artificial wants" whose supply involves exertion either of mind or body. They are not at all like the lilies, except that they toil not neither do they spin—if they can help it. They are as the ravens, in expecting that somehow they will be fed. Accordingly they are nomads, and gravitate naturally to spots where there are puddles for the geese, and rocks and barrens for the goats, inasmuch as those ingenious and neighborly animals are able to take care of themselves, and of their human comrades, too. Supposing (as some would contend with no slight plausibility) that these people are not in "the first" but the last "stages of civilization," their goose-ly and goat-ly companions are an apt illustration of the survival of the fittest, and we score one for Darwin!

We are told by our friend the "scientist," that the goat has "rarely been found fossil." The time has not yet come for that, to this coeval fellower of man. But the time will come, when the paleontologist shall excitedly unearth from buried strata the vacant-lot tenant and the march-dweller of this age, and there beside him will be found the stately fossil of his faithful goat; and all around will lie the fascinating materials for studying alike the pottery, the tin-ware, and the dramatic taste and record of the time!

It requires no great disgression to speak of the Tramp. The homes we have been describing are to dwellings what he is to humanity,—accidents of place, found there because, like stones at the foot of a hill or on the bank of a stream, they have rolled or been washed there. The Marches would naturally be the place to look for the tramp, to whom life is a perpetual transit,—even if it were not a necessity for him to cross these tracts in order to get on most of the high-roads Southward or Westward.

The long monotony of the roads, with their wide unvarying expanses on either hand, and the far-awayness of any objective point, must appeal with a soothing congeniality to the trampish soul. Here Nature seems to have suppressed all incident, and retained only those features which make for languor and inertia. No lotus flower blooms beside the lazy creeks, but the sluggish ooze itself is suggestive and inspiringly uninspiring. The bull-frog drops heavily into the marsh at his approach, with a grunt as if he only toppled over because too indolent to cling to the bank any longer. The water-snake wriggles noiselessly across the path. The breeze plays idly among reeds and flags, the most useless of the vegetable kingdom. The whole region about him is one which has for ages and generations defied all attempts of man to make it available for productive purposes. Even the whirling trains on their high embankments, and the flying steps of the telegraph above him, only add to the delicious sense or being left behind, which constitutes the essence of the tramp nature. As he slouches along, hugging himself with the thought of his loneliness and utter blankness of existence, he is as much at home (if it were not a paradox to use that word in reference to the species) as the melancholy Jaques in Arden Wood, or Caliban on Prospero's Isle. F. N. ZABRISKIE.

* In going to and from Montclair during my three years of editorship of the INTELLIGENCER I used to amuse myself with taking notes of the sights and scenes on the route, a portion of which are written out in these papers.

The Torn Bible.

UPON the open, airy veranda of an Indian bungalow in the early morning, is sitting a missionary's wife with her two children. The elder child is a bright boy of five, the other a gentle little maiden who has not yet seen the second anniversary of her birthday. The mother is just now busy reading from a Telugu Bible, while every now and then she consults her English version, which she has also at hand, not feeling satisfied with her own interpretation of the Telugu, which is yet almost a new tongue to her. Presently some duty calls her within, and not having finished her daily portion, she lays both books upon a low teapoy by her side and passes into the house.

Scarcely has she entered the open door, when Nita is seized by a desire to know what has been interesting mamma all this time, while she and Bertie have been quietly playing, and whether there are pretty pictures in mamma's books. So grasping the books in her soft dimpled hands, the baby sits down upon the veranda floor, and, opening one of them, begins turning the leaves to find the pictures. In her pretty eagerness she does not turn the leaves as gently as she should, and soon a loosened leaf, falling from between the fairy fingers, is caught up by the breeze and carried away, just as mamma's returning footsteps are heard.

"Oh, mamma," cries Bertie, "see, Nita has torn your book."

"Why Nita, you naughty, naughty child," hastily and rather sharply speaks the usually gentle mother, "mamma shall surely have to—" But catching sight of the frightened look and tear-filled eyes of her baby, the mother catches back the remainder of the hasty words she would have uttered, and her face flushes, her heart misgives her, as she recalls the almost angry feelings with which her breast was filled as she began to chide the little Nita. Stooping, she kissed the quivering rosebud mouth, saying in a changed and very gentle voice, "Mamma's little Nita didn't know, did she? But darling must not touch mamma's books without leave."

Turning to a lady acquaintance who had followed her out upon the veranda, she said, in an apologetic tone, with flushing face and filling eyes, "I am very sorry that I was so hasty and so nearly angry; but if an excuse may be offered, it is always annoying to have one's books injured, and it has always seemed to me almost, if not quite, a sin to tear a Bible."

"Well," said the lady with a light laugh, "this is certainly 'much ado about nothing.' What are a few hasty words; and to such a baby, too. I really believe there are tears in your eyes, and that you are ready to apologize to that child for having hurt her feelings, instead of slapping her fingers for meddling with and tearing your book, as almost any mother might do under the circumstances. Do you suppose that little thing will remember an hour after this that you have been angry with her at all?"

"It may be not," the mother replied, "but I shall remember it, and there is another in whose pure sight every angry thought, every hasty word, every wound-bearing glance, is hateful. Will He not remember it, think you?"

"Oh, forbear; if you are going to preach, I shall retire precipitately," replied the careless friend, and immediately withdrew. But as her seat was by an open window, she was still within sound of the mother's and children's voices.

Bertie, who had been standing thoughtfully by, now spoke:

"Mamma, do you think God is very angry with little sister for tearing a leaf from His Holy Word?"

"No, my son, I cannot think that He is."

"Well, I am glad, for I surely thought that God must be very angry when you spoke so to Nita, and the tears stood in your eyes." And he gave a sigh of relief.

"Come, dear, we will see; may be mamma can fasten the leaf, and then the book will be quite good again."

"Oh, mamma, the leaf has blown quite away; I tried to catch it, but the wind took it right over the compound wall, and you know you have told me ever so many times that I should never go beyond the gate."

"Yes, my dear boy, and I am glad that you have remembered to obey so well. But what leaf has been taken away? We will see. Ah, here is the place, I see; it is the third chapter of the Gospel of John, with a few verses of the latter part of the second chapter. There is the whole Gospel truth on that leaf that is blown, no one knows whither, and who knows, it may fall into the hands of some one who can read Telugu, and be a blessing to him," she says musingly, half forgetful of Bertie, who is stand ing quietly by.

The lady, who was still sitting within by the window, heard every word spoken by the mother and son, and with a half-dissatisfied sigh, said to herself, "Mrs. E—— is the queerest person I ever saw. Now there that midget Nita has already forgotten her griefs and is playing with her dolls, while her mother is still fretting over those few light words, and speaking about that leaf as though it were a precious jewel or a purse of gold that had been lost. Heigho, I believe I'll get my Bible, if I can find it anywhere, and see what there is that is so wonderful in the third chapter of John that may prove such a blessing to him that reads." And rising, she went slowly in search of her neglected Bible. Let us hope that she found it; that she read the chapter referred to, not only once and carelessly, but often and thoughtfully, until she found the jewel which she knew not of, as possessing the Pearl of Great Price.

We will now follow the leaf as the wind carried it away. Tossed over the compound wall, it went whirling down the road, attracting the attention of a group of naked Hindu children who were playing in the sand by the roadside.

"We will catch it," they cried; and scampering away, laughing and screaming, the largest of the group was just about to seize it, when, whiff! came the wind and, catching the fluttering leaf, carried it high out of the child's reach and away over the low roofs of the native houses, until it fell ignominiously upon a heap of rubbish in an adjacent alley. A poor widow, who was carefully searching for any and everything of a combustible nature by which to make a fire to cook the family's daily rice, now saw the luckless leaf, and was just about to gather it into her basket when again a puff of wind took it up, and this time, as though with more care, it gently fell at the feet of a young Hindu student who, seeing that it was in his own language, picked it up and began to read. At first the words seemed to have but little or no meaning to him, for his thoughts had been somewhat disturbed; but reaching the words, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," his attention was riveted. He read it again and again.

"Oh, how beautiful!" he cried. "This must be a part of the Englishman s Sacred Book. This must be a leaf from the Christian's Bible." And although fascinated, he almost trembled with fear lest some of his bigoted heathen relatives should see him so eagerly perusing this bit of God s Word. Hastily thrusting it between the leaves of his book, he went on to school, for he was studying Sanscrit, with the hope of becoming a priest. Try as he might to stifle them, all through the day those beautiful words kept ringing in his ears. Day after day he read the words of the whole chapter, but none so impressed him as these two verses. One evening as he was about to take his meal, his young wife, coming into the room bearing two platters with his rice and curry, was about to withdraw that her lord might partake of the food which she had placed before him, when she heard him softly repeating these words. She looked up startled, for they were familiar to her, having often heard them from the missionary lady when she was a little girl and attended the mission school; and quickly there flashed through her mind another verse which had always been a favorite one of hers. And in a clear, brave voice she repeated, "We love him because he first loved us."

It was now the husband's turn to be startled. "Where did you learn that?" he asked.

"I learned what you repeated, what I have just said, and many others, at the mission school," replied she, timidly.

"They seem very good," he added, "and some day you may tell me more."

After this he often had her repeat verses to him that she had learned several years ago in the school, and which she always had loved to remember but feared to repeat, lest some of the family should overhear her. Now she felt glad that her young husband had learned and loved some of the sweet verses; but, although she repeated many, none ever seemed quite so beautiful to him as those he had first learned from his treasured leaf.

Soon after this he told his wife that he meant to serve the Christian's God—a God who loved those who served Him, instead of hating and visiting with all manner of pestilence and disease those who bowed down to Him, as the gods he had been taught to serve were said to do; and requiring all manner of horrid rites and ceremonies to allay their wrath and stay the hand of destruction—those hideous objects having four hands and one eye, and features and forms writhed and tortured into all sorts of disgusting shapes and expressions, so well described by the Psalmist. He would no longer be a slave to those practices and superstitions, but was now one who was free indeed, having been made free through the truth. It was not until he had seen and talked with the good missionary that his old mother, who was the only other member of his direct household, was told of his determination to become a Christian, and of his wife s hope and desire to be baptized with him. Her grief, rage and terror knew no bounds. She covered her head with dust, tore her hair, and fairly gnashed her teeth in her wrath. Changing her tactics, she fell at his feet, clasping his knees with her withered arms, and besought him not to forsake her in her old age.

"Oh, my son, my son, the hope of my life, the stay of my old age, why will you leave me destitute and a beggar, dependent upon strangers and despised by friends and relatives, as one whom the gods have chosen to afflict?"

"But, mother, I shall not forsake you; I shall be very glad to give you a home with me always."

"Think you that I at my age will break my caste by living in an outcast's home! If you become a Christian, you are no better than a Pariah! No, you are no longer my son! I have no child. In my last days I am left desolate."

But failing to change Veriah's purpose of becoming a Christian, alike by her threats of the vengeance of the gods, or her own suicide, she left his home and became a street mendicant, while he, after receiving Christian instruction, became a mission worker, and in his zeal to carry to his own benighted and enslaved people the glorious Gospel of peace and good-will, of love and forgiveness, in whose possession he found so much happiness, and lost that terrible fear of death which oppressed him like a horrible nightmare whenever India s dread evil, cholera, stalked abroad, and which showed him the first possibility of a happy home and loving family here upon earth, and a mansion prepared for him and his beyond the grave, within the hallowed presence of an ever-loving Father, Veriah became a wonderful aid to the missionaries. Through his earnest efforts and the more retiring but devoted love and fellowship of his gentle wife, so many souls became "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ," that it seemed as if, for every word of prayer offered by the penitent mother, and every tear shed over her harshness to the little Nita and her own impatience, a new soul was gathered into the kingdom of God.

But death had spread his dark wings over the home of Rev. E., and little Nita has found a home among the angels. The sorrowful mother still keeps her torn Bible, and in place of the lost leaf there now lies a soft, bright curl; and often, as the mother looks upon this tress that once adorned the head of her darling child, the tears start afresh and a prayer falls from her lips that the missing leaf may have been a message of life to some benighted soul. Can anyone measure the influence of that mother's tears and prayers? Does it not seem as though God heard and regarded her supplications? That influence is still going on. Even Veriah's bigoted old mother has come to claim the protection of his home and his willing support, although she will never break caste by eating with him or any of his famiiy, and steadily refuses to use any of his water-jars or cooking utensils; but she has ceased to annoy him with her foolish threats and fears, and there may come a time when the truths of the religion Veriah so loves shall find a lodgment in her hardened heart.

The circles are still widening from this small pebble, and will continue to widen until they strike the shores of eternity.—Mrs. L. B. Wolf, in The Lutheran Observer.

Our Church.

We are thankful for items of Church News compactly stated; or for marked copies or clippings from local exchanges, which we would not otherwise see. To insure publication in next number, they must reach us by noon on Monday. A condensation of items is unavoidable

The Centennial of the Reformed Church of Middleburgh, N. Y.

THE Church of Middleburgh, N. Y., dates its existence from 1711, and the present church edifice has served as a beacon light of religious truth for one hundred years. On Thursday, Aug. 19 h, appropriate and interesting exercises were held in commemoration of the church's centennial. The spacious yard, the church remodelled and ornamented, and one thousand people from all parts of the coun try, united in making this a gala day.

The exercises were begun at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Rev. Dr. J. West, of Brooklyn; Rev. E Vedder, of Schoharie, and Rev. D. K. Van Doren, the church's pastor, took part in the services. The main feature of the afternoon's entertainment was the historical address delivered by Mr. Geo. L. Danforth, of Middleburgh. It consisted of a skilful epitome of not only the history of the church itself, but of the entire Schoharie Valley, and could not fail but be of exceeding interest to all who appreciate the sacrifices and sufferings through which the forefathers of New York were borne in their search after civil liberty.

The first pastor was Rev. Hendrick Hager. He has been followed by John Frederick Hager, John Jacob Ehle, Reinhardt Erickson, George Michael Weiss, Johannes Schnyder, John Mauritinus Goet schius, Abram Rosenkrantz, Rynier Van Nest, George W. Snyder, J. L. C. Broeffel, David Devoe, John F. Schemerhorn, John Garretson, John B. Steele, John Boyd, L. Meserau, Jacob West, Isaac M. See, Edwin H. Vedder, William E Bogardus, John S. Lott, Sanford W. Roe, John S. Gardner, E N Sebring, and the present officiating pastor, David K. Van Doren.

In the afternoon a festival was given by the ladies of the church, and in the evening an organ concert; the receipts of both entertainments netting the handsome sum of $134.

During the evening's concert the audience was addressed by Rev. J. L. Pearse, of Albany Classis, Rev. H. M. Cox, of Herkimer, Rev. Dr. West, of Brooklyn, Deputy State Treasurer Elliot Danforth, and Judge Danforth, of Middleburgh.

During the past one hundred years the church has been a continually increasing and beneficial power. For many years it was the only edifice in the valley of the upper Schoharie, and the people, most of whom were either German or Holland Dutch, united in one faith and one Church. Since then, however, the High Dutch element have resolved themselves into the Lutheran Church, this separation having by no means tended to diminish the work and success of the Gospel.

The present membership of the church is 153, with a Sunday school somewhat larger. Through the generosity of friends and members of the church an elegant pipe organ has been provided at a cost of $1,025. The edifice presents so youthful an appearance that, not knowing to the contrary, it would be supposed a recent structure. A portion of the ex penses consequent upon the centennial exercises were borne by the ladies of the church, who, by various methods, have succeeded in raising the sum of $400. Their last venture was an autograph quilt contain ing over 1,200 names, which sold for $11.

Everyone was satisfied at the celebration, and all wished the church another one hundred years of life and usefulness. L.

....OUR FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The encouraging forward movement of the churches has, unfortunately, received a check. The receipts for August were $2,161.66. In August, 1885, they were $3 064 59. The four months have brought $12 269.24 to the treasury. The expenditures for the same period have been between $22,000 and $23,000; so that it has been necessary to borrow $11,000 to keep the work going. September, one of the most trying months in the year, is upon us, and calls for about $7,000. The receipts last September were but $2,700. It is easy to see how far the same amount will fall short of meeting the month's requirements. It is not pleasant to repeat the old cry of alarm, but with the old conditions recurring, there is no help for it.

All the Classes meet in September and October. Will not the brethren thus assembled give this important, pressing subject their earnest, prayerful attention? "IN I AM, ON I MUST!" wrote Bishop Selwyn, the successor of the martyred Patteson, as he recounted the difficulties of his work among the savage islanders of the Pacific. In we are and on we must. In, from love to the Lord Jesus, in obedience to His command and for the glory of His name in the salvation of the souls for whom He died. We have been led forward by Him to successes which are, in themselves, new responsibilities, and call for new measures of service, new exhibitions of zeal and sacrifice. The old will not suffice. Certainly less than the old will not. Brethren, pastors and elders, in your Classical meetings you have it in your power, by careful consideration, wise and liberal dispositions and the blessing of the Holy Spirit, to give this work a needed, powerful and lasting impulse. In we are, on we must. COR. SEC.

....POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—The following report appeared in the News Press, Poughkeepsie, of August 30th: "The Rev. Dr. Joachim Elmendorf ended yesterday his fourteenth year as pastor of the Second Reformed Church and delivered his farewell sermon last evening. Nearly all the members of the congregation and many of other church societies were in attendance. His brief sermon was based on the fifth verse in chapter second of Paul's epistle to the Colossians: 'For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, joying and beholding your order, and the steadfastness of your faith in Christ.' His remarks were appropriate and affecting to the congregation that has for so many years been con tented with the ministrations and strong social features of Dr. Elmendorf's character. The closing part of his address was mostly personal in its nature, readily recalling to his hearers' memory the most at tractive side of his work as their pastor. This was illustrated by his statement that during his fourteen years' ministration there he had registered 9,398 pastorate calls. The number received into communion was 175; received by letter from other churches, 99. He had solemnized 259 marriages and officiated at 290 funerals. A prayer by the Rev. Dr. Brayden closed the services, and then a farewell handshaking following.

"Dr. Elmendorf accepted, in June last, a call from the First Reformed Church in Harlem, one of the oldest church societies in New York city. He has conducted services there a few times, and his family have already taken up their residence there. He will go at once to assume his duties.

"A pleasant experience during his last week in Poughkeepsie was the presentation by members of his congregation here of a fine watch and chain to him and one to Mrs. Elmendorf. They quit this city with the affection of the old congregation, and the superior regard of all their acquaintances."

....ROTTERDAM, N. Y.—During the absence of the pastor, Rev. J. C. Low, on his vacation, the First Church is undergoing repairs. Some $2,000 will be expended in remodelling and adorning the building. A portion of the galleries will be removed, the pulpit placed at the rear of the church and other changes will be made. It will no doubt be a handsome and inviting audience room in which the pastor will preach his first sermon after his return.

....SCHENECTADY, N. Y.—No services have been held in either of the Reformed churches of the city during July and August, but union services have been held in the various mission chapels pertaining to these churches. The Second Church, in the meantime, is being thoroughly renovated and some changes made in the interior. The pastor, Rev. P. E. Kipp, and family are enjoying country life in a cottage at Lake George. Rev. Wm. R. Duryee, D.D., is expected to preach the opening sermon of the season in the First Church.

....FLATLANDS, N. Y.—The ladies of the Reformed Church held a fair for the benefit of the church on the 18 h and 19th of August. As the ladies had been very assiduous in their efforts, a successful result was predicted. As many of the articles were at tractive and admired, much competition was created in regard to their purchase. The attendance was large on both days of the fair, and the sales amounted to $1,400, the profits to $1 085. V. O.

....THE SCHOOL OF THE COLLEGIATE R. D. CHURCH, No. 160 West 29th street, will re-open on Tuesday next. Thorough instruction is given in all the English branches, and parents in our communion cannot do better than to place their children where they can receive the benefit of the peculiar advantages afforded by this institution.

....NEWARK, N. J.—The Daily Advertiser says: The First Reformed Church, Dr. T. C. Easton, pastor, has been in the hands of painters and decorators for the last six weeks. The entire ceiling has been repainted and frescoed. The larger panels are painted a light blue, and studded with stars in gold. Other panels are painted in blue, gold, terra cotta and light cream, giving the whole ceiling a very rich effect, the patterns of the decorations being very effective. The side walls have been repainted, and the front of the gallery has been also repainted in light pink, blue, white and gilt. The doors have been removed from the pews ,and new carpets will be put down. A new flooring of black walnut and walnut and ash has been put down in the lobbies, at the foot of the stairways leading to the gallery. Other improvements are in contemplation.

....A new organ has been placed in the church at Port Jervis, N. Y.

....Rev. P. K. Hageman, of Shawangunk, N. Y., has declined the call from the church at Fairfield, N. J.

....MADISON AVENUE CHURCH, NEW YORK.—Rev. Dr. Kittredge began his pastorate in the Reformed Church last Sabbath morning. A large congregation greeted his first sermon. The theme was the progress of Christianity. The history of the past was briefly reviewed. The present received the chief attention. The obstacles to the advance of the truth were examined and the results attained during recent years impressively recounted. A decidedly hopeful view of the present and the near future was taken. The preacher declared that his supreme desire was not to advance the interests of a denomination, but to build up the Church of God and hasten the millennium. The discourse received close attention.

Rev. John A. Van Doren.

THIS beloved brother died at his residence in East Millstone, N. J., on Tuesday, Aug. 24th. His funeral took place on the following Saturday in the Church of Middlebush, N. J., of which he had formerly been pastor. It was a general disappointment that so few of the ministerial brethren of the Classis were present at his funeral, but nearly all of them were absent on their vacations. Messrs. McWilliam and Corwin conducted the services, being the only ministers present.

Domine Van Doren had been unable to officiate in a pastoral charge for the last fourteen years, during which time he and a daughter had lived together at East Millstone. For a number of years past they had attended the Rev. Dr. Corwin's church. Mr. Van Doren was born in 1815. He was graduated from Rutgers College in 1835, and from our Seminary at New Brunswick in 1838. He settled the same year at Middlebush, where he continued until 1866. He then had an attack of congestion of the brain, from which he never fully recovered. That broke down his vigorous constitution. He was soon after called to the Reformed Church of Lodi, N. Y., and removed thither with his family; but he was never installed. His health was in such a precarious state that he deemed it unwise to settle, and he moved back to Middlebush. During the course of the same year, however, he so far improved that he became stated supply to the Church of Annandale, N. J., and continued in this position for six years, 1866-1872, when he was obliged finally to relinquish permanent work. He occasionally preached after this, but with greatly diminished energy and strength.

He was a man of large frame and great physical power. He was also, previous to the sickness before alluded to, a powerful preacher. He had been trained under those excellent Professors, Milledoler, Cannon and McClelland. He was thoroughly versed in theology, being very familiar with its definitions, its arguments and proof texts. This made him a strong Biblical sermonizer. He went very regularly over the scheme of experimental truth as found in the catechism, and those who sat under his sound and faithful preaching could not be otherwise than well grounded in the faith. He really built up the congregation of Middlebush. The first pastorate, that of Rev. Jacob I. Schultz, only lasted four years, 1834-8. Then came the pastorate of Mr. Van Doren, which lasted for twenty seven years, 1838-1866. He was very faithful as a pastor. The duty of family visitation was carefully performed. But for twenty years he was a man of broken powers, and for fourteen years was seldom heard in the pulpit.

We may wonder at the mysterious ways of Providence in laying aside His useful servants for so long a period, yet how often do such circumstances occur. They have faithfully preached the Word, and built up the flock and gathered in many souls; they are just in their prime, when suddenly they are laid aside, and, like John the Baptist in his distant prison at Machaerus, are only permitted to meditate on the great truths which they have proclaimed, and sometimes, like him, must pass through doubts and difficulties. Perhaps nothing is harder for ministers to bear than to be laid aside; to be compelled to sit in the pew, or to stay at home, when they would be so glad to spend their strength in preaching the everlasting Gospel. But it may be neces sary for them to learn to say, "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight."

There were only six in the Class of 1838, to which Brother Van Doren belonged. These were Revs. P. M. Brett, Robt. C. Clark, Orlando Harriman, John A. Van Doren, Cornelius Van Santvoord, and Cornelius Wyckoff. Of these only Dr. Van Santvoord now remains. The writer hopes that some of the contemporaries of Brother Van Doren, who knew him in his prime, will give a fuller characterization of this useful servant of the Master.

COM.

....REV. WM. SCHMITZ, of Pottersville, N. J., has resigned, having accepted a call to the Reformed church at Roxbury, N. Y.

The General Outlook.

....Sunday, August 22d, was a marked day at the Old Concord Prison, Mass. Saturday, August 21st, 1885, eleven prisoners met together by themselves and organized a stated prayer-meeting. It was the hour for free time in the yard, and these men took their recreation season to assemble for this purpose. The meeting has been sustained weekly without cessation from that day on. Sunday was the first anniversary of its formation. So far as possible ex-members abroad in the State were informed, and several of them came back to join in the exercises. There were as many as twenty-five present. An original poem was read, and a variety of meetings were held during the day, one of them being general in its character, and calling together a very large and representative audience.

....The Rochester Union thus describes a unique church building at Mumford, Monroe Co., N Y.: "I wish to call the attention of those tourists who enjoy those things that are near, and are not overlooking many of the really beautiful and interesting curiosities at home in their desire to admire that to which distance alone lends enchantment, to what I deem a great curiosity and well worthy a visit. At Mumford, stands what appears to be a small stone church of modern build, beautiful in proportions, and one would ride by it and be attracted only by its symmetrical proportions. On close examination you discover that every stone in the exterior wall is a petrifaction, and so unmistakably such that the most casual observer is perfectly satisfied that it is really what it seems to be. In one stone you will see the grain of the wood, a knot as perfect as in the limb before becoming stone; in another the imprint of leaves as perfect as could be made; again a stone will be moss perfectly solidified. I doubt if another building in the world can be found built of such material, and I only wonder that attention has not been called to this formation by some scientist.

"How this mass of material became petrified, is a question that I shall leave to others more capable to determine. The material was found in a marsh made by Allen's creek on the farm of Hon. Oliver Allen. When found, with noble generosity he proposed to give the material to his native town and assist in building from it a church unlike anything on earth. It was rather soft while under water, and could be easily cut and formed into square blocks suitable for building purposes. On being exposed to the air the mass hardened, and is now as hard as ordinary limestone, and equally as durable, and will remain as a monument to the donor of the material for ages to come, and be visited by thousands who are interested in geological formations. Why this formation should have been found in such quantity at one place only, is unknown. Many petrifications are found both in Spring and Allen's creeks, but diligent search has been made to find it in quantity sufficient to erect another building, without success. It is not probable that another will ever be erected."

...The Evangelist corrects the impression of other published accounts by the following statement in relation to the parsonage Dr. John Hall's congregation is about to build: A parsonage for the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church is to be built at 712 Fifth avenue. For about ten years Dr. John Hall, the pastor, has lived at 3 West Fifty-sixth street, and probably would have continued there but for the fact that the church edifice was in danger of receiving permanent injury from the adjoining owners. Business now makes long and daring leaps right into the best resident parts of the city, or at least threatens to do so, and it is said that a business firm recently tried to buy the lot just north of the church for the purpose, it was understood, of erecting a store there. The trustees heard of it, and knowing that such a building would shut out the light on that side of the church, decided to buy the ground themselves, and put up a new parsonage, and sell the present one. They intend to put up a structure that will shut off the light from the church windows as little as possible. This will be accomplished by leaving a space twelve feet wide between the two buildings. The parsonage will have four stories and a basement, and will be built of brown stone to correspond with the church, and also to some extent with the other houses of the block. It will occupy the full width of the lot for thirty-five feet from the street. At this point, where the large windows of the church begin, a space of twelve feet will be left between the wall of the parsonage and that of the church, making the parsonage but thirteen feet wide. The side next to the church will be built of white brick, with marble trimmings, so as to reflect the light as much as possible. The style of architecture will be substantial, but in no way extravagant or costly.

...A boycott without precedent has been instituted in Chatanooga, Tenn., against the business men in the congregation of Rev. J. C. Rankin, one of the leading ministers of that city, who has been making war on the saloons. It is the infuriated liquor-sellers who are doing it; he having personally investigated and exposed their evil deeds.

....In the State of Arkansas there are over 1,000 colored Baptist churches. A single church has sixty-four licensed preachers and another sixteen.

....The Gospel is preached in the United States by members of the Lutheran Church in thirteen tongues: English, German, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, Icelandic, Finnish, Bohemian Polish, French, Servian, Slavonian and Wendian.

....The German churches at St. Petersburg have a circulating library of 100,000 volumes

A Christian Academia.

DEAR CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER: Sunday at the School of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy was a day of real pleasure and profit. The morning broke in splendor, Nature was beautiful. The sky a canopy of serene blue; the sea far and wide a volume of peaceful waters; Sylvan Lake lay like a vast crystal beneath the sun's rays; and Sylvan Grove, where we assembled for worship and to hear the Annual Sermon to the Institute, at eleven o'clock, an enticing scene for rest and prayer, for meditation and worship. The groves are Nature's sanctuaries; the woods her temples; and I wonder not that many of the ancient faiths of the world have made the groves their Holy of Holies, and built their altars in the sweet, quiet shadows of the forest depths. There is a mystery of beauty in these scenes, which kindles thought, commands reverence, and evokes praise. This, I think, is felt to some extent by all; but most by those whose faith is calm in the Supernatural and Divine. The inspirations of the noblest forms of Christian Architecture have come from beholding Nature face to face in the glory of woods and groves, in the beauty of trees and flowers.

The congregation that assembled in Sylvan Grove was large; many of the inhabitants and visitors of Key East, Asbury Park, Ocean Grove and neighboring places, joined the members of the Institute on this occasion. The service was conducted and the sermon preached by the Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems, the President. The lessons were selected from the Act of the Apostles, and by these and the expositions of Dr. Deems in reading our thoughts were led to the subject of the discourse, "St. Paul at Athens." There are few good expositors. It is better in most cases that the Holy Scriptures should be read in reverent continuousness. Dr. Deems, however, as an expositor on this occasion was apt. He referred again and again to the Greek in reading the 17th chapter of Acts, that his hearers might the better understand the significance of some word or phrase. On reaching the word "babbler" he paused and said: "The word in the Greek is σπερμολογος. Such a person may be described in English as one who has the seeds of thought or of words, but has never taken care or trouble to develop them. The term was applied to St. Paul derisively and in insolence by the Athenians; but it better applied to anyone of their learned philosophers than to the Apostle who had by faith laid hold on the profound truths and unsearchable riches of the Gospel of Christ. The wisest in that age, or in this, in the science of this world alone, is a spermologos compared with St. Paul."

The sermon delivered by Dr. Deems was a great one; it was great by reason of its subject, the masterly treatment of it, and its true eloquence. The preacher described Athens; its philosophies, worship and art, its schools of thought, and its temples. He lifted the veil from before its ancient culture. He traced the parallelisms in the culture of the ancient world and the culture of to day. Modern Pantheism resembles ancient Stoicism; our Materialism, Epicureanism; Agnosticism has its prototype in Academicianism, which thought that nothing could be known of God. The Preacher pointed out the deficiencies and errors of all these systems of thought. He lifted up the Cross of Christ as the centre of Divine Philosophy, and Christianity as including all truths and the one religion that meets and satisfies man's aspirations. Dr. Deems reminded us that he had heard a congregation in modern Athens on Mar's Hill sing: "All hail the power of Jesus' name."

In the afternoon, at four o'clock, the Rev H. L. Hastings, of Boston, the editor of The Christian, lectured on "The Mistakes of Moses." It was in substance a very able reply to the errors Col. Robert Ingersoll has fallen into in his Mosaic studies. It was popular in character, with the view doubtless of reaching the young persons present who might be in danger of mistaking the sophistries of Ingersoll's speech for the logic of profound ideas.

On Monday Professor Borden P. Bowne, of Boston University, treated the subject of "Logic and Life." It was a restatement of Idealism, bold, fascinating, and youthful. The Professor has managed to carry into mature years an exquisite egotism which gives interest to his thought. In the afternoon there was a warm debate and a good-humored tour de force between the lecturer and Professor Wilson. These representatives of the two rival schools of Philosophy each gave a definition of the opinion held by himself; but, of course, neither convinced the other.

Other lectures were by the Rev. J. E. Rankin, D D., of Orange Valley, N. J., on "The Function of Christian Doctrine;" by the Rev. Ransom B Welch, D D., LL D., Auburn, N. Y., on "The Accord between Philosophy and Faith;" and by the Rev. James W. Lee, Atlanta, Ga., on "The Conservation of Spiritual Force." The lectures were all well conceived and in a grandly Christian temper. The first indicated Paul's position as the great Philosopher of Christianity and his writings as the Novum Organum of the Church; the second reached beneath the different dialects of knowledge and of belief to the basal principles, where they are one in love of truth and trust in the Divine; the third applied the Scientific doctrine of the Correlation of forces to Christ and Christianity, to find that it in no way accounts for them. Indeed, they are not accounted for by any science save the "queen of sciences," Theology, which alone is sufficient to cope with the profound problems of the Supernatural.

These were golden days and long to be remembered by those whose privilege it was to be present. Everything goes to show that the Institute of Christian Philosophy is doing a great work and drawing into its membership men of the highest character and attainments. The muster roll now reaches over five hundred, and the ratio of increase has been about twice that of the Victoria Institute in England, calculated by the years the two institutions have been established.

At the Annual Meeting Dr. Deems expressed a wish to retire from the Presidency, believing that the Institute had now attained a vigor and strength that need not his fostering care. The brethren, however, with one accord re-elected him. The honor thus again conferred is deserved; and I pray that this year may be brighter than any of those preceding in the history of the Institute.

BARNARD GISBY.

News of the Week.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 1.—A shock of earthquake was felt in this city a few minutes before 10 o'clock last evening. In North Carolina it was severe, ringing bells and causing buildings to sway to and fro. All communication with Charleston, S. C., is cut off. The railroad tracks leading to the city are twisted out of line and some are under water, the telegraph lines are down. The earth-movement extended to the Mississippi, as far north as Chicago, and from Jacksonville, Florida, to New Haven, Conn., as reported this morning....A phenomenal flow of water from an artesian well at Belleplain, Iowa, causes a great flood and destruction of property....A fire in South Royalton, Vt., destroyed nine business stores and fourteen residences. The loss estimated at $160,000....Mr. T. V. Powderly, the Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, has refused to consider a Congressional nomination....Cholera is steadily increasing in the province of Kanagawa and the Port of Yokohama. The number of deaths from cholera for the month of June was 2 702 in Japan and the first half of July 1,793 ... The political situation in Denmark is decidedly revolutionary. The war between the Government and the Liberals is very bitter. ....The situation in Belfast has become complicated through the disagreement of the police and the new Vigilance Committee. ....Seven dories which were driven out to sea from New Foundland by the late hurricane have been picked up....A company of English capitalists propose to build a railroad from Tuxpan to Mexico City at a cost of $25,000,000.

THURSDAY, 2.—A dispatch from Belfast announces that the police have succeeded in re-establishing order in that city, though severely resisted by the rioters....A number of missionaries are reported to have been massacred in the northern part of Cochin, China....Prince Alexander has reached Philippopolis on his way to Sofia. ....Seventeen survivors of the wrecked Russian ship "Nautilus" were rescued by a German bark in mid ocean....The reports of the earthquake in the South are greater by far than at first given. Charleston, S. C., has suffered terribly. Forty lives are thought to have been lost and a large number of persons have been seriously wounded. Damage to property it is thought will exceed $5,000,000. Many public buildings, churches and residences are completely wrecked. Great damage was also done at Summerville, S. C., and Savannah, Ga.... Yellow fever has broken out at Biloxi, Miss. Ten persons have been attacked and two have died....The Cincinnati Exposition was opened yesterday. The event was marked by a large popular demonstration. ....Two men while bathing near New Bedford, Mass., were drowned before the eyes of their wives and children....A number of persons attempted to commit suicide in and around this city yesterday.

FRIDAY, 3.—Prince Alexander arrived at Sofia and met a warm reception. All consuls were present save the Consul of Russia, but the Russian Consulate hung out a banner in honor of the occasion. The negotiations with the rebellious regiment have been continued and were expected to terminate yesterday. The Prince has given orders for the acceptance of the amnesty demanded by the rebel chief Stojanoff.... Heavy earthquake shocks have been felt Malaga, Spain, and some losses caused by them....A hurricane has visited Jamaica, destroying the entire coffee crop for this year, several parishes of the island denuded of trees, banana plantations destroyed and churches blown down....Corn and fruit and vines have been destroyed by frost in New Hampshire....A long and continued but not violent shock of earthquake was felt at Santa Cruz yesterday ...Thomas J. Barr, a wealthy stock dealer of New York, was run over by an express train in Tennessee....A frightful boiler explosion occurred on the farm of Rutger Vanderburgh in North Greenbush, N. Y., hurling bodies two hundred feet in the air. Two men killed and three injured.

(Continued on page twelve.)

Our Contributors.

Consolation!

BY GEORGE W. BUNGAY.

Is heaven a fair and distant sphere
Whose light outshines the day?
Do guardian angels hover near,
To shield from ill the faithful here
Who watch and worship and obey?

We cannot hear a rustling wing
Wave from the world on high.
Do golden harps with music ring?
Do seraphs sweet with rapture sing
In the bright land beyond the sky?

Can narrow graves the spirits hold—
The darlings which we love?
On starry wings, with harps of gold,
Will angels gather in the fold
The lambs unharmed in realms above?

The light reflected on the sod,
The splendor of the skies,
Lighting the way our feet have trod,
Is but the shadow of the God
Who saves the soul which never dies.

The snow-white dove, emblem of peace
And love, the senses feel
Will fail, and then its flight will cease.
The soul has an eternal lease!
The Cross is the immortal seal!

And, best of all, a guide divine
By the dear Lord is given—
His sacred Word; each holy line
Is the true lamp whose light will shine
Along the way which leads to heaven.

A Dutch Heirloom.

BY JAMES E. WOOD.

CHAPTER III.

As Dewitt sped along the rail to his new field of labor, he gathered from Mr. Lestrade, the editor and proprietor of the New Calais Courant, the character and extent of his duties, together with the present status of that journal. Dewitt's predecessor, as Mr. Lestrade explained, had prejudiced the interests of the paper with a wealthy and influential class of the citizens of New Calais by reporting a street disturbance as "a fracas between a man and a Jew," all very clever and keen to those alive only to the humorous side of the inference conveyed, yet scarcely so well appreciated by the race he sought to quiz by this ill-judged flippancy. To work the New Calais' bark of journalism out of the troubled waters in which it now floundered, with every prospect of shipwreck in the near future, was the first task to be taken up by the new editor. The performance of this duty had less of drudgery to him than it might have had to one of a more prejudiced mind, hence he could enter into the work of pacification with some degree of enthusiasm.

The drive from the railroad station to Mr. Lestrade's home, where Dewitt was to be domiciled, lay through the heart of the village. Dewitt rejoiced that New Calais had none of that, to use a colloquialism, brand-new aspect, prevailing in many if not most American villages, so painfully suggestive of a creation over night that one turns to the eternal rocks for relief. Nor did he lament the lack of that punctilious care to cover with paint the weather-worn fences of the place, which gives to the highways of many a spot rich in rural beauty an aspect oppressively artificial.

Mr. Lestrade's dwelling differed so slightly from thousands of others in our land that description must cease, after saying that it was plain and humble. As Dewitt was ushered into the principal room of the house he took in the main features of it at a glance. The furnishing was of the varied order found in country dwellings, centre table included, with its lighted lamp looming up from a blue cover like a lighthouse from the realms of the deep.

A young lady who rose to greet them on their entrance was introduced by Mr. Lestrade as his daughter. So engrossed was the editor of the New Calais Courant with plans and speculations concerning the future of that journal, that Dewitt had no opportunity for some time to address himself to this young girl, who sat plying her needle on a piece of embroidery. As the conversation became more general, the face was raised from time to time from its task. Dewitt, a connoisseur in female beauty, immediately decided that beyond her eyes, Helen Lestrade was decidedly inferior in face to Marcia Van Bolingbroke.

"You appear to be one, Miss Lestrade, who appreciates the claim of the needle as a factor in the artistic world," remarked Dewitt, as the magic influence of the young girl's glance met his at one of these intervals.

"I claim still more for the needle than that, Mr. Fanshaw," and the low voice had in it a modulation that stirred the listener to drink in its every tone. "Yes, the needle finds place in our religious as well as our artistic life. See, I am working a pulpit cloth;" and as Helen Lestrade held it up to view he read in partly finished characters the not unfamiliar proverb: "Nisi Dominus Frustra."

"Oh! I see you are an Episcopalian."

"On the contrary, I am a staunch Calvinist, and, although in some sense a ritualist, I am not subservient to prelatical rule. Our little church is extremely high in its service. Most of our congregation, too, believe in investing God's temple with something of that beauty which we find in everything of His handiwork, as one of the most pleasing tributes to His goodness."

"A strange selection," Dewitt thought aloud.

"Nevertheless one rich in historic association, and inferior to none as a watchword in time of peril to soul or body. Don't you think so?" and as the speaker's face turned to Dewitt's for confirmation, he blushed; an unusual thing with this carefully bred young man, yet for what cause he could not tell.

"I know of one more fruitful of good to me than that."

"What can it be," and all the womanly curiosity of the girl was aroused.

Dewitt repeated: "Goed van ydelheid gekomen zal verminderd worden! Maar die met de hand vergadert, zal het vermeerderen."

"Well, Mr. Fanshaw, I should certainly not dare to make use of so barbarous a language in social or religious reform."

"You find nothing attractive, then, in the Dutch tongue," and he joined in the gentle laugh raised at the grotesque manner he had brought Aunt Katherine's homily into play. "Perhaps you might find more to admire if you understood its meaning than that to be found in many another more melodious of sound." Dewitt's words were not without a tinge of seriousness, disclosing the pain he experienced in having the Dutch homily he now loved, as he revered the giver of it, brought into ridicule, which was not lost on Helen Lestrade.

Her voice lost its bantering tone, for it was foreign to her nature to treat irreverently things sacred or those made akin to sacred by the mission they may have performed.

"You will pardon, I hope, Mr. Fanshaw, my seeming levity. Any language that speaks to our better instincts, or helps to elevate character, cannot long continue discordant, even to the most sensitive ear, save in a very limited sense."

As Dewitt sought his pillow that night he vowed not to fall in love with Helen Lestrade, yet she found place in his sleeping and waking dreams from that time forth. At times he would experience a startled sensation creep over him, as the thought intruded of Marcia Van Bolingbroke learning of his love making. At such times he would involuntarily raise his arm, as if to ward off the cruel look of scorn which it was the wont of that proud Knickerbocker beauty to level at her inferiors or those deemed such by her, from the woman that was now swaying his soul as it had never been swayed before. But as time wore on and his passion for Helen Lestrade grew apace, this super-sensitiveness gradually faded away until the opinions of others, including that of Marcia Van Bolingbroke, became a matter of indifference to him.

But why linger over the courtship or the early wedded life of the rising young journalist, Dewitt Fanshaw, and Helen Lestrade. They have chosen for their home an unpretentious cottage, where on a Sunday the now fast-aging Grimquill is a regular visitant. To-day he has hurried from the city with two purposes in view. The first to offer his congratulations to Dewitt on his return as a member of the upper house of the State Legislature, and the other to be present at the christening of the son and heir of his protege.

It was not without a qualm of compunction that the fond parents acquiesced in the evident desire of Dr. Grimquill and gave their first born name from him. Notwithstanding the harshness with which the name sounded to most ears, as the sacramental water was applied to the brow of the baby boy and the baptismal name of Theophilus Grimquill Fanshaw given him by the officiating clergymen, the Doctor thought his name had never before sounded sweeter or so musical. On the return home to the feast prepared for the occasion, Dr. Grimquill gave it as his solemn belief that journalism was the secret of Dewitt's success in life and his present happiness. To this Dewitt demurred in favor of the claims of his young wife's influence and affection, who strove to hide the blushes the specious compliment of her husband had raised by esconcing herself behind the steaming tea urn.

Perhaps it was accident, or perhaps an intuition that their criticisms did injustice to the true cause of their joy and prosperity of the moment, that impelled the young wife to guide her husband's eye to a framed motto, worked in silk, which hung in a conspicuous place on the wall, and as their eyes again met, both stilled, with unspoken word, all doubt within by deciding in favor of the Dutch Heirloom and its message.

A Summer Among the Hamptons.

BY WM. RANKIN DURYEE, D.D.

WHO that has tried the experiment of passing the warm summer days at the other end of Long Island has ever lived to regret it? The mosquito, omnipresent on the Great South Bay and among the scrub oaks of the north shore, subsides into harmlessness when he passes the Shinnecock Hills. The tramp finds no place for his weary foot and his bloodshot eye when he reaches Good Ground, and always turns back with disgust. But the tired mind breathes refreshment in every breeze that sweeps across the waves to the well-tilled farms of the children of the New England pilgrims who have so long pursued "the even tenor of their way" in this cozy nook of earth where South Hampton, Bridge Hampton, and East Hampton nestle among the elms and maples. "It is a place struck through with placidity," said my friend DeWitt Talmage, as we came back one day to the dusty, noisy cities. "Nothing ever happens at East Hampton." And so could I say of Bridge Hampton, meaning by the "happen" such occurrence of crime and sin as delights the reporter to seize and the daily paper to expand into all its sickening details.

East Hampton is simply one broad street of New England fashion, with quaint old houses along its sides, a goose pond at one end and a windmill at the other. Artists have "written it up" so frequently that little need be added. A tradition makes it the birthplace of the author of "Home, Sweet Home;" but as one looks at the house pointed out as the place where Payne first saw the light, one would easily see that the inspiration for the song hardly came from that Long Island residence. The word "tumble" would undoubtedly have been suggested to the poet had his fancy roved to his infancy. In spite, however, of the fact that East Hampton is a long and dusty six miles from a railway station, it was full of boarders all the summer, as was even Amagansett, a few miles further on toward Montauk. A cynical friend remarked, it was "full of artists and bad butter," but I am sure the slur did not spread over the whole street, which always looks so nicely in an etching.

Then there is South Hampton, which has attracted a greater expenditure of wealth than any of its sister villages. In itself it boasts a complete village life, with its church over two and a half centuries old, its streets with sign-posts telling the date when they were opened, and its pleasant houses shaded by trees. It is a mile and more from the ocean, and a large tract has been purchased close to the sea beach and filled with some twenty or thirty of the pretty "Queen Anne cottages," which are such a feature in our modern life of leisure. Here, however, the trouble comes in. Villagers and "cottagers" seldom cross one another's porches. The two streams have not yet learned to intermingle to any extent. Yet those who have boarded in South Hampton, and every house has been full, are loud in their praise of the simplicity, comfort, and health-giving pleasures of the place. On the bathing beach one can see a dozen ministers, with all the stiffness out of their cravats. In fact, I have heard of Episcopalian professors and clergymen preaching in the old Presbyterian church, "with none to molest them or make them afraid." Garden City is too far away, and cross rectors are not to be found in the modest Episcopalian chapels here and there to be noted. In fact, the "Church of my Lord Bishop" is certainly counted as a very unimportant "sect" among the Hamptons.

Bridge Hampton has one or two distinctions of its own. First of all, it stands midway between the two villages already mentioned, so that pleasant excursions east and west are always in order. Then it has a capital hotel, the "Hampton House," with a man for proprietor who knows how to see to the comfort of guests. This house is simply an old family mansion turned to public use, and with so much now demanded of it as must call for its speedy enlargement. Then it has a library, endowed by two gentlemen for the benefit of their native town. The selection of books I found to be most excellent, and all visitors soon make use of them if they have any partiality for good reading. The social and friendly feeling between the summer guests and the residents is also very marked, arising in part, I suppose, from the fact that in nearly every house some of these guests are to be found.

One feature of the town remains to be noted. A large proportion of the mature men have been on whaling cruises. They are filled with stories of adventures which would read like romance were they "dressed up" by some modern writers. Those days of excitement are over. Now these men of pluck and endurance and manly courage sit in their homes and fill the pews of the church, and as one counts them the place seems like a veritable "Sailors' Snug Harbor." If one wishes to read of Bridge Hampton whaling captains, I need only refer to a book published by the Harpers some years ago, called "The Nimrod of the Sea." I verified many of the incidents in that book in conversation with some of the actors in its scenes. But the race of American seamen it commemorates will hardly now be found in these days of steam.

I wish space would allow to tell of the thoughtful, earnest preaching we listened to, the walks and drives, and, above all, such "sails" as the good pastor of Hudson knows how to give his guests on Sag Harbor Bay when he enjoys his vacation-home and welcomes his brethren, or as Captain Huntling, of Mecox Bay, is so ready to enjoy with young friends. But I forbear. Still I seem to sit on the wild beach and watch the tearing, tossing waves throw themselves against the sand and reaching their fingers of foam toward the dunes. Still I seem to feel the healthful breezes sweeping from the Atlantic. More than that, still I see the red and brown tinge of sun and wind on face and hands, and it won't wash off. Nor do I wish it to vanish. It recalls the hours of sensible pleasure when strength was gained for work. When I begin to whiten up again I trust opportunity may again be given to try for a new lease of health and contentment among the Hamptons of Long Island.

SEPT. 1, 1886.

The Religion of the New Psychology.

BY THE REV. ROBERT H. BARR, PH.D.

WHAT is agnosticism? Such was the question recently put to me by a bright, intelligent young man of my congregation who had seen in the newspapers and magazines frequent use of the term, now principally employed to designate the religious views of the New English Psychologists.

Believing that many others, like him, are interested in the great philosophical and religious tendency of the age, I will endeavor to state as concisely and clearly as possible to the readers of the INTELLIGENCER its essential features.

In the year 1869 a number of scientists met at the house of a gentleman who is now the editor of a well known English review, for the purpose of discussing philosophical and scientific subjects. They were all agreed on three points: Opposition to the intuitional in psychology, to the supernatural in religion, and that the views they entertained had been more nearly expressed by David Hume than by any other philosophical writer. On the suggestion of the most distinguished of those present, Prof. Huxley, the term Agnostic (αγνῶστος, i. e., Unknown, from the Greek, a priv. and γνωστος,) was adopted as the proper designation of their religious opinions.

In order, however, to gain a clear conception of this religion of the new psychology, we must not forget the psychology itself. Prof. Huxley is perfectly right, when, in his article on David Hume in the Nineteenth Century, he emphasizes the importance of metaphysics. There is nothing more dangerous to both scientist and theologian than a false metaphysics. With David Hume the agnostic claims that "impressions" or sensations are the sources of all our knowledge. All the dealings of mind are with the phenomenal, so that, according to Herbert Spencer, "Our own and all other existence is a mystery absolutely and forever beyond our grasp." Intuitions are entirely discarded, and the only good reason for our belief that "two straight lines cannot inclose a space," as stated by Prof. Huxley, s that "we have no memory and can, (therefore,) form no conception of their doing it."

But, as we have already remarked, agnosticism claims to assume the dignity of a religion, and its followers scornfully resent the charge of atheism. The agnostic, however, is neither a Christian nor a Jew, a pagan nor a pantheist.

Probably we will find no clearer statement of his credo than that given in a review article by Mr. Spencer: "The proper object of religion is a Something which can never be known, or conceived, or understood; to which we cannot apply the terms emotion, will, intelligence; of which we cannot affirm or deny that it is either a person, or being, or mind, or matter, or, indeed, anything else. All that we can say of it is that it is an Inscrutable Existence or an Unknowable Cause; we can neither know nor conceive what it is, nor how it came about, nor how it operates. It is, notwithstanding, the Ultimate Cause, the All-being, the Creative Power. The essential business of religion so understood is to keep alive the consciousness of a mystery that cannot be fathomed. We are not concerned with the question what effect this religion will have as a moral agent, or whether it will make good men and women. Religion has to do with mystery, not with morals."

In this description of the new religion by one of its high priests, we cannot fail to observe its relation to the intellectual skepticism upon which it is founded. The intuition is a mere chimera; axioms and all such things are cobwebs to be brushed aside. Things that are equal to the same thing are equal to each other because we have never known them to be equal to anything else. Two and two always make four simply because we cannot remember a time when they made five. The senses, and the senses alone, are the sources of knowledge, but they give us only impressions, sensations, the phenomenal; therefore, we know nothing of what is supposed to be the real, the absolute, that is, God, except as a merely logical hypothesis. The sacred historian, Luke, tells us how the agnostics of his day toiled up the Areopagus to hear Paul's sermon on the "Unknown God;" but the agnostics of our day know better than to waste their time on any such vain pursuit. The only way God could make Himself known to man would be through the senses, and, as the result, man would experience an additional sensation; God would still be unknown.

Our first objection to agnosticism is its unwarrantable use of the term "religion," viz., that it refers to an object to which "we cannot apply the terms, emotion, will, intelligence," and that "it has to do with mystery, not with morals."

1st. There is nothing in the etymological character of the word to justify these limitations. It matters not whether we derive it from re and ligo, (to bind back or bind again,) or with Cicero from re and lego, (to read again); in the one case we have obligation, in the other affirmation as the primary conception, both of which are opposed to the limitations assigned by agnosticism.

2d. This definition is opposed to universal testimony regarding the contents of man's religious nature, our agnostic friends and a few atheists being the exceptions.

Under all forms of religion we find such facts as these constantly: (1.) A longing to know God and His will concerning man; (2.) A belief that such knowledge was possible; and (3.) That to a certain extent such knowledge had been attained.

3d. This definition of religion is based upon pure assumption, and is a petitio principii, (begging of the question). It assumes that the great thinkers of all ages—the Platos, Bacons and Newtons, who have testified to their knowledge of God,—have been mistaken, and that the boundaries between the known and unknown have been so well surveyed that the impassable gulf may be considered fixed; one thing alone being discernable in that dim and misty region, namely, that the head and tail of religion are in it.

Our second objection is to the unwarrantable limitations this system would place upon man's cognitive powers in declaring that this "Creative Power," this "Ultimate Cause," "can never be known," so that we may apply to it the terms "emotion, will, intelligence."

1st. Because it contradicts the testimony of millions of our race who have declared that they did know God so as to apply the terms "emotion, will, intelligence;" and in this number we find a very large majority of the world's great thinkers and benefactors. Do the agnostics suppose that the scratch of Herbert Spencer's pen or the ipse dixit of Prof. Huxley will outweigh all this?

2d. This implies a perfect knowledge of man's cognitive powers under all present and possible conditions. Even if man knew nothing of God, would this justify the assertion that he would never know anything about Him. There was a time when geology and chemistry were unknown, but under more favorable conditions, man's powers were found capable of attaining such knowledge. Will the conditions never exist that will enable man to know something about God?

3d. The agnostic assumes that in order to know this creative power so as to apply the terms "emotion, will, intelligence," we must know its substance, its essence. Mr. Spencer probably applies the terms "emotion, will, intelligence," to himself, notwithstanding the fact "that our own and all other existence is a mystery absolutely and forever beyond our grasp."

We can know something about the painter and the sculptor from thoughts spread upon the canvas and impressed on the marble, but we can know nothing of the Creator from the great thoughts impressed on matter and filling space! The wonders of earth and sea and starry sky never suggest one single thought of the wisdom or skill of "Creative Power" so that we may apply to it what Mr. Spencer so really applies to himself, "emotion, will, intelligence!"

Our third objection is to the limitations by which agnosticism would fetter this "Creative Power," this "Ultimate Cause," in declaring that it can never be known, for even if man knew nothing of God beyond the bare hypothesis of His existence as a logical necessity, is God unable to make Himself known? Here we reach the height of presumption and absurdity. The creature man can make himself known so that his fellows may apply to him the terms "emotion, will, intelligence," but the Creator God cannot.

> "Is this your triumph, this your proud applause, > Children of Truth and champions of her cause?"

Our fourth objection is to the elimination of morality from the sphere of religion, and we urge this on the ground of both fact and utility. The moral is one of the abiding elements of man's religious nature.

He who believes in the existence of God believes that he ought to live in harmony with the will of God as expressed in his highest ethical conceptions. Take away God and you have removed the ultimate ground of all moral obligation. Yes, we believe that religion has a great deal to do with making people purer and nobler. The tree is known by its fruits; but what fruit may we expect from a religious system whose only object is to keep alive an inscrutable mystery, and that will have nothing to do "with making good men and women."

Without Hope.

WE were in the midst of a great throng which awaited the arrival of the boat on a Coney Island pier. A gentleman (?) and a lady (?), accompanied by a maid who bore a sleek puppy, were directly behind us. Evidently the first was under the influence of wine. It may be, nay, let us charitably take for granted, that his companion also had partaken. The latter grew weary of waiting. In thick, maudlin speech the man urged her to "have patience." Then he continued, with a drunkard's chuckle, "I wonder if there'll be such a crush before the heavenly gates. S'pose every body'll push to get in?" The woman responded: "Suppose they won't open those gates for us? Where will we have to go then!" The tone had in it an agonized ring. Apparently the now and the then were confusedly blended in her mind, for she broke forth in execrations against the —— at Coney Island who wouldn't let her in. Just then the crowd began to move, and we pressed on out of hearing. But that cry rang in my ears; it seemed to me like the despairing, blasphemous wail of a lost soul. ANNEKE JANS.

ANOTHER STRAW, showing how the wind is blowing in reference to temperance, is the report of the commission appointed by the French Academy of Medicine on the public danger from the use of alcohol. It urges the government to take the strongest measures to prevent the entry of artificially alcoholized wines into France. It also calls for a large reduction of the number of taverns and wine shops, and for the strict enforcement of the laws for the repression of drunkenness. This report, apart from its official and representative character, is the more significant because it comes from France, one of the very countries where, as we are told so often, there is next to no drunkenness because of the general use of light wines instead of spirits. It seems to be true that within a few years the use of spirits has increased greatly among the French, and the usual consequences are apparent.—The Congregationalist.

The Reading Room.

Our Book-Shelves.

....“HISTORY OF THE REFORMED CHURCH OF HERKIMER.” By Rev. H. M. Cox. It is a matter of congratulation that so many pastors have undertaken to write up the histories of their churches. When this work is done thoroughly and well, the monograph becomes the standard of authority for everything relating to that church, and often for the early civil history of the region in which it is situated. Each church, as it reaches a half century of age, and especially if older, ought to put its history and its list of members in permanent shape. This work has been admirably done by Rev. H. M. Cox for the Church of Herkimer. The story extends back to 1723. The ecclesiastical history of that locality has always seemed pretty complicated, but Mr. Cox, so far as the limits of his plan permitted, has thrown great light upon the early history of Herkimer. He has spent much time in collating and comparing material. But few adequately appreciate how much labor is involved in preparing an accurate history of an old church, especially wher the early records are scanty. The portraits of the early pastors, Spinner and Murphy, are especially interesting. There are also views of the several church buildings, from the first octagonal one to the present beautiful edifice. Many difficulties in the history have been cleared up, and a succinct account of all things pertaining to the Church of Herkimer is given. The book is neatly and elegantly printed, and does great credit to the author. All interested in our general Church history, as well as in local annals, will desire a copy of this admirably prepared volume

....“SOLAR HEAT, GRAVITATION, SUN SPOTS.” By J. H. Kedzie. A book so independent and original, so thorough and earnest as this of Mr. Kedzie, is seldom met with. The Conservation of Energy is its chief theme, and the book itself is an embodiment of energy. Intellectual activity and power are immanent in almost every sentence.

The author puts at the head of the title page, “Speculations.” Frequently he asserts his right to add one more theory to those already existing. He certainly establishes the right by the ability he exhibits to handle intelligently the great themes which are the subjects of his discourse, and, if he has not cleared away all difficulties, he certainly presents a hypothesis worthy of respectful consideration. He attacks problems which have puzzled the most capable men of science for centuries, with boldness but not with arrogance. He asserts what he regards as truth beyond denial in positive terms, but without dogmatism. The spirit of the discussion is an amiable one, is manly, honest, frank and genial. The volume will be read with a great deal of pleasure, even by those who may question some of the positions of the author. It is one of the most interesting, as it is one of the most animated, of the scientific books of a period in which scores of eminent men have endeavored to popularize scientific themes.

First, the theories by which it has been endeavored to account for the maintenance of solar heat are clearly stated, examined and reasons given why they are unsatisfactory and inadequate. Some of them, especially that of Dr. Siemens, and that of Le Sage in regard to gravitation, approached the hypothesis of Mr. Kedzie. The opinion held by the majority of astronomers that the heat of the sun is maintained by the contraction of the mass of the orb is opposed, because it is contrary to experience—hot bodies contract in cooling, their heat is not preserved by the contraction; also because no contraction has been observed; because the theory claims that the sun is cooling, but all the evidence goes to prove that its heat has not declined; and because it fails to account for a heat which is so great that if the entire amount radiated in one moment by the sun into space were concentrated on a solid column of ice, two miles and a quarter in diameter, and reaching over the inconceivable distance between the sun and the earth, a distance of ninety-three millions of miles, “it would dissolve and melt, not in an hour or a minute, but in a single second; one swing of the pendulum, and it would be water; seven more, and it would be dissipated in vapor.” Yet, notwithstanding this, the contraction theory is the legitimate development of the nebular hypothesis, and will not be surrendered at a word. It has, indeed, never been assailed with so much vigor as on these pages, and has not hitherto encountered such a rival as is brought forward here.

Mr. Kedzie takes his stand on the Conservation of Energy and the Correlation of Forces, facts or laws, as they may be called, which are universally accepted. His theory is that every one of the countless suns which occupy illimitable space is constantly sending out into the invisible ether undulations of heat,—heat waves, and that heat is the unspecialized form of energy. The ether is packed to its full capacity with this energy. As the waves advance the heat becomes specialized, and, according to the laws of the Conservation and Correlation of Energy, is transformed into motion, electricity and magnetism,—mainly into waves of motion. Every moment these waves, proceeding from the uncounted myriads of other suns, beat as waves of motion, electricity or magnetism, against the surface of our sun, and there are again transmuted into heat and light, because they must be transformed, cannot remain as they are, and cannot be transformed into anything but heat and light. No energy of heat radiated from our sun or any sun can be lost, for the Conservation of Energy is not to be disputed, much less denied. The energy can be and is transformed. It beats perpetually and in unabated force against every sun and is there again changed into heat. Each sun receives every moment as much as it gives out.

It would have been well, perhaps, for the sake of some readers, if a chapter had been added describing the Correlation of Energy. We venture to add here that motion is transformed into heat, light, electricity and magnetism. The car wheel which sets fire to the packing of its axle is an illustration in part. Often we see electricity transmuted into light, heat and motion. Therefore, the theory that the ether, which fills all space and all bodies, is packed with the waves of heat, changed into waves of motion, is scientifically reasonable; and it is just as reasonable that these waves beating against a sun are changed back again into heat and light, to be again radiated. So the process goes on without end; the heat of every sun is maintained, until the mighty machinery is arrested by the fiat of the Omnipotence from which it received its first impulse.

But why do not these waves coming from the hosts of heaven heat the earth as well? Because they supply the earth with the energy demanded by the countless forms and processes of life upon it, with the “vis vitæ,” the vital force required, and also because they push, propel the earth on its career,—are, in fact, the attraction of gravitation which impels the earth upon its course. The treatment of gravitation and the illustration of the law of gravitation is bold, original and ingenious. Gravitation, Mr. Kedzie holds, is a push and not a pull, is not an inherent quality of matter, but is the pressure of the waves of energy with which the ether is charged. How this produces a motion toward and away from the sun in a circular orbit the reader is respectfully referred to the book to ascertain.

As gravitation is accounted for, so is the occurrence of spots on the sun explained. Time and the reckonings of astronomers will test the chapters dealing with this part of the discussion. Not a few observers already have asserted that the spots on the sun are contemporaneous with certain positions of the planets, as the theory of our author requires.

Not less original and ingenious are the speculations of Mr. Kedzie in relation to the constitution of the sun and the currents of the photosphere. The opinion that the photosphere consists of incandescent carbon vapors will especially receive consideration. It is, we believe, altogether new.

Much more than the points here indicated is to be found in this unusually interesting work. It has been to us more engaging than any story we have read in years. The scientific terms used, which some readers will need to look up in the dictionary, are very few, and, as we have already said, the book is a superior specimen of lively, earnest, energetic composition. That it is destined to receive a great deal of attention goes without saying. (S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.)

....“A RACE FOR LIFE,” etc.; “MY NIGHT ADVENTURE,” etc.; “THE GREAT GOLD SECRET,” etc.; “WHO TOOK IT?” etc.; “SNOWED UP,” etc., 15 cents each, are published by Cassell & Company. These, with others which are promised, constitute Cassell’s “Select” Library of Entertaining Fiction. Each volume is complete in itself and contains about a dozen different stories by leading authors. In such a collection there is a wide variety and something to suit every taste, whether it be of the romantic school or attuned to a more quiet and sympathetic vein. The selections are well made and the volumes cannot fail to aid in passing an outing or leisure hours pleasantly. They are especially adapted for those who have but little time for reading, and might well be called the half hour series.

Our Library Table.

Periodicals, Serials and Notes.

. ..Frances Hodgson Burnett, Horace E. Scudder, Edward Eggleston, J. T. Trowbridge, Annie A. Preston and other favorite writers are contributors to the September number of St. Nicholas. The “Stories of Art and Artists” embrace sketches of some of the most eminent English painters, with copies of several of their paintings.

....Wide Awake for September contains much pleasant reading for young folks, “When Book Meets Book,” by G. Hamlen; “L’Enfant Terrible Turk,” by S. S. Cox; and “My Friend’s Stiff Shoulder,” by John Carnifex, are prominent articles. Emily Mason tells how anyone can make a picture book fit to amuse an entire family, and Mrs. Treat writes of Beneficial Insects. Several interesting serials are in progress.

....It is singular that so attractive a theme as the history of The New York Historical Society, having so many delightful associations with a large number of the most honored citizens of the metropolis, has not been adequately handled until now. Mrs. Lamb fills this vacancy with an illustrated article in the Magazine of American History for September, which equals the chapters of her admirable “History of the City of New York,” and reminds one of them Mr. Alfred E. Lee continues his record of the Cedar Mountain affair, treating of From Cedar Mountain to Chantilly. J. Algernon Peters writes upon Pope Pius IX. and the Southern Confederacy, and the number has a portrait of the Pope. My First and Last Sight of Abraham Lincoln, by Hon. Horatio King, is short but precious,—as good as gold.

....The September Century opens with a superb full-page portrait of the great musical composer, Franz Liszt, about whom a very interesting illustrated paper is contributed by Albert Morris Bagby. “Amateur Ballooning” and “Balloon Experiences of a Timid Photographer” are well written and profusely illustrated articles. The vicissitudes of ballooning are vividly and humorously described. S. G. W. Benjamin, with the help of noted artists, gives the reader “A Glance at the Arts of Persia.” Frank R. Stockton’s Part II. in “The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine” equals the first part in amusing dialogue. The war articles are “The Successes and Failures of Chancellorsville,” by General Alfred Pleasanton; “Jackson’s Attack upon the Eleventh Corps,” by General O. O. Howard, and “Sedgwick’s Assault at Fredericksburg,” by Colonel H. W. Jackson. All the departments are replete as usual with varied and choice reading.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

John B. Alden: Biographical and Critical Miscellanies. By William H. Prescott. With Portrait. 8vo, pp. 234. 40 cents; also,

Nature and Other Addresses. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. 12mo, pp. 101. 25 cents.

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.: Lives of Girls who Became Famous. By Sarah K Bolton. With Portraits. 12mo, pp. 347. $1 50; also,

The Riverside Museum. By Jak. Illustrated. 12mo, pp. 306. $1 25.

Funk & Wagnalls: Commentary on the Gospel of John. By F. Godet. Vol. 2. Translated from the French. With Preface, Introductory Suggestions, and Additional Notes, by Timothy Dwight. 8vo, pp. 551. $3.

The American Sabbath Tract Society: A Critical History of the Sabbath and the Sunday in the Christian Work. By A. H. Lewis, D.D. 16mo, pp 588. $1.25.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.: Poverty Grass. By Lillie Chace Wyman. 12mo, pp. 320. $1.35.

G. P. Putnam’s Sons: Palermo. Christmas to Whitsuntide. By Alice Durand Field. Revised Edition. 12mo, pp. 205. $1.25; also,

The Life of Robert Fulton, and a History of Steam Navigation. By Thomas W. Knox. Illustrated. 8vo, pp. 507. $1.75.

UNBOUND BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Irish Question. 1. History of an Idea; 2. Lessons of the Election. By the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. Authorized Edition. 12mo, pp. 57. 10 cents. Charles Scribner’s Sons.

Dady Dave. By Mary Frances. 12mo, pp. 116. 50 cents. Funk & Wagnalls.

Future Probation and Foreign Missions. Certain Duties and Usages at the Rooms of the American Board. By A. C. Thompson. 12mo, pp. 52.

“Gloria Victis.” A Romance. By Ossip Schubin. From the German by Mary Maxwell. 16mo, pp. 319. 50 cents; also, Aphrodite. A Romance of Ancient Hellas. By Ernst Eckstein. From the German by Mary J. Safford. 16mo, pp. 289. 50 cents. Wm. S. Gottsberger.

The Long Lane. A Novel. By Ethel Coxon. (Harper’s Handy Series, No. 92.) 16mo, pp. 222. 25 cents; also,

St. Briavels. A Novel. By Mary Deane. (Harper’s Franklin Square Library, No. 541.) 20 cents.

Young Folks’ Entertainments, Comprising Songs, Charades, Pantomimes, etc., etc. By E. C. and L. J. Rook. National School of Elocution and Oratory: also,

The Elocutionist’s Annual, No. 14. New and Popular Readings, Recitations, Dialogues, etc., etc.

Voyages in Search of the Northwest Passage. From the Collection of Richard Hakluyt. (Vol. I., No. 32, Cassell’s National Library.) 16mo, pp. 192. 10 cents.

PERIODICALS.

August.—The English Pulpit of To-Day.

September.—Words and Weapons. The Phrenological Journal, The Book Buyer, The Pansy, Babyhood, The Homiletic Review, The Old Testament Student, The Brooklyn Magazine, Association Notes, The Gospel in All Lands, The Musical Visitor, The English Illustrated Magazine.

Notes.

....A correspondent in Boston writes to the Advance of Chicago: "Miss Irene E. Jerome, of your city, the young artist, whose first published work, in Our Year's Sketch Book, brought to her immediate recognition and wide appreciation, has in the press of Lee & Shepard, for publication in the autumn, a volume of similar scope, entitled Nature's Hallelujah. It is a folio and comprises about fifty full-page sketches. I have been looking through the first proofs, and promise all who enjoyed the delicate and beautiful fancies in the earlier volume a similar treat in this. There is perhaps a firmer touch and wider range in these pictures than in those of the other series. The work is a dainty mosaic of song and sketch; birds, flowers, and exquisite landscapes adorn and illustrate pretty bits of verse and sublime cadences from the Psalms. The thought which underlies the book is that of the universal praise and adoration which, to him who has a listening ear, are heard in the myriad voices of nature. As before, it is the noble scenery of the White Mountains which suggests these sketches and is reflected in them."

....The "Labor Movement in America" is the title of a volume, written by Prof. Richard T. Ely, of Johns Hopkins University, to be published next week by Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co., of this city. Prof. Ely is one of the authorities on the theme he now treats at length. His aim has been to prepare the most complete history of socialism and labor organizations hitherto published. He has been at work on his book for years, has visited countries and places to obtain trustworthy information, has collected books and pamphlets and newspapers in large numbers and studied them, has visited men engaged in industrial movements and the leaders of labor organizations, and has not spared himself in endeavoring to secure the facts necessary to an intelligent judgment upon the labor movement. The book will be of high value to all classes of citizens.

....Mr. Gladstone's pamphlet, vindicating his course on the Irish Home Rule matter, which has been a London sensation a few weeks ago, has been published as one of their Yellow Paper Series, by the Scribners, at ten cents. The style is as admirable as was that of the famous Bulgarian pamphlet.

Issued September 1st.

A NEW EDITION OF

GOSPEL HYMNS

CONSOLIDATED.

With Words and Music.

☞ By the use of smaller type, the 426 Songs have been condensed into 304 pages, but the same order is preserved as in the original issue.

40 Cents in Tinted Paper Covers.

45 Cents in Boards.

50 Cents in Limp Cloth.

Add 5 cents each if ordered by mail.

The price of this favorite work is now so low that it can be adopted everywhere.

Former editions still published at old prices.

BIGLOW & MAIN, NEW YORK. The John Church Co., CINCINNATI, O.

OUR New Catalogue of Books for family, Sunday-school, ministers, students, or teachers' Library will be sent free to any address on receipt of a postal request. Address PHILLIPS & HUNT, Publishers. 805 Broadway

BARNES' NATIONAL INK.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

110*th Thousand Now Ready.*

BEN-HUR:

A TALE OF THE CHRIST.

By LEW. WALLACE.

New Edition, pp. 552. 16mo, Cloth, $1.50.

With this beautiful and reverent book you have lightened the burden of my daily life.—Extract from a letter to the author by the late PRESIDENT GARFIELD.

SOME PRESS NOTICES:

The description of the life of the Jews and Romans is both forcible and brilliant....There is plenty of exciting incident; everything is animated, vivid, and glowing.—N. Y. Tribune.

A powerfully written tale.—Observer, N. Y.

Anything so startling, new, and distinctive does not often appear in works of fiction....Remarkable for its pathetic eloquence. The scenes described in the New Testament are rewritten with the power and skill of an accomplished master of style.—N. Y. Times.

The style is chaste, vivid, and attractive. It is eminently calculated to add largely to the popular conception of the real historical setting of the time of the incarnation.—Christian Advocate, N. Y.

The author has taken special pains to show the deep reverence with which he enshrines the name of Christ in his own heart. The story is not an ordinary one. Its marked originality in method, its imagery, its groupings of characters all stand out like a beautiful picture upon the canvas, fresh from the hand of some master artist.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Mr. Wallace's descriptive powers are uncommon, and he has used them freely to describe an almost bewildering variety of subjects.—Independent, N. Y.

There are few authors who could have handled the same subjects with more tender respect or a more touching eloquence.—Boston Transcript.

The story will be read with interest, and it is a strong piece of work, and performed with a rare sense of the sacredness of the subject.—Interior, Chicago.

The tale is marked by good taste, and the situations are dramatically described.—Christian Union, N. Y.

The characterization of the story is fine and strong.—Examiner, N. Y.

A thrilling story graphically told.—Christian Register, Boston.

A striking literary conception... The tale is deeply interesting.—Standard, Chicago.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, N. Y.

The above work is for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postpaid, to any part of the United States and Canada, on receipt of the price.

HARPER & BROTHERS' CATALOGUE sent on receipt of Ten Cents postage.

"OUR BABY'S First and Second Year."

By MARION HARLAND,

With other valuable information—48-page book—sent free, on receipt of two-cent stamp. Address,

REED & CARNRICK,

MERCANTILE EXCHANGE BUILDING, New York.

Philadelphia Third Reformed Church

This historic church, formed by the Rev. Dr. Geo. W. Bethune, having passed through fires and having been sustained in its trials by the grace of God and by the unanimous vote of the Particular Synod of New Brunswick, and also by the General Synod, at its last session, now seeks a pastor to build again her broken walls. Any minister who thinks he can do more good in a great city like Philadelphia, can obtain all information relative to the Third Church by addressing GEORGE F. GORDON, 857 North Broad street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Royal Singer!

New Singing Class Book by L. O. Emerson.

THE BEST OF ALL!

Teachers of Singing Schools who examine this, the last of Mr. Emerson's series of successful class-books, will generally concede that it is, in some degree, superior to any of its predecessors. The elementary exercises, the graded easy tunes for practice, the part songs or glees, and the church tunes, anthems and chants, all excel in their selection or arrangement.

With its happily chosen title, good and interesting music and generally attractive character, there is good ground for hope that it will be the "favorite of the season."

READY SEPTEMBER 1ST.

Price, 60 cts., $6.00 per dozen.

Parlor Organ Galaxy.

A good and large collection of Reed Organ Music, selected and arranged by W. F. SUDDS. 40 good Marches, Galops, Waltzes, Rondos, Schottisches, etc., and 17 popular songs, covering 96 sheet music size pages, yet sold for the very low price of 50 cts.

Remember our superior new Sunday School Song Book, Songs of Promise, (35 cts.) and our High School Song Book, Song Greeting, (60 cts.)

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, N. Y.

CHEAPEST BIBLES Ever furnished Agents. Extra Terms and Large CASH PREMIUMS FORSHEE & McMAKIN, CINCINNATI, O.

Meditations of a Parish Priest.

THOUGHTS BY JOSEPH ROUX. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

"These 'Thoughts' have caused a perfect excitement of enthusiasm in France among thinkers the most various, all of whom, with one accord, have done homage to the little book, whose richness of first-hand thoughts have equally charmed and amazed them."—Blackwood's Magazine.

St. John's Eve.

By NIKOLAI V. GOGOL, author of "Taras Bulba." 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

A selection of stories from "Evenings at the Farm" and "St. Petersburg Stories," showing the marvelous style and wild grace and flavor of this remarkable author.

Silent Times.

A BOOK TO HELP IN READING THE BIBLE INTO LIFE. By Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

Girls Who Became Famous.

By SARAH K. BOLTON, author of "Poor Boys who Became Famous." With portraits of Mrs. Stowe, Helen Hunt, Miss Alcott and other noted women. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Riverside Museum.

By the author of "Birchwood" and "Fitch Club." 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO., 13 ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK.

RECENT ISSUES BY THE Presbyterian Board of Publication.

NEW EDITION OF

WHAT IS PRESBYTERIAN LAW?

(REVISED AND ENLARGED.)

Containing the Decisions of the General Assembly to 1885, inclusive

By Rev. J. ASPINWALL HODGE, D.D.

12mo. Price, $1.75.

AMONG THE TREES AT ELMRIDGE

A sprightly book for boys and girls, about our forest and fruit trees.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.25.

CHERIE'S ANSWERED PRAYER

Carries the reader to a village in France, and opening to him a form of life new and instructive.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.00.

WALTER HARMSEN.

A thrilling story of Reformation days in the Netherlands.

16mo. Illustrated. Price, $1.25.

Address orders to

JOHN A. BLACK, Business Sup't, 1334 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.,

Or, Ward & Drummond, 116 Nassau St., New York, N. Y.

JUST PUBLISHED BY

—MORRIS COSTER,—

1166 Broadway, N. Y.

(NO. 12, VOL. 3,)

New Amsterdam Gazette,

Containing, among other interesting matters, a complete report of the proceedings at Albany's Bi-Centennial (Dutch part). A portrait of the Queen of Holland. Poetry by Rev. Sipko Rederus, etc., etc.

The third volume of the publication is now complete. All illustrated with views of Holland, sketches of old Dutch families, etc.

Subscription at $1.50 per year received at office of publication and by THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER. Volumes 1-3, if taken together, is reduced to $3 for the three volumes.

FOR CHOIRS

A Low Priced Collection of Music.

IDEAL ANTHEMS

BY H. P. DANKS.

The great success of Mr. Danks' church music renders unnecessary any comment as to the merit of this collection. The Anthems are all entirely new and adapted to the wants of all denominations, as Services, Opening Pieces, Collection Pieces, etc., and available for Chorus or Quartet Choirs.

The pieces are from Easy to Medium Grade, with the organ part on separate staff, thus avoiding the necessity of the player's reading all the parts at once, as in the old style.

"IDEAL ANTHEMS" contains 64 pages, octavo size, handsomely bound in paper.

Price, 35 cents each by mail, postpaid; $3.60 a dozen by express, not prepaid.

☞SPECIMEN PAGES FREE.

PUBLISHED BY

THE JOHN CHURCH CO., CINCINNATI, O. And 19 East 16th Street, New York City.

FOR SALE.

A splendid 18-stop church organ, with two banks of keys and pedals. A great bargain. Also, several smaller organs. Send for a description to REUBEN NICHOLS, Builder. Warerooms, 32 and 33 Richmond St., Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF

STEPPING HEAVENWARD.

BY MRS. E. PRENTISS.

12mo, 432 Pages. Cloth, $1. By mail, $1.10

Originally published in 1869, this book at once attracted wide attention. It has been translated into the French, German, Norwegian and Swedish Languages. More than

75,000 COPIES

have been sold in the United States, while the sales in England and the Colonies have been very large, no less than five English publishers having reprinted it. In this country there is still a large, constant demand for it. The present edition, complete in every respect, is issued in response to many inquiries for a cheaper edition.

ALSO A NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF

The Life and Letters of Mrs. Prentiss

Crown 8vo, 575 pages, with steel portrait and five illustrations. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.65.

The demand for a cheaper edition of this remarkable Memoir, of which have already been sold in the United States and Great Britain, has led to the present issue. Complete in every respect.

20,000 COPIES

The two books will be sent by mail on the receipt of $2.50, or singly at the above-named price.

ANSON D. F. RANDOLPH & COMPANY, 38 West Twenty-third St., New York.

Local Agents wanted to sell these and other popular books. For terms and territory apply to the publishers.

The Latest Work on Agriculture is "MODERN HIGH FARMING," by FRANCIS WYATT, Ph. D. Published by C. E. BARTHOLOMEW, 22 College Place, New York City. Price One Dollar, Postage Free. Write for Descriptive Table of Contents.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED for PLATFORM ECHOES

or LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART.

By John B. Gough.

His last and crowning life work, brim full of thrilling interest, humor and pathos. Bright, pure, and good, full of "laughter and tears," it sells at sight to all. To it is added the Life and Death of Mr. Gough, by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT. 1000 Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $100 to $200 a month made. ☞Distance no hindrance as we give Extra Terms and Pay Freights. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Church Decoration.

Church Furnishing.

DESIGNS AND ESTIMATES SUBMITTED.

J. & R. LAMB,

59 CARMINE ST., N. Y.

THE Christian Intelligencer

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT

48 Church St., cor. Fulton, N. Y.,

BY THE

CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOC.

Editors:

REV. J. M. FERRIS, D.D., REV. N. H. VAN ARSDALE.

Associate Editor:

MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

TERMS,

$2.65 per annum.

Ministers and Theological Students, $2.

SINGLE COPIES, 8 CENTS.

☞ Read these Instructions carefully.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS pertaining to the literary columns of the paper must be addressed to the Editors; and those inclosing manuscripts to be returned must be accompanied with envelopes stamped and addressed. No attention will be paid to anonymous communications.

THOSE relating to the business department, to THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION, Box 2117, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIBERS, NOTICE.—The date following your name on the direction label informs you to what month and year your subscription is paid. If this date is not changed within two weeks after payment is made, drop us a postal card and we will investigate and reply. Please examine the date, and if in arrears, remit the amount due.

REMITTANCES ARE AT THE RISK OF THE SENDER, unless made by Draft, Check, or P. O. Money Order. These, if lost, can be readily replaced.

Checks, etc., to order of CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION.

IN CHANGING AN ADDRESS, it is necessary to send the OLD as well as NEW address. The change cannot be made unless this is done. And in order to prevent the loss of papers, it will be well to notify the office at least ten days before the contemplated change, as the mail lists are prepared that much in advance of each issue.

ALWAYS GIVE THE NAME OF THE P. O. where the paper is received.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

The Home.

AUNT MARJORIE'S CORNER

When Is Silence Golden?

THAT silence is golden has been accepted as axiomatic by general consent, yet we are convinced that there are many cases in which it is leaden, copper, or alloyed with something baser still. Who does not know and dread the exasperating silence of anger, harder to endure than the fiercest blast of speech? Who has not witnessed the craven silence of cowardice, ashamed and afraid to champion the weak or defend the absent? Who has not been baffled by the silence of reticence, which maintains a sphynx-like attitude of mystery when a few straightforward words would be a boon, throwing light upon darkness and showing you what to do?

Silence is not golden when it falls frostily upon the little ones, ignoring their efforts to please, and showing them practically that they are of small account in the eyes of their parents and teachers. What a pity it is that we are so chary of praise when praise is so often the oil which causes the household machinery to work without friction? It is so easy for some of us to blame, so hard to utter the generous approval.

Silence is golden when we repress the impatient word springing readily to the lips, perhaps because we are weary or anxious or disturbed about our worldly affairs. Many a time a hasty word cuts like the sting of a lash, and not only does it hurt its victim, but the memory of it wounds ourselves long after the forgiving friend or child has forgotten all about the occasion. And as there is much pain which in this world we must bear, why should we put ourselves to needless torture?

Silence is golden when trivial, malicious or vulgar gossip forms the staple of conversation. If we can do nothing else, we at least can show our disapproval by taking no part in that which is malevolent and unchristian.

Be Punctual.

THERE is one commodity which is never on sale in the market, but which is worth untold gold, which we waste or improve as we are wise or foolish, and for which we are distinctly responsible. Each for himself, we shall be called to account for the use or misuse of the talent, time; the talent we may put to such splendid interest that no other investment shall compare with it in quick and profitable returns, or the talent we may so carefully bury, hidden in the folded napkin, that to regain it shall be impossible. Once gone, we cannot get it back. Once ill-spent, a mocking cry comes down the wind, "Too late!" Time gone, misused, abused, opportunity scorned, privilege insulted, and we find no place for repentance though we seek it carefully with tears.

But how is it when the time wasted is not our own, but that of other people? I verily believe that it is a worse crime to trespass on my neighbor's time than to simply lose my own. It is done every day, and in very many ways.

The person who is habitually tardy is a great sinner in this regard. How often it happens that a number of people, each of whom has his or her own important engagements for every hour of the day, is compelled to wait ten, fifteen or twenty minutes for the late arrival, who comes airily in with a half-smiling apology for having detained the others.

Unless unavoidably arrested in the way by the detention of a boat or train, or the breaking of a wheel or an axle, no one should presume to excuse himself for so great a breach of good manners as the coming late to a committee or a meeting which was appointed for a certain hour. If at eight, we will say, and everybody is obliged to wait wearily for the half-hour for the completion of a quorum, it is not easy to feel no resentment against the trangressor, who, seldom it must be confessed, has the grace to look ashamed of himself.

The time of busy people is recklessly wasted by thoughtless though well-meaning friends and acquaintances, who make long calls in the morning, invading in the sweetest way and with the most smiling blandness, the precious half-hour which had been set aside for some task not to be postponed without great regret. Many a time the pastor, anxious to get on with his sermon, is interrupted by some visitor whom he cannot easily decline to receive, but who could as well have chosen some other hour than the one which the good man needs in his study. How difficult he finds it to take up the lost thread of thought; how the suggestion, which awhile ago was so pertinent, eludes his patient endeavor after the agreeable thief of time has gone. Only ministers and brain-workers of other kinds, editors for instance, and authors, can imagine.

In what spirit we ought to accept interruptions is quite another matter. The little hint I wish to leave is simply this, that we are to some degree responsible for our brother's time as well as our own, and that if we ruthlessly waste it we cause our brother to offend.

That each family should plan its affairs so that some one should have leisure to entertain the stranger within its gates, is the dictate of common sense. Some customary hours of visiting, as between three and six in the afternoon, might be mutually agreed upon by the women of a church or a small community to their common advantage. The evening, when the day's work is over, is a good time for social recreation, and more use might be made of it than is usual by a little judicious arrangement on the part of friends.

But the morning hour has gold in its mouth, and should be set apart for work and held sacred from intrusion.

Never to be late in keeping an appointment, never, by unnecessary and preventible absence, to oblige ten persons, at great inconvenience, to come to a given place a second time because of your failure in the first instance to be there, never idly to waste the toiling time of any friend, are engagements worth making with one's self. AUNT MARJORIE.

Something New.

TIME, eight o'clock one sultry summer evening. Place, a 23d street car, fast filling up at a West-side ferry.

Enter two ladies of middle age and amiable appearance, who naturally possess themselves of two contiguous and vacant seats. When lo! a gentleman in the neigborhood of forty, stalwart, bronzed and bearded, having deposited his fare in the box, turns to the younger of the ladies mentioned and politely, but with an air nevertheless of "Stand and Deliver," thus addresses her: "I beg your pardon, madam, but you have taken my seat." Whereupon madam, observing sotto voce to her friend, "This is a new experience," meekly rises and remains upon her feet till an exodus from the car leaves a vacancy, into which she wearily sinks, the person who had dispossessed her contentedly reading an evening paper the while.

Nothing like this ever came under the writer's observation before, although her foot is on her native heath when it steps upon the floor of a New York city railroad car. What does it indicate? My sisters, who never stand where men sit without a distinct impression of ill-usage, is there to be a new departure, and are you to be challenged in so accidental a vehicle as a surface car to yield a place which some one else has pre-empted? My other and thoughtless sisters, who forget to thank gentlemen gracefully quick to resign a place in your favor, are we, the innocent, who put ourselves out to bow and murmur gracious acknowledgments of every such courtesy, to be punished with you? Are the tables to be turned? Is this person possibly a pioneer?

And what am I to teach my boy?

Haven't you all noticed a very sweet and winning affability, whatever may obtain among men, as a distinguishing mark of the "rising generation" of American boys? I have. The lifted hat, the quick proffer of service, the respectful air toward women, which is the rule among boys, is the sign of growing gentleness on their part, and gives us hope. But men are as various in deportment as the nationalities from which, in our cosmopolitan life, they spring. As yet there seems no prospect of homogeneity with regard to the mint, anise and cummin of small social observances, although we gratefully own the attention to the weightier matters of the law, which makes journeying on our continent so safe, agreeable, and proper a thing for a lady without masculine escort. Age or station what it may be, such a woman finds protectors everywhere if she need them.

But, this granted, we must admit a little falling off of courtesy on the part of the ordinary man in his bearing toward women whom he does not know, and who have no claim upon him, being supposed in common parlance to be "as able to stand as he is himself."

